Stop Shoving! GOP In Pell-Mell Rush To Gobble Up Federal Jobs

By MILTON PLUMB

SUPPORTERS of far-reaching civil service reforms enacted during the last 20 years may have to fight for their survival during the coming year.

Job security for thousands of U. S. employes is endangered by patronage-hungry Republicans and some of their congressional chiefs. Moves already are developing to undercut President-elect Eisenhower's pre-election promises to protect the rights of federal workers.

Republican members of Congress have been swamped with requests from their constituents for federal jobs. Most are in for disappointment.

It has been 24 years since the GOP last was in the happy land, when Pres. Hoover took office in 1928. Thanks to long-advocated reforms since enacted, the number of government jobs outside civil service is much less than it used to be. Job applicants' appetites, however, remain about the same.

NO ONE KNOWS exactly how many "spoils" jobs are available to the victors. A survey by Congressional Quarterly News Features sets the low total of only 2000 openings, not counting the several thousand jobs in the individual offices of congressmen. Chairman Robert Ramspeck of the Civil Service Commission, on the other hand, has estimated the number at somewhere between 12,000 and 25,000.

The job demands have brought a building-up of pressure among some GOP congressmen for drastic steps to provide additional openings. This could be done by:

1 Filling all jobs not protected by the merit system with political appointees without regard for traditional tenure rights or technical knowledge needed to do the work properly.

2 Repealing some of the civil service reforms.

3 "Reorganizing" the government so that present office holders find their jobs "abolished" while new jobs performing the identical functions are set up elsewhere.

4 Temporary "economy" drives, under which slashed appropriations would require huge layoffs of present employees next year with supplemental appropriations later providing for the hiring of new employes to do the same work.

Soon after election day, government agencies began to get letters from GOP congressmen asking them to list all jobs exempt from civil service. The offices of Sens. Taft (O.) and Capehart (Ind.) admit they have made such requests, and it is known that several others have done likewise.

Some of Eisenhower's cabinet-appointees added fuel to the congressional job hunger. Herbert Brownell, Attorney General designate, promised a shake-up in the Justice Dept., and Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon announced that he will do a lot of hiring and firing when he takes over the Interior Dept.

Even Sen. Wiley (R., Wis.) found it necessary to warn against using diplomatic assignments as political plums. He said the "check book" should not be the only qualification for foreign service appointments.

The Federal Bar Association struck back by announcing that it has set up a committee to represent government lawyers in protecting their job rights should the need arise. It is estimated that of the 31,000 Justice Dept. employes, only about 1000, all lawyers, are without some form of job protection.

Hints that a congressional attack on the civil service is in the offing came from Rep. Brownson (R., Ind.) and Gov. George Craig of Indiana after a meeting with Eisenhower. They said they would seek legislation to "unfreeze" 41,000 postmasterships. Their appointments were made permanent in 1938 after civil service examinations.

EISENHOWER has said he will ask Congress to extend the present law giving him authority to reorganize government agencies. While the need for further reorganization is evident, some Republicans have suggested that more jobs can be made available through extensive "reorganization."

The technicality used to remove present jobholders would be to "abolish" the agency being reorganized and to reconstitute it in another form.

Reductions in force due to budget slashes appear certain in most agencies during the coming year. Rep. Taber (R., N. Y.), who will again head the House Appropriations Committee, wielded the economy ax so effectively when he held that post in the 80th Congress that nearly 100,000 jobs were eliminated. Any such "budget balancing" cuts now would only add to GOP patronage headaches.

REP. TABER

His "budget balancing" slashes will collide with GOP job patronage.

Republican spokesmen make no effort to hide their reasons for wanting all the patronage jobs possible. Sen. Smith (R., N. J.) said that as a matter of "pure politics" he and other members of Congress feel that any benefit that can be given to GOP congressmen through patronage should be given so that the Republicans can retain control of the House two years from now.

Sen. Welker (R., Ida.), a member of the three-man Senate patronage committee, summed it up:

"The only justification for patronage is that it is a method to build up a political party and reward the faithful."

Steel Union Asks High Court To Hear T-H Injunction Case

THE CIO Steelworkers' test of the constitutionality of Taft-Hartley anti-strike injunctions last week headed for the U. S. Supreme Court.

Immediately after Federal District Judge Knight of Buffalo issued an 80-day "cooling-off period" injunction, the union filed notices of appeal and asked the high court for an immediate review.

In Buffalo, Judge Knight upheld the constitutionality of so-called national emergency injunctions and granted one in the case of the American Locomotive Co. plant in Dunkirk, N. Y. He issued the injunction sought by the government, which will expire on Mar. 2.

IN A 20-PAGE opinion, Judge Knight held the act was constitutional and likewise denied the union's companion plea that the national emergency provisions did not apply in the Dunkirk case.

The USA-CIO immediately filed notice of appeal in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York City and shortly thereafter filed a petition asking the Supreme Court to review the case without waiting for the Court of Appeals to act.

Under the law, the Supreme Court can review cases without waiting for the lower review to act, a method used during the 1952 steel seizure case. In that instance, the Supreme Court acted with speed, avoiding delay in the lower courts.

Speed is essential in the Dunkirk case, the Steelworkers had earlier pointed out. The Taft-Hartley Law provides for automatic expiration of the injunction at the end of 80 days. Unless the Supreme Court has acted at that time, the case will have become moot and the court does not rule on issues which are not alive at the time of its ruling.

In its plea, the USA-CIO contended, as it had in the Buffalo hearings, that the national emergency section was unconstitutional. It sought, Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg argued, to impose upon the courts duties which were not judicial in character but that the law sought to make the courts merely a cog in administrative machinery over which it had no final, binding control. Such duties, the courts have always ruled unconstitutional, he said, citing long judicial history.

The union also contended the strike itself was not illegal, that it was not expressly forbidden by the statute and that granting of an injunction served to make illegal an action that was otherwise legal.

Goldberg contended that regardless of the constitutional merits of the national emergency section, it did not apply in the Dunkirk case. The law specifies the strike must affect an entire industry or a substantial part of it and imperil the national health and safety.

He pointed out that the Dunkirk plant was but a small segment of the metal fabrication industry and that it was not enough for the government to contend the strike imperiled national safety because its products were used in Atomic Energy installations.

JUDGE KNIGHT ruled the act applied to the Dunkirk strike, even though a substantial part of an industry was not directly involved, because the strike had an effect on "a substantial part of the atomic energy industry."

The T-H act provides for negotiations during the first 60 days of the injunction, followed by 15 days devoted to a National Labor Relations Board secret-ballot election on acceptance or rejection of the company's final offer. The last five days are devoted to reports to the Attorney-General who must, on the 80th day, ask the court to dissolve the injunction. The court must do so, Taft-Hartley says.

Meantime, Alco workers continued on their jobs. They had struck on Aug. 29 after months of fruitless negotiations. They sought a 26c-an-hour wage increase. The only company offer amounted to 12.5c, although Alco employes in another plant received the wage increase won following the basic steel strike of mid-summer.

8000 N. Y. Bus Drivers Near Strike Deadline

AFTER MORE than a year of negotiations and delays, 8000 New York City bus drivers were scheduled to strike eight private bus lines on New Year's Eve (after holiday deadline for this issue of The CIO News.)

The drivers, members of Local 100 of the CIO Transport Workers, were seeking a long-promised 40-hour work week, already won by fellow union members employed on the city-owned transit lines.

Last-minute conferences between state and city officials, designed to bring financial relief to the companies, were inconclusive. The companies insist on fare boosts to meet the extra cost of 40-hour-week operation and city officials are bucking the increase.

"This company has always believed in getting along with its employees. So get along, Flunkey, and don't come back!"

Plans of city officials to force TWU members on the city's subways and other lines to work overtime to meet the expected heavy increase in riders were stopped by the union. TWU Pres. Michael Quill ordered members on city lines to work no overtime during the strike.

THE NEW YORK Times, in an editorial accusing city officials of gross mismanagement, pointed out that a strike for the 40-hour week had been delayed on Nov. 27, 1951, by promises of public hearings on the union request.

At subsequent public hearings, the Times noted, the union's point was sustained and for the past 11 months the delays have resulted from squabbles among city officials, the bus lines and the state over the fare structure and tax rebates to the company.

"The companies, with a good memory for broken promises of fare relief before, will accept nothing but accomplished fact," the Times observed, "and the union will not bargain on a 'when and if' basis. Frankly, we don't blame them."

The 8000 TWU members daily haul 3.5 million riders in New York City. All boroughs except Brooklyn and Staten Island would be affected by the strike.

CIO Outlook Looks Ahead—

Breadlines Or Paylines-It's Up To Ike

WHAT'S AHEAD in the next four years?

CIO's Economic Outlook asked that question last week, on the eve of 1953 and the inauguration of the Republican Administration of President-elect Eisenhower.

The Outlook suggested two answers:

ONE—The danger of serious depression, if the GOP reverts to the policies it sponsored when last in national office.

TWO—A chance for continued and growing prosperity, based on increased wages and lower prices to "fire" the nation's expanded industrial capacity.

Which alternative answers the question, said The Outlook, depends on decisions to be made at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington (the White House) and among the GOP congressional leaders on Capitol Hill.

It's a decision, said The Outlook, which "rises above partisan politics"-and its implications are far-reaching.

"A sharp and prolonged economic down-turn in the United States would be a major catastrophe," The Outlook said. "As in the Thirties, unemployment and despair would encourage communism at home; but the result around the world would be even more disastrous."

"A depression would not only drastically reduce foreign trade and impair our ability to provide military and economic aid for our friends abroad; but, even worse, the faith of free men in their own ability to build a stable and secure way of life would be undermined everywhere," the publication of the CIO Education and Research Dept. pointed out.

The key to prosperity, it said, is not only America's vast productive capacity but a market for the goods produced. To keep our factories in full operation and our growing labor force fully employed, U. S. production must increase annually.

"The constantly rising efficiency of our productive system and our expanding labor force make our present $345 billion worth of production only a base from which we should move upward," said The Outlook. It sees need for a national output of from $375 to $385 billion by 1956, just to maintain the present level of 62 million civilian jobs and a production level of $390 to $400 billion to employ the expected three million additional workers in the market during the next four years.

Biggest market for production is the American public, The Outlook notes and the hopes of continued prosperity lie in insuring their capacity to buy what the factories produce.

The ways to increase the standard of living, and thus the purchasing power of this group, were outlined this way by The Outlook:

WAGES—Both collective bargaining and public policy should support the objective of higher wages and salaries, exceeding merely sharing annual productivity gains. This means chopping down that portion of present high profits used for industrial expansion and high dividends at the expense of workers' wages, plus increasing minimum wages paid those at the bottom of the income ladder.

TAXES—If international tensions ease, permitting a cut in national security expenditures, taxes can come down and thus purchasing power would be bolstered. The danger here, says The Outlook, is that tax cuts will go to those who don't need them, rather than to the families who do.

It cautions:

"The renewed clamor for a Federal sales tax—which would directly reduce family consumption at a time when it needs to be substantially raised—is an unhappy indication of the prevailing viewpoint toward taxes of businessmen, many of whom have been appointed to high positions in the new Administration."

PRICES—The opportunity for orderly, necessary price cutting on consumer goods would benefit American families and ultimately industry itself. The Outlook urged lower unit profits, with higher volumes of sales, rather than desperation price cutting after a recession sets in.

INVESTMENT—Encouragement of new, small business enterprises, through tax policies shaped to their needs and low-interest capital, should be developed. To achieve this, and also encourage purchases of new homes, the Eisenhower Administration must withstand banker pressure to raise interest rates.

SOCIAL SECURITY—America's national system of old age-survivors insurance, public assistance aids and unemployment compensation, serves as a "built-in stabilizer." Added to the human values they serve is the economic cushion they provide—a cushion which should be bigger and more fully packed.

NON-DEFENSE GOVERNMENT PROGAMS—Construction of necessary and long-delayed highways, schools, housing and hospitals would provide jobs and income to workers.

The U. S. can't depend on workers' savings to bridge another recession, The Outlook warns. Workers no longer have the savings they had accumulated during World War II. Now most savings are concentrated in the hands of a relatively few people, and thus will not be translated into mass purchasing power.

The Outlook finds the GOP record of the past "not reassuring." It notes Republicans have seemed addicted to "the disproved economic theory that if enough prosperity is enjoyed by the few at the top of the income pyramid, enough will trickle down to those in the middle and the many at the bottom to automatically sustain the national output."

On the brighter side, it adds, "fortunately, new responsibilities and changing times often challenge men's minds and sometimes they revise their outlook and change the course of action."

New Year's Statement—

Reuther Warns Against Restrictive Labor Laws

Here is the text of a New Year's statement issued last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

AMERICAN labor faces the future confident that free men working together possess the spiritual strength and the practical know-how to win against the forces of communism and tyranny.

Nineteen-fifty-three is both a challenge and an opportunity. Never before has the future been so pregnant with disaster and yet so full of hope and opportunity. America, as the strongest of the free nations of the world, has a major share of the responsibility in leading the free world in the challenging days ahead.

We must have the strength to meet the danger ahead, but we must also demonstrate the imagination and courage to make the most of our opportunities. While neither war nor peace are inevitable, we need, however, to recognize clearly that we can drift into war but that peace can be won only if we pursue it with total dedication.

In the face of unprovoked Communist aggression the free world of necessity must build strongly its mutual military defenses. However, it is imperative that our military effort be understood and properly evaluated in our overall effort to stop Communist aggression and build the peace.

Our military build-up is but the negative aspect of our total fight against the forces of Communist tyranny and Soviet imperialism. It is the negative holding action on the military front that affords us an opportunity to move the offensive on the economic, political and social fronts where the historic battle between freedom and tyranny will be decided.

It is precisely in this field, in the economic, political and social fields, that the free world has the overwhelming margin of superiority. It is in the field of human betterment, in the practical, tangible day-to-day job of translating man's hopes and aspirations into reality, into higher living standards, a fuller measure of security, more happiness and greater human dignity, that the Communists do not dare to compete with the free world.

Best Hope Wins

The struggle between democracy and communism, between freedom and tyranny, is essentially a struggle for men's minds, their hearts, and their loyalty, and it can be won only in terms of demonstrating which way of life offers the best hope of satisfying man's needs and aspirations.

We shall win the loyalty of people everywhere, we shall fill them with renewed hope and strength for faith in freedom by the propaganda of the democratic deed. We must nail the Communist lie that man need trade freedom for bread by proving that bread and freedom are compatible and that the world that we are working to build will enable man to satisfy his economic and material needs within an ever-broadening framework of political and spiritual freedom.

In this task the American economy is freedom's greatest material asset. If fully mobilized it can provide in large measure the weapons for military defense and the tools for the economic and social offense against poverty, hunger, economic and social injustices, which are the sources of communism's strength.

The key to the future and the almost limitless possibilities of the economic development of the free world is the acceptance of the principle of economic abundance. We cannot win the struggle against Communist tyranny, we cannot make people and freedom secure in the world so long as we continue to divide up economic scarcity. We can succeed only to the extent that we learn to create and distribute economic abundance. Nineteen-fifty-three should add a fifth basic freedom — freedom from the fear of economic abundance.

The single most fundamental unsolved problem of our free society is the achievement and maintenance of full employment and full production in peacetime. Repeatedly we have demonstrated our ability to break production records and to achieve unprecedented levels of employment for the purpose of forging the weapons of war and destruction. It remains for us to match and surpass this record in creating abundance for peace. This will require greater faith in the economic future of America. The philosophy of economic scarcity —"Too Little and Too Late"— must yield to the broad concept of an ever-expanding productive capacity geared to the full development of our natural resources.

In a large measure the relationship between labor and management will determine the future growth of the American economy, for collective bargaining is the important area in which decisions need to be made to bring purchasing power in balance with our productive power. Free labor and free management must approach their joint responsibilities at the bargaining table conscious of their obligations to the whole nation and ever mindful of the fact that real progress for either labor or management is possible only to the extent that collective bargaining assists in advancing the interests of the whole community.

Good Faith Basic

As we enter 1953, management should review the lessons of history and avoid the tragic mistake of believing that restrictive labor legislation is a substitute for good faith at the collective bargaining table. In a free society there is no substitute for good faith and a voluntary discharge of moral and social responsibility. Stable and constructive labor-management relations so essential to America and the free world can only be built on a foundation of economic and social justice which will permit American workers and their families to enjoy ever higher standards of living made possible by advancing technology.

While building our strength to meet the threat of Communist tyranny in the world it is equally imperative that we take heed of those dangerous forces of intolerance and character assassination which threaten our freedom at home. The American concept of freedom of thought has met the tests of history and we must not permit the forces of fear and hysteria to strangle freedom's voice at home under the guise of preserving freedom in the world. Proper security measures are essential, and treason must be dealt with without mercy, but American freedom will be weakened, not strengthened, by thought control, insistence upon conformity, and the growing infringement upon basic civil liberties.

The CIO recognizes the grave responsibilities being assumed by the incoming national administration, and we pledge our complete cooperation in the constructive endeavors of the new administration which are designed to promote peace with honor, stability with freedom and economic and social progress for people everywhere.

We reject with disdain any thought of playing the role of a reckless and negative opposition which, unfortunately, has characterized the activities of certain Republican congressional leaders in recent years.

The CIO believes it has a clear duty to remain loyal to the program for which it has fought for many years and which was underscored at its recent Atlantic City convention. We shall fight with renewed vigor for the abolition of the twin evils of discrimination and segregation. Likewise there shall be no let-up in the CIO campaign for social welfare programs which reflect the economic realities of 1953, and for a housing program and aid to our schools which are needed to meet two of the nation's greatest unsolved problems.

We shall continue to support those international policies which are designed to promote democracy and freedom throughout the world.

More McCarthyism?

A number of good-hearted people reasoned, in the days before the November election, that a vote for Eisenhower might well be a vote against McCarthyism.

Their argument: that in the climate of a Republican administration, Jumpin' Joe from Wisconsin would find little incentive and few headlines for his free-swinging "investigations."

But Jumpin' Joe is a fact that doesn't fit the theory. The senator from Wisconsin talks now about investigating "reds in the colleges."

His probes should make a lot of headlines for dull Monday mornings. Stories of red cells among college sophomores always make titillating reading, and are good for scaring old ladies. But they can also disrupt morale at our colleges and universities.

Eisenhower stalwarts have expressed themselves, on the record, against McCarthy's kind of tactics. Among the many campaign pledges to be redeemed, a refusal to let Joe McCarthy carry on his smear circus should have a top-grade priority.

Better Late Than Never . . .

For the 5½ years since passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, leaders of labor have pointed out that the non-Communist affidavit provision was a waste of time, an expense for the government, and a humiliating affront to democratic labor leaders.

Now the House Un-American Activities Committee agrees, belatedly, with the statements of organized labor. The affidavit section of the Taft-Hartley Act should be repealed. So should Taft-Hartley itself. Sooner the better.

Double Standards

A French seaman is barred from this country; he "stole" bread from the Nazis, when they forced him into slave labor during the war. An Austrian girl, bride of a GI, is kept out of the country because she "stole" food, at the end of the war, when she was stranded in Germany.

Sen. McCarran of Nevada, the reactionary head of the Judiciary Committee, was chief sponsor of the nonsensical immigration law that keeps those people out of the U. S.—and makes this country the laughing stock of the world.

Sen. McCarran, of course, has never stolen bread. He doesn't have to. He gets free room and board at the deluxe gambling joints in Las Vegas.

The Senator, it's obvious, is an expert on riff-raff. The trouble with that French seaman, and with that Austrian girl, was they didn't have the "right" connections with Nazi big-shots. If they'd been pro-Nazi, they wouldn't have had to steal bread; they'd have gotten it free from the Nazis; and, under McCarran's law and McCarran's philosophy, as collaborators with the Nazis they'd be welcome to our shore.

The New Era

"Businessmen do not object to paying taxes . . . They recognize that regulation and control are needed in some circumstances . . . They favor social gains . . . American business long has been anxious to understand and cooperate with Government . . . businessmen take a most constructive and farsighted attitude toward the nation's problems, often giving them preference over those of their own companies."

Is The Show Any Better?

In Other Words—

The Red War Against The Jews

The following article, written from Vienna, appeared in the "Dateline: Your World" column of the New York Post, conducted by Seymour Freidin and William Richardson.

BY SEYMOUR FREIDIN

WHAT THE NAZIS started in Eastern Europe—mass annihilation of the Jews—the Communists are completing.

That's the sober and considered judgment of western observers, who are analyzing the effects of the recent purge trials in Prague, and is the terrifying conclusion which is being relayed to Israel quite independently of the on-the-spot westerners.

There are about 2.5 million Jews in Soviet-controlled Europe, 600,000 of them in the satellite countries, who are doomed by the present Russian policy, these informants say. They have even coined a phrase for the Soviet program of extermination, "psychic genocide." The Russians, they contend, won't resort to gas chambers or mass executions except where political figures are concerned.

They have instead inaugurated a program of cutting the Jewish people off from gainful employment, from local community and cultural life which Jews, like other minorities, possess in western nations, and are ostensibly determined to keep them stagnant and preoccupied with the problem of staying alive.

A premonition of their fate has led Jews in large numbers to commit suicide, not only in Czechoslovakia but elsewhere in the satellite lands. This last act of desperation, observers pointed out, also occurred in Germany and Austria when the Nazis established their control.

As in Nazi Germany, being a Jew has become a crime against the state. The refinement added to the Communist program, as emphasized in the Prague trials, was this: Defendants had to confess to being Jews, even for the court records.

But the Czechoslovak government sent out variations of those "confessions." In translating the text, for dissemination outside the country, they altered the incriminating questions to varying degrees so that the blatant anti-Semitism wouldn't perhaps appear so harsh to Communist sympathizers and followers in the West. At home, they published the undoctored versions and hammered the theme on the local radio.

During the Soviet-sponsored peace congress here, delegates had obviously been briefed in advance to refute charges of anti-Semitism that were certain to arise in the course of discussion with westerners. As soon as the Prague trials were mentioned, they gratuitously replied that the defendants were traitors and that there was no question of their racial origin.

Several embattled Romanian, Hungarian and Czechoslovak Communists were so enraged one evening when an American asked:

"Why was the word Jew attached to the names of most of the defendants?"

"Why not?" was the reply. "Does that mean anything?"

The only other modern countries where it was ever applied like that were Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union, which has repeatedly singled out Jews for political wariations with such terms as "homeless wanderers" and "bourgeois cosmopolitans."

"THE JEWS of eastern Europe," said an informant whose views bear considerable weight in formulating his government's decisions, "feel they are sitting on a rumbling volcano. They have become identified with a system—Zionism—which the Soviet Union considers dangerous to the consolidation of its control in the satellite areas."

As a minority, the Jews are barred in all the satellites from having their own newspapers, Communists make a great fuss about these for other minorities to prove that they want to eliminate discrimination. They are being expelled from jobs and reduced to the most menial employment.

From the programs adopted by Russia's satellites the plight of the Jew is now almost impossible to contend with and the measures are in a state of acceleration. These are the meanings of the suicides, but obviously all the 2.5 million under Soviet domination won't take their lives. What will happen to them?

"They will be annihilated," I was told. "It will take time, but they cannot survive."

The Russians always claimed to do things on a vast scale. That included mass murder.

Book Review—

Hillman—A Dreamer Who Fought And Won

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

SIDNEY HILLMAN, the founding genius of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and a power in the CIO until his death in 1946, seems alive again in a new biography by Matthew Josephson.

"Sidney Hillman: Statesman of American Labor" is an automatic "must" for any union library, for Josephson's book is a top-rank study of one of America's greatest labor leaders. Written after three years of research during which he scanned thousands of documents and conducted hundreds of conversations with Hillman's contemporaries, Josephson's biography is both sympathetic and objective. It is far and away the best analysis of a trade union leader in American biographical literature.

As the book shows him, Sidney Hillman was a man of many talents, many moods, many capabilities.

He was "intellectual"—but as the men's clothing industry soon found out, as sharply "practical" as any hard-headed businessman in the trade.

Hillman believed firmly in labor-management cooperation, and he pioneered in developing new methods of industrial stability; but he never forgot that without the right to strike—and without strike victories—labor's power was as nothing.

A 'Success Story'

Hillman, the boy, was a religious scholar, a theoretician, a revolutionary seeking the overthrow of the brutal czardom in his native Russia and the development of a democratic socialism. Hillman, a young man when he moved to the slums of New York and Chicago, became a practical planner who had little use for theory, dogma and doctrine.

Developing a deeply patriotic love for his new country, he emerged—while still a scraggly and poverty-stricken youth—as a builder whose vision led the Clothing Workers to strong organization in the face of bitter opposition and lack of understanding.

Dreaming, scheming constantly for a better break in life for his exploited clothing workers, he developed a variety of successful union experiments: banking, unemployment compensation, housing, arbitration, medical care, to name a few.

Sidney Hillman was an American "success story" of a different kind. He amassed no fortune. But he achieved fame—as the head of his union, as a founding father of the CIO, as a close friend and associate of Franklin D. Roosevelt, as the leading labor adviser to FDR in the early years of World War II, as the first chairman of the CIO Political Action Committee, as the butt of a vicious Republican smear in the 1944 political campaign.

SIDNEY HILLMAN

As first chairman of the CIO-PAC, Hillman worked in close harmony with Philip Murray, at the Democratic convention in 1944 and throughout the campaign to re-elect Roosevelt and to elect Harry S. Truman as vice-president.

To millions of Americans who knew little of his background, Hillman was most widely publicized by the Republicans' anti-New Deal slogan of "Clear It With Sidney." It was a slogan directed more at labor's new power in political life than at Sidney Hillman the man; but he resented it and the slogan tortured his sensitive mind.

Classic Retort

Josephson's study of Hillman, however, is by no means limited to his subject's later years. One reads with awe of the early struggle to win recognition for the Clothing Workers; and the picture of a hard-working, hard-fighting team clearly emerges.

Frank Rosenblum, vice-president of the CIO and secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated, is quoted in a classic bit of retort to an anti-union employer. Rosenblum, called into the front office, was bluntly asked if he favored unions.

Rosenblum replied: "Well, if I told you I'm in favor of them you would only fire me; and if I say I'm against them, you won't believe me, so I'm not saying anything."

Jacob Potofsky, Hyman Blumberg, Jack Kroll and a host of other veteran clothing workers move through the pages with Hillman—ridding their union of racketeers, out-maneuvering the New York cops in strikes, organizing their union in the plants of the paternalistic, the chiselling and the fanatic.

But Hillman was the leader of the group, the teacher of his associates, and a grand strategist in everything he undertook. In 1919, for instance, "his friends . . . were convinced that Sidney Hillman could sense just the right psychological moment when his adversaries were fed up with the cost of a prolonged fight"—and so he won a lot of disputes.

He had a "green thumb" for knowing what sort of proposal an employer would accept to end a strike, or to avoid a strike. He would, and did, plant an idea for compromise in the mind of an arbitrator, wait for the arbitrator to sell it to the employer, and then—with a smile inside—"reluctantly" accept his own compromise formula in the interest of industrial peace and union victory.

Entitled To Power

But he refused to compromise labor's basic strength. Commenting on an employer plan for restrictions on certain union practices, he said:

"All these measures that the employers would like to have would simply be giving more power to their side, to take away power from the union . . . Our position is that we are entitled to the power that we possess, but we are willing that every provision should be made so that this power should not be abused."

In large part because of Hillman's wisdom, his belief in honorable labor-management cooperation, the clothing union suffered less than most during the Hoover depression; and because it was smart enough to get in on the ground floor of Pres. Roosevelt's NRA, it gained more than most during the pre-Wagner Act days.

Because of Hillman's experience, and his widening contacts in every phase of American life, he was a "natural" selection when FDR began to mobilize America for war in 1940. As labor member of the Natl. Defense Advisory Committee, later as co-director of the Office for Production Management, Hillman fulfilled an old dream of serving his country and his labor movement.

But the big business dollar-a-year-men outnumbered him, and eventually curbed his influence. Hillman, one feels, made decisions he did not always enjoy, but he made them in the interest of the national welfare and the country's war effort.

When the choice was to become a tool of the business interests and a whipping boy on labor matters, he left his official position with dignity and faithfulness to the unions of America. The speed of the Washington merry-go-round never made Hillman dizzy.

He rested a bit, and then, with Phil Murray, worked out the plans for CIO's Political Action Committee—and re-emerged in 1944 stronger, more influential than ever before.

The sequence was typical. Hillman's desire was that labor keep marching forward, without fatigue, without boredom.

"The trouble with our labor movement," he once remarked, "is that we are not looking for new ways . . . We will have new problems and we will have to look for new methods."

That he did, constantly. And, at the last Amalgamated convention he attended—in May, 1946, when he was tired and ill—his restless mind was still exploring the future.

Delegates and newspapermen who attended that convention still remember that final talk, delivered just two months before his death. While the audience sat in hushed silence, straining to catch every word, Hillman said:

"It is within the power of America to provide for our people conditions beyond the dreams of generations past . . . We want a better America, an America that will give its citizens, first of all, a higher and higher standard of living, so that no child will cry for food in the midst of plenty.

A Better America

"We want to have an America where the inventions of science will be at the disposal of every American family . . . an America that will have no sense of insecurity and which will make it possible for all the groups to live in friendship, and to be real neighbors; an America that will carry on in its great mission of helping other countries to help themselves, thinking not in terms of exploitation but of creating plenty abroad so we can all enjoy it here."

His valedictory speech was thus a long, hard look at the future. Sidney Hillman rarely looked back, and he did not want labor to look back, because he felt there was barely time to look ahead.

The Hillman "tradition" and the Hillman record taught that there is nothing labor cannot do in America so long as it keeps democracy a living force and uses its power with wisdom and imagination.

In helping transmit that message, in showing the development of Sidney Hillman on the American scene, Matthew Josephson has performed a great service to labor and the nation.

They're Shooting Already At Your Pension

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

THE CONSERVATIVE columnists keep boasting that the new Administration will "listen to business," so you'd better take a close look at the latest dilly of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

It is now polling its members on a proposal to alter the Social Security system, to provide what it calls "a single, pay-as-you-go plan to provide a basic layer of social security for all the retired aged," instead of the present "several separate programs which now cover only a portion of today's aged."

Sounds fair and businesslike until you take a second look at the phrase "pay-as-you-go" and the companion proposal of "periodic adjustment of the equal taxes on employer and employe and tax on self-employed to support benefit disbursements on a current basis."

What the Chamber wants is to combine all the present systems (old age and survivors insurance, which is what is popularly known as Social Security; old age assistance, railroad retirement, civil service, and others) into one system covering everybody; eliminate federal subsidies to states for old-age assistance.

The Chamber warns that unless major changes are made in the law, what it calls "the trust fund" for all these programs will go bankrupt.

The Social Security program has been a target of the conservatives for a long time, and the charge that the "trust fund" will go bankrupt is an old, old phony.

What happens under Social Security, as the Chamber well knows, is that the people now working and earning are paying Social Security for those who have retired, and will in turn be supported by those who have not yet entered the working force.

If a "pay-as-you-go" program is adopted one of two things happens: Either deductions from paychecks and from employers increase to prohibitive sums, or payments to those now on Social Security will drop even lower than they are now.

CIO Urges More Funds For Jersey Crime Crackdown

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week called for creation of a "stronger, more representative State Crime Commission with a longer life and adequate funds to expose criminal-political relationships in New Jersey."

CIO Pres. Carl Holderman released the recommendation of the State CIO legislative committee, which also recommended:

- Increased salaries for county prosecutors, the attorney general and his assistants, who would then be barred from representing private clients during their term of office.
- Denial of the prosecutors' request for legalizing wire tapping on the grounds that its danger to civil liberties far outweigh any possible benefits.

Holderman called the New Jersey State Law Enforcement Council "impotent." Tie-ups between "mobsters, big business and politicians" in New Jersey had been hinted, he said, calling the current situation "worse than not having any crime probe at all."

The public, Holderman said, is being misled into believing "something is being done, when in fact nothing has been accomplished during the year-long existence of the New Jersey body."

Steps To End Tension—

ICFTU Urges France To Grant Self-Rule Program In Tunisia

A DETAILED plan for easing tension in Tunisia, aimed at the advance of democracy and freedom, has been presented to the French government by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The program was made public by ICFTU Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek. It was prepared under instructions of the ICFTU General Council meeting in Berlin last summer.

Efforts of Tunisian nationalists to win a greater measure of self-government than the French are willing to grant have led to stern repressive measures and bitterness that reached their climax in the assassination of Farhat Hached, secretary of the General Union of Tunisian Workers (UGTT).

Hached was an outstanding leader of moderate nationalist forces throughout the Middle East and an effective foe of Communist efforts to infiltrate the Tunisian labor movement. His murder, which is unsolved, touched off rioting throughout French treaty territory in North Africa that cost many lives and sent hundreds of nationalists to prisons or concentration camps.

ICFTU Delegation Now In Tunisia

An Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions delegation arrived in Tunis on Christmas Eve to express the support of the international free labor movement to the General Union of Tunisian Workers (UGTT).

The ICFTU representatives are Pres. R. Dekeyzer, of the Belgian Transportworkers' Federation, and Adrian Vermeulen, secretary of the Netherlands Trade Union Federation. Their visit grew out of developments following the murder of Farhat Hached, UGTT general secretary, including the arrests of many union leaders.

Among them was Mahmoud Messadi, Hached's successor.

In a forward to its proposal, the ICFTU said:

"Faithful to the principle of self-determination which it has always proclaimed, and to the principles of freedom, progress and justice which must inspire all movements for human emancipation, and taking into account the special conditions existing in Tunisia, the ICFTU intends, by drawing up these proposals, to do a constructive task and to make its contribution to a just solution of the Franco-Tunisian problem, thus strengthening democracy and safeguarding peace."

The plan itself has five major stages:

1. Immediate action to restore calm and create an atmosphere favorable to negotiations. This would include ending the state of siege, restoring freedom of expression and assembly, releasing all those held in custody because of the crisis, abolishing internment camps, and reinstating dismissed workers.

2. Creation by the Bey of Tunis of a truly representative government without French interference in the choice of ministers.

3. A basic agreement between France and Tunisia which would lay down stages in the development of relations by establishing a realistic time-table for steps forward.

The steps would include formal recognition of Tunisian sovereignty, which would presuppose abolition of the French Resident-General's approval of legislation and regulations; definition of the extent of France's authority, particularly "the maintenance of French armed forces at strategic points in Tunisia of interest for the defense of the free world" until a capable Tunisian army can replace them; definition of the nature of common economic interests.

4. Promulgation by the Tunisian government of an electorial law guaranteeing free and universal suffrage to all Tunisian citizens and to French citizens with more than five years' residence, the voters to elect a constituent assembly.

5. Drawing up by the assembly of a democratic Tunisian constitution "faithful to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights," and providing for a Consultative Economic Council made up of representatives of workers and consumers who would have to be consulted in economic and social affairs, and especially on budgetary and fiscal questions.

Feller, Lindberg Win In Record Brewery Union Vote

TWO of the three top officers of the CIO Brewery Workers were re-elected in a membership referendum, results of which were announced last week.

Pres. Karl F. Feller defeated John Hoh, of Broklyn, N.Y., a past member of the union's executive board.

Also re-elected was Charles H. Lindberg, general organizer and corresponding and recording secretary. He defeated E. B. Brody of Milwaukee, also a board member.

Thomas Rusch, of Buffalo, N.Y., won the post of secretary-treasurer, defeating Joseph J. Hauser, incumbent.

Votes in the contested races were the highest in the Brewery Workers' 67-year history.

Joseph E. Brady was re-elected without opposition as coordinator of the union's state councils. A 10-member executive board also was elected, in all but two cases without opposition.

Indiana CIO Picks Officers, Hears McDonald, Leonard

MAJOR constitutional revisions, designed to spell out duties of various officers, department heads and committees, featured the 14th convention of the Indiana State CIO Council.

The convention, held in Indianapolis, re-elected Neal W. Edwards as president. There were two changes in the other top offices. Mary Salisbury of the CWA replaced Nelle Riddle as vice president and George Colwell of Steelworkers District 31 replaced Claude Becktell as secretary-treasurer.

Featured speaker at the convention was Gov. Henry F. Schricker, who praised labor's great gains in the first half of this century and urged a constant guard against those who would turn back the clock to deprive workers of the security they now possess. Schricker particularly cited unemployment compensation, social security and workmen's compensation as danger areas.

David J. McDonald, acting president of the Steelworkers, traced the history of that union and attributed the gains made to the spirit of unity in the USA since 1935. Richard T. Leonard, CIO national representative, was another featured speaker.

Among resolutions adopted were:

- Plans for a full-dress CIO Community Services program from the local union level up, with regular conferences and meetings.
- A statewide drive for group subscriptions to The CIO News, with the state council pledged "to stimulate and assist" in this campaign.

ORIT Elects New Officers, Shifts HQ To Mexico City

HEADQUARTERS of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), western hemisphere affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, will be moved soon from Havana, Cuba, to Mexico City.

The decision was made at the second congress of the ORIT, held recently in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil.

At the same time, delegates representing the free workers of North, Central and South America picked new officers. They elected Luis A. Colotuzzo, president of the Confederation of Uruguayan Workers, as president to succeed Arturo Sabroso of Peru, who was not a candidate to succeed himself.

Luis Alberto Monge, of the Costa Rican Federation of Workers, was named general secretary to succeed Francisco Aguirre, of Cuba, who declined to run again.

THE CONGRESS was held in the Brazilian Ministry of Labor, Commerce and Industry. The Minister, Jose de Segadas Vianna; J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the ICFTU, and Aguirre were the principal speakers at the opening session.

Pres. Deocleciano de Holanda Cavalcanti, of Brazil's National Confederation of Industrial Workers, was elected to preside at the congress sessions in place of Sabroso, who was ill and unable to attend. The Mexican Confederation of Labor was admitted to membership, subject to approval of the ICFTU executive council.

After the opening session, the congress split up into working committees which later reported back to a plenary session. All resolutions were referred to the incoming executive board. The final session included an all-night stretch that ended at 5 A.M.

The CIO was represented by Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers; R. J. Thomas, assistant CIO organization director, and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the CIO Latin American Committee. North America was represented at executive board meetings by George Burt, UAW-CIO-CCL regional director in Canada, as alternate for Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers, chairman of the CIO International and Latin-American Committees.

2 Canadian Unions Fight Job Layoffs

A COMPREHENSIVE plan for dealing with layoffs in Canada's agricultural machinery industry was presented to that country's cabinet last week by a delegation representing the two major unions in the field—the CIO Steelworkers and Auto Workers—and the Canadian Congress of Labor.

The union group submitted a brief calling for establishment of a council, representing labor, the federal government, the employers and agriculture, to consider problems in the industry; a monopoly investigation of the industry, and its greater use in the Colombo Plan, the British Commonwealth program for helping underdeveloped nations.

More than 2000 UAW and USA members normally employed in Intl. Havester and Harris-Massey plants in Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford and Woodstock are currently laid off. The union representatives told the cabinet members the firms' monopolistic practices contributed to the situation.

Pensioners Honored

The big Ford Local 600 of the CIO Auto Workers recently honored 150 retired and pensioned auto workers at a banquet.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

WE HAVE good news to start our new year. Pres. Walter Reuther, who underwent major surgery a couple of weeks ago, is on his way to a rapid recovery. He is now home recuperating and will be back in harness very soon. I know this will be good news to all our officers and members everywhere.

The 1952 record of NLRB representation elections won and lost must be improved in 1953. All CIO affiliates will be called upon to work together during this year and render every support to one another in bringing the workers under the banner of the CIO.

The Organizational Dept., with its national representatives, regional directors and field representatives, will work harder than ever before in our great crusade of organizing the unorganized.

Only through strong unions can the workers of the nation expect to get the security and standards of living that they are entitled to, and only through strong unions can our freedom be fully protected and enhanced. Without the collective strength of their union, the workers would be at the mercy of the greed and avarice of special interest everywhere.

We worked long and hard in the recent political elections. Now that they are out of the way for the time being, let us concentrate our energies on the big task before us in 1953—organizing the unorganized.

Let us here and now resolve to devote ourselves fully to the important task of bringing about a greater and stronger CIO. Our union is our strength.

Value Of Strong Union Told

EIGHT significant qualities, common to all sound labor-management relations, have been tabulated by the National Planning Association following an extensive study of 10 union-management relations.

The non-profit, non-partisan organization in a recent report listed the eight points as follows:

- There is full acceptance by management of the collective bargaining process and of unionism as an institution. The company considers a strong union an asset to management.
- The union fully accepts private ownership and operation of the industry. It recognizes that the welfare of its members depends upon the successful operation of the business.
- The union is strong, responsible and democratic.
- The company stays out of the union's internal affairs.
- Mutual trust and confidence exist between the parties.
- Neither party to bargaining has adopted a legalistic approach to the solution of problems.
- Negotiations are problem-centered—more time is spent on day-to-day problems than on defining abstract principles.
- There is widespread union-management consultation and highly developed information sharing.

End Rules Committee Blockade Of Legislation, CIO Urges House

SHALL a small group of Dixiegops operating in the House Rules Committee be permitted to thwart the will of the majority of Congress and of the American people during the next two years?

That question was put squarely before each congressman last week by the CIO Legislative Dept. Acting on instructions from the CIO Legislative Committee, Nathan E. Cowan, department director, wrote all members of the House urging them to establish new rules in the 83rd Congress "which will allow the democratic process to operate in an orderly manner."

He called for amendment of the existing House rules, adopted by the Dixiegop coalition in the 82nd Congress, which give the Rules Committee life and death power over legislation. This committee channels bills to the floor after they have been approved by other committees.

"All too often in the past we have seen the House adopt rules which enabled the Rules Committee to usurp the power of final decision on legislation to be considered and gain dictatorial control over the Congress of the United States," Cowan wrote.

He called on each member to "work vigorously" for restoration of the rule adopted in the 81st Congress which prevented the committee from becoming "a permanent blockade" against House consideration of essential legislation. Under it, whenever the Rules Committee failed to send a bill to the floor after 21 days, the chairman of the originating committee could move that the measure go to the floor for action.

This gave the House a chance to then decide if it wanted the bill passed.

"THE 21-DAY rule prevented the Rules Committee from negating the work of all other standing committees of the House," Cowan said. "It prevented the committee from ignoring the time and energy put forth by other House members in their respective committees."

Cowan pointed out that—by actual test—the 21-day rule had prevented the Rules Committee from making a "mockery" out of the expressed will of the majority in Congress on several occasions. No less than eight vital measures were brought to the floor in the 81st Congress only after it had been invoked. All of them passed the House.

In addition, presence of the 21-day rule led the Rules Committee to release other essential legislation it otherwise probably would have blocked.

The drive against Dixiegop rules roadblocks in the House corresponded to the fight scheduled against Rule 22 in the Senate. This, too, was pushed through by the Dixiegop coalition so that Southerners could filibuster to death all important civil rights measures.

Last Tuesday a group of about 20 Republican and Northern Democratic Senators met in the office of Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) to map out strategy for a change in the Senate rules. Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), a leading Republican advocate of civil rights legislation and an Eisenhower supporter, joined in sponsoring the meeting.

The President-elect has pledged to do all in his power to curb filibusters. The fight for rules changes in both House and Senate was scheduled to be made Jan. 3, after the deadline for this issue of The CIO News.

CIO Tannery Local Gains 14c Package

CIO TANNERY Workers in Gloversville, N. Y., have signed a new two-year contract containing a 14c package increase for workers in 10 tannery mills.

Murray Gassman, CIO national representative, said the contract contained a 9c-an-hour wage increase, plus 5c in fringe benefits. The contract, with the Fluton County Tanners Assn., covers 500 union members.

Included in LIU 1712's new contract is an hourly rate schedule running from $1.34 to $2.50, plus paid holidays and vacations, seniority protection and health insurance. It provides for arbitration, a union shop and dues check-off and off-shift bonuses.

Not covered are 300 members of LIU 1712, employed in five plants which are not members of the association. These contracts expire in the period from April to September.

Auto, Steel Locals Order CIO News

Two widely-separated CIO Auto and Steelworkers local unions have joined the list of CIO locals subscribing for officers, committeemen and shop stewards.

The big Baltimore Local 738 of the UAW-CIO recently ordered the paper for some 140 officers and stewards, while USA-CIO Local 1669 in Indianapolis has subscribed for officers.

Full information on group subscription rates is available from The CIO News Circulation Dept., 718 Jackson Place N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

CIO Councils Campaign For Better State Laws

CIO COUNCILS last week moved ahead on the legislative and political fronts in several states.

In New Jersey, the State CIO Council took up the cudgels against the "totally unrealistic" maximum benefits of $30 weekly for unemployed and sick workers.

An all-day conference of delegates from CIO locals throughout the State was held at Newark to aid the State CIO legislative committee in drafting its 1953's state legislative program.

Harry Kranz, State CIO legislative director, in a keynote speech, said if most unemployed and sick workers are to receive benefits equal to two-thirds of their average weekly wage, as provided in new legislation taking effect Jan. 1, the maximum benefit should be set at $45 weekly for single workers. The maximum for workers with dependents should be raised by $5 per dependent up to four dependents, he said.

The Pennsylvania CIO Council held a statewide conference to draft its legislative program, which Pres. Harry Boyer described as "broad in scope and intended to benefit all the people."

The 12-point program included planks calling for increasing the weekly minimum and maximum workmen's compensation, occupational, and unemployment benefits to $25 and $35 respectively, improving the "phony" Women's Equal Pay Law, enacting an effective FEPC law and strengthening the State labor relations act.

IN MICHIGAN, State CIO Pres. August Scholle and Brendan Sexton, acting education director of the CIO Auto Workers, were among the members of the initiating group of the newly-formed Citizens' Committee Against the Trucks Law.

The committee attacked the law for its "vague definition of 'a Communist front organization' that can be stretched to cover almost any group" and called on citizens to join it in supporting a suit brought in Wayne County Circuit Court by the Socialist Workers Party to void the act. The committee said "we imply no political support whatever" to the party.

And in Texas, the Tarrant (Fort Worth) and the Dallas County CIO Councils renewed a campaign to have CIO members and others pay their poll taxes.

Rewriting Of McCarran Immigration Act Urged

THE McCARRAN - Walter Immigration Act should be "reconsidered and revised from beginning to end," the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization declared in a 316-page report made public Jan. 1.

The commission, in a bluntly-worded discussion of the law, found it violates "American traditions and ideals, it weakens the foundations of our liberty and undermines our security and well being." In addition, "it endangers our position of leadership and destroys the esteem and good reputation the United States has earned in the past."

The law is a complete substitute for all immigration and naturalization legislation passed by Congress since the foundation of the republic. Congress approved it last year over Pres. Truman's veto. It was strongly opposed by many labor, liberal, civic and church groups.

The late Pres. Philip Murray presented the CIO's strong objections at a session of the commission in Washington, one of 11 cities in which 15 days of public hearings were held. A major portion of the witnesses opposed the act, the commission said. "Certain basic policies" urged by all opponents it summarized as follows:

As Washington Said It —

The title of the report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, Whom We Shall Welcome, is a quotation from the writings of George Washington. Dated Dec. 2, 1783, in New York, the full quotation reads:

"The bosom of America is open to receive not only the Opulent and Respectable Stranger, but the oppressed and persecuted of all Nations and Religions; whom we shall welcome to a participation of all our rights and privileges, if by decency and propriety of conduct they appear to merit the enjoyment."

"THE NATIONAL origins quota system should be abolished.

"There should be an over-all maxium of annual quota immigration to this country. The determination of the total number of quota immigrants permitted to enter during any year should reflect the needs and capacity for absorption of the United States. That number, under present conditions, should be approximately 250,000.

"The allocations within this annual quota should be designed to meet emergency situations of great hardship abroad, such as continued distress and suffering among refugees, expellees, escapees, displaced persons and other victims of communism and other forms of totalitarianism, overpopulation, and the special and general needs of the U. S."

The commission, in effect, adopted these and other objections voiced to it as its own. In its conclusion, it said:

"The immigration and nationality law embodies policies and principles that are unwise and injurious to the nation.

"It rests upon an attitude of hostility and distrust against all aliens.

"It applies discriminations against human beings on account of national origin, race, creed and color.

"It ignores the needs of the United States in domestic affairs and foreign policies.

"IT CONTAINS unnecessary and unreasonable restrictions and penalties against individuals.

"It is badly drafted, confusing and in some respects unworkable.

"It should be reconsidered and revised from beginning to end."

The report made 17 recommendations for new legislation.

First was abolition of the national origins quota system. In its place was proposed a unified quota system, which would allocate visas without regard to national origin, race, creed or color.

It suggested a maximum annual immigration quota of one-sixth of the population according to the latest census. Under the 1950 census, this would mean 251,162 immigrants, instead of the 154,657 now authorized.

It would put all immigration and naturalization functions into a new agency, which would distribute quotas annually according to five factors—the right of asylum, reunion of families, needs in the U. S., special needs in the free world, and general immigration. For the next three years, 100,000 refugees, expellees, escapees and displaced persons would be admitted annually.

THE COMMISSION proposed enforcement methods assuring fair hearings and procedure, and offered a set of standards to govern admission of aliens and their deportation when called for based on reason and some discretionary authority for administrators.

It also called for continued protection of the U. S. by safeguards against the admission of spies and saboteurs. Aliens who are present members or affiliates of any totalitarian party should be excluded, it suggested, except when their membership is involuntary, or is not knowingly to "further the aims and principles of such parties."

The commission was composed of former Solicitor Gen. Philip Perlman, chairman; Earl G. Harrison, vice chairman; Msgr. John O'Grady, Rev. Thaddeus F. Gullixson, Clarence E. Pickett, Adrian S. Fisher and Thomas C. Finucane. Harry N. Rosenfield, former member of the Displaced Persons Commission, was executive director.

House Red Probe Aims At Unions And Schools

IN A REPORT containing recommendations which in part conflict with its findings, the House Un-American Activities Committee last week set the stage for new "investigations" of unions and the nation's schools during the coming year.

After exhaustive hearings, the committee discovered—and acknowledged — that what CIO leaders have been trying to tell Congress for some time is true. It reported:

- "For the most part, union members in the U. S. are completely loyal and patriotic."
- The Taft-Hartley Act requirement that non-Communist affidavits be filed by union officials "is now working to the benefit of members of the Communist Party engaged in the field of labor."
- "By and large, American youth has repulsed Communist efforts to recruit him."

After announcing these findings of fact, however, the committee went on to say that it "recognizes that it has a serious obligation to intensify its investigations" and called for full-scale probes of unions and the field of education. It said that legislation should be enacted under which unions found still to have Communists in them should be cited and denied use of NLRB facilities in labor-management disputes.

Another committee conclusion was that the non-Communist oath requirement should be repealed. In making this recommendation, the committee said that its evidence showed "conclusively" that Taft-Hartley's requirement not only permits Communist-dominated unions to use the NLRB facilities but gives them a ready-made argument against those who contend they are Communist controlled.

CIO EXECUTIVE Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood took exactly this position last year in testimony before the Senate Labor-Management Relations Subcommittee. He strongly opposed, however, further legislation aimed at government regulation, such as the committee recommends.

The late CIO Pres. Philip Murray put the case against the proposal in these words:

"We believe that if the Government undertakes to determine what unions can represent workers in this country, it will have embarked upon the long trail toward Government control of unions. In the dictatorships of the world, unions exist at the sufferance of the state. We in America do not want to take a single step in that direction."

HE ADDED that CIO's action in ending Communist control of some unions was proof that members of American labor organizations are fully aware of the problem and capable of doing whatever is necessary to protect their country's interests.

On this point, the committee lashed out at Local 600 of the CIO Auto Workers in Detroit, which it described as a "prime target" of the Communist Party. Published accounts of the report, however, failed to mention that UAW took over the local early last year and appointed an administrator to run it while known Reds were ousted from office.

The union was turned back to control of its members last fall after the administrator reported that Communist influence was reduced to its lowest ebb and conditions within the local were "greatly improved." Democratic control of the local by its members was thus preserved long before the issuance of the committee's report.

Shoe, Auto Locals Host Yule Parties

CHILDREN'S Christmas parties with a union label were presented by big and small CIO local unions throughout the nation over the holidays.

Typical were celebrations sponsored by the Shoe Workers in Haverhill, Mass., and by the Auto Workers in New York City.

The 5000-member Joint Board 31 of the USWA-CIO invited 500 needy children to its annual Christmas party.

Each child received from Santa a pair of shoes, a box of candy and a toy. And there were movies and ice cream to top off the celebration.

Mayor Joseph Willett of Haverhill and USWA-CIO Pres. Russell J. Taylor were among guests. Lorenzo S. Bergeron, joint board manager, helped arrange the celebration.

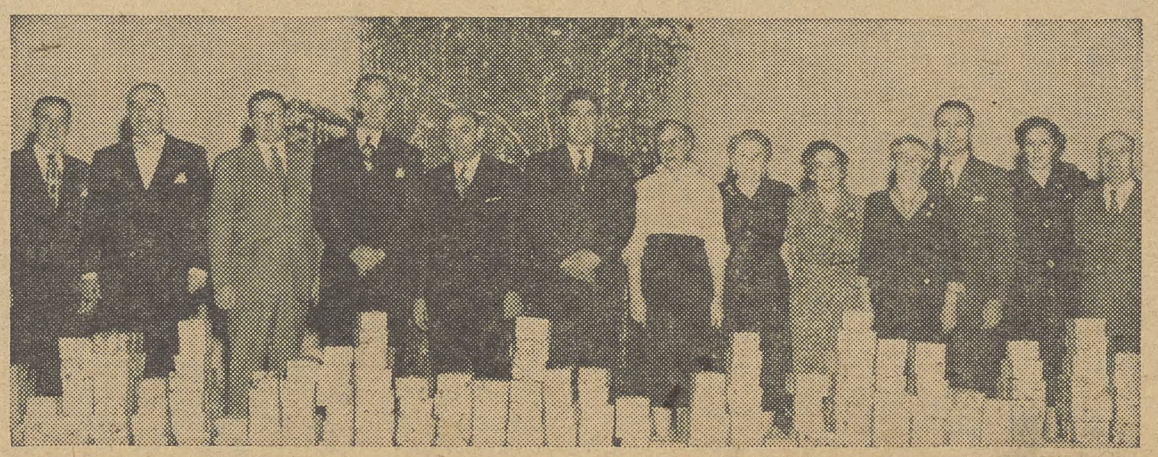
The UN youngsters were special guests at the big affair, which was climaxed by Santa's arrival with 11,000 gifts.

CIO Electrical Workers Local 901 was host to 11,000 at Fort Wayne, Ind.

At Gloversville, N.Y., CIO Tannery Workers LIU 1712 staged a post-Christmas theater party for some 1000 youngsters.



HOSTS at annual Christmas party for 500 needy children were these officers and committee members of CIO Shoe Workers in Haverhill, Mass. In center (before tree) are Lorenzo S. Bergeron, Joint Board 31 manager; Mayor Joseph Willett, USWA-CIO Pres. Russell J. Taylor, and Angelo Georgian, USWA representative.

Toots His Own Horn—

Jumping Joe Edges Mac In 'Scrambled Egg' Race

"JUMPING JOE" McCarthy has gone and done it again—gone and grabbed himself military medals by the bushel basketful.

As the new Congress returned to Washington, Wisconsin's junior senator was edging Gen. MacArthur in the "scrambled egg" race, sporting a Distinguished Flying Cross, an Air Medal and five stars all—supposedly—for combat service in the South Pacific almost a decade ago.

How he got the medals—and what he got them for—were open to question.

The Navy Dept. said Sen. McCarthy asked for them as "entirely within his rights; he was eligible."

McCARTHY replied 'twasn't so, he hadn't applied for them high awards. He said his former Marine Corps commanding officer had recommended them. Unlike what he was saying about a fellow Republican senator who looked into his high-flying finances, McCarthy didn't charge the Navy with a "smear."

Why McCarthy, who served 2½ years in the Marines as an air intelligence officer and then quit the Pacific War before it ended to run for the Senate, was in line for combat awards was an unanswered question.

McCarthy's own accounts of his Pacific fighting service were about as contradictory as his various figures on "card-carrying Communists" he has said were in the U. S. government.

His new citations credit him with 30 missions into enemy territory. His own biography in the Congressional Directory for the 80th Congress lists "17 official missions" against the Japanese. Back in 1944 a McCarthy campaign leaflet said he "participated in 14 dive-bombing missions over Japanese positions."

A Navy Dept. spokesman, and the recently-published book "McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism" added some explanations and some tarnish to Joe's new medals.

The Navy spokesman's statement made plain "Jumping Joe" was not a combat airman. He said he had "bummed rides whenever he could" to get his list of 14 or 17 or 30 missions. And issuance of the medals, he indicated, was more or less routine.

The authors of "McCarthy" say the Senator "holding a pair of jacks as a war record tried to bluff the world into thinking he held four aces."

McCarthy's South Pacific service first was on the New Hebrides, never in Japanese hands. He went to Guadalcanal—six months after Japanese resistance ended. His unit was moved up the Solomons to Munda—three months after the fighting ended on that island.

McCARTHY'S JOB as air intelligence officer was to interview returning Marine pilots, check results of attacks, and plan future missions. But that wasn't enough for Joe. He already had his jeep carrying signs like this: "Headquarters: McCarthy for U. S. Senator."

So he hitchhiked those 14 or 17 or 30 missions aboard Marine planes—and sent home campaign pictures of "Tail-gunner Joe" to the Wisconsin papers.

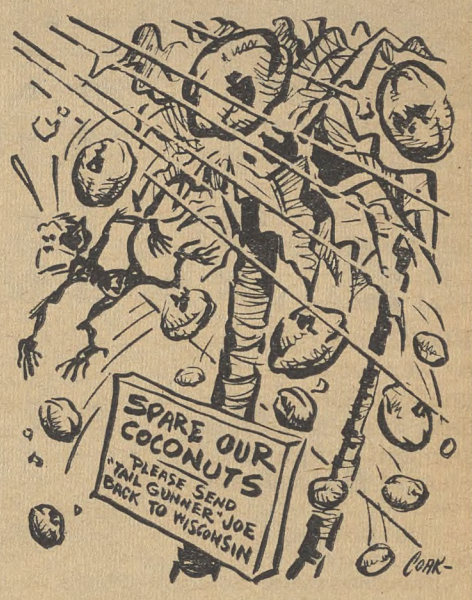
"There is no denying the fact that McCarthy fired a lot of ammunition," the authors of "McCarthy: The Man, The Senator, The 'Ism" said.

"The Judge really loved to shoot guns," one of his pilots reports. "He was really eager in that rear seat." He fired so often and so wildly that one day a huge sign appeared in the recreation area:

"PROTECT OUR COCONUT TREES. SEND McCARTHY BACK TO WISCONSIN."

There's a footnote to McCarthy's military saga: Leonard J. Burns, a Milwaukee Republican and Navy air combat veteran on the carrier Hornet, sent "Jumping Joe" his own Distinguished Flying Cross and four air medals as a "gift." He added:

"Wear them and your medals at the next session of the Senate and maybe you can convince your fellow senators you're a hero. You haven't convinced me of that."



Senate Sidetracks Report On McCarthy

"JUMPING JOE" McCarthy is in financial hot water again. Facts and figures on his tangled monetary operations were revealed by a Senate investigating committee.

The committee asked some questions about the propriety of some of McCarthy's dealings.

It didn't answer them—and neither did the new Republican Senate which met and organized a few hours after the report was released. McCarthy was seated without challenge.

What the GOP 83rd Congress will do about McCarthy was problematical.

The report of the Senate Elections subcommittee said McCarthy's continued membership was an issue "for the entire Senate." But the report now is in the hands of the Rules Committee headed by Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), the Hoosier carbon-copy of the Wisconsin lawmaker.

And Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.), chairman of the subcommittee which looked into "Jumping Joe," turned over to the Justice Dept. its complete files on McCarthy. "What happens," said Hennings, "is up to the new attorney general and the new Administration."

The lengthy McCarthy report dodged making any recommendations and only reported the findings of its 18-month investigation. Those facts, it pointed out, raise a number of new questions concerning McCarthy's fitness to hold public office.

"THE RECORD," it added, "should speak for itself."

The subcommittee dealt mainly with McCarthy's involved financial transaction and largely ignored another chief charge of former Sen. Benton (D. Conn.) that the Wisconsin Senator has perjured himself in connection with his charges of "communism" in government.

The subcommittee said the facts raise six main questions:

1. Did McCarthy use funds supposedly collected for his anti-Communist fight for his own personal gain?
2. Were his activities in Congress on behalf of special groups, including housing, sugar and Nationalist China interests, motivated by self-interest?
3. Was it proper under the circumstances for McCarthy to take $10,000 from the Lustron Corp.?
4. Do his loan and other financial transactions involve violations of tax and banking laws?
5. Did McCarthy use close associates and relatives to con-

His Record

The report on Sen. McCarthy's finances supplements the Wisconsin Republican's record in six years in Congress. That record stretches from votes for Taft-Hartley and against its repeal, votes against price controls, a vote for an anti-strike injunction against the CIO Steelworkers, and (just this past week) a vote to keep the filibuster against civil rights.

Typical Cases Of Joe's Finances

Here are three typical examples of the many documented facts about Sen. McCarthy's weird financial manipulations reported by the Senate Elections subcommittee:

I. CASE OF THE SOY BEAN MARGINS

By his own statements, when McCarthy launched "the public phase" of his fight against communism in February 1950, he asked supporters to send contributions to assist him. Later that year, McCarthy opened two new accounts in different Washington banks and deposited in them funds "received for anti-Communist activities" amounting to more than $10,000.

In September 1950, McCarthy authorized his secretary to withdraw $10,000 and this amount was credited to Henry J. Van Straten, county superintendent of schools at Appleton, Wis. The latter purchased 30,000 bushels of January soy beans on margin.

Within three months, a profit of $17,354.50 was realized, and from this $10,000 was returned to McCarthy. The final disposition of other cash withdrawals "is not known to the subcommittee."

The committee noted that, just prior to this transaction, the Agriculture Dept. had conducted an investigation of alleged soy bean market manipulation involving, among others, a number of Chinese traders.

Another question raised by the committee is why the $10,000 check Van Straten endorsed to McCarthy was deposited in his own general account, when the original money came from the special "anti-Communist" accounts.

II. CASE OF THE MISSING COMMUNISTS

The committee attempted to examine every check which had been issued by McCarthy from his special "anti-Communist" account, to which deposits amounting to nearly $21,000 were made.

It could identify only 78 out of about 180 items charged to this account, but learned enough to declare that, "at least without explanation, no connection could be established between many of the disbursements from this account and any possible anti-Communist campaign."

As examples of uses which it couldn't connect with the account's declared purpose, it cited "a check to the Collector of Internal Revenue for $73.80 on Oct. 2, 1950, at a time when Sen. McCarthy's Riggs general account appears to have been overdrawn" and a "cash" check for $200 on Oct. 20, 1950 "when it appears his general account was overdrawn."

The committee also questioned the connection with the fight against Communists of a check for $1300 to his administrative assistant, Ray Kiermas "at a time when his general account reflected a balance of $495.76."

"It is of possible significance," the report said, "that the deposits to Sen. McCarthy's general account at the Riggs National Bank and the deposits to the account of his administrative assistant at the same bank increased contemporaneously with the advent of the 'public phase' of Sen. McCarthy's 'fight' to expose Communists and Communist treason in Government."

McCarthy's deposits to his regular account in 1950 and 1951, the committee said, jumped by $3000 annually and those of Kiermas increased by $15,000 each year over the amount they had each deposited in 1949.

III. CASE OF THE AFFLUENT RELATIVES

William P. McCarthy, brother of the Senator, is described by the committee as a Chicago truck driver who "appears to be a man of only moderate means."

Although there is no evidence that he had any prior experience in the commodity market, in 1948 William P. McCarthy began speculating by opening an

Joe Tried To Block Report

Publicity is okeh for the other fellow but not when it's about Joe McCarthy.

According to the Republican Washington Post, the Wisconsin Senator tried desperately to block issuance of the Senate Elections subcommittee report.

The Post said McCarthy even flew to Camden, N. J., to urge Sen. Hendrickson, GOP member of the subcommittee, to dissent from the report. Hendrickson denied this, but confirmed he had received many objections to any publication of the findings on McCarthy.

Because of the maneuvering, the report was held up until the night before Congress met—too late for any immediate effect.

Dixiegops Knife Strong Civil Rights Bills

SHOWDOWN ON THE FILIBUSTER—The campaign to lift the filibuster roadblock to civil rights legislation was waged once again as the Senate convened in Washington. Three leaders of labor-liberal groups urging repeal of Rule 22, shown after meeting with Sen. Taft (R. O.), were (from left) Roy Reuther, CIO Auto Workers PAC director; Walter White, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People secretary, and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Four Senator foes of filibuster rule (at right) were Sens. Lehman (D. N.Y.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Ives (R. N.Y.) and Duff (R. Pa.). But Taft, new Senate GOP leader, already had lined up with Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) to kill rules change.

STRONG civil rights legislation was scuttled by the Republican 83rd Congress in its first week in Washington, a fortnight before the inauguration of President-elect Eisenhower.

The old Dixiegop alliance of ultra-conservative Republicans and ultra-conservative Southern Democrats worked as "a team" once again.

Together they swamped a proposal to reform the rules of the Senate to end unlimited filibusters—for years the chief roadblock to congressional enactment of fair employment practices and other civil rights bills.

In the House, Speaker Martin refused even to recognize Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.) when he attempted to introduce a motion to curb the powers of the Rules Committee. Instead it adopted the old rules.

Workings of the Dixiegop alliance were spread on the record during the past week.

ON THE floor, Sen. Russell (D. Ga.) was chief defender of the filibuster. He had met with Sen. Taft (R. O.) on New Year's Day to confer on tactics.

And the decisive motion—to table a proposal for rules reform—came from Taft himself. The new Senate majority leader had backing of the Senate Republican conference in this action.

The vote was 70 to 21 to table.

During several days of debate in the first week of the new Congress, much of the argument was on technical questions: whether the Senate could write its own rules each session or whether it was a "continuing body."

But the fundamental issue, as Sen Douglas (D. Ill.) said, was not the rules of the Senate but the carrying out of both Republican and Democratic pledges in the field of human relations.

If the old rules stand, Douglas warned before the decisive roll call, "we may as well say farewell to any chance for civil rights legislation or needed change in Senate procedure. In slang parlance, we may kiss such a possibility good-by."

Sen. Anderson (D. N. Mex.), who introduced the rules reform proposal on behalf of himself and 18 other Senators of both parties, also led debate throughout the first day. In doing so, the former Secretary of Agriculture ignored doctor's orders that he should not speak because of ill health.

Anderson called his motion fundamental to any sincere effort to get effective civil rights legislation, and pointed out also how Senators often use the threat of a filibuster to force acceptance of amendments to other measures. He said that if his motion were rejected, it would "smack of hypocrisy, because it will be known that there was not a genuine effort to bring about the desired result."

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) argued that the filibuster "negates the very process of democracy. It is time we proclaimed to the world that this body has full free debate—and also the right to vote."

FOLLOWING his pledge to New Jersey CIO officials on New Year's Day, Sen. Hendrickson (R. N. J.) strongly supported Anderson's motion. "The Senate can go far to restore itself in public esteem" by adopting its own rules and curbing unlimited stalling, Hendrickson said.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said the issue was whether the Senate should be "immobilized or energized" by its rules. He pointed out that under present rules a "fancy Dan motion" must be made to take up any proposal to change the rules, and that can be filibustered to death.

"You would be older than Rip Van Winkle before a vote came, if you brought up a motion to amend the rules," he told his colleagues. "If you touch that sacred cow, the rule of the Senate, you will be here till eternity."

REPUBLICAN Sen. Ives (N. Y.) agreed. He said the chances of getting the rules changed later are "most remote. The surest way to bring about the change is through adoption of the pending motion."

Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) likened the Senate rules to "the law of the Medes and the Persians. We cannot change them."

The closing address was by Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.). He made an impassioned plea to President-elect Eisenhower to get on the telephone and "Call the great leader of the Republican Party, Sen. Taft. and say, 'I want you to tell the Republican girls and boys I want to go down the line for this'."

Neely said that during the campaign Eisenhower had appealed for liberalized Senate rules everywhere he had gone "except in Texas, Florida and South Carolina." Now he had a real chance to accomplish a reform in rules for which "every liberal in the U. S. has been pleading," Neely declared.

THERE were chuckles from both Republicans and Democrats. Taft only grinned.

Neely said that he had more respect for his Southern Democratic colleagues for being honest about their opposition than he had for those Republicans who profess to want civil rights legislation but were unwilling to take the necessary step to make it possible for such measures to be enacted.

A few minutes later the vote was taken. Taft's firm control of the Senate was clearly evident when 41 Republicans and 29 Democrats, nearly all from Southern states, voted to table Anderson's motion. Five Republicans, 15 Democrats and Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) were opposed.

After the vote, Walter White, speaking for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, made up of 54 organizations including both the CIO and AFL, said that in the course of debate, Republican leaders had made three distinct promises:

1. To obtain the 64 votes needed to limit debate under Rule 22.
2. To enact FEPC and other civil rights legislation.
3. To make the revision of Rule 22 the first order of business in the Senate Rules Committee.

Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) contended that a limited victory had been won in that no point of order had been raised against Anderson's motion.

"This is only the beginning of a long and historic fight," he said. "The dead hand of the past cannot be permitted to continue to choke democratic majority rule in the Senate.

Ike's Promises

President-elect Eisenhower's "hands off" silence in the fight to curb Senate filibusters contrasts with campaign and post-election statements.

Former Sen. Lodge (R. Mass.) told reporters last Aug. 12 that Eisenhower had told him he felt "very strongly in favor of curbing the filibuster and of taking every measure practicable to support a program for civil rights."

Last Nov. 28 Eisenhower assured National Association for the Advancement of Colored People representatives that he would use his "utmost influence" with Congress to bring an end to filibustering.

Russell Snipes At Reuther And Gets Called Short

SEN. RUSSELL (D. Ga.) learned a little more about U.S. history as well as about CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther during the fight to change Senate rules.

In an effort to discredit CIO leadership on civil rights, Dixiecrat Russell charged that the motion introduced by Sen. Anderson (D. N. Mex.) originated with Reuther and "partook of 'goon squad' tactics.'"

"Mr. Walter Reuther is a man of parts. His views in many fields are worthy of consideration." Russell said. "But I prefer to draw my own conclusions as to the constitutionality of the proposal that the Senate of the U.S. is not a continuing body, even if it finds its genesis with Mr. Reuther."

Anderson observed that "it is very difficult to come up with a proposition of this nature and then be accused of 'goon squad' tactics." He informed Russell that in 1917, Sen. Thomas of Colorado had said the Senate did not have rules.

"I do not think he knew Walter Reuther at that time," Anderson said. "Walter Reuther was a boy 9 years of age, and I doubt that he communicated with Sen. Thomas."

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) called Russell's statement irrelevant, since the Senate should debate issues "on their merits" and not according to sponsors. He told Russell that Sen. Walsh had successfully led a similar fight to change the rules in 1917.

"EVEN if he (Reuther) had had all of the merits and virtues which the sculptors and painters of the Renaissance period accribed to the infant St. John the Baptist, it would be very difficult to think he had any definitive effect upon Sen. Walsh," Douglas said.

In a statement after Russell's charge, Reuther commented:

"Sen. Russell would do well to address himself to the great issue of majority rule essential to the operation of our democracy rather than to attempt diversion through personal attacks."

First Casualty

It was so very efficient, so very gay—the manner in which the conservative Republican-Dixiecrat coalition killed the move to limit Senate filibusters, and so to end the chance of really effective civil rights legislation for the next two years.

Taft, the conservative Republican, and Russell, the conservative southern Democrat, worked together to produce a streamlined operation. They also produced a streamlined disgrace. And they have warned us once again of the power of this reactionary bi-partisan coalition against all forward-looking legislation.

The Democratic platform, on which many of the southern Senators ran for office, called for liberalizing the Senate rules. Russell and his supporters flouted that promise to the people.

Gen. Eisenhower, at one of the more liberal points of his campaign, voiced "hope" the rules might be liberalized. If he "hoped" very strongly, he must now be strongly disappointed. He must also be worried that other of his more liberal "hopes" will be similarly be gutted by Sen. Taft and his friends.

So, the first promise, the first hope, has become the first casualty of the 83rd Congress.

As Americans, we are disappointed that the Senate has not met its great responsibility in the field of civil rights. We are equally confident, however, that the vote on the Senate rules will not forever stand.

We shall have civil rights laws, because we need them. Because they are needed, we in the CIO shall continue to fight for them.

A Great Message

It's too bad that many Americans will never get around to reading Pres. Truman's final State-of-the-Union message, a few brief sections of which are reprinted on this page.

The President's long review of his Administration, his pride in our national strength and achievements; his fears of Soviet-inspired world war and hysteria-inspired restrictions of our liberties—all show the mark of a truly great American who will leave a sizeable imprint on the history of the nation.

Soviet Russia pictures Pres. Truman as a warmonger; the President's message shows just the opposite—a man who fears the destructive power of modern war and prays for a way to peace.

Republicans picture Pres. Truman as a would-be dictator who has all but ruined the country. But the President's message shows his devotion to our basic liberties—a devotion not surpassed by the party of McCarthy and Jenner. Further, the President's review of eight historic years confirms that Fair Deal policies have brought truly great benefits to the nation.

Our homegrown reactionaries and isolationists cannot allow that record to stand unchallenged. They will try to use the Big Lie, the Big Silence and the Big Smear Campaign against the Truman Administration.

Constant propaganda can succeed, perhaps, in fooling some of the people into accepting a reactionary carticature of Truman and the Fair Deal as the factual truth. But so long as Americans remember the record, as the President has spelled it out in his message, the truth will withstand the attacks of its enemies.

'After You, Alphonso'

Truman's Farewell—

The State Of The Nation

Here are three excerpts from Pres. Truman's 10,000-word final State of the Union Message to Congress.

OUR ECONOMY: Consider some of the great questions posed for us by sudden, total victory in World War II. Consider also how well as a nation we responded.

Would the American economy collapse after the war? That was one question. Would there be another depression here—a repetition of 1921 or 1929? The free world feared and dreaded it. The Communists hoped for it and built their policies upon that hope . . .

Our economy has grown tremendously. Free enterprise has flourished as never before. Sixty-two million people are now gainfully employed, compared with 51 million seven years ago. Private businessmen and farmers have invested more than $200 billion in new plant and equipment since the end of World War II. Prices have risen further than they should have done—but incomes, by and large, have risen even more, so that real living standards are now considerably higher than seven years ago.

Aided by sound government policies, our expanding economy has shown the strength and flexibility for swift and painless conversion from war to peace, in 1945 and 1946; for quick reaction and recovery—well before Korea—from the beginnings of recession in 1949.

Above all, this live and vital economy of ours has now shown the remarkable capacity to sustain a great mobilization for defense, a vast outpouring of aid to friends and allies all around the world—and still to produce more goods and services for peaceful use at home than we have ever known before.

A WARNING: The war of the future would be one in which man could extinguish millions of lives at one blow, demolish the great cities of the world, wipe out the cultural achievements of the past—and destroy the very structure of a civilization slowly and painfully built up through hundreds of generations.

Such a war is not a possibly policy for rational men. We know this, but we would not dare to assume that others would not yield to the temptation science is now placing in their hands.

With that in mind, there is something I would say to Stalin: You claim belief in Lenin's prophecy that one stage in the development of Communist society would be war between your world and ours. But Lenin was a pre-atomic man, who viewed society and history with pre-atomic eyes. Something profound has happened since he wrote. War has changed its shape and its dimension. It cannot now be a "stage" in the development of anything save ruin for your regime and homeland.

I do know how much time may elapse before the Communist rulers bring themselves to recognize this truth. But when they do, they will find us eager to reach understandings that will protect the world from the danger it faces today.

It is no wonder that some people wish that we had never succeeded in splitting the atom. But, atomic power, like any other force of nature, is not evil in itself. Properly used, it is an instrumentality for human betterment. As a source of power, as a tool of scientific inquiry, it has untold possibilities. We are already making good progress in the constructive use of atomic power. We could do much more if we were free to concentrate on its peaceful uses exclusively.

DANGER SIGN: There are some things that could shift the advantage. One of the things that could defeat us is fear—fear of the task we face, fear of adjusting to it, fear that breeds more fear, sapping our faith, corroding our liberties, turning citizen against citizen, ally against ally. Fear could snatch away the very values we are striving to defend.

Already the danger signals have gone up. Already the corrosive process has begun. And every diminution of our tolerance, each new act of enforced conformity, each idle accusation, each demonstration of hysteria—each new restrictive law—is one more sign that we can lose the battle against fear.

The Communists cannot deprive us of our liberties—fear can. The Communists cannot stamp out our faith in human dignity—fear can. Fear is an enemy within ourselves, and if we do not root it out, it may destroy the very way of life we are so anxious to protect.

To beat back fear, we must hold fast to our heritage as free men. We must renew our confidence in one another, our tolerance, our sense of being neighbors, fellow citizens. We must take our stand on the Bill of Rights. The inquisition, the star chamber, have no place in a free society.

Sen. Douglas Tells:

How To Curb The Big Money In Politics

A PROGRAM to cut high cost of running for public office, similar in some respects to that proposed by CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, is offered by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in an article in a recent issue of the New Republic magazine.

Kroll suggested a four-point plan: that each candidate be made responsible for all expenditures in his behalf; that expenditures without the candidate's written consent be outlawed; that the candidate be held personally responsible for observing campaign spending limitations, and that he personally report all expenditures in his behalf.

SEN. DOUGLAS

Douglas offered his plan after detailed comment on the cost of the 1952 campaign to candidates at all levels. It was not only "one of the dirtiest and most vituperative" in U. S. history, he wrote, but it was "also the most expensive."

"Before the campaign started," he said, "I made a rough estimate that the total expenditures, at all levels, from the national organizations to the 142,000 precincts and for all candidates from president to coroner, would amount to not far from $75 million. From the figures which I have been able to gather the actual outlays this summer and fall may well have been even more.

"THUS, incomplete reports from nine Republican committees showed total expenditures of $9,325,000, while six pro-Stevenson committees, including the political arms of the AFL and the CIO, spent $2,408,000 or only about one-quarter of the reported Eisenhower figures. These amounts are, however, only the beginning.

"I would not be surprised if the outlays by national groups came to as much as $20 million and that for every dollar the Democrats spent, the Republicans and their allies spent four or five.

"But to all this we must add the amounts spent for state, congressional and county contests. The minimum cost of a closely contested congressional race is around $10,000 and often runs to several times that figure. While it may cost only a few hundred or thousand dollars to run for the Senate in a one-party state such as Vermont, the minimum legitimate costs will amount to from $150,000 to $200,000 in a fairly large industrial state.

"We do not know much about the cost of running for state and county offices because . . . few states . . . require the reporting of campaign receipts and expenditures. Those with practical experience, however, know that the costs of gubernatorial campaigns tend to be appreciably greater than those for the Senate.

"This is because control over the patronage and expenditures which go with the office of governor makes it a more material prize for which to strive. On a smaller scale, the tens of thousands who run for the state legislatures and for county offices tend to spend appreciable sums individually for their candidacies which amount in the aggregate to enormous outlays.

"The 1952 campaign was notable amongst other features for the great use of television. I understand that in the 1948 campaign, no more than 5% of the Democratic 'radio and television' budget went to TV, while this year three-fourths of such funds went to television.

"CERTAINLY the two parties spent well over $3 million on radio and television in this campaign by admission, even disregarding allegations of still larger funds for spot anonuncements and the like. The solid bank of political broadcasts and telecasts on election eve must have cost nearly half a million dollars.

"Television is expensive. An evening one-hour radio-TV simulcast on just one network costs nearly $70,000. Add to that a few chartered plane trips, costing about $25,000, and a special train for $100,000, and the result is frightening to the political novice.

"I am not, of course, merely concerned because campaigns cost so much. I am concerned about the vast majority of big donors who want something in return for their money which has necessarily financed a major part of a campaign of this proportion—contracts, jobs, loans, privileges, legislation and so on.

"I am concerned about the able men who either have no money of their own or cannot raise any appreciable amount from friends and supporters. Such men, despite their virtues, generally do not get selected as candidates for high office, or if nominated find themselves almost hopelessly handicapped.

"I have proposed several remedies to reduce the high cost of running for office, and the problem it creates. First, we must seek greater financial support of candidates and parties by small contributors. If we want to make our candidates more independent . . . we must be willing to give more liberally to their campaign funds.

"SECOND, we must tighten up and more strictly enforce legislation fixing a ceiling on the total amounts which may be spent for a candidate or party. The existing legislation (has) . . . enabled the spirit if not the letter of the law to be flagrantly violated. But Great Britain has demonstrated that such limits can be realistically set and enforced. Of what value in this campaign was the $3 million limit on national committees, when each party could institute such a number of 'Volunteers' or 'Citizens' or other 'Committees' as it saw fit?

"Third, I have called for moderate community support of campaigns out of taxes, a controversial issue originally proposed by Theodore Roosevelt back in 1907. The community would benefit from public servants no longer under obligation to big contributors, and from more widespread participation in public life of less wealthy citizens. Technical problems . . . must be worked out . . . We could start with the presidency and Congress by fixing a maximum of around 10c per registered voter for each office.

"Finally, the campaign now concluded leads me to stress more vigorously my contention that networks and local radio and television stations should be required to give a certain amount of time to the major political parties and their candidates without charge.

"THERE IS no similar obligation for the newspapers to give free space because they are not using a public property. But they have a moral obligation to furnish fairly balanced and objective news, whatever may be their editorial policies, and at a very minimum they should not charge more for political than for other advertising. Vastly higher rates are now common.

"Such proposals are only the beginning of an attack on this problem. A system of presidential primaries, public reports on the income of important public officials and a code of ethics for government officials all seem to me to be a part of a more sensible approach to political campaigns.

"Others have stressed the need for more publicity of campaign expenses and contributions and for shorter campaigns. Whatever solutions may finally be adopted, 1952 proved the high cost of elections to be a fundamental problem of ethics in government, with which citizens and officials alike must grapple."

Press And Politics—

Big Editors Holler Bloody Murder But Agree To Inquiry On Campaign Bias

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THE NATION'S daily press, which was more than 8 to 1 for Eisenhower during the election campaign, is going to investigate the charges that it was more than 8 to 1 for Eisenhower.

The editors and publishers aren't of one mind about such a survey, but there will be one—sponsored by Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity, which includes not only publishers and editors but also reporters, teachers of journalism, and students.

The charges were aired at the Sigma Delta Chi convention in Denver; at the meeting of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association in Boston, and at the banquet of the Eastern Newspaper Promotion Conference, also in Boston.

At Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., Frank Ahlgren assailed critics who said "distorted and slanted stories defeated the Democratic party." Ahlgren, editor of the Scripps-Howard Memphis Commercial Appeal, said the nation's newspapers have nothing to apologize for.

(Memo to Mr. Ahlgren: Why have the dailies buried the stories about a House investigation of the enormous campaign spending, showing the Republicans outspent the Democrats 2 to 1? Also, the critics said stories were slanted and distorted, but they did not say that defeated Stevenson. And, if the nation's newspapers have nothing to apologize for, why all the soul-searching going on?)

Ahlgren also said an AP survey showed the nation's papers "leaned over backward to give space to Stevenson and Truman," that the papers which backed Ike often gave more space to them than to Ike. (All other surveys disagree.)

AHLGREN even pointed to the polls taken aboard the Ike and Adlai trains showing the reporters were pro-Adlai, although their papers were for Ike. (This proves only that the writers don't agree with their publishers.)

Palmer Hoyt, of the Denver Post, told the Sigma Delta convention there is little evidence the dailies and magazines were responsible for Ike's election.

(Charles F. McCahill of the Cleveland News, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, had said earlier that "when the merchandise is good the press can sell it. I think the newspapers exerted great influence in this election. They had a great product to sell. They presented it factually and forcefully to the American people, and the people accepted it.")

Barry Bingham, of the Louisville Courier Journal, told the convention that the press itself must meet the charges of bias. "If there is dirty linen to be washed, let's do the washing ourselves," he said.

But Roy A. Roberts, of the Kansas City Star, said a survey of the press by the press would be "tommyrot," and Louis LaCoss, editorial page head of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, called it "snooping."

Prof. Zechariah Chafee, Jr., of the Harvard law school, told the AP managing editors that the nation's press is failing in its "moral responsibility" to give the people all the facts, free of distortion.

Kroll Urges PAC Push In State, Local Elections

THE POLITICAL "experts" call 1953 an "off-year" because there aren't any national contests, but it won't be any "off-year" for CIO Political Action Committees across the nation.

More than 1000 state, county and city elections are coming up this year, and CIO-PAC is going to be working — and working hard—in many of them.

A call for "enlarged and intensified" political action, with emphasis on the local contests, by CIO-PAC's 443 state and local units was voiced last week by Jack Kroll, national PAC director.

"No public office in the U. S. is too small to merit the attention of our organizations," Kroll said.

"Every public official, of whatever rank, should be subject to the closest scrutiny regarding his qualifications for office. Only in this fashion will we succeed in maintaining standards that measure up to the requirements of democratic self-government."

THE 1953 state and local contests, Kroll made plain, will be a "proving ground" for '54—when all members of the House and a third of the Senate will be up for election.

This year's contests, said the PAC director, will "provide valuable training for the increasing number of political action workers within our ranks and prepare them for the elections in 1954 and following years."

Kroll's statement urged PAC local units to participate in every stage of local contests, from registration drives, primary contests, raising PAC dollars to turning out the vote in final elections.

Already CIO councils and PAC units are working on the year-around political action program. In Detroit, for example, the Wayne County CIO Council has endorsed 35 candidates for board of education and lower courts.

Going Up In Smoke

Smokers got some bad news last week about what will happen when price controls expire. Harry Wooten, a tobacco expert writing in Printers' Ink, ad trade magazine, said the industry is planning to boost cigarets 1c a pack for regular sixes and 2c for the king size brands.

Ike's Plans For Bigger Labor Dept.

Congress Chiefs Want To Cut Service To Nation's Workers

By MILTON PLUMB

AMONG THE MANY promises made by Gen. Eisenhower when he was campaigning across the nation was a pledge to expand and strengthen the Labor Dept. so that it can properly represent the interests of the millions of American workers.

Now that President-elect Eisenhower is about to be inaugurated, his plans to build up the Labor Dept. apparently are about to collide with an attack on the agency by anti-labor Dixiegop members of the 83rd Congress.

In the act creating the department in 1913, Congress gave it the duty "to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

The new President has assured labor that he is behind that goal.

The record of leaders in the 83rd Congess, however, points the other way. When the same group of Republicans controlled the 80th Congress, the Labor Dept. was one of their chief victims. It still has not recovered from their staggering blows.

The Taft-Hartley Act transferred the Conciliation Service out of the department and made it an independent agency, headed by a Republican, Cyrus Ching. This struck directly at the department's participation in one of the basic factors of good labor relations, and cut off its role in the collective bargaining process at a most crucial point.

Previously, Congress had specifically authorized the Secretary of Labor to act as mediator and to appoint conciliators whenever he believed the interests of industrial peace required that it be done. Taft-Hartley, on the other hand has taken away from the secretary his previous functions of helping the settlement of disputes.

Some observers believe that the great increase in strikes since Taft-Hartley can be attributed, in large part, to the stern—and entirely unreasonable—prohibition.

Industry and congressional leaders are opposed to returning the Conciliation Service, a necessary first step in any move to place in the department its proper functions. They are also likely to oppose any move to transfer there other key labor agencies now independent, such as the National (Railroad) Mediation Board.

FAILURE to take these steps, however, will only continue the present discriminatory situation against labor. As it now stands, there is no one in the Cabinet with a legislative mandate to advise in national emergency disputes, although business has always been represented. Under the Truman Administration, the White House's contact with such disputes has been an indirect one, chiefly through John Steelman, the President's key advisor in labor matters.

One other damaging action of the 80th Congress was a rider to a 1948 appropriation bill which transferred the U.S. Employment Service to the Federal Security Agency. This was remedied by Pres. Truman in 1949, when, upon the recommendation of the Hoover Commission, he submitted a reorganization plan permanently housing the employment and unemployment insurance services in the Labor Dept.

There are already reports, however, that the new Republican Congress may repeat the performance of the 80th. Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, next Federal Security Administrator, is said to want the unemployment compensation and employment units under her wing.

IF SHE PRESSES hard enough, Eisenhower would be confronted with an unpleasant Cabinet dispute at the very outset. There is some talk that, to placate Mrs. Hobby, the Republican Administration might try to get her to settle for the transfer of the department's activities in the field of industrial health and safety.

These overlap, to some extent, the work of the Industrial Health Div. of the Public Health Service, now part of FSA. Those who favor a strong Labor Dept. point out, however, that the PHS, with its emphasis on medical matters, is in no position to do as effective a job as the department in the promotion of job safety programs.

They argue that a more logical step would would be to place the Industrial Hygiene Division in the Labor Dept.

JOBS.—U. S. Employment Services not only aids unemployed workers bu is vital factor in mobilizing the nation's manpower for defense production

Business Groups Shape Drive

POWERS OF the Labor Dept. as the chief government agency enforcing laws designed to protect the wages, working conditions and health and safety standards of American labor may be whittled away in the 83rd Congress.

So far, Republican leaders in Congress have been talking primarily about revisions of the Taft-Hartley Act (see page 9). But behind the scenes bitter attacks are shaping up on the existing protection given to labor by at least four other laws.

All of the laws under attack by anti-labor congressmen and business interests are inadequate and need strengthening. Instead, there is grave danger that, while the headlines created by the fight over Taft-Hartley divert attention, these laws which give basic protection to labor will be critically weakened.

Perhaps the most important single protective function of the department is its administration of the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, under which it sets minimum wages for work on all government contracts of more than $10,000. In the present defense period, the importance of preserving and strengthening this law is greater than usual because so much of the economy is geared to government purchases.

But the Dixiegop reactionaries who controlled the 82nd Congress ganged up on the law last year and passed one weakening amendment. It subjects minimum wage determinations to endless delays by court review. Three other much more damaging amendments were also sponsored by Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.).

THESE PROPOSALS beaten back only after strong CIO opposition, would have nullified the basic intent of the law by requiring all minimum wage determinations to be made on a "local" basis instead of regionally as at present. They also would have cut the act's coverage almost in half by exempting purchases of all goods sold on the open market.

Southern operators of "run-away" shops, particularly in textiles, are already challenging the recent $1 minimum wage proposed by Sec. Tobin for cotton, silk and synthetic industries. Some business spokesmen demand outright repeal of the act, which would bring in its wake a return to the "sweatshops" of the last century.

To Weaken Basic Wage Laws

The Davis-Bacon Act, which gives the Secretary of Labor similar powers to set wage floors in the building industry, also is under attack. The Associated General Contractors, U. S. Chamber of Commerce and other business organizations are known to be presently working on amendments to this act. Some want outright repeal, and the least any are ready to settle for is a court review amendment like the one in Walsh-Healey.

Besides saddling labor with Taft-Hartley, the Republican 80th Congress seriously weakened the wage and hour laws. With the same leaders once again in power, many fear a new assault on the Fair Labor Standards Act, which sets an overall minimum wage of 75c, spells out minimum safety standards, restricts child labor, and requires time-and-a-half pay for work over 40 hours a week.

The CIO has advocated a hike in the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour, as a necessary adjustment to the realities of the inflation which has taken place since the last increase. It also seeks greatly extended coverage, particularly to service workers and agriculture.

Such needed reforms are bitterly opposed by business interests and by reactionary congressmen, particularly from the South, bent on preserving feudal control over the lowest-paid wage groups. When the minimum wage was last increased from 40c to 75c in 1949, the need for greater coverage was ignored.

The act's protection is also endangered by pressures from business interests to lengthen the standard work-week to at least 45 hours before overtime pay would be required. Lobbyists for the big corporation farms also are seeking to whittle away restrictions on the employment of child labor in agriculture, only recently written into the act.

PRESSURE is also developing from the corporation farm interests of the Southwest for new loopholes in the inadequate law passed by the last Congress to regulate the employment of illegal Mexican "wetbacks." They also want to weaken the Labor Dept.'s power to keep the amount of foreign labor imported for seasonal agricultural jobs from becoming too excessive.

At present the department is responsible for certifying that a real need for imported labor which cannot be met by U. S. workers exists before the government permits importation.

Vested Groups Fight Moves For Adequate Appropriations

PROPOSALS to build up the Labor Dept. in most cases collide with vested interests, either of the anti-labor bloc in Congress, other government agencies or big business lobbies.

All face at least some bitter opposition. Key steps would include:

1. Return of the Conciliation Service, and the transfer of present independent agencies performing similar functions, into the department.

2. Return of the Immigration Service, which was part of the Labor Dept. until transferred to the Justice Dept. in 1940.

3. Giving the department responsibility for over-all direction of the Selective Service Program.

4. Transfer to the department of the industrial hygiene functions now performed by the Public Health Service.

5. Creation of a workers' education bureau to perform essential activities in this field now entirely neglected by the government.

6. Restoration of appropriations to a level where established units like the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Women's Bureau could once more begin to perform the work for which they were created.

The battle for appropriations, of course, is the basic one, since all of the other steps would be meaningless if adequate funds are denied the department for its operations. Here, the outlook is grim, with Chairman Taber of the House Appropriations Committee and Republicans generally bent on heavy budget slashes.

Taber was in the same post in the Republican 80th Congress and played a leading part in the hatchet job which crippled the department. Total appropriations were cut from $23 million to only $15 million, but funds for personnel and operating costs generally were slashed even heavier—45%.

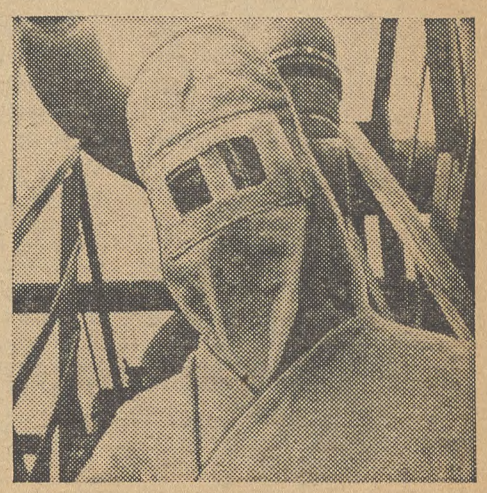
THIS MEANT that the department had to cut its never adequate staff almost in half, to less than 4000. Pres. Truman's efforts to rebuild the department after the 80th Congress have restored both appropriations and staff to roughly their 1946 level.

Actually, however, since much present work is carried on by the use of defense money transferred to cover contract assignments for the Pentagon, the department still has not been restored to its former level. Virtually all of its bureaus are short of staff and cannot undertake vitally needed assignments.

Inflation, too, has made appropriations of the same level inadequate to do the job they did in 1946. The department has never been able to resume, for example, even the limited workers' education activities it previously was undertaking.

The proposal most likely to be adopted appears to be the one to place Selective Service in the department. Efforts of the military to take over this operation which has its chief impact on the labor force have been repulsed in the past, and there is an increasing recognition that our growing national population will bring manpower and employment problems in the years ahead.

CHANCES for return of the Immigration Service appear to be slim. Sec. Perkins agreed to its transfer to the Justice Dept. in 1940 because the national emergency required emphasis on its policing operations. The situation is somewhat different today, with the Labor Dept. exercising considerably more responsibility in connection with the subsidized import of agricultural labor.



MAN FROM MARS dress is used in industrial safety program.

The department's activities to insure fair work standards for agricultural labor have always been fought by Dixiegop reactionaries in Congress, and instead of strengthing its work in this area, Congress apears more likely to weaken it. There are reports, for example, that the Farm Labor Service, transferred to the Labor Dept. under the Reorganization Act, is in danger of being shifted back to the Agriculture Dept.

One other vital operation of the department, which has become increasingly important as women have been employed to meet defense needs, also may be marked for transfer. The new Federal Security Administrator may try to get the Women's Bureau shifted to her agency.

CIO Councils Begin Regional Parleys On Legislation, PAC

THE FIRST of a series of seven CIO regional conferences—dealing with the work of state and city councils in such fields as legislation, political action, conservation, publicity and community relations—was to be held in Atlanta, Ga., over the past weekend.

The three-day session, at Georgia CIO headquarters, brought together some 50 or 60 CIO council officers and regional directors from the states of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, and Tennessee.

Similar regional conferences will be held, during the next six months, at Little Rock, Ark.; Chicago; Columbus, Ohio; Philadelphia; Boston, and Salt Lake City.

In announcing the meetings, Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, declared:

"The CIO is a community organization. It is interested in community welfare—in schools, hospitals, decent city and state government, and all the other problems of citizenship in which Americans concern themselves.

"Some propaganda artists like to depict American workers as 'big labor' dominated by 'labor bosses.' The work of the CIO in hundreds of communities throughout America refutes that misleading and malicious portrait.

"AMERICAN workers are good citizens. Their unions, and their CIO city and state councils, are tools for promoting the interests of good citizenship. Regional meetings, bringing together labor's community leaders, benefit not only the CIO but all the people in the states and cities of each part of the nation.

"I feel confident that these regional conferences will prove highly successful."

The Atlanta session was under the guidance of Anthony W. Smith of Washington, assistant director of councils for the CIO; Paul Christopher of Knoxville, Tenn., state director for the CIO Organizing Committee; and David Burgess, Georgia CIO Council executive secretary.

SPEAKERS included August Scholle and Herbert McCreedy, regional director and assistant regional director for the CIO in Michigan; Michael Mann, CIO regional director in New York; Henry Fleisher, CIO publicity director; George Guernsey, CIO associate director of education; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research; Tilford Dudley, assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee; and Smith, who is also executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

California CIO Urges 'Little Wagner Act'

THE CALIFORNIA CIO Council will ask the Legislature to establish a State labor relations board at its forthcoming session, Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol announced last week.

The "Little Wagner Act" proposal is one item on a broad legislative program which will be pushed by the CIO in the Legislature.

Despol said organized labor wants the State labor relations body in order to promote equality of bargaining power in intrastate industry, and diminish the causes of industrial disputes by encouraging collective bargaining.

The CIO also will make an effort to spread the tax burden more equitably by pushing a plan to cut the sales tax from 3% to 2%, with a compensating income tax increase on incomes of $5000 or more.

The council in addition is supporting legislation tackling the civil rights and civil liberties problems from several angles; bills to increase top unemployment compensation benefits from $25 to $40 a week and extending coverage to agricultural labor, and others raising the disability insurance sick leave pay maximum from the present $30 to $40 weekly.

ANOTHER broad legislative program, aimed at benefiting the population at large, is being pushed by the Minnesota CIO Council.

As in California, CIO in Minnesota will tackle the tax problem with a program calling for a slash in personal property taxes on household furniture and on grain stored on family-sized farms, and exemption from the income tax of the first $4000 of earnings of a worker with a wife and two children.

It also seeks lower levies on a number of special sales taxes, increases in certain business taxes, and taxes on iron ore rights on subsurface lands.

THE STATE CIO Research Dept. has prepared two tax studies available to legislators. One deals with iron ore reservations, lists the owners, and estimates the amount of taxes they have escaped paying to the State and its subdivisions. The other shows just who pays taxes in the State.

The New Jersey CIO Council's Legislative Committee has approved a five-point legislative program to promote plant safety and provide care for industrial accident victims. Under it the Legislature would:

1. Create a commission to examine and recommend revisions of the State's "antiquated" safety laws.
2. Require plants employing 500 or more persons to have a physician or nurse for emergency care in permanent attendance.
3. Permit workers injured on the job to choose their own physicians, instead of letting them be forced to use plant or insurance company doctors.
4. Boost workmen's compensation benefits in line with the increased cost of living, giving injured workers 70% of average weekly earnings up to a top of $50 weekly for single persons, plus $5 for each dependent.
5. Increase current benefits for those permanently and totally disabled in past industrial accidents.

A New Idea On Campaign Funds

The legislative program of the California CIO Council includes a proposed bill that would have the State footing part of the cost of election campaigning.

The plan calls for the State Treasury to give the political parties 50c per year for each registered voter. The idea is to keep the cost of campaigning within some sort of bounds and try to make sure that good candidates are not barred because they cannot afford to get involved in a race for office.

HST Praised For Devotion To People

A petition voicing appreciation to Pres. Truman for his "consistent devotion and sympathy to the aims and aspirations of all America's little people" during his lifetime of public service is being distributed for signatures by the Wisconsin CIO Council.

Scrolls are being sent all local unions in the State for circulation in factories and offices and at union meetings, where they may be signed. Pres. Charles Schultz and Sec.-Treas. Ross Baum of the council expect to get thousands of signatures before the resolution is presented to the President when he officially leaves the White House.

Stone Wins ALA Election

TWO TOP officers have been picked by members of the CIO Lithographers in a special election.

Donald W. Stone, editor of the ALA Lithographers' Journal, was elected secretary-treasurer. He defeated Intl. Rep. Rudolph Harper.

Martin Grayson, formerly secretary-treasurer, was elected mountain region vice president, defeating Harry Grady of Chicago.

"I now pronounce you Labor and Management!"

Union Rights Of Insurance Agents Upheld By NLRB

UNION RIGHTS of insurance agents were spelled out in an important decision handed down by the NLRB.

Reversing a previous decision, the NLRB ruled that even though an insurance agent maintains his own office he is eligible to belong to a union.

The board ordered an election along the life, auto, fire and casualty insurance agents employed by the Golden State Agency, Inc., a California concern, and other related companies.

Chairman Richard T. Leonard of the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee hailed the decision as opening the way for organizing tens of thousands of agents.

IAWOC won the victory after a 10-month fight against an adverse decision handed down by the NLRB. On the demand of IAWOC, the case was reopened and hearings held. Irving Abramson, IAWOC counsel and CIO national representative, was in charge of presenting the union's case.

In making its decision the NLRB found the agents are not independent contractors as it formerly contended. It held the agents constitute an integral part of the insurance companies' business and set up a number of standards to determine whether the workers are their own bosses.

Heretofore, IAWOC has represented industrial insurance agents who are directly under the control of district office managers.

Michigan GOP Taps Soapy For Cost Of Recount

"SOAPY" WILLIAMS is in for an unprecedented third term as Michigan's governor, but it looks like he's out $12,500 for the cost of a recount asked by his defeated Republican opponent.

Gov. Williams (formally it's G. Mennen) led Fred M. Alger, Jr., by 8600 votes when the ballots were counted two months ago.

Alger asked a recount in some 1500 precincts. Then Williams asked that the votes be checked in 2500 precincts using paper ballots, and put up $12,500 to cover the cost.

Alger called off the recount after the check had added 2000 votes to the Democratic governor's majority.

But Michigan's all-Republican state board of canvassers held on to Williams' $12,500 deposit, said they wouldn't give it back.

In Michigan's senatorial race, supporters of ex-Sen. Moody (D.) withdrew their request for a recount of Rep. Potter's (R.) victory.

Tobias Elected

Channing H. Tobias last week was elected chairman of the board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The Negro leader had served as alternate U. S. delegate to the United Nations.

ACW Strikes N. Y. Cleaner

OPERATIONS of the Kent Stores, Inc., largest non-union cleaning and dyeing chain in the country, were halted last week by a strike of 350 maintenance and production workers called by Local 239 of the CIO Clothing Workers.

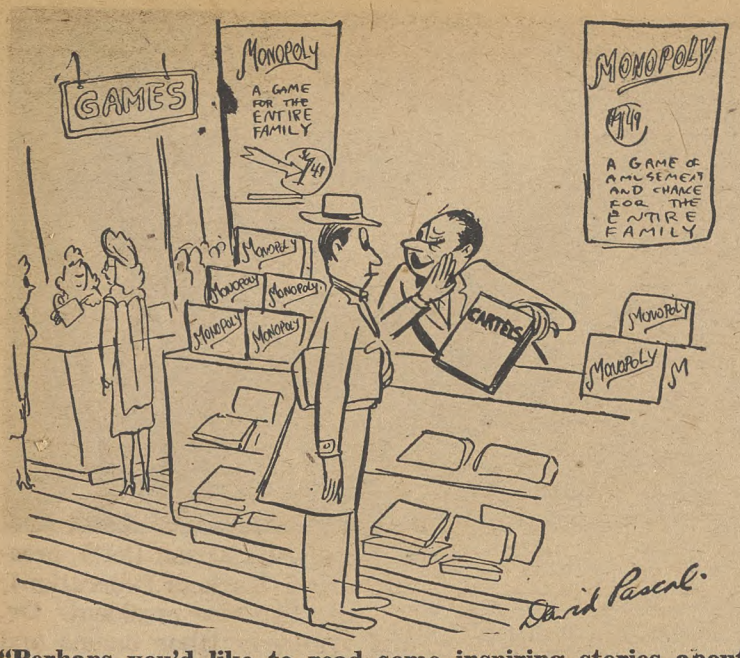
The chain has stores all over Long Island, N. Y., and plants in Whitestone and Jamaica, Queens, N. Y. It has served notice on the State Labor Relations Board that it "will never bargain with the Amalgamated" regardless of what the board does about a bargaining agency, according to Manager Jack Cohen of Local 239.

The employes walked out, he said, "against intolerable working conditions" and substandard wages.

URW, Goodyear Talks To Open

Contact negotiations between the CIO Rubber Workers and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., covering some 30,000 workers in 10 plants, will begin Jan 12, the union announced last week.

Bargaining will cover Goodyear plants in Akron and St. Marys, O.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Muncie, Ind.; New Bedford, Mass.; Topeka, Kan.; Jackson, Mich.; Windsor, Vt.; Lincoln, Neb.; and Gadsden, Ala.



"Perhaps you'd like to read some inspiring stories about others who have gone on to great success."

Supreme Court Refuses T-H Injunction Ruling

THE SUPREME Court last week rejected the petition of the CIO Steelworkers for an immediate ruling on the constitutionality of the 80-day no-strike injunction clause of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The steel union had sought a speedy review of a decision by Judge John Knight, in U. S. District Court at Buffalo, N. Y., holding the proviso constitutional. Judge Knight issued an injunction that ended a strike of 1500 USA-CIO members at the Dunkirk, N. Y., plant of the American Locomotive Co. It was directed not only against the local, but against all USA-CIO members and officers.

The union sought an immediate high court review because the injunction expires Mar. 2. At the same time it went through the normal channels by filing a formal appeal with the U. S. Circuit Court in New York City. This procedure, the union maintained, would get the case to the Supreme Court after the injunction expires, and the high court customarily refuses to rule on "moot" issues.

TWO DAYS after the Supreme Court refused to act, Arthur J. Goldberg, general counsel for the Steelworkers and the CIO, said he expected the Circuit Court would hear argument on the appeal on Feb. 2.

The injunction action before Judge Knight was started by the Dept. of Justice. Federal attorneys maintained in court that continuation of the strike would constitute a "national emergency" by imperiling defense production. Part of the Dunkirk plant production is used in installations of the Atomic Energy Commission.

THE UNION claimed the T-H injunction violates the Constitution because it gives the district courts functions which are not judicial or related to any controversy subject to court action; that the provision, even if constitutional, was not applicable to a local strike not involving an entire industry, and that all members of a union could not be enjoined from taking action in a strike involving only one local.

The union also claimed the 80-day injunction was "a means of settling a labor dispute by breaking a strike."

Steel Union's Growth Told

THE SOLID GROWTH of the CIO Steelworkers is shown by the union's largest audit, which was released last week.

USA-CIO now has 1.1 million members, according to the audit for the six months to June 30, 1952. They are in more than 2200 locals.

During the period, an increase of $290,140.19 brought the union's net worth to $10,394,599.58. This occurred despite the two-month strike which began last June 2.

In the half year, USA-CIO collected $12,774,901.12 from investments, initiation fees, dues and miscellaneous sources. Of this amount, $6,338,915.14 was refunded to local unions.

"You can see why these anti-union guys are always bragging that they have open minds!"

Relief Asked For Shoe Strike

With a $100 contribution, the Michigan CIO Council has started a statewide drive for a relief fund for CIO Shoe Workers Local 65.

The local has been on strike since mid-September against the Wolverine Shoe & Tanning Corp., which refused to negotiate a new contract and then fired 13 local leaders.

Checks should be sent to USWA-CIO Local 35, Box 601, Rockford, Mich.

Wide Open Hearings Set On Taft-Hartley Changes

WIDE OPEN hearings on proposed changes in the Taft-Hartley Act were announced last week for the House and Senate.

At the same time, a Senate Labor subcommittee staff report advised members of both houses that a ban on industrywide bargaining would "not necessarily reduce" the danger of strikes that could cause national emergencies.

Republican Leader Taft in the Senate and Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) of the House Labor Committee said the hearings would open in both houses about Feb. 1. How "wide open" they will be remained to be seen. However, Taft said he and McConnell had agreed on the "general approach" and that House and Senate may report similar bills.

Taft said recently he intends to introduce only what he described as "non-controversial" amendments.

The CIO favors repeal of T-H, not its amendment, and enactment of a new industry relations law.

One proposed Taft amendment requires company officials to take the same non-Communist oath as union officers are required to do in order to qualify for the services of the National Labor Relations Board. He does not plan to push for a prohibition on nationwide bargaining, although he said in a recent interview in Fortune magazine that such an approach may have to be tried if other remedies fail.

IN HIS magazine interview, Taft also rejected any easing of the 80-day injunction bar. Instead, he wants Congress to strengthen it by considering each specific strike that survives or is revived when the injunction expires. This, he explained, "might provide for seizure, another injunction or arbitration—or Congress might decide not to do anything."

Taft also would allow strikers replaced in their jobs to vote in representation elections. And he wants to pack the NLRB with two more "conservative" members because he thinks it is "biased" in favor of labor. Labor leaders have been complaining that it is biased in favor of management. Taft dismissed this with the airy explanation that "they just want everything."

Taft decided not to take the chairmanship of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, although he will remain a member, in order to give more time to his duties as GOP floor leader. The post went to Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), who voted for T-H when the Senate passed it and again when it came back after Pres. Truman's veto.

The report on banning industrywide bargaining was prepared for the subcommittee headed in the last Congress by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). It was compiled by Dr. Gustav Peck, senior specialist for the Library of Congress.

It said that an attempt to limit the scale of collective bargaining could damage labor-management relations in some industries, specifically the building trades, the needle trades and others where bargaining has been on a regional or associational basis.

Neither experience to date nor proposals thus far submitted for settling national emergency labor disputes, it said, "lead to a direct conclusion that a single method has yet been devised which furnishes an unerring remedy."

Taft Admits Press Is Loaded

Even the author of the Taft-Hartley Act, Sen. Taft (R. O.), admits that newspapers are loaded against labor in their reports on strikes.

"The newspapers holler their heads off that people are suffering" when there's a strike, he said. "Usually they're not suffering."

Taft made the statement in an interview published Jan. 2 in Fortune magazine.

Cops Give Scabs A Hand In Long Montreal Walkout

CANADIAN Copper, police of three cities and a private detective agency have united in attempting to break the strike of 550 members of the CIO Oil Workers at the firm's plant near Montreal.

The police of Montreal, East Montreal and Port a Trom and the detective agency helped import 300 scabs. The cops escort the strikebreakers from their homes to the plant and back again—all the way to the front door.

So far the scabs have not learned to operate the equipment formerly manned by the workers who have been on strike since last July in a fight for union recognition. Christmas time contributions to the strikers from OWIU locals in U. S. and Canada totaled more than $7000.

Productivity Hikes Okehed

THE WAGE Stabilization Committee last week authorized employers to put into effect in 1953 all productivity increases that are no greater than similar raises approved last year.

If the increases fall within the committee's policies, an announcement said, they can be put into effect without prior approval. This means wage hikes, under contracts, which were approved by the Wage Stabilization Board last year on the guarantee they would not be used as a basis for asking higher prices.

The resolution assures thousands of members of the CIO Auto Workers employed by the major manufacturers of a 4c an hour pay raise in May. Such an improvement factor is provided annually in contracts that expire in 1955.

The Facts Were Enough—So Mrs. R. And Kids Had Whale Of A Christmas

IT'S A LITTLE late for Santa Claus stories, and this one wouldn't have been written if it hadn't been for a CIO newspaper and its columnist.

The newspaper is the Flint Weekly Review, published by the Greater Flint County (Mich.) CIO Council. The columnist is Ruby McDonald.

It seems there was a family living in a shack on the outskirts of Flint. A mother, a little bit of a thing, and nine kids, the youngest around two, the oldest 13. The father was in jail, working out a year's sentence for mistreatment of the family. Cooking—what little there was of it—was done on what might be called a stove. It was fueled by kerosene, which had to be poured into a shallow pan while it was in use. There was no icebox. The electricity was due to be turned off.

Columnist McDonald heard about Mrs. R., the family she was fighting to keep together, and the fact that Santa had somehow never managed to get around to dropping in at Christmas time. Into the column went the whole grim story. Just the facts—no plea for anything.

The facts were enough. They touched the hearts of a lot of people who recalled another Child that came into the world under material circumstances far from auspicious. Not only CIO members—most of them Auto Workers—but all sorts of people in the Flint area. Calls started jingling phone bells in the Review office. Packages arrived in droves—food, clothing, toys, warm blankets, the pledge of a decorated Christmas tree, redeemable on Christmas Eve, from a department store, even a turkey in a new electric roaster.

By Christmas Eve the Review office looked like the department stores. The largesse was too much for the cars waiting to move it to the crumbling home that didn't quite keep out all the winter wind. So the Review hired a truck, loaded it up with everything up to and including a Santa Claus in full regalia, and made delivery.

Mrs. R. and the kids had a whale of a Christmas. So did a lot of other people around Flint.

Mariano Bishop, CIO Veteran And Textile Veep, Dies At 46

MARIANO S. Bishop, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, who went to work at the age of 10 in a textile mill, died over the New Year's holiday.

The TWUA executive council, meeting in Boston last week, elected William Pollock executive vice president. He had been secretary-treasurer. Dir. John Chupka of the TWUA woolen and worsted division was advanced to the secretary post.

Bishop, who was 46, became ill while driving near Passaic, N. J., on his way to the Rutherford, N. J., home of Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council.

A companion and TWUA staff member said he slumped over the wheel, exclaiming "I've got a pain in my chest." She drove him to St. Mary's Hospital, Passaic, where he was pronounced dead. Cause of death was tentatively listed as a heart attack and an autopsy was ordered.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO executive vice president, extended the sympathy of the CIO to his family, associates and friends. He said, "Once again CIO has suffered a loss of one of its leading figures.

"Mariano Bishop came to this country from the Azore Islands and in return for its goodness to him rendered great contributions to the welfare of American workers and their families."

Haywood said Bishop "did not confine his abilities to the problems of his organization, for he served as a CIO representative on the committee that recommended new minimum wage rates for Puerto Rican workers."

Haywood added that Bishop "served with distinction" as TWUA executive vice president and that "he will be greatly missed by his union and by the whole labor movement."

MARIANO S. BISHOP

The meeting at Holderman's home was to discuss the state CIO president's retirement as New Jersey TWUA director, a post he assumed in May, 1952, to lead TWUA's fight against a secession drive by the AFL United Textile Workers.

BISHOP was elected TWUA executive vice president at the union's convention last year after George Baldanzi left TWUA to join the AFL textile union.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve, the union's executive council and department heads, and other CIO officials last week attended a requiem high mass at Fall River, Mass, where Bishop lived.

Bishop came as an infant with his parents to Fall River, where they went to work in cotton mills. Bishop, who went to work in a cotton mill at the age of 10, became a member of the AFL textile union. He subsequently became president and then business agent of his local union and later joined the union's national staff.

He switched to the CIO Textile Workers Organizing Committee in 1937 and was put in charge of the Fall River area, and the following year was elected to the executive board of the old Federation of Dyers, a unit within the union.

He led a drive in 1941 which completed the organization of Fall River for TWUA, and later helped to direct a similar successful drive in New Bedford, Mass. Bishop was named northern cotton-rayon director in 1943, and was elected to the union's international executive council in 1946 and 1948, when he was appointed national cotton-rayon director.

Thomas Visits Panama, Raps U. S. Bias Policy

BY HOLIACE RANSDELL

INTERVIEWED at CIO headquarters in Washington after his return from a flying visit to the CIO's big union in the Panama Canal Zone, R. J. Thomas heaved a big sigh, pulled out his handkerchief and wiped his forehead.

"I bet I'm 10 pounds lighter now at least," CIO's assistant organization director said reflectively. From the time he arrived at Panama City's airport at one in the morning until he departed three days later at 2:20 a.m., Thomas said, he was whisked by energetic CIO'ers in the Zone from one place to another like a character in the movies.

"THE PEP those people have in that heat!" he said with admiration. "It was in the nineties there—all the time—no relief."

Thomas had a breakfast conference with some of the officers of Local 900, Government & Civil Employees Organizing Committee, the CIO union of some 9000 members in the Canal Zone; was interviewed by the press; was rushed by auto to several of the union's offices and workers' clubhouses; and paid a courtesy call on U. S. Ambassador John C. Wiley.

He was taken to see one of the Canal locks; called on Canal Zone Gov. John S. Seybold and Lt. Gov. H. O. Paxson, then was driven the 50 miles across the zone to the Atlantic side where he spoke that night at a union mass meeting.

NEXT morning the schedule was breakfast at a workers' clubhouse, a tour of housing projects in several canal towns, and an interview with Pres. Jose Antonio Remon of the Republic of Panama. That night he spoke at a reception and at midnight was taken on a sightseeing tour of Panama City.

The third day's schedule was just as crammed.

"I'll never forget those three hot dizzy days," he said. "They were wonderful."

Thomas said he was shocked by the discrimination he saw in effect in the Canal Zone. (Workers employed by Uncle Sam who are not U. S. citizens are paid wages far below the U. S. scale and live segregated in squalid, crowded barracks.)

"If the United States is trying to build up democracy throughout the world," he said, "I'd think one of the first things the government would do would be to practice democracy in the U. S.-controlled Canal Zone."

CWA Set For Cable Ballot

THE CIO Communications Workers last week scored a victory in a year-long battle when the NLRB decided three subsidiary companies of a holding company constitute a single employer for the purposes of collective bargaining.

NLRB ordered a representation election at the Mackay Radio & Telegraph Co., Inc., Commercial Cable Co., and All-America Cable & Radio, Inc. The holding company is the American Cable & Radio Corp., itself a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Involved are 1600 workers in U. S. and Hawaii in an election which CWA said will cover the biggest territory of any NLRB poll.

The AFL Commercial Telegraphers and the American Communications Association, expelled by the CIO as Communist-led, also will be on the ballot. ACA wanted separate elections for each company.

Textile Operators Fight U. S. Move To Up Minimum Pay

A LARGE NUMBER of textile manufacturers are fighting to keep Uncle Sam from ordering the industry to increase minimum wages by 13c hourly for work on government contracts.

A new minimum of $1 an hour has been proposed by Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin under the Walsh-Healey Act, which governs wages paid on work done under government contracts.

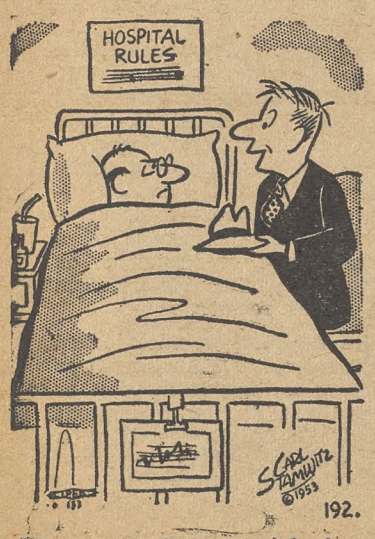
The American Cotton Manufacturers Institute, an employers group, has announced that it will take legal action to prevent the proposed order from going into effect.

The CIO Textile Workers, which played a leading role in urging that the minimum be raised from the present 87c an hour, said "it appears from hearings and subsequent newpaper reports that they (the employers) are divided, and one group is recklessly determined to injure the industry as a whole."

SOLOMON BARKIN, TWUA's research director, in a final brief filed by the union, said TWUA is disappointed with the proposed minimum.

He said even in the South, TWUA contracts provide for minimums ranging from $1.035 to $1.10. Barkin said the new minimum will affect only workers in the lowest job classifications such as janitors and truckers and battery hands. He said that the protesting groups have admitted that production workers are paid well above the proposed minimum.

Barkin also protested the exclusion of several branches of the textile industry with estimated employment of 102,000 workers from the order.



"That's one advantage of having union employees, boss—Your business has zoomed since you quit interfering!"

Collis English Of 'Trenton Six' Case Dies In Jersey Jail

COLLIS ENGLISH, one of the two Negroes unfairly convicted in the famous "Trenton Six" case, died of heart attack in New Jersey State prison the night of Dec. 30.

Only one of the original six defendants who now remain in prison is Ralph Cooper.

Hundreds attended the funeral held Jan. 3 at the Union Baptist Church in Trenton and a long line of cars followed the flower-heaped hearse to Greenwood Cemetery. A military honor guard from Fort Dix officiated at the burial of English, who was a World War II veteran. James Thorpe and John McKenzie, two of the defendants freed in the third trial, were among the pallbearers.

The "Trenton Six" case, one of the most dramatic murder trials in recent years, began with the slaying of a Trenton shopkeeper in 1948, and the quick conviction on flimsy evidence of six Negroes among hundreds hastily rounded up by police. Widespread protests resulted in a new trial.

IN JUNE 1951, four of the defendants were acquitted, and two were declared guilty. That verdict was attacked subsequently as a "compromise" to end the long drawn-out trial.

Efforts to obtain a new trial for the two men sentenced to life imprisonment has been under way since the conviction. The Princeton Committee, formed to fight the case, and the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People have cooperated in legal steps to obtain a new trial. Jersey CIO unions and members had helped raise the necessary funds.

Reuther Calls CIO Meetings

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week announced that three important meetings of CIO officers and board members will be held in Washington in the next few weeks.

The Executive Committee, comprising officers and vice presidents, will meet Jan. 22 at CIO headquarters to discuss legislative developments, particularly hearings in Congress on Taft-Hartley Act amendments.

The Executive Committee will meet again on Feb. 3-4. And the full CIO Executive Board, representing all affiliated unions, will meet on Feb. 5-6. Sessions will be at CIO headquarters.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER attended and addressed the big meeting of striking members of the Transport Workers Union in New York. These workers are struggling to obtain a 40-hour week with no reduction in wages. I assured Pres. Quill and Sec.-Treas. Faber that their union had the support of National CIO in obtaining their just and necessary objectives, and to let no combination of interests wreck their spirit of determination to obtain these just goals.

The Congress is shaping itself up for a new session with Sen. Taft the leader of the Senate. One of the things that Mr. Taft plans to give immediate consideration to is the Taft-Hartley Law. Regardless of claims to the contrary, this law has and is today a menace to organized labor.

The CIO will do all it can to deal with this subject matter, so will all the officers and members of our international unions, and councils throughout the country. The filibuster rule will continue the denial of majority rule and defy the will of the people. In the hands of certain reactionary people the filibuster is a cowardly and unfair weapon.

LET ALL of us keep in mind our objective for 1953—Organize the unorganized! Let's make this year one of unrelenting effort to bring the blessings of organization to workers throughout the land. I call upon every officer and member of CIO to do his part to bring security, better living conditions and happiness to those unorganized workers. Let us build a bigger, stronger CIO family, roll our union on!

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that the UAW-CIO won bargaining rights at the Consolidated Feldspar Corp., Denver, Colo., by a vote of 3 to 1. The organizing campaign was conducted by UAW Rep. Brown.

Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports that the workers of the Hess-Goldsmith plants in Wilkes-Barre and Plymouth, Pa., favored the CIO Textile Workers, by a vote of 163 to 140, with 3 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports a representation election victory for the CIO Steelworkers over the United Electrical Workers at the King Machine Tool Co., Cincinnati, O., by the following vote: USA-CIO 217, UE 165, no union 3. In charge of the campaign were Intl. Reps. Chester Morgan and Rube Huddleson.

More On McCarthy Report

ceal receipts, income, commodity and stock speculation and other financial transactions for ulterior motives?

6. Has McCarthy violated Federal and state corrupt practices laws in his senatorial campaigns and in his dealings with his administrative assistant?

The findings of fact from which these questions stem are thoroughly documented. Nearly 350 pages — seven-eights of the report — consist of photostatic copies of checks, bank statements, letters and other evidence bearing directly on the issues. They reveal much new information not known to the people of Wisconsin when they reelected McCarthy last November.

It will be up to the Senate to decide McCarthy's eligibility since under the Constitution it is the "sole judge" of its members.

McCarthy called the report "a new low in dishonesty and smear." He assailed Democratic members Hayden (Ariz.) and Hennings (Mo.) as "lackeys" but saved most of his venom for his Republican colleague, Sen. Hendrickson (N. J.).

But McCarthy, in daring the Democrats to try to unseat him, went on to state the basic question in his own words: "If what they say is true I shouldn't sit in the Senate."

account for $10,000. In 1951 another account for $7000 was opened under his wife's maiden name, the report said.

The subcommittee said that between 1948 and 1952, a total of 905,000 bushels were traded in through both accounts for a net profit of $5546.

The report also discloses that Sen. McCarthy claimed on his state income tax return to have paid his brother interest of $2258 in 1949. It said that "there is no indication that William P. McCarthy has ever had the financial capacity to loan anyone an amount that would earn interest of $2258 in one year, or even in several years."

THE COMMITTEE also declared that there is a "possibility" that "a part or all of the $17,600 which Sen. McCarthy's relatives allegedly contributed to his 1944 primary campaign for the Senate was in fact funds of Sen. McCarthy which he had derived from profits in stock market speculations."

McCarthy reported 1944 campaign expenditures of only $2741. The committee notes that if the amount attributed to his relatives actually represents McCarthy's own expenditures, the total of $20,341 "would appear" to be in excess of the $5000 limitation set by Wisconsin laws.

12,000 CIO Shoe Workers Gain 8c Boost In New England Pacts

MARATHON negotiations and union solidarity won 12,000 CIO Shoe Workers in Massachusetts a wage increase of approximately 8c an hour and an improved vacation clause.

Final negotiations in which the union team was led by USWA-CIO Pres. Russell Taylor, averted a strike and led to an agreement covering the workers in 65 plants in Boston, Chelsea, Haverhill, Salem, Beverly and Lynn. Workers in a few plants remained off their jobs until their firms accepted the proposals.

The first session continued 17½ hours and produced an offer of approximately 6c an hour, which separate mass meetings attended by from 80% to 85% of the membership rejected. They instructed their committee to go back and ask for more.

THE AGREEMENT, which the workers finally approved, was won at a meeting lasting 10½ hours which was attended by John L. DelMonte, Massachusetts Commission of Labor.

In addition to the wage increase which boosts the average hourly rate to approximately $1.60 an hour, the new agreement provides for two weeks paid vacation after five years, which USWA has now won in virtually all its contracts. Previously the vacation clause in the Massachusetts contracts provided only one week's paid vacation after one year, which did not increase with length of service.

FIVE OTHER contract improvements for which the union has been battling for years also were won.

These include: Witnesses summoned by the union be required to attend grievance sessions, and notice of employes be sent to the union as soon as the first 30 days of employment elapse—a move to enforce the union shop pacts.

Other improvements are: Provision for union agreement before requiring overtime work, company-paid $500 life insurance policies to be carried with insurance companies and not simply guaranteed by management, and the retention of operators when new-type machines replace obsolete ones.

Rail Union Gets 15% Hike

THE CIO Railroad Workers have won an election and negotiated a first contract with a 15% wage increase at the Belen, N.M., plant of the Railways Ice & Storage Co.

The firm manufacturers ice and with it services refrigerator cars on trains of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway.

In the election, conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, the URRWA-CIO polled 35 votes to one for the AFL Teamsters and one for no union.

The union shop contract was negotiated with company representatives in Albuquerque. The wage increase meant pay boosts of 15.5c an hour for laborers and ice pullers, and 21c for refrigeration engineers and maintenance men.

EIGHT CIO Community Services Committee representatives examine an exhibit at Federal Civil Defense Administration's Staff College, Olney, Md.

Civil Defense Students

Greater Labor Role Urged In Top Planning Posts

CIO COMMUNITY Services Committee representatives, who recently completed a federal civil defense course, called for giving labor a larger role in the training program.

The eight men from four states were otherwise enthusiastic about the week-long course at the Federal Civil Defense Administration's Staff College, Olney, Md., near Washington. The course stresses the training of defense workers and community organization.

Charles Ferguson, assistant CIO-CSC director, one of five CIO officials serving on the FCDA labor advisory committee, termed the course "eye-opening" and hoped other CIO representatives would attend the school.

"We were deeply impressed by the concrete illustrations of the part people can play in the organization of an effective civil defense program for the protection of their lives in their homes and the places where they work," he said.

"We have one suggestion for sharpening the impact of this instruction on laboring people and that is to specify the things they do in particular.

"We believe there might be a little more emphasis on what management can do, and labor can do, and what management and labor can do jointly.

"THERE never can be any worthwhile civil defense in the nation's industrial plants apart from labor. If labor must do a large part of the job it is only fair that it have a voice in the planning."

Others attending the course were: Julius F. Rothman, William J. Ryan and John D. Carney, all of New York; William C. Lightner and John P. Nichols, both of Ohio; Fred A. Erchul, Wisconsin, and Edward Orzell, Pennsylvania.

Living Memorials To Murray Planned By Councils, Locals

LIVING memorials to Philip Murray, late president of CIO and the United Steelworkers, now are being planned by CIO local unions and councils throughout the nation.

In New York, Utility Workers Local 1-2—the big Consolidated Edison local of the UWUA—announced that its college scholarship fund for members' children has been named the "Philip Murray Memorial Scholarship Fund."

IN CHICAGO, a dozen CIO local unions in the 10th Congressional District held a Murray memorial service over the holidays. Some 100 CIO members and their wives from Steel, Auto, Rubber and Clothing locals participated. The Rev. Walter H. Myers officiated.

In Indiana, the State CIO Council reported additional contributions to the Philip Murray-Riley Hospital Research Fund. Goal of the fund, set up four years ago, is $400,000 for research on children's diseases.

In Fairfield, Ala., USA-CIO Local 1013 named its new union headquarters the "Philip Murray Memorial Hall," saying "we have prospered under his leadership and cherish his memory with love and devotion."

The Irritants Were In Hucksters' Ads

The Federal Trade Commission is not impressed—even if the big cigaret ad buyers are.

You know the ads, featuring doctors in white and their tools, and the claim that, for example, Philip Morris cigarets are non-irritating, will not cause a cough or leave an after-taste, and so on and so forth.

So FTC has ordered Philip Morris to deflate sharply its advertised medical claims.

As yet the FTC hasn't commented on a rival cigaret firm's ad slogan about "a treat instead of a treatment."

By FRED ROSS

"The subways are so jammed that sardines are being turned into flat-fish."

That's the way Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers summed up the traffic snarl at a New York City Hall demonstration of thousands of TWU members on strike against eight privately-owned New York City bus lines.

More than 8000 TWU members employed by the private bus lines went out New Year's Eve. They had delayed the strike over a year on the promise of city officials that hearings would be held on their demand for the 40-hour week with no loss in pay. The union also is asking a 25c hourly pay increase to meet the increased cost of living.

Talks Collapse

In the week after the strike began several negotiation sessions were held at city hall. At midweek, Chairman Victor Risenfeld of a special city mediation committee said the parties were "hopelessly deadlocked" and negotiations had collapsed.

Earlier, the labor member of the committee, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, resigned. He said: "All the candidates for Mayor this year are hamstringing the committee, and the companies are trying to blackmail the city into agreeing to a 15c fare."

Curran stated that when he took the job, he said he "would serve as long as I could see that I would not be placed in a position of providing cover to any element who wanted to deny the union's unequivocal right to a 40-hour week with no loss in take-home pay."

"The bus companies," he continued, "made it quite clear that they would not and could not consider a 40-hour week with no loss in take-home pay unless a prior agrement was given to provide full financial relief. On the basis of this and with a strike in effect, the time for quibbling is past . . . I believe that the committee is being improperly used and that the issue has become a political football."

Curran said he would "be happy to serve" on a mediation committee "after the principle of the 40-hour week with no loss in take-home pay has been agreed to." He thought "the riding public is entitled to a quick settlement of the strike without victimizing the union."

He declared the bus companies "should negotiate a settlement with the union and then come in for any financial relief that is necessary, not ask for a blank check first."

City Hall Spat

Quarreling over the strike erupted in City Hall between Mayor Impellitteri and City Council Pres. Rudolph Halley, his chief rival for the mayoralty next November. Halley accused the Mayor of trying to make him "the scapegoat" for Impellitteri's failures. The Mayor countered by accusing the council president of participating in "back-door" negotiations with the union.

Their dispute served to prevent the Mayor and the companies from blaming Quill for continuance of the strike. Quill touched off the dispute by revealing that all of the Mayor's colleagues on the Board of Estimate sent him telegrams expressing support for a 40-hour week with no cut in pay.

When asked by reporters whether he had seen the Mayor, Quill replied: "Which Mayor do you mean? They are all Mayors down here."

In reply to a query as to how long he thought the bus strike would last, Quill answered:

"When you measure the amount of confusion around here, it looks like a very long strike. On the one hand they say we should get the 40 hours; on the other hand, they say there is no money, and on the third hand, everything is confusion."

Strike Pending In Philadelphia

The CIO Transport Workers also are set to strike the Philadelphia Transportation Co. Jan. 14, to back up demands for a 40-hour week and a 32c hourly increase to compensate for the shorter hours.

In the midst of the struggle for the 40-hour week for TWU members on eight privately-owned New York City bus lines, TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill went to Philadelphia in an effort to avert a walkout there.

He and Pres. Paul O'Rourke of TWU Local 234 met with management, which made a "ridiculous" offer, and the negotiations collapsed. So a strike is scheduled for Jan. 14—date of the expiration of an anti-strike injunction imposed by the Philadelphia County Common Pleas Court.

Haywood Aids Striking Drivers

Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, early last week was responsible for the resumption of collective bargaining in the New York City bus strike.

Mayor Impellitteri had spiked negotiations before his special mediation committee when he accused TWU of conspiring with the companies to get a 15c fare. Impellitteri was quick to issue another invitation to the union to appear before the committee, after Haywood declared at a TWU mass meeting that it was time "for you to put an end to this damn collective bargaining by television." (He was referring to an appearance of the Mayor on television.)

He urged the Mayor to call a conference of TWU and the companies. Negotiations were resumed, but after several sessions again broke down when the companies insisted on financial relief before negotiating a settlement.

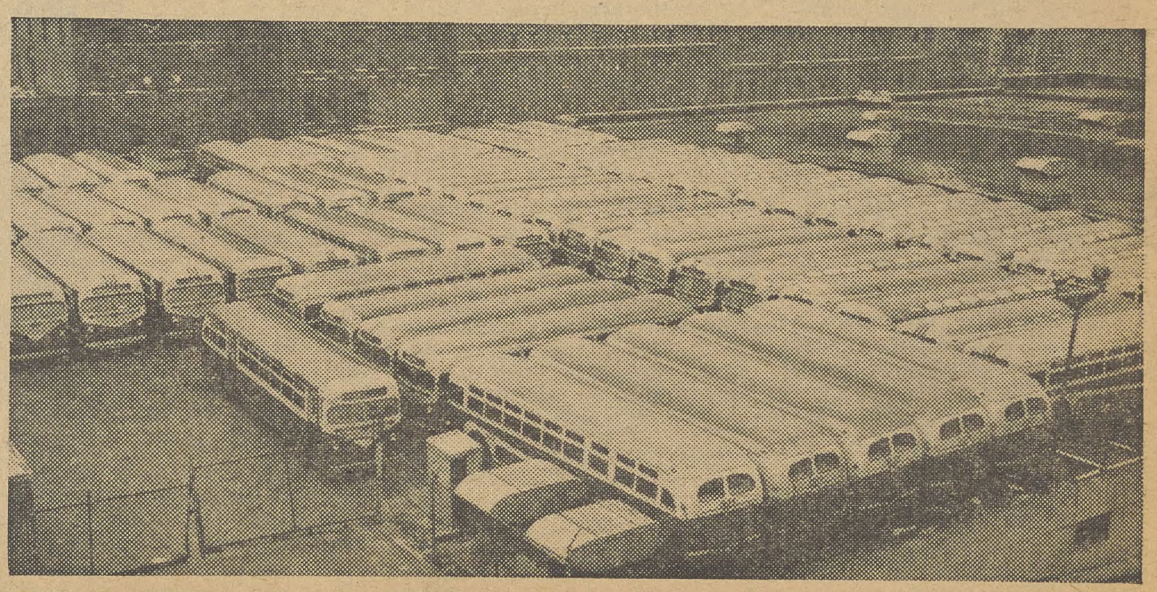
"HE'S NOT HERE," exclaims Quill as he points to chair reserved for Mayor Impellitteri at strikers' rally.



BUSSES, BUSSES EVERYWHERE, but none of them on their routes: Busses fill the yard of one of the struck bus companies as their absent drivers fight for 40-hour week.

How Transit Workers Feel

"THE SUBWAYS are so jammed that sardines are being turned into flat fish," is the way TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill described this scene (above). Such jams resulted from the New York City bus strike which diverted passengers to the subways. TWU strikers against the Philadelphia Transportation Co. Quill sought to settle the Philadelphia strike which began after last-minute pact was turned down. (See Page 12.)

Spingarn Fires Protest—

Oil Lobby Propaganda Assault On U. S. Bared

By MILTON PLUMB

Special interest pressures on the government, particularly over the Federal Trade Commission's controversial report on the world oil cartel, have aroused the ire of FTC Acting Chairman Stephen J. Spingarn.

Determined to protect the public interest, he is fighting back. The oil interests may soon face new charges growing out of their pressure tactics.

Spingarn told the CIO News that he is asking the attorney general to investigate recent oil lobby propaganda criticizing the government. He says it was sent to officials of 67 foreign countries in apparent violation of U. S. law. He has previously requested an investigation of the oil cartel by Congress.

HIS NEWEST move rests upon a provision of the Logan Act which provides for a fine or imprisonment for any U. S. citizen convicted of communicating with a foreign government official with the intention of influencing actions of the United States.

Spingarn quoted an article in the National Petroleum News last Oct. 15 reporting that the California Texas Oil Co. has sent 8000 copies of a 32-page booklet criticizing U. S. government officials in the antitrust proceedings against the five U. S. oil firms "to government officials, editors and molders of public opinion in 67 foreign countries."

"The attorney general should investigate this world-wide propaganda campaign which criticizes the FTC staff, the Dept. of Justice, the President of the U. S. and U. S. Senators in the most intemperate terms," Spingarn said. "I'm asking him to do so and to take whatever action may be required under the law."

His request is the latest in a series of actions Spingarn has recently taken as part of his self-launched campaign to improve the ethics of business firms dealing with the government. He describes it as "the case of a bureaucratic worm who has taken too much too long and feels that the time is long past when he should have turned."

"Ethics in government is a two-way street," he said. "It relates to the conduct of government officers and employes, but going in the other direction, it also relates to the conduct of citizens and business firms toward their government in their dealings with it. Unethical pressure on government officers is an all too common matter."

WHAT FIRST aroused his ire was the action of the Bureau of Education on Fair Trade in directing its blusinessmen members to drum up pressure from Congress against the FTC and Justice Dept. in an effort to get the commission to drop a pending case against the Eastman Kodak Co. The BEFT was the chief lobby behind the price-fixing law passed last year which added billions of dollars to consumer costs.

Spingarn called the situation "blatantly unethical," particularly since the Bureau had previously turned down an invitation to testify before the FTC. He said the effort to stimulate congressional pressure showed "a contempt for democratic government and processes which, carried far enough, could only end in their destruction."

BUT SPINGARN, whose term as commissioner expires next September, didn't stop there. He called a conference of the heads of other independent government agencies to map out a government-wide counter-offensive. There was almost unanimous agreement by his fellow commissioners that propaganda attacks of special interest lobbies are undermining public confidence in government.

Then Spingarn, who had made only one speech in his two years at FTC, took to television and radio and began writing letters to newspapers, as well as a round of additional press conferences, to fight back against the attack from the oil lobby.

So far, however, the only response from Congress has been the announcement that the Federal Trade Commission itself will be investigated. Rep. Wolverton (R. N.J.), due to head the House Commerce Committee, says he plans a series of hearings looking into all business regulatory agencies of the government, including FTC.

GOP Congressmen Get Veto On Ike's Job Appointments

LONG-SPUTTERING indignation of Republican congressmen over federal job patronage boiled to a head last week.

The Senate's three top GOP leaders met last week with President-elect Eisenhower, won from him agreement to clear all future federal appointments with Republican members of conference.

Sens. Taft (O.), Knowland (Calif.) and Milliken (Colo.) joined in the session with Eisenhower.

ANYWHERE from 12,000 to 25,000 federal jobs — according to varying estimates — are outside civil service and available for GOP patronage.

The Senate has asked the Civil Service Commission for a complete list of all such openings.

Before he met with Eisenhower a week before Inauguration Day, Taft charged "complete confusion" on who is going to ladle out the job gravy. What Taft and other GOP leaders wanted was the "traditional" claim of Senators and Representatives to "recommend" (or in fact name) all job appointees.

Taft twice has blasted the naming of Martin Durkin, AFL building tradesman, as Secretary of Labor. (That appointment has prompted the Washington quip that "Eisenhower's Cabinet is composed of eight millionaires and a plumber.")

After last week's session in New York with Eisenhower, Taft said the "vague and uncertain" patronage situation had been corrected.

Said Knowland: "It was generally agreed to follow traditional methods." In other words, GOP congressmen and senators will handle their own local job patronage, and Ike's formal appointments will be just that.

Taft Still Mad About Durkin

Sen. Taft (R. O.), is still boiling mad about the appointment of Martin Durkin as Secretary of Labor by Pres. Eisenhower.

The Senate GOP leader's charge that the appointment was "incredible," first voiced when Durkin was named, is being repeated in rubber-stamped form letters from his office.

Taft also said the naming of Durkin was "exactly as if Ike had continued Dean Acheson as Secretary of State."

Oil-Soaked Hot Potato Dropped In Ike's Lap

THE EISENHOWER Administration takes office this week with one large political hot potato already in its lap. It was dumped there not by the Truman Administration, but by a judge in Federal Court in Washington who happens to be a Republican.

The jurist was Judge James R. Kirkland, who refused to end the international oil cartel investigation on which the retiring Administration had blown hot and then cold.

Specifically, he rejected the oil firms' petition to throw out the action. At the same time he extended the deadline for production of domestic records they had been ordered to produce for the grand jury considering the case from Jan. 14 to Jan. 28.

"This will give the present Administration time to make up its mind what it wants to do," he said, "and the new Administration can also determine whether it wants to act."

THE FURORE started when the National Security Council, after debate reported to have been bitter, recommended to Pres. Truman that the government drop the grand jury probe because trial of a criminal indictment at this time constitutes a risk to the world interests of the U. S. and its relations with many foreign nations.

The President then instructed Atty.-Gen. James P. McGranery to offer to drop the criminal prosecution if the companies agreed to produce in a civil suit all the documents subpoenaed by the grand jury.

In making the offer to attorneys for the companies, Special Assistant Atty. Gen. Leonard Emmerglick stipulated that it had to be accepted by all or none, and asked them to agree not to move to dismiss or amend the skeleton complaint until 60 days after the last document was delivered.

The oil company lawyers put on a fine show of indignation, denouncing the proposal as "outrageous blackmail" and "discourteous and insulting."

'Tidelands' Put In Navy Reserve

IF THE REPUBLICANS give the wealthy off-shore oil lands to the states—as they've promised — they'll first have to take the oil away from the navy.

Late last week, in a dramatic move, Pres. Truman announced he was going to turn the $50 billion oil reserves over to the Navy for defense purposes, through an Executive order.

His action came shortly after two bills were introduced in the Senate to hand the lands, which the Supreme Court has ruled belong to the federal government, over to coastal states.

Forty Senators, led by Sen. Holland (D. Fla.), introduced a bill to give the estimated $50 billion in oil resources beneath the marginal seas to a few coastal states—which really means to the oil industry. The measure is identical with the one Pres. Truman vetoed last year, calling it "highway robbery."

IN THE HOUSE, where similar "states rights" proposals are shaping up, Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) was in such a rush that he proposed by-passing further committee hearings to speed the bill to Eisenhower's desk.

Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) took the lead in the fight to try to save the oil lands wealth for all of the people. He introduced a bill identical with the Administration-sponsored measure rejected last year. This would maintain the federal control upheld by three separate Supreme Court decisions.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) said he would again introduce the CIO-supported "oil for the lamps of learning" amendment. This would earmark federal oil revenue funds for aid to the nation's schools.

Murray Dinner Set

Announcement of the Philip Murray Awards Dinner, sponsored by the National CIO Community Services Committee, was made last week by Leo Perlis, CIO-CSC director. The dinner will be held Feb. 2 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York.

CIO Hits 'Confusion' In New Price Index

THE CIO last week warned publication of a new cost-of-living index by the Bureau of Labor Statistics "will create much confusion in the American labor scene."

Emil Rieve, CIO vice-president and chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, charged the board was issuing "a completely new index different in major respects from the two older indexes and not properly comparable with them."

Wage escalator clauses in many important labor-management contracts have been hitched to the cost-of-living index and Rieve observed:

"The announcement . . . will present both trade unions and management with an immediate problem of renegotiating the wage escalator clauses in their current contracts."

Rieve, who is president of the CIO Textile Workers Union, branded as "ill-advised" a recent BLS memorandum advising procedures for adapting wage escalator clauses to the new index.

This departure from BLS policy of non-intervention in collective bargaining, Rieve said, "has already been proven to be prejudicial to orderly negotiations based on the merits and equities involved."

The BLS has radically revised "the market basket of goods and services which is being priced," he observed, and plans to measure price changes in small as well as large cities. The result will be an entirely new index, he contended.

"We approve of many of the changes made," Rieve added, but there still are "shortcomings." He cited BLS plans to make frequent revisions in its yardstick.

If these proposals were followed, he said, the index, "instead of serving the collective bargaining parties, would widen the area of conflict and misunderstanding and produce disagreement in an area where none has existed."

Escalator Clauses Must Be Renegotiated Now, CIO Says

The complete text of the statement by Emil Rieve, chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, dealing with the new consumers' price index, follows:

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of the publication of the new measure of changes in consumers prices by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics will present both trade unions and management with an immediate problem of renegotiating the wage escalator clauses in their current contracts. The cessation of publication of the adjusted and old indexes with the December information will create much confusion in the American labor scene.

We urge careful study of the change by all groups and the immediate release of additional information by the Bureau of Labor Statistics comparing the old and the new indexes to enable the parties to renegotiate maturely.

Major Changes

The Bureau of Labor Statistics is publishing a completely new index different in major respects from the two older indexes, and not properly comparable with them. The market basket of goods and services which is being priced is being radically revised. The purchases of higher-income people than now included in the index are being priced.

The new index will measure price changes in small as well as large cities and will exclude a number of communities formerly studied and include new ones. Different commodities and service are to be priced in different retail outlets by different methods. The base is being changed from the level of 1935-39 to that of 1947-49 so that the new index numbers will be substantially lower than the old.

Consequently, a one - point change will mean a larger percentage change in the revised measure than in the old.

We approve of many of the changes made. Certain items like costs of home ownership, used car and restaurant prices were added at our urging. New methods of construction and calculation are in certain cases distinct advances over the present index. We have furnished the Bureau of Labor Statistics with detailed comments on the continuing shortcomings and proposals for improvement.

Taxes Ignored

While some have been followed, we regret that many suggestions have not been adopted.

We strongly urge the parallel publication of another index which takes into account the taxes paid by people since the new index is designed primarily to measure the buying power of net wages.

We are disturbed by the consideration the Bureau is currently giving to the idea of making frequent revisions in the market basket of goods and services since such revisions would have the effect of constantly changing the yardstick by which price movements are measured. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has constantly maintained that the index measures changes in price and not changes in the habits of living. The index has been so defended.

The proposed innovation would radically alter the nature of the index, change the Bureau's position, and complicate the processes of labor negotiations since the parties would not have an index of price changes. Index figures issued subsequent to each periodic revision in the market basket would not be comparable with those of earlier periods. Instead of serving the collective

UAW Meets With 3 Big Firms On Cost Of Living Pact Changes

NEGOTIATIONS are under way between the CIO Auto Workers and the major producers to settle problems rising out of the new Bureau of Labor Statistics' consumer price index, UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has announced.

At the same time, he told a press conference in Detroit, the union is pressing for other revisions in the basic five-year contracts growing out of the inflationary changes in the cost of living factor since they were negotiated. Reuther also is president of the CIO.

THE WAGES of more than one million of the 1.3 million UAW-CIO members are determined in part by changes in the BLS index due next month. Under existing contracts, they gain or lose 1c an hour every time the index figure changes by 1.14 points over a three-month period. At present, 25c an hour of wages are due to this factor.

Reuther told the press conference the union hopes to reach a settlement by Mar. 1, when the next cost of living adjustment is due. He refused to be mousetrapped into threatening a strike against the Big Three if no agreement is worked out.

"WE'RE NOT going to comment on anything so far down the road," he told the press conference when the question was raised. "We have lots of time to work something out, and we are meeting. We hope to have an agreement on the transition from the old index to the new by then, and the other changes are part of the same package."

The transition, he said, is very complicated and "not automatic."

The old index has been used in the auto industry since 1948. It was based on price levels of 1935-39. The last figure, which will reflect prices of certain goods and services on Dec. 15, 1952, will be issued late in January.

The new index went into effect Jan. 1. It is based on price levels in the 1947-49 period, and covers a different selection of goods and services than the old. The first reading, showing costs on Jan. 15, will be made public in February.

The current contracts with the Big Three were negotiated in 1950 and have run about half their courses.

Reuther said he had met with Harlow H. Curtice, new General Motors president, and his predecessor, Charles E. Wilson, on Nov. 21, the day after the latter was designated Secretary of Defense in President-elect Eisenhower's cabinet.

"We had a general discussion about where we are going in America," Reuther reported.

6 Basic Issues On Auto Contracts

The CIO Auto Workers, in addition to BLS cost of living index negotiations, is discussing five other points in its contracts with General Motors, Chrysler and Ford. They are:

- Increasing the annual improvement or productivity wage raise from 4c to 5c an hour.
- Adding to base wage rates 20c of the 25c cost of living allowances now in effect.
- Increasing the $125 monthly pension for retired workers by enough to restore purchasing power to the level of May 1950, when the contract was signed.
- Relaxing compulsory retirement at 68 in view of the manpower shortage.
- Giving skilled workers a pay increase large enough to restore the historic differential with unskilled workers.

Morse Blackballed Off Key Committees By GOP

SENATE Republicans ganged up on Sen. Morse (Ore.) last week for taking a walk on the GOP and backing Adlai Stevenson for President.

The Senate GOP Conference blackballed Morse from his past positions on the Labor and Armed Services Committees.

Morse's appeal on the latter post was turned down by an 81 to 7 vote.

The GOP Conference left vacancies on the relatively minor Public Works and District of Columbia Committees and Chairman Millikin (R. Col.) indicated the Republicans intended them to "provide a resting place for Sen. Morse."

Morse charged his former party with using "punitive methods" and a "terroristic device to compel compliance and insure subordination." He said Senate rules, not party membership, entitled him to committee membership on a basis of seniority.

"When I took the oath of office, I did not become the property of the Republican Party but the property of all the people of my state," Morse said. "To deny any fraction of the rights of a Senator is to compromise, in the ugliest sense, the basic guarantee without which this republic could not have been born."

More than 1300 Rubber Workers last week went on strike to get an acceptable contract at the Des Moines, Ia., plant of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

The controversy centers on "seniority rights, recall rights, transfer policies and balancing of hours," according to URW Intl. Rep. Ray Reasoner.

So Long, Harry

Comes now the week for the little fighter to leave the White House and go home to old Missouri.

After almost eight years in the toughest job in the world, Harry Truman is stepping down from the Presidency.

A few weeks before he died, Philip Murray told HST he was the "best friend labor ever had in the White House."

That was so, because Pres. Truman recognized that in every rivalry between industry and labor—as in the steel dispute last year—the workingman had a case as well as the employer. For that fairness of attitude, he was pilloried time and again by industry and its organizations and the oracles of press and radio.

Beyond the courage which he demonstrated in the steel situation or when the Taft-Hartley campaign was hottest five years and more ago, Harry Truman proved himself as President to be a "best friend" for most Americans.

The people knew that—witness the way the vote went in '48, witness the warm greetings from large crowds which HST received during the political campaign last fall.

At home, Pres. Truman was steady on the beam—building the New Deal into the Fair Deal and setting as our goal a better America of freedom, security and democracy in a world of peace.

Abroad, the Truman years extend from victory in World War II to the building of the United Nations, from the Marshall Plan to the vision of Point Four, from the defeat of the Berlin blockade to the mobilization of the free world's people and resources against the black poison of Communist tyranny and Soviet imperialism.

Many of the goals for which Harry Truman fought—notably, for equal rights for all Americans—are still to be reached. His most courageous action, to stand up to Communist militarism in Korea, is still far from decision.

Now, in the shifting fortunes of American politics, HST is leaving the White House. But while Democrats are stepping down from office, the ideals of American democracy (with a lower case "d") aren't stepping down for anybody. They've had a lot to do with the history of this nation, and more will be heard from those ideals and the men who voice them in the future.

So long, Harry.

Hello, Ike

When HST takes a night train back to Independence, the Republicans will be whooping it up in the midst of their million-dollar inauguration.

After 20 long years, they've earned the whoop-te-do. But the blowout will soon be over, and then Pres. Eisenhower, his Cabinet and administrators and the Republican Congress will have to start performing instead of just promising. Some of those most notable of Eisenhower promises are listed on the opposite page—a good check list for the coming months.

Soon after his election, CIO assured Gen. Eisenhower of support in his "constructive endeavors." And, in correspondence released last week, Pres. Walter P. Reuther offered to the new executive "cooperation in your efforts to bring peace, freedom, security and dignity to people everywhere."

It is in that spirit that we say:

"Hello, Ike."

In Other Words

'Ike Puts Business On Spot'

President-elect Eisenhower's choice of big business men to run top government posts puts business on the spot, says Chalmers M. Roberts, Washington newspaperman, in the following article from The Guild Reporter.

By CHALMERS M. ROBERTS

THE INTERREGNUM is coming to a close and at long last—20 years to be exact—there is about to be a big shift of power in Washington.

A headline in Fortune says it simply: "Eisenhower Puts Business on the Spot." Fortune checked the record of the 169 cabinet appointments in the past 60 years, years that cover "the blooming of big corporations," and could find only one precedent for the new Secretary of the Treasury, industrialist George Humphrey, and the new Secretary of Defense, General Motors' Charles E. Wilson. The one: Andrew Mellon.

One businessman, according to Fortune, observed to one of the magazine's reporters: "If we don't deliver this time, we'll be back in the doghouse for forty years, instead of twenty." I have a feeling that if big business doesn't deliver this time, it will have had its last chance.

Businessmen, like newspapermen or any other group, have a lot in common—and differ a lot. The biggest industrialists see the importance of exports (autos, for example) to their businesses and hence can understand how vital world trade is both to us and our allies. One big steel leader, however, recently wrote a piece to the effect that the Schuman Plan to pool Europe's steel was still socialism no matter how you slice it. He gave the impression that what really worried him was not the "ism" but the growth of a rival in the world markets.

ON THE other hand some of our "little" businessmen, over whom there is so much wailing at the walls of Congress, are the ones who have lapel-pocket congressmen they run to once the executive branch drops the tariff on the item they happen to make. And soon they are arguing that the flood of cheap foreign imports must be halted or the country's economy will come to an early end.

Well, Ike's boys will have to sweat that one out, too. The gags about the cabinet of "eight millionaires and a plumber" and how the Pentagon's plaza has been rechristened Cadillac Square are good clean fun while it lasts.

Ike will have to struggle with business' desire to let the excess profits tax run out in June, six months before the most recent income tax boost runs out. The GOP tax cutters in Congress are ready with an answer: let them both die in June. Yet any such cut will rob the treasury of billions when we need them for defense regardless of all the water the business methods of Wilson & Co. can squeeze out of the Pentagon's budget, and that ought to be plenty in another year or two or three or four.

If you've bothered to read the recent rush of year-end and new year predictions, you get the idea that everybody, or almost everybody, is bullish about the future. The "atmosphere" in Washington, they say, is going to be more friendly to business. Under this theory American business has been making the biggest profits in history—and the American economy has been going at the highest speed ever, strictly despite Government.

THE KEY to this new era of business-in-Government (or will it be business-in-control-of-Government?) will be how business reacts when cracks appear in the wall. One "expert" says it may come if new auto sales slide in the spring. Others say no worries until fall at least. The real optimists now push off any recession until 1954.

There's a second test of business upcoming: what Ike does about the 136 anti-trust cases which already have been started but not carried through to completion. Of these, the outgoing Democrats list 19 as key cases. The defendants are a roll-call of big business.

Now it may be that the time has come to sit down and reconsider the Sherman and the Clayton Anti-Trust Acts and what they were intended to do. Maybe they don't make sense in the America of 1953. Or maybe they do. Re-examination of this question is certainly sensible, assuming it is not a political re-examination. But that won't tell the new Attorney General how hard to push the 136 cases, how many new men to put in the anti-trust division or which cases to drop outright or by a consent decree.

Few fields offer a firmer check on the sense of responsibility of a big business in this its second chance of our lifetimes than what it does about these cases. I've pasted the list in my scrapbook for future reference.

Inaugural Day Reminder—

Check List On Ike's Promises

This is a momentous week in Washington. . . . Inaugural Day for Pres. Eisenhower and the coming to power of the Republican Party for the first time in 20 years.

For a check list on how the new President and the Republican Party carry out their campaign promises to the American people, here are 10 major promises made by Eisenhower shortly before his election:

1. To Halt Inflation

"I pledge that the full resources of our new Administration will be thrown into the battle against inflation." —Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

2. To Extend Social Gains

"I pledge that the social gains achieved by the people, whether enacted by a Republican or Democratic Administration, are not only here to stay, but are here to be improved and extended."
—Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

3. To Protect Unions

"I pledge that I will support and strengthen, not weaken, the laws that protect the American worker. I will defend him against any action to destroy his union or his rights."—Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

4. To Reduce Taxes

"They say: 'You cannot cut taxes. You cannot end or minimize our Korean losses. You cannot stop inflation. You can't stabilize international relationships.' What kind of stuff is that—don't and can't? Of course, we can." —Hartford, Conn., Oct. 23, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

5. To End Korean War

"The first task of a new Administration will be to review and re-examine every course of action open to us with one goal in view: To bring the Korean war to an early and honorable end. That is my pledge to the American people."—Detroit, Oct. 24, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

6. To Support United Nations

"We will, of course, constantly confer with associated free nations and with the cooperating members of the United Nations. Thus, we could bring into being a practical plan for world peace."
—Detroit, Oct. 25, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

7. To Cut Government Spending

"I tell you from my own experience: Scrutiny of military spending can effect substantial savings in our huge defense program."
—Troy, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

8. To Maintain Prosperity

"I will work unceasingly to build an economy that will maintain for him (the American worker) a high level of wages with steady purchasing power so he and his family can share fully in the comforts of American living."
—Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

9. To Eliminate Corruption

"I pledge a restoration of integrity and competence in our national government. The new Administration will not tolerate any deviation from an uncompromising code of honesty and ethics in government service."

—Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

10 To Protect U. S. Without Witch Hunts

"I pledge to the American people that the new Administration will stamp out disloyalty in Government and be eternally vigilant in protecting our country from those who would destroy us from within. We will not engage in witch hunts or character assassination."
—Boston, Nov. 1, 1952.

FULFILLED ☐ FAILED ☐

Haywood Rips Soviet Jew-Baiting As 'Red Fascism In Action'

THE LATEST flare-up of Russia's relentless anti-Semitism, the arrests of nine physicians on charges of plotting the deaths of high Soviet figures, was denounced by CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood last week as a "new act of madness from a nation in which normal human decency has long ceased to exist in official circles."

The Russian press and radio said most of the physicians were Jews, and denounced them as members of an "international Jewish bourgeois nationalist organization" set up by American intelligence. They made false diagnoses and gave treatment intended to kill, it was charged.

SOVIET spokesmen said the doctors "confessed" killing Andrei A. Zhdanov, founder of the Cominform, and Alexander S. Scherbakov, a party leader. They were charged with trying to kill Marshal Alexander Vasilevsky, Marshal Leonid Govorov, Marshal Ivan Konev, all top military leaders; Gen. S. M. Shtemenko, former chief of the army general staff, and Admiral P. I. Levchenko, a deputy naval minister.

"The emphasis placed by the Soviet leaders on the fact that many of the latest victims are Jewish," Haywood said, "shows the hand of the beast—an anti-Semitic beast trained by Hitler and adopted by Stalin. This is red fascism in action.

"THE CIVILIZED world, and the democratic labor movement, recoil in horror from these obviously absurd charges—many of them four or five years retroactive—and voice their strongest protest against this latest act of inhumanitarian totalitarian dictatorship.

"In the free world, the democratic trade union organizations would be the first to protest any such unthinkable lack of justice and evidence of anti-Semitism by their governments. But the Soviet trade unions will remain quiet, because they are tools of the Communist Party and the Communist state. If the Soviet unions were to act for their members, their leadership would be quickly liquidated.

"It is to be expected that the arrested doctors will be convicted and executed by the Soviet state. There are no fair trials in the Soviet Union. Those whom the dictators have chosen as their victims will have no chance to assert their innocence, or to win acquittal. Those Russians who disagree with the sentence will have no chance to picket the Kremlin to voice their objections.

"BUT throughout the entire free world, people will speak out against this new Soviet horror. We shall protest. We shall condemn a system of government that deprives its people of liberty and justice. We shall voice our sympathy to the exploited Russian people, Jews and Gentiles alike, who suffer at the hands of the Communist regime. And we shall work steadfastly to help those who seek the development of democracy which is the goal, secret or expressed, of decent people everywhere."

East German Reds Begin Jewish Purge

Paralleling recent developments in Czechoslovakia, an anti-Jewish purge is under way in Communist-run East Germany.

Berlin dispatches reported a number of Jewish government employes have been purged from their jobs and jailed.

Charges of "Zionism" have been directed against one former high-ranking East German Communist. And Gerhart Eisler, fugitive from the U. S., has had his propaganda ministry post abolished.

"No, Jarvis, I'm not eating breakfast in bed this morning. I thought I'd try roughing it today."

Truman Sends Health Report To Congress

PRES. TRUMAN has asked Congress "for immediate consideration" of the recommendations of his Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation.

The committee recommended federal aid to states to reduce the cost of health services. In seeking this aid, the President asked for less than the compulsory health insurance he had sought earlier.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, a member of the presidential commission, had joined in a minority dissent from this section of the report. The President noted the commission majority felt compulsory health insurance required further study before any final conclusions were drawn.

THE PRESENT proposal for federal aid to states had "the virtue," Truman said, "of affording local and state groups the initial opportunity for the establishment of workable health services plans. It likewise may encourage the most effective use of private and public health facilities at the local level in providing essential health services."

In other medical news, the Federal Security Agency reported that despite the rapid growth of health insurance plans, only 13% of the nation's bill for illness was met by insurance. Out of every $100 spent for sickness, only $13 came from insurance. The balance came out of the family budget.

IN 1951, the report showed, medical care cost Americans $8.816 billion, with only $1.353 covered by insurance. In the same year, $5.4 billion of income was lost through sickness, with insurance covering only 8.4%.

Hospitalization costs in 1951 amounted to $2.471 billion, with only $897 million met by insurance. Physicians' services cost $2.684 billion, with only $456 million covered by voluntary insurances.

AMA Lightly Slaps Doctors' Wrists

When the medical lobby slaps doctors on the wrist, even lightly, it's news.

That's what the American Medical Association did recently. It confirmed reports of labor unions that fees for patients covered by insurance were being hiked up.

It isn't a nice practice, said the AMA. Its president, Dr. Louis H. Bauer, said the doctors ought to be "severely disciplined."

How? Dr. Bauer didn't say. By whom? Dr. Bauer thinks only doctors ought to punish doctors.

McCarran Act Called Naive By CIO Ship Aide

THE McCARRAN-Walter Immigration Act was sharply criticized last week by Hoyt S. Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee.

Haddock charged it sets this country up as the "world's district attorney, judge and jury" in efforts to screen foreign seamen entering U. S. ports to keep out subversive or dangerous aliens.

He ridiculed present procedure in which immigration personnel board foreign-flag vessels, asking seamen to admit or deny being Communists. Haddock said he couldn't imagine any Communist agent listing himself as a party courier.

Jobs Are At Stake In Battle Over Resources

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A NEW Congress, dominated by economy-minded Republicans determined to give away $50 billion worth of off-shore oil lands belonging to the people, is now in office.

One of the first things to greet it—though not necessarily the first it will act on—was a request from the Reclamation Bureau for funds to get started on nearly $4 billion worth of projects proposed for 17 western states during the coming seven years.

How the reactionary leaders of Congress view the program may provide a tip-off on what the Eisenhower Administration and the Republicans intend to do about millions of dollars worth of other natural resources which are owned by all people.

The greedy and the predatory who were held at bay for two decades by the Democrats figure they're back on top again, and that 20 years of squawking "socialism" will pay off soon.

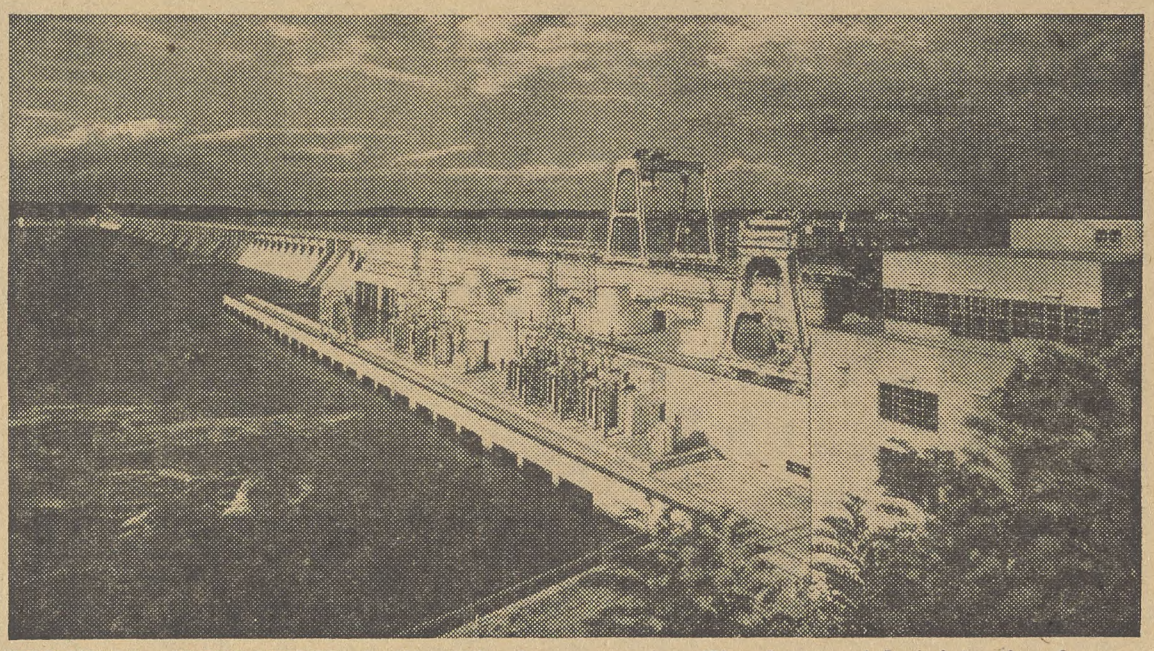
Tidelands Oil

The tidelands oil, Pres. Truman and the Supreme Court say, belongs to all the people, but President-elect Eisenhower and almost any Republican you can name would give it to the private interests via the States of California, Texas and Louisiana.

However, it is only the most spectacular of the national resources which under the GOP may well end up in private hands.

For one thing, there are all the public power projects built by the federal government under the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, and the river valley developments of which they sometimes are a part. There are millions of acres of timber lands. There are millions of additional acres that could be used for grazing cattle or sheep. There are irrigation projects, natural parks and forests and monuments, soil conservation programs—the list is long.

The Reclamation Bureau program may offer a clue because in addition to bringing water to more than three million acres of thirsty land and turning them into flourishing farms, it proposes to build 2.8 million kilowatts of additional generating capacity at dams.



FEDERAL INITIATIVE built Wheeler Dam (above), first main-river dam built by the Tennessee Valley Authority. The incoming Eisenhower Administration faces a drive to block federal river development and power projects at dams like this.

THE CIO strongly favors government construction and operation of electric facilities—specifically along TVA lines. This provides for power facilities as one phase of river valley development that takes into consideration erosion, soil conservation, reforestation, waterway transport where feasible, recreation facilities, wild life, agriculture and the effect on residents of the valley.

"We have repeatedly called for the management of all our great river basins and regions on the basis of a comprehensive democratic plan," a resolution adopted at the recent National CIO convention said.

"We have insisted that such a plan must be framed with reference to all the resources of the region. It must be a balanced plan which does not result in the exploitation and development of one resource at the expense of all others. It must consider the interests of all human groups in the region, minorities as well as majorities, and must be developed with a view to the welfare of the nation as a whole."

If government power projects did nothing else they have provided a yardstick by which the rates of privately-owned utilities can be measured. The measuring process has proved pretty embarrassing to the private part of the industry. It showed their rates, in many instances, were far too high, and has often forced them down.

Means More Jobs

Lower power costs have meant more industries, more jobs, more use of electrical equipment in home and farm as well as on the job, and a constantly increasing demand.

Much of the trouble of "sick" New England industry is due to high power costs because private industry, with no government yardstick close at hand, has forced up prices. As a result, in 1951 the average monthly bill for 100 kwh. in New England was $4.28, compared to $3.01 in the TVA area and $3.75 for the country as a whole.

The public utilities barons have had their eyes on federal power facilities for a long time. Now they have important allies—men who loom high in powerful Republican leadership circles.

THEY WANT these facilities, built with money from the pockets of all taxpayers, turned over to them. If they can't get them, they want to be able to buy the power somewhere along the line and sell it somewhere else, so they can make themselves a nice fat profit on the public's investment.

Even Charles E. Wilson, the one-time General Electric Co. president whom Pres. Truman had to kick out as defense mobilizer, wants the federal government to turn over these facilities, including such developments as the Tennessee Valley Authority, to private enterprise or the states through holders of U. S. bonds.

SEN. WELKER (R. Ida.) enthusiastically but vaguely parrotted Wilson's views in a recent radio interview. However, some listeners came to the conclusion he wasn't sure of what he was talking about, as he held up Boulder Dam as an example of what private enterprise could do. Boulder Dam was started by the federal government during the Hoover Administration.

Through subdivisions of the Interior Dept., the people of the United States own or oversee nearly 300 million acres of land in the U. S. and 290 million acres in Alaska. In addition, they own mineral rights on another 55 million acres owned privately. Oil, gas, grazing and timber lands are leased, and last year yielded $64.5 million income for the government.

They Want The Land

The grazing lands are rented on the basis of the number of cattle or sheep they will support without disastrous over-cropping. Land where heavy grass covers are needed to prevent erosion or protect watersheds is not leased. The private cattle and sheep people want it.

Forest lands are leased on a basis pretty much in line with the policy of the CIO and the CIO Woodworkers—to yield a steady crop of harvest timber each year, with selective cutting of individually marked trees.

This policy protects one of the people's most important natural resources, but the big lumber interests oppose it. They want to own it, exploit it and abandon it, as they have done to untold millions of acres from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

A lot of Republicans who have friends in the White House and Congress think these things aren't worth preserving—if they can be turned into a profit for private industry.

Greenback Curtain Is Condemned

Giant corporations operating behind a "greenback curtain" of privilege and power are trying to dismantle the federal government, Clay L. Cochran, economist for the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, charged in an article in Rural Electrification magazine.

Cochran cited the scheme of former Pres. Charles E. Wilson of General Electric to sell publicly-owned property to federal bondholders. This plan is typical, he explained, of efforts of spokesmen for "private collectivism" to force the distribution of federal powers to states and big corporations. Banks, insurance companies, commercial utilities and high income groups own most of the bonds, he said.

That Man McKay Is Good Friend Of Big Boys

THE MAN President-elect Eisenhower has picked for his Secretary of the Interior is no Harold Ickes or Gifford Pinchot fired by zeal to safeguard the country's natural resources for all the people.

The administrator who will boss the country's public timberlands outside the national forest, its park and oil lands, river and public power developments, the Reclamation Bureau and the Indian Agency and a host of other branches of the federal government, former Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon, is primarily a business man.

In private life he runs a Chevrolet agency at Salem, Ore. In Washington, he should fit in nicely with the rest of the businessmen — especially those with General Motors connections — who will bulk so large in the Eisenhower Administration.

As Governor and before that as a State Senator, he has displayed sort of a genius for staying out of disputes. On the Hell's Canyon Dam issue now so important in the Pacific Northwest, no one seems to know just where he does stand, because at different times he has sidled in both directions.

DOUGLAS McKAY
Peace . . . it's wonderful

ON CONSERVATION and development, he is known as a good friend of the private power and lumber interests.

When his appointment to the Cabinet was announced, the Associated Press commented that "he appears to reflect Gen. Eisenhower's views on domestic problems almost exactly." Many of his intimates in Oregon agree, but include international as well as domestic affairs.

One of the things he has taken a definite position on is federal river valley development, and to it he is strongly opposed. He testified vigorously against proposals for a Columbia River Administration before congressional committees in 1949, holding out for federal-state cooperation and creation of an interstate body for valley developments.

His view is that private interests should be given the first chance to develop water resources. If the job is too big, the federal government should take over—but the states should have a voice in actual operations. This means cutting the private companies in some place along the line so they can sell the power to the consumers and "earn" themselves a profit on a public development.

McKay has taken a definite position on tidelands oil. He strongly favors giving the whole $50 billion worth to the states.

On the credit side, he has been a friend of public utility cooperatives, having sponsored one in 1935. In 1949 he was one of the few Republicans in the Oregon Legislature who voted against giving the reactionary Idaho Power Co. the right to build low dams in the Snake River.

Lobbyist Crashes McKay Quizzing

Reporters couldn't get into the closed session of the Senate Interior Committee which last week questioned former Gov. Douglas McKay of Oregon about his qualifications to be secretary of the interior in the Eisenhower cabinet—but a registered lobbyist for the Wyoming Wool Growers Association made it.

Sitting in while McKay was being quizzed was Byron Wilson, executive secretary of the association, who was identified as the J. B. Wilson registered as lobbyist for that group. He was interested because as secretary, McKay will control certain publicly-owned western grazing lands upon which sheep and cattle growers have cast longing eyes.

Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.) took the blame for Wilson's presence. He said he didn't know the meeting was closed.

Ohio Council Vows 'Build CIO' Campaign

By AL ZACK

UNITY and a determination to build a bigger CIO in memory of Philip Murray underscored the 14th convention of the Ohio CIO.

Meeting in Cleveland's huge Public Auditorium, the nearly 1200 delegates:

- Cheered pledges of unified leadership made by top CIO officials.
- Mapped plans for a vigorous legislative battle in the 100th Ohio General Assembly, which is Republican by 3-to-1.
- Outlined a state tax program which would take the burden off the little fellow, who has been carrying the big load.
- Bade a fond farewell to Jack Kroll, national PAC director, who had led the Ohio council since 1932 and wouldn't run for reelection.
- Promised more political action, not less, in their marginal state.
- Condemned Sen. McCarthy's financial deals in ringing tones.
- Served notice on employers that there must be better workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation in Ohio.
- Paid tribute to Philip Murray as a man "of courage, faith, humility, dedication and godliness."

Kroll set the tone of the convention in his keynote speech, marking the end of his long service to the Ohio Council. As PAC director, he said, "even if I had known at the beginning of 1952 what the outcome would be, I would not, so far as it was within my power, have altered our course one inch. I would not have spent one cent less or spared one more ounce of energy."

"We put up a damned good fight in 1952. We gained political strength in terms of knowledge, organization and in terms of arousing the interest of people in politics. I don't think any of us should be discouraged by the events of the past year. I think we should be encouraged. We've got a lot to look forward to."

Recalling President-elect Eisenhower's campaign pledges, Kroll said "the election was not a mandate for reaction" but rather "a mandate for progress and it will be a careless politician indeed who ignores it."

The people expect Eisenhower to redeem his campaign promises, Kroll continued, and added, "we wish him well in his task and we offer him our sympathies . . . yes, even our apologies . . . on Sen. Taft. After all, we did our best to spare him that."

He pointed to the 1953 state and municipal elections as PAC's next big task and the convention unanimously called for an all-out drive to put good men into local offices. As Kroll put it, "Government is not just something on top. It runs all the way down from the President to the cop on the beat and the health and welfare of our community depends as much on the cop as it does on the President."

CIO Exec. Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, top convention speakers, pledged all-out unity to build the CIO in the Murray tradition.

"The new leadership team in CIO is going to be working together every single minute." Carey pledged, "and the CIO is going to march on to even greater victories." "That," he added to cheers from the delegates, "is the only fitting memorial to Phil."

"What I had to give to Philip Murray," Haywood pledged as the delegates cheered, "I shall give to you, Walter Reuther, as my president."

The convention, by a rising unanimous vote, pledged "our unstinting and faithful support to Pres. Reuther and all the other officers of CIO. Reuther has a real claim upon our fidelity and cooperation, and these we willingly extend him."

IN A memorial session to Murray, Kroll, Father George Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and official spokesmen for the Steelworkers, Auto Workers and smaller CIO unions, praised the late labor leader.

As a "tangible expression of the thoughtfulness and gratitude in our hearts," the delegates contributed $5000 to the Philip Murray Memorial Fund, recommending the fund be used for "institution of a CIO leadership training center."

Elected as Council president to replace Kroll was James P. Griffin, director of USA-CIO Dist. 26 in Youngstown. Jacob Clayman, a Steelworker, was reelected to his fourth term as secretary-treasurer.

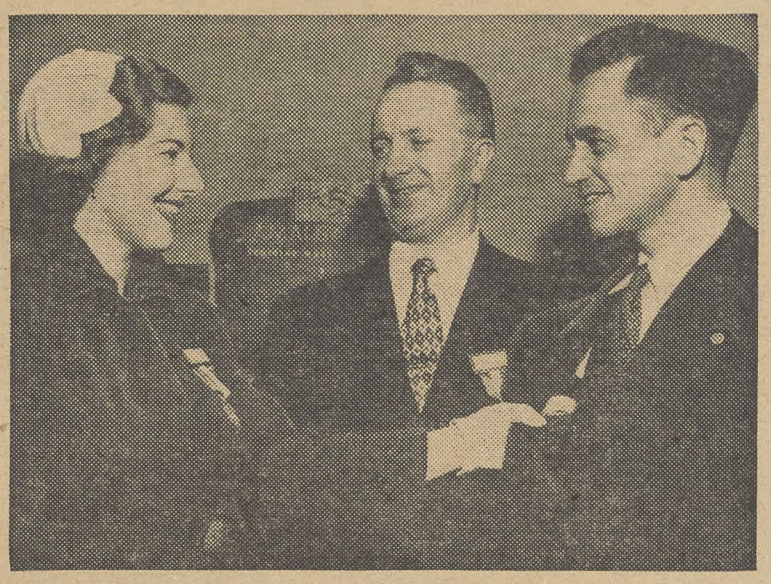
Griffin was nominated by Ray Ross, UAW regional director in southern Ohio, and Clayman by Pat O'Malley, UAW director in the Cleveland region. Both were elected by acclamation.

Plans for an all-out legislative battle, adopted unanimously by the convention, provided for continuation of the 1950 program of weekly visits by large CIO groups to the State House, with weekend legislative institutes in the state's major communities.

THIS PROGRAM, Clayman said, stopped an avalanche of anti-union measures two years ago, when a top-heavy Republican majority had control of the legislature. "We can do it again," he predicted.

The convention discussed at some length legislative efforts to be made on workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation. Benefits under the latter, the delegates said, are "too low, disqualifications too many, and administration of the law too narrow and technical."

The entire benefit structure under workmen's compensation is "totally inadequate," the convention agreed.



BIG GRINS mean Doris Siegl of the Clothing Workers found a union label in CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey's suit. Pat O'Malley, UAW director, Cleveland, watches.

Annual Wage Set As Target

First resolution adopted by Ohio CIO delegates called for the guaranteed annual wage as "one of the prime ingredients for the growth and maintenance of a prosperous economy."

Saying it was "the next major security objective of the CIO," the resolution promised united support from all Ohio locals to every international union fighting for this goal.

Revamping Of Ohio's Unfair Tax Laws Demanded By CIO

COMPLETE revamping of Ohio's tax structure was demanded by the Ohio CIO convention, following a year-long, independent survey of the state's tax setup.

The survey was authorized at the 1951 convention after CIO demands for a state-conducted survey to tell the taxpayers the truth had been ignored.

The 500,000-member council voted that its treasury, now nearing the $200,000 mark, should finance an impartial, objective survey. Now completed, the survey will be printed and distributed to "all interested in fair taxation."

In a resolution, the Ohio CIO charged the "state's tax burden has been unfairly distributed with an unequal share piled on the shoulders of wage earners."

The Legislature, it charged, "consistently ignored the time-honored principle of 'ability to pay' and had granted tax relief to those best able to pay the cost of government; heaped new taxes on the shoulders of those least able to cope with this burden and encouraged near-bankrupt political subdivisions to treat miserably those unfortunate citizens dependent upon public welfare."

Its study, the Ohio CIO said, showed that in 1930, Ohio property taxes netted $290.3 million. By 1949, "despite vast increases in building and undoubted higher value of property," these taxes drew $313.7 million—an increase of $23.4 million.

IN CONTRAST, sales taxes in 1930 netted the state $38.5 million. By 1949, this income had skyrocketed to $315.1 million an increase of $276.6 million. The survey revealed that 78% of all Ohio tax revenues comes from sales and excise taxes, while the national average is only 59%

To correct these evils, the convention demanded a graduated state income tax on corporation earnings and personal incomes. This, the delegates said, should be modeled after the federal income tax law, containing exemptions for small wage earners, deductions for all dependents, and be imposed on a graduated rate basis.

As soon as this new tax, which the CIO called "a proper and sound method for raising funds," is enacted, the delegates demanded abolition of Ohio's 3% sales tax, prohibition of city payroll taxes (levied on gross incomes of workers but only on net profits of businesses) and repeal of special tax preferences granted corporations.

NEW OHIO CIO officers, Jacob Clayman and James P. Griffin. Griffin is third president of big Ohio council.

'Stand On Side Of Humanism,' Haywood Urges Eisenhower

CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood had a "word of counsel" for President-elect Eisenhower last week. It was to not lend his aid to any legislation that would ban industry-wide bargaining.

Speaking at the Ohio CIO convention, Haywood voiced the hope that Eisenhower "will stand on the side of humanism at all times" and will fulfill his campaign promises to be "fair to labor."

"If you follow the advice of those with foolhardy proposals to destroy national bargaining," Haywood counseled the President-elect, "and they succeed in their goal, I say to you there will be hell in this country."

The other major speaker at the three-day session was CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who observed that with "a new, untried Administration" about to take over in Washington, foreign policy is of vital concern to all Americans. He reaffirmed CIO's determination to fight for two goals, "peace and democracy."

"We reject peace without honor," Carey said. "We abhor the position of those frightened Americans who once were prepared to pay Hitler's price for peace and are now ready to pay Stalin's price.

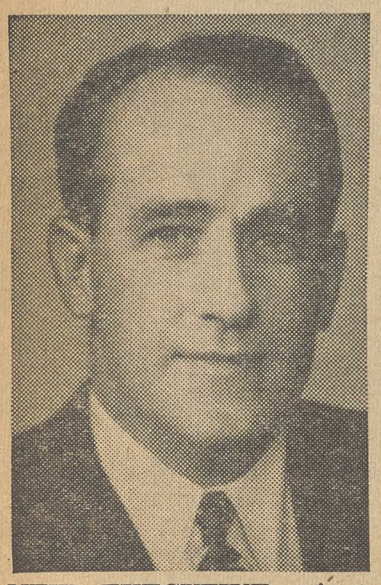
"WE DON'T want peace—if it means giving up one iota of the freedoms which are as American as the Star Spankled Banner or ham and eggs. That wouldn't be peace. It would be slavery."

Robert Oliver, administrative assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, reported on the Mutual Security Administration, on which he represented CIO until recently. In those European countries with weak labor movements, he said, there was "political instability." "They are the weak spots in the defense against communism," he warned.

L. S. Buckmaster, CIO Rubber Workers president, laid the blame for 46,000 AWOL cases in the armed forces, to those Republicans and newspapers which "have demoralized the young men of the nation by telling them Korea isn't worth fighting for and it's only a foolish war."

"I don't want anyone telling my son a war to stop the spread of communism is an unnecessary war," he added.

Textile Parleys Pledge Fight Against Wage Cuts



NEW EXECUTIVE vice president of the CIO Textile Workers is William Pollock, former secretary - treasurer. He succeeds the late Mariano Bishop.

WAGE POLICY for approximately 150,000 CIO Textile Workers was set at two separate conferences in Boston.

A 6.5% wage increase will be sought for 90,000 cotton and rayon workers in March, it was decided by about 400 delegates at one meeting.

Approximately 300 delegates at the other conference called for renewal of some woolen and worsted contracts that expired last week. They pledged resistance to any wage cuts.

The wage demand in the cotton and rayon industry simply will mean restoration of 6.5% wage cut stemming from an arbitrator's decision for the Fall River-New Bedford, Mass., area last June.

Apparently angered by the TWUA demand, the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers' Association and the Fall River Textile Manufacturers' Association last week announced intention to terminate contracts when they expire Mar. 15.

Members of these Massachusetts groups—the pace-setters in the cotton-rayon industry—employ between 20,000 and 25,000 workers.

The associations referred to what they called the "ruinous" labor differential between the North and the South.

They did not comment on a resolution adopted by the TWUA cotton-rayon conference which said employers were responsible in a large degree for the differential because many mills in the South and the North have the same ownership. TWUA said the differential is 5c an hour in comparable jobs.

"WE SAID at the time," said a resolution adopted by the cotton-rayon conference, "that the arbitrator's decision was outrageously unjust; we stand by that opinion.

"True, there was a slump in the industry but the principal sufferers were the workers, who were forced to undergo long periods of unemployment or partial employment.

"The employers—almost without exception—ended the year with a profit, and we might say without any reduction in executive salaries. We have yet to hear a convincing rebuttal to the basic statement we made to the arbitrator a year ago:

"A WAGE cut will not sell a single yard of cloth."

In the woolen and worsted industry about a third of the TWUA members are covered by contracts that expired last week. These contracts renew automatically unless terminated by the employer. Early last week TWUA had received termination notices from only three mills.

The other contracts, including that with the American Woolen Co., the largest employer in the industry, will not expire for two years, but the employers can submit wages to arbitration.

Goldberg Continues As CIO General Counsel

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther announced last week that Arthur J. Goldberg will continue as CIO general counsel, but at his own request will be relieved of staff and administrative work.

At the same time, Goldberg announced he will set up a law office in Washington, outside CIO headquarters, into which he expects to move about Feb. 15.

"Arthur Goldberg's legal work for the CIO has been consistently of the highest quality," said Reuther in his announcement.

"In addition, all of us in the CIO have benefitted by his thorough and expert knowledge of labor, industry, and government, and by his extremely valuable advice and counsel through the years.

"GOLDBERG will handle, in the that he now be relieved of much of the detail work that he has handled for the CIO in the past.

"Goldberg will handle, in the future as he has in the past, matters of legal policy for the CIO. He will supervise the work and activities of the CIO Legal Dept., which will continue to function in our headquarters. He will be available for frequent consultation by the officers of the CIO, the officers of our affiliated unions and the staff of the CIO headquarters.

"Under these new arrangements, we look forward to a continuance of the highly satisfactory mutual relationship that has always existed between Arthur Goldberg and the officials of the CIO."

Goldberg expressed appreciation that Reuther made it possible for him to be relieved of some of the work he has done in the past while he continues as CIO general counsel.

"Under the leadership of Pres. Reuther," he added, "I am confident that the CIO will continue to make great forward strides, and to make available its influence and ideals for the welfare of the entire nation.

"Perhaps more than at any time in the recent past, the CIO has a tremendous role to play in protecting and advancing the traditions and gains of American labor and American liberalism.

ARTHUR J. GOLDBERG
Continues With CIO

"To be associated with the CIO is an honor which I highly regard. I feel certain that the changes in the functions which I proposed and which Pres. Reuther most graciously accepted will not serve to diminish in any way the cordial relationships which exist with the officers and staff of the CIO.

"IT IS MY hope that it will be possible for me to continue to serve this great organization for many years to come."

Goldberg also announced that he had made similar arrangements with the CIO Steelworkers, headed by Acting Pres. David J. McDonald. He has served as general counsel of both the CIO and the Steelworkers for several years.

N.Y. Urban League Labor Unit Gets CIO Backing

THE CIO and the AFL have pledged to support the National Urban League in its efforts "to eradicate every form of discrimination."

The trade union committee of the New York City Urban League has adopted a statement which declares:

"Organized labor will . . . cooperate with the National Urban League in behalf of the cherished goals of the two movements to eradicate every form of discrimination, in industry as well as the community at large; in housing, education, public services, health and welfare, and in recreation."

Labor officials are officers of the committee, including: Secretary, Morris Iushewitz, secretary of the New York City CIO Council; vice chairmen Charles H. Kerrigan, CIO Auto Workers' regional director, and Louis Simon, a vice president of the CIO Clothing Workers and manager of ACWA's New York Laundry Workers Joint Board.

Textiles For Example—

The Profits Of Doom Are Struggling Along

THE COUNTRY'S goldplated manufacturing corporations are doing all right in spite of their howling about taxes, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

Maybe they sounded like profits—er-r, prophets, that is—of economic doom, but their net after taxes in the third quarter of 1952 was at the same level as in the first and second quarters—$2.6 billion—and slighty better than the $2.5 billion chalked up in the third quarter of 1951.

They did even better than the figures make it appear, as their profit level held up in spite of a drop in sales from $61.4 billion in the second quarter to $60.7 billion in the third, a difference of $700 million.

Some did a lot better than others, but 23 classifications showed higher net earnings in the third quarter than in the second. For example the textile industry, which has been fleeing to low wage areas in many cases and winning wage cuts in others, thrived mightily. Textile mill products showed a 43% boost in net between the two quarters, and apparel and finished textiles a 41% improvement.

FTC figures for manufacturing corporations for the second and third quarters of 1952 before and after taxes, with amounts in millions of dollars, are:

CIO Gains 5000 Members In Tennessee Organizing

THE CIO gained more than 7000 new members in Tennessee in 1952—and several important organizing campaigns are under way in 1953.

Paul R. Christopher, CIO Tennessee director, reported the CIO gained approximately 5000 members by winning 24 elections and by gaining voluntary recognition in one case. Elections were held during 1952 in Memphis, Nashville, Chattanooga, Knoxville, Union City, Clarksville, Humboldt, LaVergne and Johnson City.

Employment increases and organizing drives in already organized plants were credited with getting another 2000 members.

THREE AFL attacks on the Paperworkers in Knoxville and Memphis and one against the Packinghouse Workers in Memphis were defeated. Employes of the W. C. Bush Co., Nashville, and the Cavalier Corp.'s furniture division, Chattanooga, switched their affiliation from the AFL to CIO.

In 1952 the first Tennessee local of the CIO Electrical Workers was organized following an election victory at the Hunter Fan and Ventiliating Co., Memphis.

A new CIO Council was formed in east Tennessee consisting of CIO locals in Bristol, Johnson City, Kingsport and Greeneville.

The largest organizing campaigns in progress, at the Milan Arsenal operated by the Proctor & Gamble Defense Corp, involves 5000 workers.

TWUA Says AFL Widens Wage Gap By Southern Raids

THE CIO Textile Workers have accused the AFL United Textile Workers of "helping to widen" the North-South textile wage differential.

TWUA's international officers reported to the union's cotton-rayon conference at Boston that the AFL outfit was widening the differential by accepting inferior contracts in the South. The report placed responsibility for the situation on George Baldanzi, former TWUA executive vice president, who switched to the AFL union after an unsuccessful effort to unseat TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve.

"The best AFL contracts in the South," said the TWUA officers, "are no better than those won by TWUA in 1950, while in many others, the wages, workload protection and fringe benefits are substantially inferor."

'In The End We Will Win' Civil Rights

The real meaning of the outcome of the recent unsuccessful fight to amend the Senate rules to end filibusters against civil rights legislation was summed up immediately after the vote in an address by Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.). He told the Senate:

"MR. PRESIDENT, I believe with all my heart in majority rule. It is therefore that I accept the decision of the Senate in tabling the Anderson motion. I wish it to be clearly understood that the question of majority rule and lessening the power of the filibuster is so dear to my heart that I shall continue the fight.

"The adoption of the motion to table the resolution of the Senator from New Mexico is implicit recognition of the fact that our main contention that each Senate has the constitutional right to adopt its own rules is sound. No point of order was raised against the Anderson motion.

"A majority of the Senate has laid that motion on the table. I believe the opposition did not dare to raise a point of order because of the fear that such a point against the Anderson motion would have been overruled.

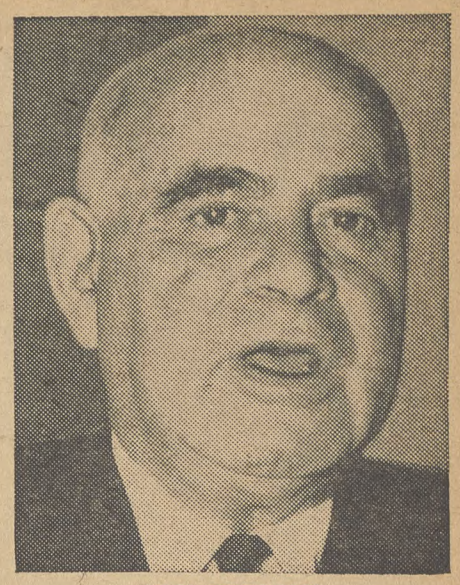
"I am sure that the will of the American people will some day be asserted in the United States Senate. The voice of the people will bring a majority vote on this issue at some future time.

"We have lost the first round, but this is only the beginning of a long and historic fight to establish majority rule in the United States Senate. I believe it to be an incontrovertible fact that the Senate has the constitutional right—even the obligation—to adopt its own rules at the beginning of a new Congress.

"It is incontrovertible because the right to do so is expressly set forth in the Constitution. It is, moreover, basically inherent in the nature of a democratic parliamentary body. That right can never be set aside, whatever the technical grounds. No precedent can be permitted to lie against this basic right, this fundamental characteristic of a democratic body.

"The dead hand of the past cannot be permitted indefinitely to choke the life out of democracy and to thwart not only the will of the majority, but what is fundamentally right and needful. The filibuster must go. The majority must reassert its right to act.

"In the end, we will win. I am confident of that."



SEN. LEHMAN
"I am confident . . ."

CWA Pushes Pay, Membership Drives

ARMED WITH a 10-point program, the CIO Communications Workers last week were getting set to negotiate new contracts for 300,000 Bell System employes.

Ohio Bell will be the first of the A. T. & T. empire to be sent notification of CWA's intention to seek changes in wages and working conditions. The Ohio pact terminates Apr. 11.

CWA has geared a membership drive to coincide with the start of negotiations in the telephone industry. The union also will aim for new pacts covering thousands of workers in the independent companies.

The 10-point program is based on bargaining policy adopted last June at CWA's sixth annual convention at Cleveland and approved by the union's executive board at a recent Atlantic City meeting.

CWA will seek, as a prime demand, increases in basic wages—increases based on economic conditions, living costs and increased productivity. The union's collective bargaining staff under the direction of Vice Pres. John Crull is gathering information for use of CWA negotiators throughout the country.

CWA ALSO will seek shorter wage progression schedules, better company-paid pensions, incorporation of the pensions into the contracts, a hospitalization, surgical and medical plan, better grievance procedure.

Other demands will include: Improved seniority, better union-management relations, and improved clauses on hours of work, shift, job and town classifications, and on transfers and transfer allowances.

Steel Union Wins Vote At Fairless Works

WORKERS at U. S. Steel's new Fairless Works at Morrisville, Pa., voted almost unanimously for the CIO Steelworkers in a National Labor Relations Board election held last week. The vote was 761 for the USA-CIO to 19 for no union.

Charles Ford, director of the union's District 7, which comprises some 47,000 steel workers in the Philadelphia area, said steps would be taken immediately to conclude an agreement with U. S. Steel.

Fairless Works, "the largest fully integrated steel mill ever built at one time," according to the company, started operation last month. Construction of the plant began less than two years ago. It cost about $400 million.

When the plants gets in full operation, it is said that some five to six thousands workers will be employed at the plant.

Taft Family Buys TV Outlet

The Cincinnati Taft interests last week bought television station WTVN in Columbus, O., for "approximately $2 million." The station was sold by Edward Lamb, Toledo attorney and Erie, Pa., publisher, subject to approval of the Federal Communications Commission.

The Taft family owns the Cincinnati Times-Star and radio station WKRC and television station WKRC-TV. Robert A. Taft, Jr., son of the Ohio Senator, is associated in the radio-television operation.

Rail Union Asks Vote In D. C. Terminal

THE NATIONAL Mediation Board last week told the CIO Railroad Workers that it will act speedily to hold a representation election among the 1200 carmen at the Washington Teminal.

The carmen are now represented by the AFL Brotherhood of Railway Carmen at the terminal which services all railroads using the Union Station in the Nation's capital.

About 1000 of the carmen are Negroes and they have long been dissatisfied with the AFL union, which maintains white and Negro locals.

TWO INCIDENTS brought the discontent to a head. One was the firing of Sylvester Shaw, an oiler at the terminal, on "trumped up" charges, according to Roy Granata, URRWA publicity director. The other is the union shop agreement which became effective last November.

About 300 Negroes have refused to join the AFL union because, under the segregated set-up, the Negroes cannot select their union representative who is chosen by the white local.

The decision of the Mediation Board to hold an early election was made when Granata presented URRWA authorization cards which he said represented between 75% and 80% of the carmen.

8 Civil Rights Bills Presented In Senate

EIGHT CIVIL rights bills, aimed at curbing racial discrimination and guaranteeing equality for all Americans, were tossed into the Senate hopper last week.

Authored by eight Senators, led by Sen. Humphrey (D., Minn.), the measures are "thoroughly consistent with the platforms of both the Democratic and Republican parties," Humphrey said.

As spokesman for the eight lawmakers, Humphrey noted that the bills, separately drafted and separately introduced, carry out recommendations of the 1947 President's Commission on Civil Rights and subsequent Justice Dept. recommendations. Not included was a Fair Employment Practices bill, which Humphrey said would be introduced at a later date.

The Minnesota Democrat noted the measures were "not a package." "We would welcome enactment of all or any of them," he observed.

CAPITOL HILL observers predicted vigorous opposition by Dixiecrats with a filibuster likely, now that the Senate, under Sen. Taft's leadership, has killed attempts to curb this legislative roadblock.

"We believe that with the cooperation of the majority leadership," Humphrey said, "it will be possible for us to defeat any filibuster or other tactic which a minority may use to stop their enactment."

He noted that "the Republican party now has the responsibility for legislation in the Senate," and added:

"We will judge the good faith of the Republican party campaign pledges by the willingness of the party leadership to join with us in common effort."

Joining Humphrey in presenting the bills were Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.), Lehman (D. N. Y.), Magnuson (D. Wash.), Morse (Ind. Ore.), Murray (D. Mont.) Neely (D. W. Va.), and Pastore (D. R. I.).

Here's Program In Summary—

Here's what the eight civil rights bills, introduced last week by liberal senators, would do:

- Outlaw lynching.
- Eliminate the poll tax.
- Reorganize the Justice Dept. to protect civil rights.
- Bar Jim Crow in interstate transportation.
- Strengthen existing civil rights statutes.
- Protect the right to political participation.
- Strengthen anti-peonage statutes.
- Establish a Joint Congressional Committee on Civil Rights.

Contempt Jails 5 Paperworkers

Five members of the CIO Paperworkers began serving jail sentences last week when a New Jersey Superior Court judge refused to revoke contempt terms.

The charges grew out of disorder that followed efforts of professional strikebreakers to crash a picket line of Locals 297 and 301 of Whippany Paper Co., Whippany, N. J. Pres. Martin Scalley of Local 297 and Pres. Jess Fisher of Local 301 were sentenced to 60 days each. Fifteen day sentences were given former Reg. Dir. Anthony Adamo, Sec. Philip Nobile of Local 301 and George Skurchak, assistant steward of Local 297.

Rent Curbs In N. Y. Backed

THERE WILL be no relaxing of rent control in New York State, if the Democratic Party has its way.

Richard Balch, State Democratic chairman, conferred with legislative minority leaders in both houses of the State Capitol at Albany and then said the party would do "all in its power" to block any relaxing of State residential rent controls.

It had been reported that the State Rent Commission was considering easing rent controls, which will expire June 30 unless extended by the Legislature. Gov. Dewey has declared himself for control extension.

. . . Poor Get Socked

'Tax Relief' Asked For The Big Boys

AFTER 14 YEARS of maneuvering, the "Keep Uncle Sam Poor Club" has the Millionaires' Relief Amendment before Congress. The "Keep Uncle Sam Poor Club" is a combination of the country's most reactionary and wealthiest citizens and their stooges.

The Millionaires' Relief Amendment, also known as the 22d Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, would limit the federal government's taxing power to 25% of income.

If enacted, it would keep the government so impoverished that almost everything except basic administrative functions would have to be abandoned—including the operations growing out of the social legislation enacted under the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Sponsor of the amendment in Congress is Rep. Reed (R. Ill.), a West Chicago lawyer and former prosecuting attorney, and chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

His plan is to limit the government to a 25% tax on individual incomes unless three-quarters of the full memberships of both House and Senate vote for a higher levy. Even then, it would not permit levies to go beyond 40%, and would not allow a "spread" of more than 15% between the highest and lowest rates.

PRESENT INCOME tax rates range from 22% to 92%. The difference between their yield and what Reed has in mind would be $16 billion.

To raise it, the federal income tax rate would have to be set at a flat 25% for everybody—for the $400-a-year sharecropper in Mississippi as well as the $4 million-a-year owner of choice stocks and bonds.

Congress also would have to enact a large sales tax, a device frequently foisted on workers and low-income groups in European countries where the wealthy regularly dodge income taxes.

The Reed amendment upsets the longstanding American tradition of taxation according to ability to pay. It would decrease the taxes of the wealthiest and increase those of people who have less—in addition to crippling the government.

The Millionaires' Relief Amendment has a long history. It is generally regarded as the brain child of the Committee for Constitutional Government, the lobbying voice of the biggest of big business, the wealthiest and most powerful citizens, and the far right fringe.

IT FIRST popped up in 1939, when the Wyoming Legislature adopted a resolution calling on Congress to summon a Constitutional Convention to submit to the states an amendment limiting the federal income tax to 25%.

This is a device set up in the Constitution to enable the people to force the calling of a Constitutional Convention when Congress is unwilling to do so. The Constitution says that "on the application of two-thirds of the states," or 32, Congress "shall call a convention for proposing amendments."

The backers of the amendment kept at it over the years. These included the American Taxpayers Association, Inc., and the Western Tax Council, as well as the CCG and the NAM.

THREE YEARS ago, another front organization, the National Committee To Limit Federal Taxing Powers, was formed at a luncheon in Washington at which the hosts were eight Republican representatives, seven of whom are still in Congress.

As of the first of this year 28 state legislatures—only four less than required—had passed the same resolution, although a small number have rescinded it. The change in strategy to the amendment proposed by Reed grew out of fears that a Constitutional Convention might run away and vote to submit all sorts of amendments to the people.

If You Earn $20,000, Reed Plan Would Help

Less than 1% of the country's income tax payers would benefit from Rep. Reed's (R. Ill.) proposed constitutional amendment limiting federal taxing powers to 25%, according to a Treasury Dept. study in 1951.

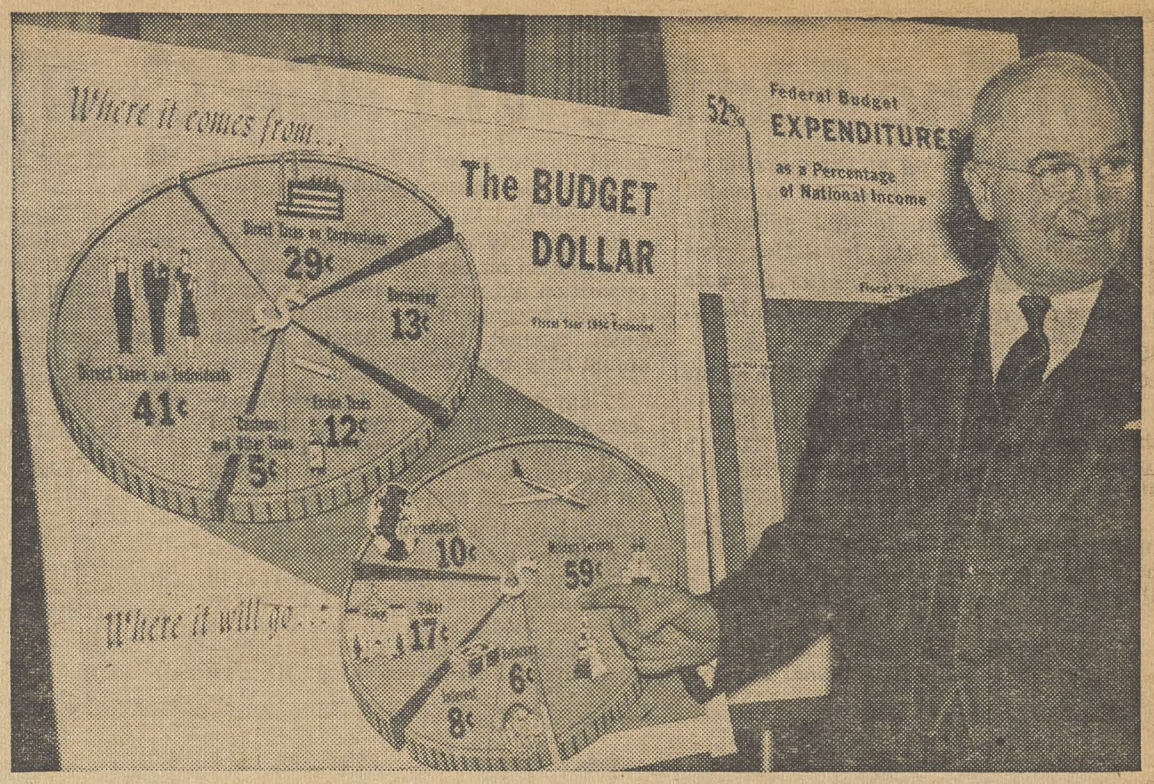
The Treasury estimated that about 400,000 of the 42 million income tax payers, with incomes (for husband and wife) of $20,000 or more, would be benefited. Dean Erwin N. Griswold of Harvard Law School, in an article in the August 1952 issue of the Atlantic Monthly, estimated there would be 450,000 individual or corporate beneficiaries.

President-elect Eisenhower has stated his opposition to the proposed amendment, describing it as too rigid. Sen. Taft (R. O.), GOP Senate leader, as might be expected, went on record as favoring it more than a year ago. The CIO strongly opposes it.

Give For Children

CIO was the largest contributor in the recent Cincinnati Retarded Children's Fund Drive, with unionists contributing $2000 of the $20,000 raised.

APPOINTED — John G. Werner has been named to the new post of community services director of the Wisconsin CIO Council. He is a Steelworker and was Milwaukee PAC chief.



WHERE IT COMES from and where it goes was explained by Pres. Truman as he briefed reporters on the $78.6 billion budget he recently submitted to Congress. Only $2.6 billion was earmarked for social security, health and welfare, and $268 million for labor. A lot of Republicans said they'd cut budget $7 billion but don't say how.

Letter Threatening Reuther Brings Cleveland Arrest

THE FBI announced last week in Cleveland that it had arrested a retired telegrapher for sending a written threat to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Held in lieu of $2500 bail was Everett Richard Williams, 70, charged with writing the threatening letter Nov. 10. The FBI said Williams admitted the charge but claimed he was drunk at the time and meant no harm by it.

The FBI said most letters of this type were ordinarily regarded as the work of cranks, but special effort was made to apprehend Williams because of the 1948 attempt on Reuther's life. At its request to the Auto Workers, all letters of this type are turned over to the FBI, as was done in this case as a matter of routine.

Jobless Reserves Up

State reserves for payments of unemployment insurance now total a record $8.4 billion, an increase of $500 million in the past year, according to the U. S. Labor Dept.

CIO Upholds Picketing Right In High Court

THE CIO last week urged the U. S. Supreme Court to uphold the right of a worker to refuse to cross a picket line without risking the loss of his job.

In a friend-of-the-court brief, filed in the case of the National Labor Relations Board vs. Rockaway News Supply Co., Inc., the CIO argued for the traditional right and duty of all union members to respect picket lines, even when the employer being picketed was not their own.

In the Rockaway case, the union member who respected the picket line was discharged, an action which the CIO brief charged was a violation of the Taft-Hartley law.

RESPECTING a lawful picket line, the CIO contended, "is one of the most sacred obligations attendant on union membership." It is an obligation, the brief noted, which the courts had recognized repeatedly as "a bona fide trade union tactic."

"If employes of secondary employers are to be subject to discharge for their refusal to cross a picket line in the course of their duties, it is clear that many such employes will hesitate to cross picket lines and the effectiveness of the picket line will be seriously and substantially diminished. To that extent also will the striking union's chances for attainment of the objects of the strike be diminished," the CIO observed.

Pointing out that "virtually all trade unions are impelled on innumerable occasions to resort to the strike and picketing," as "weapons which are the lifeblood of the trade union movement," the CIO contended:

"An adverse decision . . . will cut a vital artery and seriously hamper concerted activities of all trade unions."

The CIO brief was filed by Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and Asst. Gen. Counsel Elliot Bredhoff.

Jobless, Disability Gains Urged By New Jersey CIO

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council submitted a 46-point legislative program to Gov. Driscoll before he presented his annual message to the Legislature last week.

Council Pres. Carl Holderman said the program, which was adopted by the State CIO Legislative Committee, included eight changes in the unemployment compensation law and nine in the temporary disability benefits act.

The program calls for increasing the maximum unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits to $45 weekly for single workers and $5 more for each dependent up to four dependents for workers with families. Workmen's compensation maximums would be raised to $50 for single workers, plus the same dependency benefits proposed in the other two laws.

Other proposals would:

- Enlarge the Public Utility Commission from three to five members with two to represent labor and consumer interests.
- Tax corporations doing business in the State 7% on corporate net profits exceeding $10,000 annually, repeal "the millionnaries' tax relief" memorial to Congress which would limit the federal government's taxing power to 25% of the income of any individual or corporation, and repeal the 3c per pack cigaret tax.
- Make five changes in the voting laws including reducing the voting age from 21 to 18, providing more evening registration facilities and granting workers two hours time off with pay to vote on election day.

CIO Disavows Miami Paper's Claim Of Support

THE "UNION RECORD," a paper published at Miami, Fla., has been asked "to discontinue any articles or editorials which might convey the impression" that the paper is a "CIO publication."

The request was contained in a letter from CIO Reg. Dir. Charles Cowl to Arthur Beckerman, publisher of the paper.

Cowl said that while the CIO had never endorsed the paper, it had come to be regarded as an official CIO publication.

The CIO official added, however, that "this situation is rapidly leading to various complications which are at variance with CIO policy."

He asked that the paper publish an article citing the letter, so that "our members . . . and your advertisers" will know that CIO has no connection with the paper.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

LAST WEEK the writer had the pleasure of addressing two splendid state CIO conventions in two different parts of the country.

The first was the Ohio State convention in Cleveland, where the delegates assembled showed that the Ohio movement is on its toes and rendering real, effective service to our membership in that state.

The writer pointed out the great contributions the labor movement of that State has made. It was there the miners union was born in 1890—in Columbus—the same city and State where, in 1898 they established the first interstate contract and the eight-hour day.

From Ohio's sons came two great leaders of the miners union —Thomas L. Lewis and William Green, president and secretary, respectively. William Green, of course, went on to become president of the American Federation of Labor in 1924, a post he held until his death two months ago.

The State CIO Council has given some of its leading figures to National CIO. High among them stands Jack Kroll, for many years president of that Council, who succeeded the great Sidney Hillman as director of PAC and did—and is doing—a mighty good job in addition to his own duties with his own union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

With regrets, the Ohio convention learned that Brother Kroll would not be a candidate again for presidency of the State Council. The delegates showed their esteem for Brother Kroll and his wife by presenting them with a beautiful plaque, a television set, and a book signed by every officer and delegate present.

The writer pointed out the great unions that had grown up in Ohio and their great achievements there, and compared conditions with those that had previously existed there. With real pleasure I paid tribute to Jack Kroll and Jake Clayman for the wonderful stewardship they have given our movement in Ohio.

THE DINNER held in honor of Brother Kroll was a touching scene and showed the love and affection he had won in the hearts of the men and women of CIO in Ohio. Jack will continue his other work untiringly and faithfully.

In his stead was elected another great trade unionist as president—James P. Griffin, director of the United Steelworkers. He lives and breathes trade unionism and will render valiant service to our movement in this new capacity.

From Ohio I went to Richmond, Va., and in the hall of the great Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, I attended and addressed the Virginia State Council convention. I met with delegates of all races, creeds, and colors. There too they had a firm resolve to carry out the program of democracy, freedom, and security for all peoples, as proclaimed by CIO.

All the Council officers were re-elected unanimously. This was the best answer to the vicious and cowardly attacks made by people outside our movement upon Pres. Charles Webber.

In both conventions I brought attention to the great services rendered by Philip Murray, and reminded the delegates of our indebtedness to him. I called for maximum unity among all organizations, representatives, and members so as to give Pres. Walter Reuther, who now carries the responsibilities left by the death of our great leader, that wholehearted support he needs and should have.

I called for the fullest cooperation in assisting one another, in activizing our membership and officers to build all our unions stronger—as the real answer to the great problems we will meet in the days ahead.

In both conventions, delegates responded heartily to this call for unity and action.

In that spirit, let us all rededicate ourselves to make this declaration a living reality, by building together—by helping one another to "Roll Our Union On."

DIR. CHARLES FORD of CIO Steelworkers, Dist. 7, reports that in a representation election at the new Fairless Works of the U. S. Steel Co., Morrisville, Pa., the workers favored the Steelworkers by a vote of 761 to 19 against and 1 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that the IUE-CIO won a smashing victory at the Casco Co., Bridgeport, Conn., by a vote of 841 to 487 for no union, 18 challenged, and 14 void. IUE Rep. Tom Williams and CIO Field Rep. Frank Avellone directed the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that CIO-LIU 78 won a representation election at Value-Pak, Brawley, Calif., by a vote of 40 to 9 for no union. Local Reps. Ben Perry and Clayton Coon handled the drive.

Exec. Sec. George Maher of the CIO Broadcast Engineers and Technicians reports that NABET-CIO has won a resounding victory in Canada. The official results of a nation-wide election conducted by the Canadian Labor Board among engineers and technicians employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. show that the vote was 338 for NABET-CIO and 74 for no union, out of a total of 418 eligible voters.

A great deal of credit for this victory goes to the CIO Steelworkers in Canada, who undertook the initial organizing work, and to Pres. A. R. Mosher of the Canadian Congress of Labor for his interest and cooperation in the entire campaign.

Unmask The Klan, Says Virginia CIO In Plea For U. S. Law

IMMEDIATE ENACTMENT of a federal law unmasking the Ku Klux Klan was demanded by the Virginia State Industrial Union Council at its 12th annual convention in Richmond last week.

The resolution would make it a federal offense for any group of persons to wear masks or other disguises when assembled for the purpose of taking the law into their own hands.

WEBBER

The Virginians also demanded a federal FEPC law plus outlawing of poll taxes, lynching and segregation on buses, trains and in places of public assembly. They also demanded federal aid be withheld from schools practicing segregation.

The three - day convention heard Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, insist that unionism is democracy's greatest bulwark and the only way through which the working man can reach higher standards.

"IT IS the earnest desire of the CIO to make democracy work better and bring a higher standard of living everywhere," he said. "This is the best answer to communism."

State Pres. Charles C. Webber, reelected for his seventh term, urged that during 1953 the Virginia CIO dedicate itself to the following program:

- Securing increases in pay, because of a rate of output per man hour that "has been rising at an average of about 4% a year."
- Securing a change in escalator clauses to meet the effect of increased taxes on the purchasing power of members.
- Securing the guaranteed annual wage.
- Endeavoring to persuade management to shift from a high price—high profit philosophy to "narrower profit margins and high volume sales in mass markets."

Webber called for a campaign to educate members who have been "organized" but not "unionized" and the 200 delegates called for plans for political education classes and a monthly newsletter.

The convention endorsed a program of community service and called on the council to name a community services committee in Virginia to work with all unions to promote increased interest in this activity. It also authorized a change in the annual convention dates to bring the sessions into the late summer period.

James H. Boyette was reelected secretary-treasurer and the delegates chose a slate of vice-presidents to serve during the coming year.

LEGISLATIVE program of Sen. Taft was denounced by Dan Powell, Southern PAC director, at the Virginia CIO convention.

State Drives Urged For Election Reforms

CIO UNITS in the 43 states where legislative sessions are underway have been urged to campaign for improved registration and election laws.

In a letter to all state, county, and city CIO councils, as well as CIO regional directors and PAC officials, CIO Exec. Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll urged a campaign for CIO objectives.

They outlined three major points:

1. Adoption by all states of a uniform primary law under which candidates will be chosen in open and direct primaries, in which all the voters can participate and in which all interested persons can place their names before the public.

2. Adoption by all states of a uniform permanent registration law, designed to facilitate, rather than hinder, free voting by all citizens. The recommendation urged that registration periods be uniform throughout the nation.

3. Adoption by all states of a uniform law covering conduct of elections. The recommendation urged that hours of voting, provisions for absentee voters and other items be the same throughout the nation. It urged that election laws make voting easier as well as protect the integrity of the ballot.

The joint letter urged CIO units to examine the primary and registration laws in their own states and explore the chances of translating these recommendations into law.

Attempt By Mill Aide To Smear Webber Rejected

VIRGINIA CIO convention delegates last week scornfully rejected an attempt by big business to smear their president, Charles C. Webber.

Kingpin in the smear attempt was W. C. Daniel, personnel director of a big textile plant, where Webber had aided in organizing workers. Now on a year's leave of absence with pay to serve as national vice-commander of the American Legion, Daniel had recently flung mud at Webber.

In a letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Daniel had charged Webber with Communist connections, charges which Webber had categorically denied years before and had proven to be utterly false. Webber's record proved he had been a long-time, vigorous anti-Communist.

After hearing the charges and Webber's letter regarding them which had been sent to Reuther, the delegates unanimously re-elected Webber to his seventh term as state CIO president.

bargaining parties as the index has done over these many years, it would widen the area of conflict and misunderstanding and produce disagreement in an area where none has existed.

The parties to contracts with automatic wage adjustments based on earlier Bureau of Labor Statistics indexes will immediately have to renegotiate their agreement to relate wages to the new index. More is involved in this procedure than mere mathmatical conversion from the old to the new index.

MANY CLAUSES have become obsolete and in others the formula for relating wages to changes in the index number have become inadequate to implement the intent of the parties through the course of the last several years. Collective bargaining is required for the renegotiation of such clauses.

The Bureau's recent issuance of a memorandum on procedures for the adaptation of wage escalator clauses to the new index is a regrettable and ill-advised departure from its traditional policy of non-intervention in collective bargaining matters which has already been proven to be prejudicial to orderly negotiations based on the merits and equities involved.

It is inconsistent with the Bureau's expressed intention of confining its suggestions to "procedures to provide the arithmetic necessary to carry out the decisions of the users." Such procedures cannot be developed without full cognizance of the collective bargaining background and context and the purposes of the parties.

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research will continue to send our affiliates information on the new index as it is made available by the BLS so as to assist our affiliates in determining their policies in regard to adaptation of wage escalator clauses to the new index. Our Research Dept. will also give advice as requested on the issues and on calculation problems involved.

TWU Seeks Strike Pacts In New York, Philadelphia

THE CIO Transport Workers last week were engaged in two major strikes—one in Philadelphia and the other in New York City—and were trying to settle both.

Approximately 10,000 workers last week struck the Philadelphia Transportation Co. Another 8000 TWU members have been on strike since Jan. 1 against eight New York City bus lines. All firms are privately owned.

The strike against the Philadelphia company occurred after a union membership meeting voted down an eleventh-hour settlement recommended by TWU Pres. Michael Quill and Local 234's executive board, which approved the agreement by a 28 to 7 vote.

In both cities TWU seeks the 40-hour week with no loss in take-home pay. In New York City, the union demands include five to eight hours of guaranteed overtime and a 25c an hour cost-of-living increase. In Philadelphia TWU aims include a pay increase to compensate for shorter hours.

Last minute negotiations were undertaken in Philadelphia to avert the walkout, which was scheduled to occur on the expiration of a "Danbury-hatters type injunction." Both sides left the meeting with the apparent belief that an acceptable agreement had been reached.

The settlement provided increases ranging from 16 to 21c an hour—8c to be retroactive to Dec. 8 and the other raises to be effective at stipulated dates in the future. After September the employes would work alternately 40-hour weeks and six-days of 44 hours or more. By June, 1954, all would be on the five-day, 40-hour week.

Despite the recommendations of Pres. Paul O'Rourke of Local 234; John F. O'Donnell, the international's counsel, and TWU Sec.-Treas. Gustav Faber, the more than 2000 members at the meeting rejected the settlement. (Quill was en route to New York City to attend a meeting of Local 100's enlarged executive committee in connection with the bus strike.)

UPON LEARNING of the Philadelphia membership's action, Quill said Local 234 was violating international union's constitution. He proposed a secret ballot of the full membership on the proposed settlement, which was planned for the weekend.

"The agreement arrived at between the union and the Philadelphia Transportation Co. came as a result of 15 weeks of negotiation," the TWU president declared. Each member of the negotiating committee was polled and they were unanimous in their decision to recommend this agreement to the executive board and to the membership.

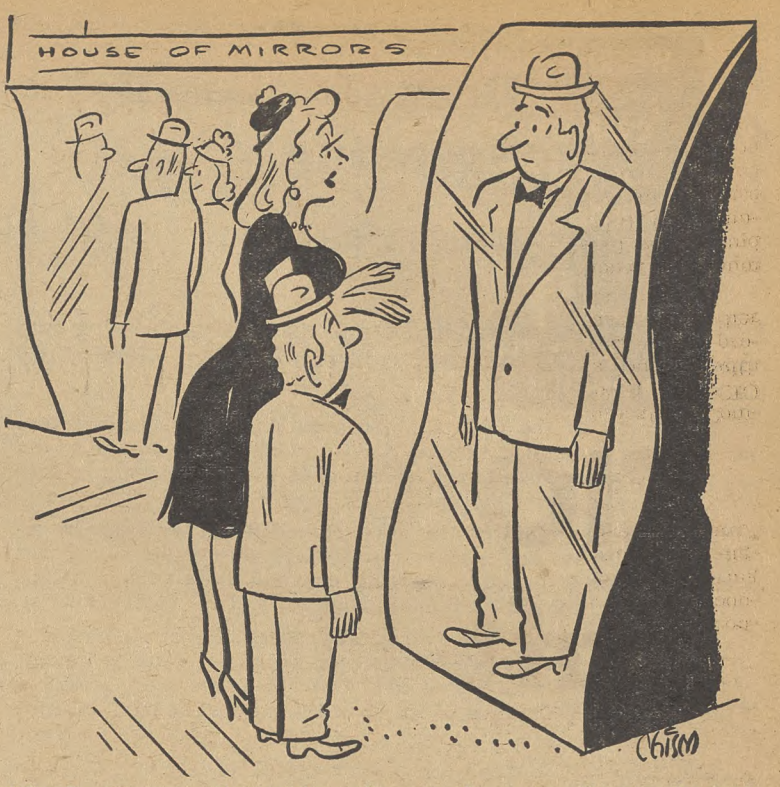
"The executive board of Local 234 approved the agreement by a vote of 28 to 7. A howling mob in the front seats of the mass meeting never gave the membership an opportunity to hear the details of the proposed contract. This is not trade unionism. This is anarchy."

IN NEW YORK City the settlement of the strike was largely in the lap of the bus companies and the Board of Estimate. The city officials had declared themselves in favor of the 40-hour week with no reduction in take-home pay and were willing to forego a $3 million annual franchise tax, but insisted that the bus fares should not be increased.

The companies said they would have to have a fare increase to meet the union's demands. The state began an investigation of the companies' finances.

Two companies proposed arbitration, but the Board of Estimate said that plan was "loaded down with impossible limitations and conditions."

Quill likewise did not favor the plan because it left the choice of the arbitrator to Mayor Impellitteri who before the strike began accused the union and the companies of conspiring to raise the fares.



"Gosh, Homer, I could really go for you if you looked like that."

Reuther Letters To Ike On Labor Dept. Listed

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week released the text of letters he had exchanged with President Eisenhower concerning appointment of a CIO person as Under Secretary of Labor.

Prior to Eisenhower's appointment of Lloyd A. Mashburn of the AFL to that post, Reuther had suggested a CIO appointee "to further strengthen the work of the Dept. of Labor."

In releasing the correspondence, a CIO spokesman observed:

"The CIO is not interested in patronage. It will judge the Eisenhower Administration by its actions as they affect the welfare of the American people and not by the number of appointments which CIO representatives may receive to public positions."

The exchange began on Dec. 31, with Reuther's commendation of Eisenhower's appointment of Martin Durkin of the AFL as Secretary of Labor.

CALLING the appointment "a wise selection," Reuther added, "a man from the ranks of organized labor will best equip the Dept. of Labor to discharge its responsibilities in interpreting the problems which our nation faces in this important field."

He then added the suggestion that a "competent person" from CIO be named to the under secretaryship.

On Dec. 18, Eisenhower replied with warm congratulations on Reuther's election as CIO president.

The new President said he intended to leave appointment of Durkin's principal aides up to the new Secretary, as was his custom in other departments. "While I have, of course, advised with him and retain the ultimate power of selection, yet obviously the success in a particular department will depend upon team work among its top leaders."

EISENHOWER suggested that "while I would be glad to talk to you at any time about the matter," he advised Reuther "to present your views to Mr. Durkin." He added, "If you should like to come to New York for a chat, you have only to call Mr. Vandenberg in my office here in the Commodore Hotel, and he will arrange an early meeting."

On Jan. 5, Reuther's first day in the office following his release from the hospital, he thanked Eisenhower for his "generous words of congratulations." "I pray," Reuther added, "that I shall have the strength and the wisdom to prove worthy of your confidence."

On the matter of the Under Secretary, Reuther said, "I am following through with Mr. Durkin as per your suggestion."

"Please be assured," he concluded, "of my wholesome cooperation in your efforts to bring peace, freedom, security and dignity to the people everywhere."

Nixon-Type Private Funds Hit In Bills Before Senate

MEMBERS of Congress and high government officials would be required by law to file public financial reports, showing assets and sources of income, if a bill in the Senate hopper becomes law.

The measure was introduced by Sens. Morse (Ind. Ore.), Douglas (D. Ill.) and Humphrey (D. Minn.) and would govern all officials making $10,000 a year, plus military officers from colonels up.

Morse noted he had introduced similar measures since 1947, all of which had failed to pass. Financial affairs of high public officials were prominent in the 1952 campaign news, after Vice-Pres. Nixon's $18,000 private fund from California millionaires was exposed.

ON FILING the bill, Morse said:

"I believe that the American people would feel very much more assured that there was not corruption in government if high government officials, including members of Congress, were required to make public the sources and amounts of their incomes."

He added, "I believe that no man should run for public office unless he is willing to disclose to the American people the source of his income."

Nixon-type private funds would be outlawed under a bill introduced by Sen. Neely (D. W. Va.).

Neely's measure would make it a penal offense for members of Congress to accept money from constituents to finance official duties. He said it was aimed at funds like that used by Vice-Pres. Nixon.

Said Neely, "My motive is to insure that no one on the government payroll is also on the payroll of millionaire special interests."

UPA Moves Offices

The CIO Paper Workers last week moved its national headquarters to 1029 Vermont Ave., N. W., Washington 5, D. C. Telephone number, unchanged, is STerling 3-8230.

'Tis A Sin And A Shame,' Says Minister Of GOP Capitol Guzzlers

PROMINENT REPUBLICANS in the 83rd Congress last week were in hot water—or maybe hot Toms and Jerries—as their $150,000 club with a bar and lounge was opened right across the street from the Capitol.

Financed by prominent Republicans, the new Capitol Hill Club was attacked by Dr. Albert P. Shirkey, president of the Washington Ministerial Association, as "a sin, a shame and a blight upon the country."

The "sin and shame" were disputed by Rep. Auchincloss (R. N. J.), president and organizer of the club, who said he planned to invite Dr. Shirkey to have lunch with him at the club.

Auchincloss said to be a member of the club you must be "a gentleman or a lady, you must be a Republican, and you've got to have 50 bucks."

The three-story club has three sedately decorated dining rooms, a lounge, a small men-only bar, and a special dining room for women. Bells summon members of Congress to the Capitol when their presence is required.

Victory-happy Republicans are now reported to be eying an adjacent seven-story building, to cost more than $1 million, which would house their national committee and affiliated bodies.

Wage Unit Okehs AP Pay Raises

The Wage Stabilization Committee has approved the CIO Newspaper Guild's contract with the Associated Press which provides wage increases and other pact improvements.

The basic national minimum for newsmen is $110 weekly, and in eight cities is $131. Other improvements include an increase in top severance from 36 to 46 weeks, four weeks' vacation after 15 years, and four weeks' pay for maternity leave.

'G M Charlie's' Cabinet Job Is Delayed

"What's good for General Motors is good for the country."

That's what former GM Pres. Charles E. Wilson reportedly told the Senate Armed Services Committee when asked in a closed hearing if he thought it proper to pass on General Motors contracts as defense secretary while owning about $2.5 million in GM stock.

The result was a week's delay, while the Eisenhower Administration pondered ways Wilson could become Pentagon boss and keep his GM stocks. The law seemed clear. It forbids all officers of the government from doing business with firms in which they retain an interest.

Late in the week, Wilson reversed himself, agreed to sell his GM stock and pay the heavy taxes involved.

THE WHITE HOUSE at once sent his nomination to Capitol Hill and hearings were scheduled as The CIO News went to press.

Senate leaders of both parties, who had blocked earlier confirmation of Wilson, indicated he'd pass inspection if he sold his stock. They had repeatedly said their opposition was a matter of principle and not an anti-Wilson campaign.

"This is a government of laws, not of men," prominent Senate

CHARLES E. WILSON
A question of the law

figures had observed again and again as the Wilson forces sought ways to circumvent the law.

The opposition began when it was learned that one of Wilson's first duties as secretary would be to rule on a GM demand for a 100% increase in the profits rate on government contracts estimated to amount to almost $5 billion.

Chairman Saltonstall (R. Mass.) originally scheduled a resumption of hearings for last Wednesday, then put them off until Friday, and finally called off that session.

Pres. Eisenhower waited to formally submit Wilson's nomination to the Senate, although he announced publicly that he had selected Wilson for the defense post shortly before his trip to Korea. As prospective defense secretary, Wilson went along on the inspection tour.

Saltonstall refused to conduct further hearings until Wilson's nomination was formally submitted. Wilson had testified earlier under an informal arrangement intended to speed confirmation of Cabinet appointees. All other Cabinet members were approved last week.

IN HIS TESTIMONY before the committee, Wilson is said to have refused to give up his stock on grounds that taxes alone would make this course prohibitive. Wilson also reportedly revealed that he is entitled to 1800 more shares of stock and $635,000 in cash between now and 1957 under a GM bonus arrangement.

A number of Senators were angered when he indicated that he intended to keep his stock but not disqualify himself from acting upon matters touching GM's interest.

Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), who touched off the controversy by calling attention to the law forbidding government officials from dealing with firms in which they are "directly or indirectly" interested, questioned whether Wilson could voluntarily disqualify himself in all matters concerning GM, or whether the President could disqualify him by executive order.

Both schemes had been suggested as possible solutions to the dilemma.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) declared that, if approved, Wilson "would be behind the eight-ball before he starts. He's bound to be suspect no matter what he does." Millions of Americans, he said, would not be satisfied even if Wilson were "disqualified" as defense secretary in any matters involving General Motors.

HE ALSO pointed out that the attorney general might be placed in an "embarrassing" position if Wilson were called as a witness in the government's anti-trust suit against Dupont and General Motors.

The committee considering Wilson's appointment was said to have before it a suppressed 1951 staff report which bluntly charges General Motors with "taking advantage of an emergency situation to reap exorbitant profits from the government."

GM IS reported seeking to boost its profit on government contracts from the present 6% to 12%. According to disclosures by Columnist Drew Pearson and the Bell Syndicate, in separate articles, the report shows how GM has pyramided profits by giving subcontracts to its own subsidiaries. One of these in turn would add a profit, then pass it on to a second subsidiary, which would take another profit to boost GM income at the taxpayers' expense.

General Motors is estimated to have 60% of the government's defense contracts on a dollar basis. Yet through the pyramiding process, according to the report, GM sometimes added as many as three profits to one contract.

The report also charged corruption among GM executives, saying that one of the biggest subcontractors built homes for them at cost in order to get their business. It said the profit rates were particularly excessive since GM is using "millions of dollars of facilities" owned by the government.

The Law And Charles Wilson

The law which has held up confirmation of Charles E. Wilson, former General Motors president, as Secretary of Defense was first passed in the 1870's and last revised in 1948. The present wording:

"Whoever, being an officer, agent or member of, or directly or indirectly interested in the pecuniary profits or contracts of any corporation, joint stock company or association, or of any firm or partnership, is employed or acts as an officer or agent of the U. S. for the transaction of business with such business entity, shall be fined not more than $2000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both."

The intent of Congress in this regard is shown in at least 16 separate statutes. Other prohibitions include:

- Members of Congress cannot take compensation for services in connection with a contract with or claim against the government. The penalty for violation is a $10,000 fine and two years imprisonment.
- Government officials or employes are forbidden to accept compensation for prosecution of claims against the government, subject to a $10,000 fine and one year.
- The Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the U. S. are forbidden to engage directly or indirectly in trade or commerce, to purchase public lands, or to own "in whole or in part" any sea vessel, subject to a $3000 fine and disqualification from future tenure of public office.

HST's Navy Oil Reserve Order Is No. 1 Headache For Ike

LOOMING as the No. 1 headache for the new Administration is off-shore oil, now in the possession of the Navy as a reserve for national defense use.

In his last week in the White House, ex-Pres. Truman transferred title to the oil lands to the Navy, saying it would be "the height of folly" for the federal government to "give away" off-shore oil and then buy it back at "stiff prices" for the armed forces.

Oil lobbyists and their spokesmen on Capitol Hill screamed. They had publicly predicted early action to turn the valuable lands over to three coastal states, Texas, California and Louisiana.

During the campaign, Pres. Eisenhower reiterated the oil lobby argument, despite a series of U. S. Supreme Court decisions upholding the Truman theory that the oil belonged to the federal government. It was this campaign promise to wealthy oil interests which won Eisenhower the support of conservative southern Democrats like Gov. Shivers and Sen. Daniel of Texas.

In the first days of the 83rd Congress a score of bills were introduced by senators eager to serve the oil interests, which would benefit to the tune of untold millions from such action.

The Truman order, which served to bring the oil steal into the public eye, was his last blow in a long fight to preserve resources belonging to all the people. It served to put the new Administration squarely on the spot, Capitol Hill observers agreed.

Two courses were open to Pres. Eisenhower and the GOP Congress.

First, would be for Eisenhower to issue an executive order of his own countermanding the Truman order. To do this, Eisenhower would have to argue convincingly that a publicly owned resource, needed for national defense, should be given to the oil companies and then purchased back at high prices.

Second, would be for Congress to pass bills like those Truman vetoed twice, giving the lands to the three states. This, too, might be embarrassing for Eisenhower, elected on an anti-corruption pledge, for the oil lands are far more valuable than "mink coats" he condemned in the campaign.

Among the off-shore oil bills in the congressional hopper was one introduced by Sen. Anderson (D. N. M.), which would give a share of the oil royalties to neighboring states with the balance going to the federal government, a proposal similar to statutes governing public-owned lands in the other states.

Another introduced by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) would earmark federal royalties from these lands for education—the so-called "oil for the lamps of learning" bill.

Oil Lands Value Set At $265 Billion

No one knows just how much oil lies in the off-shore fields, mistakenly referred to as "tidelands oil."

Newspaper estimates have ranged from $40 to $60 billion.

Ex-Pres. Truman, in his last statement on the subject, estimated 100 billion barrels of oil lay beneath the seas.

With crude oil prices in Texas standing a $2.65 a barrel, that would put the wealth of the off-shore lands at $265 billion.

Fortune Expects More GOP Corruption Than Under HST

Fortune Magazine, the $1.25 a copy organ for big business, had the following to say about "Republican corruption" in its January issue:

"THERE WILL be some—maybe quite a lot. The Republicans have never run the Big Government before. Furthermore—let's face it—the fact that a great many middle-eschelon bureaucrats of the New-Fair Deal era regarded the businessmen as an enemy of the people made them (among other things) less susceptible to money corruption than some of their replacements probably will be.

"Actually, there was surprisingly little corruption under Truman—per billion dollars of federal spending, but a great stench was raised about it in the campaign, and the Republican Administration could be badly hurt if it considered that its mandate on this issue was merely a mandate to rummage through the files and turn up more peccadilloes of the Truman Administration.

"When the first Republican is caught with his hand in the till, the Republican Administration should move so fast and hard and loud that the Democrats are left with their mouths hanging open."

SURE OF VICTORY in their strike against eight private bus lines in New York City, for the 40-hour week with no pay loss, TWU members give 48-hour week decent burial.

TWU Near N. Y. Bus Pact; Settles In Philadelphia

THE CIO Transport Workers last week settled a four-day strike of 10,000 members in Philadelphia and appeared to be on the way to an agreement to end a three-week walkout of 8000 bus drivers in New York City.

A pact with the Philadelphia Transportation Co.—which eventually will give the TWU the goal of both strikes, the 40-hour week with no loss in take-home pay—was approved by a vote of 5343 to 2255.

The strike began after a mass meeting of about a quarter of the members of the Philadelphia Local 234 rejected the settlement, which TWU Pres. Michael Quill, Local 234 Pres. Paul O'Rourke and other union negotiators wrested from the management a few hours before the strike deadline.

FOUR DAYS after the Philadelphia settlement, Quill accepted Mayor Impellitteri's arbitration plan in the New York tieup. Both Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, and the executive committee of the New York City CIO Council had urged acceptance of the proposal.

Under the plan TWU will name one arbitrator, the eight struck bus companies — all privately owned—will choose another, and the union and the bus lines will agree on a third.

Quill said he accepted the proposal subject to five conditions recommended by Haywood. A chief one was that the arbitration stipulation "clearly recognizes the right of the men to the 40-hour week without any reduction in take-home pay."

Haywood also said that "the striking bus workers be awarded retroactive pay from the day they return to work," arbitration of "all other issues," and the selection of "a CIO leader with a knowledge of the transit industry as one of the arbitrators."

Quill said the only thing that stood in the way of a union back-to-work vote was the refusal of the companies to agree to the five conditions.

By midweek last week two of the companies accepted the plan, the largest with reservations.

THE PHILADELPHIA settlement provided increases ranging from 16 to 21c an hour—8c to be retroactive to Dec. 8 and the other raises to be effective at stipulated dates in the future during the two-year pact.

After September the operators will work alternately 40-hour weeks and six-days of 44-hours or more. By June, 1954, all will be on the 40-hour week. Maintenance workers are now on the 40-hour week.

Other improvements included a ban on the extension of one-man operations, boosting pension payments from $125 to $135 a month and life insurance from $1000 to $1500.

Reuther Meets Press—

CIO Plans Drive To Ease Taft-Hartley Restrictions

CIO WILL SEEK full voice for the nation's millions of mass production workers in the Eisenhower Administration's Labor Dept. and will press in the 83rd Congress for amendments removing some of the restrictions in the Taft-Hartley Act.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther so disclosed last week, in his first Washington press conference since election to that post.

Much of Reuther's conference was centered on CIO's legislative program in the new Congress.

"We are," he emphasized, "going to continue to work for the ultimate repeal of T-H because it is a basically unfair law.

"WITHIN THAT framework, we are going to work for specific amendments which will make that law more workable in terms of practical collective bargaining.

"We want to make T-H a more workable and just law."

Reuther's press conference followed a one-day meeting of the CIO Executive Committee, comprising the executive officers and vice presidents.

While in Washington, the CIO president and other officers scheduled a meeting with Sen. Smith (R. N. J.), new Labor Committee chairman.

While Reuther refused to discuss specific T-H amendments at this time, he emphasized that those proposed by Sen. Taft (R. O.) were "completely inadequate."

"That does not mean some of his amendments are not acceptable and desirable," he observed, "but none of them get at the fundamental ills of Taft-Hartley."

The CIO president specifically condemned the 80-day injunction in so-called national emergency strikes. "It doesn't take responsibility to the bargaining table," he said.

HE EMPHASIZED CIO would suggest "practical machinery" to meet national emergency situations, saying CIO recognized "the needs of the nation."

But, he insisted, "they must define national emergencies" and he singled out the Dunkirk Steelworkers case as an example of a strike enjoined when there "was no national emergency." (In this case, a Taft-Hartley injunction has been returned against a single plant employing 1500 workers.)

Reuther told reporters CIO would press for a representative in the Labor Dept. for "we represent the great bulk of the workers in mass production industries where most defense orders are being filled."

CIO is familiar with the problems of these workers and has contacts not matched by any other group in the country, he continued. "We have a unique contribution to make," he said. "We are not motivated by patronage."

BEFORE it names a representative, Reuther said, CIO wants assurance he "will have responsibility, status and a voice in policy decisions." CIO would not be satisfied, he added "with a title, a good salary and nothing more."

Reuther said he would meet soon with Martin Durkin, the new Secretary of Labor, to discuss CIO's role in the department.

"Our evaluation of what's good or bad in the new Administration," he told reporters, "will not be based on the number of CIO persons on the federal payroll. We'll judge it by what they do on the basic problems before the American people and wage earners particularly."

CIO, AFL Boards Get Plan For New Labor Unity Talks

PROPOSALS for renewed discussions toward a united labor movement in America will come before meetings of the CIO and AFL executive boards early next month.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany at a Washington luncheon last week discussed a resumption of labor unity discussions.

They agreed, Reuther told a press conference later, to recommend that executive boards of the two labor federations authorize a resumption of the negotiations.

Proposals to set up a representative joint committee "to explore ways for a united labor movement" will come before the CIO Executive Board meeting in Washington on Feb. 5-6, Reuther said. They also will be presented to the AFL Executive Council meeting to be held the same week.

If approved by the two boards, Reuther said he and Meany had suggested that the first meeting of the joint committee be held late in February.

TWU MEMBERS vote by a majority of more than two to one to accept settlement ending strike against Philadelphia Transportation Co. Agreement gives them eventually the 40-hour week with no loss in pay—the strike goal.

Pain For Isolationists

Pres. Eisenhower's Inaugural Address brought no happiness to the strong isolationist wing of the Republican Party.

With its emphasis on America's role in international affairs, the speech must have stuck in the craw of those influential Republicans who believe that the ostrich has the right idea. Clearly, Ike does not believe that America's future can be protected by placing our head in the sands.

The inaugural address spoke in general terms, and in general terms it sounded much like Harry Truman and much like Eisenhower before his nomination. But to carry that program through, in practical detail, will require some smart action to sidestep the Taft-Jenner school of congressional isolationists.

We hope that Ike's follow-through will be as good as the wind-up.

Promise vs. Performance

There's often a big gap between promise and performance.

Take Cadillacs, for instance. According to the ads—which is all we know about them—Cadillacs come with a promise of near-perfection.

Yet when former GM prexy Charles Wilson stepped into his own Cadillac to go to the Inaugural Ball, his car broke down—and he had to hitch-hike the last few blocks.

We've noticed some other recent gaps between promise and performance.

All summer long, the Republicans promised they would drive the minks out of Washington. But the society writers tell us more minks converged on the capital for the GOP festival than at any time in recent years.

All summer long, the Republicans promised that their election victory would end bungling in Washington. The handling of the Charlie Wilson case looks as though that's one campaign promise that has yet to be redeemed.

Taft-Hartley

The CIO convention in December pledged itself to work for the ultimate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"Ultimate" may be a long way off—at least two years, in view of the composition of the present Congress, a Congress dominated by conservative Republicans and Dixiecrats.

But Taft-Hartley is up for amendment. Pres. Eisenhower has pledged three rather minor reforms in the law. Republican Senators and Congress are talking about other changes, some possibly good, some obviously bad.

In that situation the CIO Executive Committee acted with wisdom and a sense of reality in announcing that CIO witnesses before the Senate and House Labor Committees will call for amending Taft-Hartley.

Pres. Reuther has announced that the CIO won't be satisfied with inconsequential or white-wash amendments of this basically bad law. We shall do our best to win much needed reforms and improvements in Taft-Hartley. No law on the books is more in need of changes, pending its eventual removal from the statute books.

In Other Words—

Laughs Behind The Iron Curtain

The article below is from "Laughter Behind the Iron Curtain," in Field Reporter, bi-monthly publication of the State Dept. The author is John K. Jacobs, a member of the Voice of America staff.

By JOHN K. JACOBS

ACCORDING to a story going the rounds in Rumania, an old woman who had lost her cow enlisted a policeman's aid in finding it.

"Couldn't you announce it on the radio?", she asked.

"Of course," replied the policeman. "We'll do our best."

"Oh, thank you, sir," said the woman. "And could you also have it announced on the Voice of America—just to make sure that everybody hears it?"

It is not by accident that the Voice of America is associated with humor in Rumania, or in any other Iron Curtain country. For every day the Voice uses satirical sketches and political jokes and songs to discomfit the occupants of the Kremlin and their obedient proconsuls in satellite nations.

THIS STRESS on humor, which is usually more biting that whimsical, follows a well-established tradition. The humorist has always been a potent force against tyranny and, under totalitarian tyranny, the whispered joke is one of the few gestures of resistance still available. From Voltaire to Chaplin, satirists have numbered pomp and power among their primary targets. Like them, the Voice holds that dictators are in many ways ridiculous—as well as frightful—phenomena.

Voice of America broadcasts use humor in many ways. Most commonly it appears, not separately as a joke or satire, but in the form of barbs woven into a commentary. The comic elements are used not so much to make people laugh as to illuminate and dramatize what the Communists do or attempt to do—situations which, if treated factually, would seem both dull and complex for most listeners.

When, for example, the Soviets presented their recent note on a German peace treaty, the Voice described it as "one of the crafty contraptions of that crafty inventor Andrei Vyshinsky—a note "as tangled as a basket of eels, and as slippery."

"But let us bare our arms to the elbows," the broadcast continued, "plunge them in and grasp the first Vyshinsky eel. Lo and behold! It turns out to be an old friend. This slippery, writhing customer, thrashing about so actively you cannot tell his head from his tail, is none other than the argument about the agenda."

The commentary went on to show what was fishy about this typical Communist agenda tactic which placed the peace treaty first; formation of a German government to negotiate the treaty second; elections third, and investigations to see whether such elections were possible fourth.

ANOTHER WAY VOA uses humor is by needling the Communist leadership. The Voice is always solicitous, for example, when some prominent Communist fails to receive birthday greetings from the Kremlin, and reminds him that the downfall of the Czech gauleiter, Slansky, was preceded by similar oversight by Stalin.

In another macabre jibe at the precariousness of public life in satellite countries, East German Pres. Wilhelm Pieck is pictured walking in the park surrounding his mansion with his eager assistant, Otto Grotewohl. They see a body dangling from a tree.

"Look!" says Grotewohl, "it's our activist, Adolph Pennecke!"

"Well, I'll be darned," says Pieck, "he's two years ahead of schedule again."

Even an obituary column could be brightened up with the story of the old woman who, when asked by a news vendor why she carefully examined the front page of Pravda every morning, replied: "I am looking for a death notice."

"But Mother," said the puzzled paper-seller, "obituaries are always on the last page."

"The death announcement I am waiting for," she replied, "will be on the front page."

Then there is the story of the Soviet citizen who was asked if he would like to see his great leaders and their families.

"Indeed, yes," the citizen replied, "it would be wonderful to see Beria's widow at Stalin's funeral."

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

DESPITE the glowing accounts of continued prosperity appearing in the nation's newspapers, American businessmen quite generally see economic clouds on the horizon.

In a recent survey of 373 business leaders conducted by the New York Journal of Commerce, most of them (93.2%) expect a recession by 1955. A large proportion (83.9%) expect a post-defense recession to hit next year. A third (37.3%) think it so close upon us that it will strike this year.

Businessmen now have control of the new Administration. This makes doubly important their attitude concerning what role government should play to prevent any decline in employment.

First column of a new feature

During the years of the New Deal and the Fair Deal the impression was given that the business community was united in condemnation of many policies of the last 20 years. They denounced them as "meddling," and said that the "Welfare State" was leading to socialism. These business leaders have felt that "government which governs least governs best."

The Journal of Commerce survey reported also what businessmen thought government should do in the event of a recession. Over two-thirds (67.4%) said "cut taxes," while over one-half (55.5%) said "increase public works." Obviously some wanted both, which could only be applied while government operated in the red (deficit financing), an operation which they have soundly condemned in the past.

OVER ONE-THIRD (36.9%) of the business leaders envisaged government acting to "liberalize depreciation" by increased tax allowances for wear and tear on equipment and buildings. A total of 13.9% proposed that government "cut the work week" to spread employment, while 11.2% would ride out the storm by "letting things take their course."

Most of the businessmen felt that business, alone, could not handle a post-defense slump. Well over half (58%) said that the government should act whenever unemployment first shows signs of increasing, or when it reaches three million. Another one-fourth (25.8%) wants the government to step in when unemployment reaches five million. Only one-tenth (10.6%) remain in the "laissez faire" school, saying the government should not step in at all.

More than one-half of those surveyed believe that the recession will be of "moderate severity," while one-fifth say it will be "minor" and one-sixth think it will be "quite severe."

UNDER THE 1946 Employment Act the federal government has the responsibility "to use all practical means . . . to promote maximum employment, production and purchasing power." In the past many business leaders have objected to the government using direct methods for doing this. Rather, they have advocated indirect controls over the supply of money, interest rates and tax policies. Or, they have asked that government "quit meddling."

Today the business community stands divided. The new Administration of business leaders will have the responsibility for heading off a recession. Many businessmen would still have it rely on indirect measures with as little direct government action as possible.

Now, having the responsibility of government power, more and more businessmen feel that they cannot enjoy the luxury of theories. In the event of a slump the Administration will feel strong pressures to act in accordance with the provisions of the Employment Act. How it acts may be the major test of the Eisenhower Administration.

'Youth Wants To Know' But Joe Fails To Show

SEN. McCARTHY (R. Wis.) last week failed to show up to answer questions from teen-agers on an NBC television program. He said he got "confused" over the time of the show.

What he missed was a thorough going over by panel members on "Youth Wants to Know." The kids were loaded for bear.

While Moderator Theodore Granik sweated, the youngsters tossed questions like these at McCarthy's empty chair:

Aren't McCarthy's own finances part of "the mess in Washington" about which Republicans talked during the campaign?

Has he done any good with his charges or has he mostly sowed "dissension and disunity"?

Did he try to head off the recent Senate report which asked a lot of unanswered questions about McCarthy's finances?

(Editor's note: That was another quizzing at which McCarthy failed to show.)

A Last Interview—

Truman Sits Hard On Those Who'd 'Put Labor In Its Place'

THE MAN whom the late Philip Murray called the "best friend labor ever had in the White House," moved back to Independence, Mo., last week.

Before he left 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. he summed up his views on the turbulent labor scene during his nearly eight years in the White House.

In a special interview with John Herling, veteran labor reporter, ex-Pres. Harry S. Truman echoed the views of CIO leaders on the "labor vote."

"Nobody can deliver the labor vote," he told Herling. "And it's a good thing that can't be done."

Herling's copyright story, distributed by Labor Press Associated, quoted Truman as saying:

"That independent attitude of the rank and file is a very good thing for democracy . . . It's clear that nobody can deliver the labor vote with block and tackle. Anybody who says he can, doesn't know the American people. I'm glad the leaders can't deliver the vote."

Truman called establishment of the National Labor Relations Board under the Wagner Act the outstanding contribution, in the labor field, of the Democratic Administrations of the past 20 years. Herling wrote:

"Under the NLRB, he (Truman) said, things were arranged so that neither labor nor management could 'dictate to the country that labor-management relations would be conducted for the selfish interests of any group, instead of for the welfare of the country'."

'Two Things Are Sure'

"When the welfare of the country is at stake," ex-Pres. Truman said, "drastic measures should be applied, no matter who is hurt. Two things are sure — management can't browbeat labor and make labor accept such treatment. The other is that labor must not be strong enough to browbeat management and make the public suffer on that account."

Herling said Truman referred to the last two steel strikes "when management tried to make labor accept unfair contracts."

"I wouldn't let them do it, through any act of mine," Truman observed.

"Labor knows all that," said the former President. "Labor has been fairly treated by me." Herling quoted him as saying he hadn't always agreed with labor and gave "them a kick" when he felt it was "coming to them."

Very earnestly, Herling said, Truman "lifted a warning finger against people who are always 'trying to put labor in its place.'"

"GOODBYE," former Pres. Truman waves to Washington crowd a few minutes after the Eisenhower inauguration.

Taft-Hartley, Truman said, was a determined effort to do just that. If some of these people had their way, they would have taken labor and the rest of the country back to the "yellow-dog contract and the unrestricted use of the injunction against labor unions. Some people tried to get me to use the injunction when it wasn't necessary. I wouldn't do it," he told the labor reporter.

Herling said the ex-President agreed there was no doubt that Taft-Hartley would have hobbled unions in a big way, if it had been administered during the past five years under a President with a different philosophy.

"Remember," Truman said, "you can have a good law, but a bad administrator could make it work badly; the results are poor. On the other hand, you have a poor law and a good administrator, and things turn out all right."

Herling quoted Truman as believing Taft-Hartley was meant to be the first stage of even more drastic anti-labor legislation and that Truman hoped he had stopped that drive.

As to the future of labor-management relations, Truman told Herling he believes they "are definitely on the mend—and they can be improved continually if people don't interfere with the wrong kind of legislation." He recalled the early bloody struggles of the trade unions and compared them to recent, violence-free strikes. "There's improvement, all around, on that score," Truman said.

A New Front For Labor Foes

By BRADFORD V. CARTER

MEET "OPERATION AMERICA, INC.," a new face for the same old anti-labor groups. "Operation America," says its founders, will co-ordinate the activities of other groups with similar objectives "to promote constitutional government and to help get rid of subversives in education and government."

If this sounds familiar, it should be, for Arnold Kruckman, public relations man, who is president and one of the founders, told Congressional Quarterly that he is getting support from—among other—the big shots of the National Economic Council (Merwin K. Hart, executive head); Committee for Constitutional Government (Edward A. Rumely, its active head); and the Foundation for Economic Education (headed by Leonard Read).

Kruckman says several members of Congress have contributed funds, and that Rep. Smith (R. K.) and Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.) have permitted the use of their mailing lists for sending out "Operation America" informational material.

Kruckman says that Sen. McCarthy has done "a fine job" in cleaning out subversives in the government. He believes Father Coughlin and Gerald L. K. Smith have been "much maligned." He opposes US participation in the United Nations and "any other scheme involving world cooperation," considers the North Atlantic Treaty Organization "a bottomless pit."

The group, Kruckman reported, has already received requests to alert its members and client groups to any attempts to expand international cooperation, set up an FEPC, broaden social security benefits, or repeal the Taft-Hartley Act.

During the 1952 campaign, "Operation America" sent out lists of all candidates, rating them on the basis of whether they were "altogether American." The group is now planning a third conference to develop closer coordination with the "grass roots." Another conference is planned to map strategy for fighting subversion in the nation's schools.

A drive for funds is planned "to help keep America altogether American"—as defined by such groups as the Committee for Constitutional Government, the National Economic Council, and the Foundation for Economic Education.

The Great Aginners

Hart of NEC is known as a friend of Spanish dictator Franco, a friend of Gerald L. K. Smith, is reputed to be an anti-Semite, has no use for the term "democracy." He's against public housing, civil rights legislation, TVA, Point Four, etc.

The CCG has spent millions attacking labor, the New Deal and the Fair Deal. It has its own fronts, such as Fighters for Freedom, America's Future, etc.

The FEE tries to influence the "influencers." A survey in 1950 showed that FEE had distributed four million books, pamphlets and leaflets in four years, had planted articles in at least 389 newspapers and magazines.

Those are the groups for which "Operation America" is being the "sentinel."

Pomp And Circumstance—

Ike Says A Prayer And Becomes President

GEN. DWIGHT David Eisenhower last week became the 33rd man to serve as President of the United States.

His inauguration, in the brilliant sunlight of an unusual Washington winter day, was marked by the combination of solemnity and carnival spirit traditional to the day.

More than 100,000 persons, many of whom stood for hours, witnessed the solemn moment when the reins of government passed from the Democrats to the Republicans, after nearly 20 years.

Another 750,000, many of whom paid $15 for a seat, watched a 4½-hour inaugural parade, which typified the half-peace in which the nation lives.

MARCHING units ranged from tight-lipped, tough-looking veterans of Korea, to high-stepping, bare-legged drum majorettes still in high school. There were floats typifying the nation's deep-seated religious background and, only minutes later, the world's first cannon for firing atomic shells rumbled past the reviewing stands.

And there were bands, mink coats, shiny autos, sheriff's posses, tanks, elephants and Republicans galore in the line of march.

The 62-year-old five-star general, who had first marched in an inaugural parade in 1913 when he was a West Point cadet corporal, was solemn as he took the oath of office, and grimly serious as he read his inaugural speech.

OATH to "preserve, protect and defend" U. S. was administered to Pres. Eisenhower by Chief Justice Fred Vinson. At left, ex-Pres. Truman; at right, Vice Pres. Nixon.

After a firm handshake with ex-Pres. Truman and a quick kiss for his wife, Pres. Eisenhower uttered a "little prayer of my own," written that morning. It besought Divine aid that his Administration might be of "service to the people."

His prepared speech was a fervent plea for free world unity in time of peril. It marked a complete break with the historic Republican isolationism and in many ways was a reiteration of the Truman foreign policy.

EISENHOWER pledged his Administration to a tireless, uncompromising quest for an honorable peace and dedicated it "to our faith that the future shall belong to the free."

There was a complete absence of specific views on legislation and virtually no mention of domestic affairs, with aides saying he would be specific in his first "State of the Union" message to Congress.

While early reaction to his speech was generally favorable, some Republican die-hards privately told newsmen they weren't happy with his views, since they followed the Truman policy.

After the ceremonies and a Capitol Hill luncheon, the new President, seated beside his wife in an open Cadillac, led the huge parade down historic Pennsylvania avenue. On reaching the White House, the Eisenhowers went immediately to the presidential reviewing stand and took the salutes of the parade units until long after dark.

In the parade were hundreds of shiny, new autos (most of them General Motors products) and GM publicity men let it be known that the company had shipped 150 cars, complete with drivers, to Washington to take part in the ceremony.

The nation's voteless capitol had decorated the parade route with a lavish hand and an estimated half-million visitors flocked to the city for the ceremonies, which ended with a double-header inaugural ball. So many of the visitors arrived in private planes that the Washington airport officials closed off one runway as a parking area for planes.

AT THE INAUGURAL balls, final event of the day, GOP efficiency experts had the tickets badly scrambled, but the dance floors were so jam-packed dancing was difficult. It was a white tie and tails affair, with elaborate gowns and luscious minks winning the raves of Washington society reporters.

As Dwight David Eisenhower began the tough duties of President, Harry S. Truman, now just a citizen, took the evening train for Independence, Mo. Some 5000 Washingtonians jammed the platform at Union Station, to cheer, shout and sing "Auld Lang Syne."

And many of them had tears in their eyes as the train pulled out, eight minutes late because there were so many Truman well-wishers.

Ike Pledges 9 Principles In 'Our Labor For World Peace'

"In pressing our labor for world peace," Pres. Eisenhower said in his inaugural speech, his Administration would be guided by the following nine principles:

● Abhorring war as a chosen way to balk the purposes of those who threaten us, we hold it to be the first task of statesmanship to develop the strength that will deter the forces of aggression and promote the conditions of peace. For, as it must be the supreme purpose of all free men, so it must be the dedication of their leaders, to save humanity from preying upon itself.

In the light of this principle, we stand ready to engage with any and all others in joint effort to remove the causes of mutual fear and distrust among nations, and so to make possible drastic reduction of armaments. The sole requisites for undertaking such effort are that—in their purpose—they be aimed logically and honestly toward secure peace for all; and that—in their result—they provide methods by which every participating nation will prove good faith in carrying out its pledge.

● Realizing that common sense and common decency alike dictate the futility of appeasement, we shall never try to placate an aggressor by the false and wicked bargain of trading honor for security. For in the final choice a soldier's pack is not so heavy a burden as a prisoner's chains.

● Knowing that only a United States that is strong and immensely productive can help defend freedom in our world, we view our nation's strength and security as a trust upon which rests the hope of free men everywhere. It is the firm duty of each of our free citizens and of every free citizen everywhere to place the cause of his country before the comfort of himself.

● Honoring the identity and heritage of each nation of the world, we shall never use our strength to try to impress upon another people our own cherished political and economic institutions.

● Assessing realistically the needs and capacities of proven friends of freedom, we shall strive to help them to achieve their own security and well-being. Likewise, we shall count upon them to assume, within the limits of their resources, their full and just burdens in the common defense of freedom.

● Recognizing economic health as an indispensable basis of military strength and the free world's peace, we shall strive to foster everywhere, and to practice ourselves, policies that encourage productivity and profitable trade. For the impoverishment of any single people in the world means danger to the well-being of all other peoples.

● Appreciating that economic need, military security and political wisdom combine to suggest regional groupings of free peoples, we hope, within the framework of the United Nations, to help strengthen such special bonds the world over. The nature of these ties must vary with the different problems of different areas.

In the Western Hemisphere, we join with all our neighbors in the work of perfecting a community of fraternal trust and common purpose.

In Europe, we ask that enlightened and inspired leaders of the Western nations strive with renewed vigor to make the unity of their peoples a reality. Only as free Europe unitedly marshals its strength can it effectively safeguard, even with our help, its spiritual and cultural treasures.

● Conceiving the defense of freedom, like freedom itself, to be one and indivisible, we hold all continents and peoples in equal regard and honor. We reject any insinuation that one race or another, one people or another, is in any sense inferior or expendable.

● Respecting the United Nations as the living sign of all people's hope for peace, we shall strive to make it not merely an eloquent symbol but an effective force. And in our quest of honorable peace, we shall neither compromise, nor tire, nor ever cease.

Mink Makes Social Whirl Comeback

The much-maligned mink—a major Republican campaign issue in 1952—has made a dramatic comeback into Republican Washington.

Here are the details, as reported by the Washington Star society page's story on the inauguration:

"Mrs. Eisenhower . . . wore a mink coat . . .

"Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, strikingly pretty in a . . . mink jacket . . .

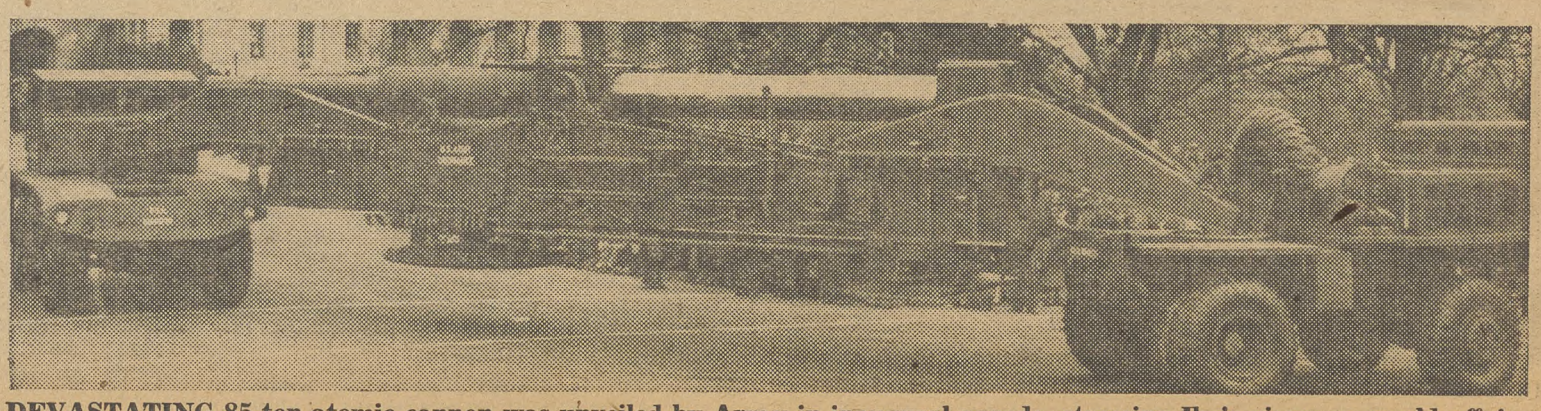
"Mrs. Taft . . . was wearing a mink coat.

"Mrs. Margaret Chase Smith, the Senate's only woman member . . . wore a short mink jacket . . .

"Mrs. John Foster Dulles, wife of the Secretary of State, wore a mink coat.

"Mrs. Charles E. Wilson, wife of the Secretary of Defense-designate, also wore mink . . .

"Most of the women in the (diplomatic) corps, as well as many in the crowd, were warmly garbed in either mink or Persian lamb."



DEVASTATING 85-ton atomic cannon was unveiled by Army in inaugural parade, stressing Ike's views on world affairs.

Rent Boost Drive Fought By N.Y. CIO

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council has warned against relaxation of that state's rent control law, charging such action would create "a social and economic calamity."

At a recent two-day legislative conference in Albany, attended by 70 top CIO leaders representing a million members, the New York CIO warned dropping controls on residential housing would "put hundreds of thousands of families at the mercy of profiteering landlords."

CIO Pres. Louis Hollander also urged retention of controls on New York City business rentals. Dropping of controls, he said, "would hit thousands of small business firms, the backbone of the state's economy . . . and would represent a completely unwarranted bonus to landlords at the price of destroying many businesses and thousands of jobs they provide."

New York State rent control law expires on June 30 unless renewed by the Legislature.

IN OTHER ACTIONS, the New York CIO called for a full investigation of the State's judicial system. Hollander expressed hope the probe will bring "not just minor repairs but a major overhauling of the entire system from the magistrates to the highest court."

He asserted that "some candidates for the judiciary are bought and sold." "We must," Hollander said, "act forcefully on the basis of a complete and searching investigation to restore the kind of judiciary which will inspire the full respect and confidence of the people."

Demands for upward adjustment of unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and other social insurance programs, also featured the CIO legislative program. The delegates called for strengthened civil rights laws and permanent voter registration.

IN THE FIELD of unemployment insurance, the meeting called for an increase of benefits to $35 a week, plus an extra $4 for each dependent up to a limit of three. It urged benefits be paid for a maximum of 36 weeks and that disqualification red tape be slashed.

The changes, the meeting said, would "restore sound insurance principles to the financing of unemployment insurance and increase the protection which the program affords individual workers and the economy of the state."

It proposed increases of workmen's compensation benefits to $40 per week with the same dependency benefits proposed in unemployment insurance law. The CIO also called for expanded rehabilitation program on a permanent basis.

Humphrey Named By Stockholder In Coal Mine Suit

SEC. OF THE Treasury Humphrey got something besides Senate confirmation to his post in the Eisenhower Cabinet last week.

He and two others were charged with "wrongfully" dominating the management of the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co. in a stockholder's suit filed in Pittsburgh by Abram J. Berkowitz, of Brookline, Mass. Until his appointment to the cabinet, Humphrey was chairman of the boards of both the coal company and the M. A. Hanna Co., Cleveland.

Berkowitz charged him with dominating the coal firm in the interests of the Hanna Co. Named with him were Pres. George H. Love of Pittsburgh Consolidation and R. L. Ireland, Cleveland, Hanna vice president and chairman of the Pittsburgh Consolidation executive board.

Thanks For Smokes, Veterans Tell CIO

Thanks for the free smokes, a project of the Michigan CIO Council to help hospitalized veterans, continue to flow into that council.

The project, which began in 1941, is financed by contributions from local unions and councils.

Typical of the thank-you letters was the following from the VA Hospital, Iron Mountain:

"On behalf of the hospitalized veterans, we extend our thanks and appreciation to the members of your organization for this generous gift, and we wish to assure you that this holiday season was made brighter because of it."

Magnuson Beat GOP Tide To Become Second CIOer In 83rd Congress

EX-PRES. TRUMAN is reported to have jokingly said that he was planning, upon leaving the White House last week, to change his name to Magnuson, move to the state of Washington and run for the Senate.

His quip referred to the election last Nov. 4 of Don Magnuson, veteran CIO Newspaper Guild member, as the state's representative-at-large, as well as to the better-known career of Washington's senior senator, Warren G. Magnuson. Both are Democrats, but are not relatives.

One of the Evergreen State's top newspapermen, Don Magnuson scored one of the nation's big political upsets in winning election. Although voters in each of Washington's six congressional districts sent a Republican to Congress, he won his statewide seat by campaigning strongly on the Democratic platform, including repeal of Taft-Hartley.

The man he defeated was a seasoned veteran of Republican politics—Albert F. Canwell. He was widely known throughout as former chairman of the state un-American activities committee.

On the other hand, 1952 was Magunson's first year in politics. The first time he ever ran for public office was when he filed in the primary last July and won an easy victory over six other Democratic candidates.

He spent only $600 in the primary and the total cost of his November election was under $6000. These expenditures were considerably under those of most of the other representatives from Washington, although his campaign had to extend over the entire state while the others worked within limited congressional districts.

NEVERTHELESS he piled up over 515,000 votes to eke out a 10,000-vote victory despite the general GOP trend. Gov. Stevenson, in contrast, lost the state by 80,000.

Magunson, who calls himself a Fair Deal liberal, last week paid tribute to CIO-PAC for its part in bringing about his victory. He said the help given him by Sec. Harold Slater and other officers of the Washington State CIO Council had been "very effective."

Magnuson's own compaign was really a family affair. Resigning from his post as general assignment reporter with the Seattle Times, he stumped the state with his wife and their four children, Craig 16, Terry 13, Joel 6 and Mary 5.

Craig, a young mountaineer, stoutly climbed Washington's peaks in his father's behalf and was the reason why "Elect Magunson" signs were found atop some of the state's highest crags. The other children actively distributed campaign leaflets.

HIS WIFE, the former June Von der Hellen, was his general assistant. She, too, is a former Seattle Times reporter and, like her husband, belonged to the CIO as a member of the Newspaper Guild.

A graduate of the Univ. of Washington in 1931, Magnuson won many newspaper awards, including a special $100 Heywood Broun Award from the ANG-CIO in 1948.

Racial Barriers Cracked At Omaha Education Meet

THE FIRST inter-racial union education conference in Nebraska was staged in Omaha's Hill Hotel by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Sponsoring it were the Iowa, Nebraska and Omaha CIO councils. Attending were about 100 delegates from locals of the Packinghouse Workers, Steel Workers, Auto Workers, Brewery Workers, Clothing Workers, Transport Workers, Textile Workers and Rubber Workers, and the three councils.

Labor's role in political action and in international affairs bulked large during the two days of classroom lectures and workshop discussions. The election results were analyzed and future union political activities were outlined.

Sessions on labor's international role were helped by Moshe Baram, head of Histadrut, the Israel federation, in the Jerusalem district.

The "commencement" speaker was Hew Roberts, professor of adult education at the Univ. of Iowa. He pointed out that both the United Nations and the UNESCO are being attacked by the same people who are attacking the public schools.

THE FACULTY for the school, in addition to Baram, included George Guernsey, associate director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research in charge of education; Ben Segal, associate director of education; Esther Murray, of the CIO Political Action Committee; Brownie Lee Jones, of the American Labor Education Service; Joe Glazer, URW education director; Hi Kornbluh, of the UPWA; Sec.-Treas., Ken Everhart of the Iowa CIO Council; Intl. Rep. Robert Johnson, UAW-CIO, and Cliff Tilton, of the URW.

Ship Workers Win Approval Of 20c Hike

WHEN THE CIO Shipbuilders started negotiating with the Bethlehem Steel Co. for members in eight East Coast shipyards back in December 1951, they figured they were in for a tough time.

But they didn't figure they wouldn't get their raises until the middle of January 1953.

However, that's the case. The Wage Stabilization Commission on Jan. 19 approved pay boosts of 20c an hour for mechanics and 10% for other workers, and made them retroactive to Apr. 14, 1952, when the previous contract expired. The settlement was reached on Aug. 27, 1952.

IUMSWA Pres. John J. Grogan said approval means immediate increases for 31,000 members and eventual boosts for 30,000 other members employed by 50 smaller firms which have asked authority to follow Bethlehem's lead as they have in the past. He estimated the value of the settlement at $15 million a year.

Under the new schedule, first-class mechanics get $1.80 to $2 an hour, handymen $1.56 to $1.72, and laborers $1.36 to $1.49.

Protest To The Russians—

...Then The Peep-Hole Slammed Shut On 16th St.

THE SOVIET Embassy in Washington had some unwelcome callers one day last week—about 50 members of Jewish labor, fraternal and social organizations who wanted to protest against the surge of anti-Semitism in Soviet Russia and its satellites.

They decided not to picket when police informed them of the District of Columbia ordinance prohibiting such action within 500 feet of an embassy. They knew they were not going to be admitted to the presence of Ambassador Georgi N. Zarubin, because he had rejected their telegraphed request for a meeting.

So a small group headed up the circular driveway to the closed doors of the white stone building on 16th St., less than a block from the Statler Hotel where the Republicans were still celebrating the inauguration of Gen. Eisenhower. William Wolpert, executive secretary of the United Hebrew Trades, New York, rang the bell. A peep-hole opened.

"I have a message for his excellency, the Ambassador," Wolpert said politely.

"You were told once before that you would not be received," came a voice from inside. The peep-hole slammed shut.

Wolpert stuck the message—one of protest—in the metal guard protecting the knob. The group walked back to the street and joined the rest of the protesters, who were organized by the Jewish Labor Committee, and headed for the Capitol. There, in the Senate caucus room, they conferred later with a group of senators and representatives.

The protest likened the persecution of Jews under the Soviet to that by the Nazis under Hitler.

"We accuse the Stalin regime," it said, "of a deliberate plan to complete that destruction which Hitler began. Where Hitler drove the Jews to destruction in Treblinka and Auschwitz, it is now our fear that the Soviet government will drive millions into the slave camps in the wastes of Siberia.

"We are deeply disturbed and call the attention of the world to the tragedy of people in condemnation . . .

"We are certain that the masses within these countries (behind the Iron Curtain) themselves condemn these atrocities and genocide. Our condemnation is directed to the government and the regime, and in our name, as well as in the name of those who are enslaved, we appeal for the lifting of the curtain which hangs over this giant Soviet factory of lies, libels and degradation of human dignity."

The protest demanded an end of calumnies against the Jews, the halting of their deportations to Siberia, an investigation by the United Nations, and freedom to emigrate for those who want to leave Russia or a satellite.

Members of CIO and AFL unions were among those protesting.

Terror Grows

Terrorism against Jews in Russia and the satellite states continued last week on a scale that sent hundreds of additional refugees to safety in western Europe.

In East Germany, a pitiful 2800 Jews who survived Nazi concentration camps were visited by flying squadrons of Communist police. Their papers and identity cards were seized and they were ordered to stay close to home on the ground they had been aided by the American Joint Distribution Committee, branded a spy outfit by the reds.

In Hungary, Dr. Lajos Stoeckler, head of the Budapest Jewish community and administrator of AJDC funds in the country, was arrested.

More Protests

Several prominent Americans who have been active in urging clemency for Ethel and Julius Rosenberg, the condemned atomic spies, oppose with equal vigor the persecution of the Jews in Russia and other Communist states.

"It goes without saying that the perversion of justice which manifests itself in all the official trials staged by the Russian government . . . deserves unconditional condemnation," replied Dr. Albert Einstein to a query from the New Leader, New York liberal magazine.

Dr. Harold C. Urey, who helped make the first atom bomb, told the magazine that the Rosenberg case "fades to complete insignificance compared to the Prague trial, the attacks on the nine doctors, and the imminent anti-Semitism in the USSR."

IWA Asks 22.5c Boost In Northwest Pay Talks

THE CIO Woodworkers, at a wage policy conference in Portland, Ore., voted last week to ask a pay increase of 22.5c an hour and a six-hour day with pay for eight hours from some 400 employers in five Pacific Northwest states.

The demands are part of the union's plan to secure an adequate annual income for its members, explained Pres. A. F. Hartung. Many loggers work as long as 14 hours a day, including unpaid travel time, during part of the year, he said, but have no work at all in winter. Unless they get more pay for shorter hours, he claimed, they cannot earn enough in a year to maintain themselves and their families.

The union's proposal would make a new rate of $3.025 an hour, with 22.5c applied on an hourly basis to all piece workers.

The IWA conference also voted to ask for a revision of paid vacation clauses in present agreements. They now yield one week after one year and two weeks after three years, based on the number of hours worked. The union proposes to get the same schedule on the basis of seniority, and to add provisos for three days after six months, four days after nine months, and three weeks after five year—all based on seniority.

Contracts expire Apr. 1. Negotiations are due to begin about the middle of February.

On the East Coast, the IWA filed an unfair labor practice charge in the Baltimore office of the National Labor Relations Board against a lumber firm at Waverly, Va., owned by State Sen. Garland Gray of Virginia. Gray closed his plant six days after the union won an NLRB representation election by a vote of 99 to 8.

Auto Union's Growth Told

THE NET WORTH of the CIO Auto Workers increased 50% in the year ended Nov. 30, 1952, the six-month report of Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey to the international executive board revealed.

The union, Mazey reported, is "now in the best financial condition in its history."

Its net worth increased from $9,099,187 on Nov. 30, 1951, to $13,625,986 last Nov. 30, the report showed. Liquid assets in the same period rose from $5,950,551 to $10,342,132.

The international union strike fund, which stood at $4,686,914 on Nov. 30, 1951, grew to $7,091,724 a year later, Mazey reported. In December, he added, 1,346,140 members paid dues, more than in any other month.

It Happened In Bessemer—

Jailbirds Refused To Scab-And City Workers Win Walkout

"It's bad enough to be a prisoner—but we ain't gonna scab on nobody."

That's what the men in the Bessemer, Ala., jail said when the town fathers tried to get them to haul garbage during the first strike of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee in Alabama.

This unexpected help, backstopping the full support of the CIO unions and regional office and the Steelworkers and the Miners in the area, spelled victory after three days on the picket line for the city's street, sanitation, water and cemetery workers, members of GCEOC Local 1411.

The walkout ended on the basis of a signed contract—the first the GCEOC has won in the State—that met all the workers' demands and included the check-off.

LOCAL 1411 was organized in November, largely through the efforts of Van Jones, USA-CIO representative in the area and chairman of the Political Action Committee of the Bessemer CIO Council.

Twice during December the local wrote Mayor Jap Bryant to ask a conference. Neither time did he reply. Other efforts were made to set up a meeting, but came to nothing.

On Jan. 12 the workers voted to strike. Two days later they walked out and manned picket lines at various city installations.

The next day, the City Commission passed a no strike-no picketing ordinance. It provided that if the strikers did not go back to work they would be fired, and that if they kept on picketing they'd be given six months in jail.

CIO State Dir. Carey Haigler, who also is a member of the GCEOC executive board, heard about the ordinance in his office in nearby Birmingham and hurried over to join the picket line. He and Jones notified Bryant they were marching with the strikers and invited him to test the new law, but Police Commissioner J. B. Parsons refused to make any arrests.

THE EFFORT to make prisoners move garbage came when some merchants complained it constituted a fire hazard. They didn't think it was quite as much of a peril when the city workers threatened to picket them too.

A meeting was set up and on Jan. 17 City Commissioners Raymond Parons and Herman Thompson signed the peace pact.

Jones declared that never in the past had Bessemer labor rallied in support of a group of strikers as it had for the City Workers. USA-CIO and UMW leaders and Sec.-Treas. S. P. Robinson of the local CIO Council issued statements of support and walked picket lines.

"Their help was invaluable," declared Jom Battles, GCEOC staff representative in Alabama, "and cannot be over-emphasized."

FIRST STRIKE of CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee in Alabama was won by these members of Bessemer City Employees Local 1411 despite threats of jail for picketing. Local CIO, Steelworkers and Miners gave full support; so did prisoners in city jail, who indignantly refused to scab.

Big Illinois CIO Convention Joins T-H Drive

By BOB BOLLARD

THE "MOST outstanding convention" of the 330,000-member Illinois CIO Council was held last week in Peoria, with 543 delegates in attendance.

Focus of the three-day session was on Taft-Hartley, the Washington and Illinois legislative scenes and political action. Chief speakers were Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) and CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

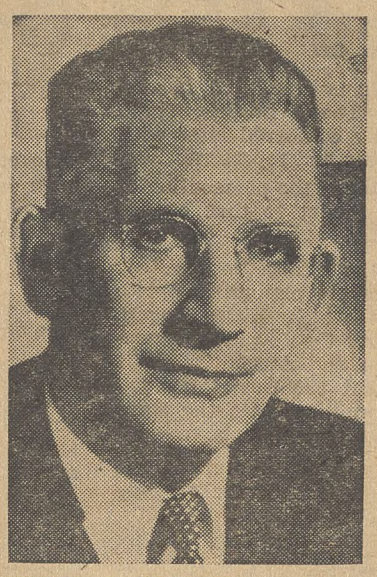
Douglas proposed five ways to improve Taft-Hartley through amendments and the convention unanimously adopted a resolution pledging "to seek the ultimate repeal" of the law.

Labeling the present national emergency provision of T-H "not fair and not effective," Douglas suggested a new method, such as proposed by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.). The Morse proposal would allow public seizue of an industry for at least 30 days during which the President could make changes in wages and hours but not in working conditions and the union shop.

"THE PRESENT law's 80-day cooling-off period is rigged against labor," Douglas said, "because employes are forced to work under conditions to which they object strenuously enough to call a strike."

Other Douglas proposals would:

- Permit strikers to vote in collective bargaining elections in a strike-bound plant.
- Ease clauses prohibiting secondary boycotts.
- Extend the non-Communist oath to employers and include a non-Fascist oath.
- Require employer associations to file financial statements similar to those required from unions.



KEEP A CLOSE watch on Pres. Eisenhower but "give him a chance to make good," Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) told big Illinois CIO convention.

In his keynote speech, Illinois CIO Pres. Joseph Germano, director of USA-CIO Dist. 31, discussed CIO's role in the 1952 elections.

"We make no apologies for our activity on the political front," he said. "We carried most of those precincts where CIO members live and worked in on election day."

In a challenge to Republicans in control of Congress and the Illinois State House, Germano said: "I challenge them to make it a necessity for us to support them in the next election. If they do the kind of a job that they can do, and pass legislation for all the people, I'll be out supporting the Republican party in the next election."

"OUR JOB is not going to be an easy one in the next four years," he continued, "but let's remember that we have just changed Administrations and not form of government—and nobody is going to take away our basic rights."

His caution was seconded by Sen. Douglas, who said "we should give him (Pres. Eisenhower) a chance to make good." But, Douglas added, the Administration should be watched with a careful eye so that "when we think they are grieviously wrong, we should criticize."

Darrell Smith, assistant director of National PAC, described Illinois PAC activity "as one of the most effective neighborhood organizations in the entire country." He called upon liberals to "do what we can do to encourage young, aggressive, tolerant citizens to get interested in politics and build to revive the Roosevelt-Truman philosophy" in the Democratic party.

A SPECIAL memorial session for the late Philip Murray, at which recordings of the Atlantic City convention memorial were heard, marked one afternoon's session.

On the state legislative front, the delegates demanded improvements in the state workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation laws and called for reapportionment of the state's senatorial districts.

Ellsworth Smith, secretary of the Chicago CIO and of the state Community Services Committee, called the Illinois CSC activities, "second to none in the entire country."

Haywood Sees 'Hell To Pay' If Bargaining Is Curbed

BIG BUSINESS lobbyists, intent on scrapping national bargaining, last week had a stern warning from CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

"Let them try to scrap it and there will be hell to pay," he told the Illinois CIO convention in Peoria. "The time has come when the Kings of Industry must learn and understand that they are servants of the people."

Haywood recalled that "I was living right here in Peoria when Phil Murray called me to come to Pittsburgh to help in the giant crusade to organize the steel industry."

In an hour-long speech, in which he paid touching tribute to the late president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, Haywood reviewed the 17-year record of gains of the CIO.

"Our union has brought new progress and more achievement and a higher standard of living to the people of this country than any other organization I know of. And the best way to secure our unions, to maintain our gains and standard of living is to build our unions, expand them and strengthen them in every village and hamlet of this country," he said.

Report To Ike Urges U. S. Enforce Bias Ban In Defense Contracts

A REPORT calling for steps to end discrimination by government contractors was placed on the desk of Pres. Eisenhower last week. It was left there by outgoing Pres. Truman the day before he left office.

Prepared by the President's Committee on Government Contract Compliance, the report accused nearly all federal agencies of failing to enforce the requirement in practically all government contracts that the contractor will not discriminate in employment because of color, religion or national origin.

Such a provision has been required since 1943 in all government contracts for more than $1000. The committee found, however, that the non-discrimination clause has been "almost forgotten, dead and buried."

Of 28 agencies surveyed, only two were found by the committee to "have made more than a token effort" to require compliance. It said that "in many cases even the will has been absent to require contractors to meet their obligations under it."

GOVERNMENT procurement in the last fiscal year involved more than six million purchase transactions totalling more than $41 billion.

"If every industrial and commercial firm doing business with the federal government lived up to the letter of the non-discrimination clause in its contracts," the committee said, "bias in employment would be a problem of the past. Government contracting is so far-reaching and widespread that millions of Americans in every trade and occupation are brought within the scope of the provision."

THE COMMITTEE deplored discrimination as wasteful and expensive for all segments of the nation's economy and said bias "is particularly damaging at a time when America has great need for the skills and talents of all its citizens."

"Men under the obligation to bear arms and to serve in defense of their country should have the right to qualify through merit for the economic benefits from its production lines, business offices and professional opportunities," the report said.

The committee made 22 recommendations for administrative, legislative and educational steps to bring about compliance. It said better enforcement would aid defense production "by promoting the most effective use" of the nation's manpower.

THE LABOR Dept., it said, should be designated to receive and investigate complaints of violations and be made responsible for preliminary efforts at conciliation, mediation and persuasion to win compliance. If it failed, the case would be referred for enforcement to the agency which granted the contract.

It proposed that enforcement be obtained "through termination of contract, injunction or disqualification from future contracting." The committee recommended that the contract clause be strengthened.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who served as a member of the 10-member group, joined in signing the report. George L-P Weaver, assistant to the CIO secretary-treasurer, testified in behalf of CIO at the hearings.

CIOer In Korea Gets Second Award

Another decoration was bestowed on a Detroit member of the CIO Communications Workers who comes from a virtually all-CIO family.

He is Capt. Joseph J. Allen, who won his second oak leaf cluster for outstanding performance of duties in flights over enemy territory in Korea.

Capt. Allen is a liaison pilot and spotter for the 145th Artillery Battalion. His two brothers and a sister are also members of Local 4000 of the CWA-CIO.

'Old' BLS Index Bows Out With A Slight Decline

THE "OLD" consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics made its exit last week with a small but welcome drop from the previous reading.

Showing the costs of goods and services on Dec. 15, the figure declined six-tenths of a point, or about three-tenths of one percent—from 191.6 to 191.0—from the level of Nov. 15.

The drop made the average for the year 190.6, an increase of about 2.5% from the 1951 average of 185.9.

The major decline in the articles and services that make up the market basket was in food, which dropped one percent. This put food one percent below the level of Dec. 15, 1951, but still left it 13.2% above the pre-Korean figure.

The BLS is now using its new index, which reflects the prices of a different assortment of goods and services than the old. The communities in which the articles are priced also have been changed, and now include smaller cities as well as large industrial centers. The first new figure, showing prices on Jan. 15, 1953, will be issued in February.

Here are the cumulative figures for the "old" BLS Index:

Period	Index
1939 monthly average	99.4
1943 monthly average	123.6
1944 monthly average	125.5
1945 monthly average	128.4
1946 monthly average	139.3
1949 monthly average	169.1
1950 monthly average	171.2
1951 monthly average	185.9
1952 monthly average	190.6

Period		Index
1950:	June 15	170.2
1951:	June 15	185.5

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THREE GATHERINGS were held during the last week, which the writer attended, that involved a lot of sentiment and future action for and in our movement.

I attended a memorial meeting in honor of our beloved and departed leader, Philip Murray, in his home town in Pittsburgh, where those who had worked and lived with him and knew him intimately had gathered together in tribute to this great departed CIO. Philip Murray lived all that Pittsburgh and its area typify in the movement today. Throughout his career, he never forgot the people he came from.

Every speaker dealt with that phase of Phil Murray's life—his visits to miners on week ends, or to a small gathering of steel workers, chatting with them and living their problems, their hopes and dreams for future years.

Every worker in the Pittsburgh area knows the gains he has received through the overcoming of industrial tyranny and armed coal and iron police. And every one of them knows that it was through the blessing of a strong trade union movement that he and his fellow workers have attained greater security for themselves and their families.

"More carpets on the floor, more pictures on the wall, more music in the home"—these aims were expressed in higher wages, shorter hours, vacations and holidays with pay, and the great human accomplishment of pensions from industry and hospitalization and insurance for the worker and his family, plus the elimination of the many evils that prevailed prior to unionization.

Speakers, beside the writer, were Chick Federoff, old buddy of Phil's and our regional director in Pittsburgh; Jim Thimmes, CIO Steelworkers' vice-president who also read a message from Steelworkers' Acting Pres. David J. McDonald, in California attending NAACP affair on behalf of Phil; and that gallant champion of labor who stood with workers in their crises in darkest hours, and Phil's close friend, Father Charles Owen Rice.

It was a solemn and impressive occasion, demonstrating the profound respect the common people of Pittsburgh had for Pres. Murray. We were pleased and proud to see among those in attendance official representatives of the Mine Workers, American Federation of Labor, and the Railroad Brotherhoods.

★

LEFT PITTSBURGH, the writer proceeded to one of his old stamping grounds, Peoria, Ill., to attend the convention of the Illinois State CIO Council, where he met old associates, miners and others, and addressed the gathering. The officers of the State CIO are doing a remarkable job. Joe Germano, of Steel, is president, and Maurice McElligott, of Amalgamated, is secretary-treasurer; they are ably supported by their associated officers.

This convention was the largest Illinois CIO has ever held. Throughout the proceedings, the spirit of Philip Murray was felt everywhere.

My comments on keeping the movement united in support of Pres. Walter Reuther and in adherence to CIO policies were received with enthusiasm. The delegates responded to my call to build stronger all our CIO unions, to continue—and make even stronger—the bond among them, to help one another in every way so that we might meet the challenge of the times.

Leaving Illinois, the writer journeyed to Milwaukee, Wis., where he met with the heads of our unions there. We broke bread together and discussed the question of unifying the total force of our State and local councils and the necessity of laying out plans for fullest cooperation among our unions in organizing drives and other matters of interest to CIO and its membership in that great State.

THE CIO REGIONAL office at Charleston, W. Va., reports that in an election at the Adams Bakery, Portsmouth, O., the workers favored the CIO Retail & Wholesale Union by a vote of 42 to 4 for no union. This campaign was conducted by Intl. Rep. Edgar Johnson.

Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn reports that in a representation election at Globe Wireless, Inc., San Francisco, Calif., the workers picked the CIO Communications Workers over the American Communications Association (Independent) by the following vote by 111 employes in New York, San Francisco and the Hawaiian Islands: CWA-CIO 66, ACA 15, no union 18, challenged 1 and void 1. CWA Rep. Bucky Bowen directed the San Francisco phase of the campaign.

CWA-CIO now looks confidently forward to the pending election involving employes of McKay Radio, All-American Cable, and Commercial Radio.

Sec. Treas. John C. Lawson of the CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers reports that in a representation election at the Muskegon, Mich., distribution plant of the Huron Portland Cement Co., the workers voted for CIO unanimously. Intl. Rep. Robert Kurtz organized this group.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that the CIO Rubber Workers won a representation election at the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Corp. (warehouse) at Elizabeth, N. J., by the following vote: eligible 46, CIO 45, AFL 1. URW Rep. John Baldante conducted this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the General Metalsware Co., Portland, Ore., by a vote of 34 to 18 for the AFL. The CIO regional office assisted the Steelworkers in this drive.

Textile Union Wins 5c Raise For 16,000 Yarn Workers

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week won an average 5c hourly increase for 16,000 members.

The increase is provided in a two-year contract with the American Viscose Corp., the nation's largest producer of synthetic yarn.

The contract provides a flat 5c an hour raise for non-incentive workers, and an increase of 3c an hour in the base rates of incentive workers. The latter will raise average hourly earnings by more than 4c, TWUA said. The pact has wage reopenings Nov. 30, 1953, and May 31, 1954.

The union's American Viscose Advisory Council recommended acceptances of the terms to locals in Marcus Hook, Meadville and Lewistown, Pa.; Parkersburg and Nitro, W. Va., and Roanoke and Front Royal, Va.

In another development in the textile industry, the policy committee of the TWUA's woolen and worsted conference met in New York City last week to consider the American Woolen Co.'s notification that it wants to reopen negotiations and cut wages under two-year contract.

"SINCE ALL the other companies except American Woolen recognize that lower wages would not be a solution to the problems they face, I do not see how American Woolen can justify its demand for a wage cut," TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve told the committee.

Following the meeting the committee announced that all other major employers in the field and all but a handful of smaller ones have assured the union of their satisfaction with existing contracts despite the industry's depressed condition.

The committee found that the mills in filing notices of cancellation—if the contracts expire this year—or of wage reopening—if the agreements run another year—frankly said they were merely "protecting themselves" against the possibility that American Woolen would succeed in driving down wages.

A number of other large mills, including three in Passaic, N. J., whose contracts expire Mar. 15, have notified TWUA that they want to renew their contracts without any pay cuts. These mills—Botany, Forstmann and Gera—employ more than 10,000 workers.

Tobin Ups Wage Base In Textiles

A SERIES of new minimum wage orders was issued last week by retiring Sec. of Labor Tobin, as he left office.

The orders affect workers in plants having government contracts above $10,000 and are provided for under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

Tobin ordered a $1 hourly minimum rate, effective Feb. 21, in the cotton and rayon mills, where the previous wage floor had been 87c per hour. Ten Georgia textile manufacturers, whose average wage is the lowest in the country, immediately filed suit in Atlanta, Ga., to block the order.

THE SUIT was filed under the Fulbright amendment to the 1952 Defense Production Act, which CIO had opposed. It will be the first legal test of this statute.

Northern textile manufacturers generally pay the $1 minimum, but 16% of the employes of southern manufacturers now get less than $1.

Tobin also proposed a 15c increase in minimums in the woolen and worsted industry, setting the new rate at $1.20. CIO Textile Workers, who had urged a $1.26 rate, were "disappointed," Pres. Emil Rieve said.

THE RETIRING secretary also proposed a new minimum of $1.11 an hour in the paper and pulp industry, where minimums now stand at 75c. CIO Paperworkers, who had urged a higher minimum, said they expected no industry opposition to the proposed order. Exempt in this industry were producers of paper bags.

In the metal business furniture industry, Tobin proposed upping the minimums from 75c to $1.10 an hour.

WSB Appeal Yields $215,000 To TWUA

An appeal from a Wage Stabilization Board ruling has won more than $215,000 in back pay for some 15,000 members of the CIO Textile Workers in the dyeing, printing and finishing trade in the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area.

IUE Asks Westinghouse For Better Pension Deal

THE CIO Electrical Workers have presented proposed changes to better pension and insurance sections of the contract to the Westinghouse Corp.

Management has agreed to study the improvements and meet with the IUE-CIO Westinghouse Negotiating Committee later in January.

Proposed by the union was an increase in pension benefits to provide $2 a month for each year of service up to 30 years, plus primary social security benefits.

The IUE wants pension benefits at 65 for workers with a minimum of 10 years service, with improvements extended to workers already pensioned.

The insurance proposals would increase sickness and accident coverage to $42.50 a week for 26 weeks, plus a number of fringe increases. The IUE wants the health and welfare coverage extended to pensioners, dependents of female workers and employes on leave of absence for union business.

Joining the Westinghouse negotiating committee in submitting the proposal were IUE General Counsel Benjamin Sigal and Joe Swire, IUE-CIO pension department director.

Lawmaker Is Indicted For Oil Leases

REP. McMILLAN (D. S.C.), Dixiecrat former chairman of the House District of Columbia Committee, has been indicted by a federal grand jury on a charge that he illegally leased government oil lands.

According to the indictment prepared by the Justice Dept., McMillan in 1950 executed a three-year lease on approximately 1480 acres in Duchesne County, Utah, with the Interior Dept. A federal law forbids members of congress from entering into contracts with the U. S.

McMillan told reporters that he bought the oil rights to the land at a cost of 50c an acre. The Interior Dept. cancelled his lease late last year when it found he was a member of Congress.

McMillan, who is a graduate of the Univ. of South Carolina Law School, said he could find no basis for the theory that a congressman can't take a noncompetitive bid for oil rights. The grand jury, however, returned its indictment just two hours after he testified before it.

The offense charged is a misdemeanor and is punishable by a maximum fine of $3000. The law was enacted to prevent government agencies from being exposed to political pressures from congressmen wanting government contracts.

ACW Wins N. Y. Strike

UNION recognition and a standard market agreement were won by 350 members of CIO Clothing Workers Local 239 in a two weeks' strike at the Whitestone and Jamaica, N. Y., plants of the Kent Stores, Inc.

The company operates a large cleaning and dyeing chain.

Jack Cohen, manager of Local 239, said the agreement the strikers ratified last week includes a 40-hour week, time and a half for overtime, paid holidays and vacations, social welfare insurance and free medical service under the union plan.

5 Leaders To Get Murray Awards

Five public figures and organizations will receive Philip Murray Awards at the annual dinner of the National CIO Community Services Committee on Feb. 2.

CSC Dir. Leo Perlis said reservations for the dinner, to be held Feb. 2 at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, can be obtained from the Community Services Committee.

The awards, in honor of the late CIO president, will be presented "as a token of the everlasting gratitude of the American working people for an outstanding contribution to their health and welfare," Perlis said.

T-H Debate Is Coming Up Fast— Here Are Key Committee Chairmen

By MILTON PLUMB

SEN. SMITH
New chairman of Senate Labor Committee

1-26

Sen. Smith

Senate Labor Committee Chairman

SEN. H. ALEXANDER SMITH (R. N.J.), chairman of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, regards himself as a "middle of the roader" on labor-management issues.

He believes that "the two great problems facing the Eisenhower Administration are peace on the world front and peace in management and labor relations."

Smith, who has served in the Senate since 1944, has consistently told CIO representatives in New Jersey that he is "a friend of the working man" and that he is against restrictive labor legislation. This did not prevent him, however, from voting for Taft-Hartley and to over-ride the presidential veto.

In other key labor votes, he has generally sided with Sen. Taft (R. O.), a close personal friend. Smith's record includes support of amendments to remove employers from liability under the Walsh-Healey, Davis-Bacon and Fair Labor Standards Acts; to take 250,000 workers out from under the protection of the wage-hour laws, and to take 750,000 workers from under Social Security.

Today, however, in his new role as chairman, he is calling for "teamwork" and "maturity in our industrial relations."

Urged Changes In T-H

And during his campaign for re-election last November, Smith urged several changes in Taft-Hartley to revise some anti-labor sections and make it fairer to unions. Among them were the lifting of the ban against strikers voting in union representation elections.

He also recommended reducing the period for joining a union from 30 days to 7 days in union shop contracts, and a redefinition of the term "foreman" to make sure that it excluded from union membership only employes who were an integral part of management. He defended, however, the ban on closed shops and the use of 80-day injunctions to delay strikes in national emergency disputes.

Smith has said that he favors the union shop as a "middle way" between the open and closed shop. He has advocated a profit-sharing system for industry, under which workers would share losses in poor years as well as profits in good periods.

Before the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act was passed in 1932, Smith went on record as opposing "the abuse of injunctions." He since has come to believe that the government should have the power to seek injunctions against strikes or lockouts in national emergency disputes.

Smith has also indicated that he is opposed to filibusters and that he favors some form of FEPC legislation. However, in the showdown on changing the Senate filibuster rule in the opening week of the 83rd Congress, he broke with his New Jersey colleague, Sen. Hendrickson (R.), and supported Taft's move to table the motion.

On foreign affairs, Smith, who is third ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, has more frequently disagreed with Taft. He has favored the Marshall Plan, reciprocal trade and the North Atlantic Treaty.

Smith has been a member of the Senate Labor Committee since 1945. During that time he was regarded as responsive to Taft's influence.

Rep. McConnell

House Labor Committee Chairman

THE NEW REPUBLICAN chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee, Samuel K. McConnell, Jr., is a trained economist with a reputation of having a deep religious conviction against deliberate unfairness to any group.

He has declared himself opposed to "union-busting tactics" and says he wants "a reasonable and human approach" to labor legislation. He advocates "equalizing" the Taft-Hartley Act to make it fair to both labor and management.

McConnell has a conservative background, stemming from a career as an investment banker. His home is in Wynnewood, Pa., a wealthy Philadelphia suburb. Even so, his views may be called "liberal" in contrast with those of the reactionary Dixiecrat, Rep. Barden (D. S.C.), who headed the House labor group in the last Congress.

McConnell supported the Taft-Hartley Act in 1947 and voted to override ex-President Truman's veto. He likewise opposed attempts to repeal the law in 1949, but supported amendments to it. Now he wants a change.

"We are certainly going to make changes in this law," he predicts for the present session. "What I'd like to see is a simple law, as brief as possible and written in language anybody could understand, under which labor and management could get along amicably and settle their own differences as much as possible without government interference."

McConnell advocates giving the President a variety of alternative methods for settling national emergency strikes.

He would retain the injunction powers of Taft-Hartley, perhaps with minor modifications. But he has indicated opposition to government seizure of plants in so-called national emergency disputes. He suggests the law might authorize the President to name a board of inquiry or apply to Congress for remedial legislation.

"No one has yet come up with a sure answer to these big strikes," he acknowledges. "I think we should encourage the participants in these labor-management disputes to try to work out their own problems wherever possible."

Favors More Flexible Law

A more flexible law with a "keep 'em guessing" approach might spur both unions and management to make a greater effort at settlement, McConnell believes.

Last year McConnell sponsored and pushed through Congress the federal mine safety bill providing for strict federal inspection of mines and giving federal inspectors power to order mines closed for violation of safety rules.

"Some folks in my district didn't like it when I took it upon myself, as a Republican, to get the federal mine safety bill through the last Democratic Congress," he has been quoted as saying. "But I figured preventing mine tragedies by stricter inspection was more important than whether people liked me or disliked me."

This independence may reflect itself in his handling of T-H changes. Instead of accepting the proposals of Sen. Taft (R. O.) for "noncontroversial" amendments, McConnell says he doesn't have a fixed idea about the changes he will sponsor.

McConnell has been on the Labor Committee since 1944 when he was elected to Congress.

Taft Takes Driver's Seat For T-H Hearings

SENATE Republican Leader Taft, who gave up the chairmanship of the Senate Labor Committee to accept the top GOP post, last week climbed back in the driver's seat on labor legislation in Congress.

The co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act was named chairman of the Senate Labor subcommittee that will hold hearings on proposed changes in his law. In this post, he will be able to exercise strong veto powers over all amendments he opposes.

Even before Chairman Smith (R. N. J.) of the full Senate Labor Committee announced Taft's appointment to head the subcommittee, Taft had indicated that he would have a dominant voice in shaping congressional labor policies.

The Ohio Republican jumped the gun on Pres. Eisenhower by filing five separate bills proposing a total of 16 amendments to the present law without waiting to get the new President's views on labor legislation. These are expected to be disclosed in his State of the Union message this week.

Although Taft's position in the Senate gives his proposals the appearance of reflecting GOP policy, Taft acknowledged at a press conference that he had not discussed the amendments in detail with Eisenhower before filing his bills. He said he did tell the President, however, that the bills met two objections Eisenhower made to the law during his campaign.

Piddling and Trivial

Most of Taft's amendments are the same ones contained in a Taft bill which passed the Senate in 1949 but died in the House. His new proposals were described as "piddling and trivial" by the CIO Legal Dept., which added that they are "completely inadequate" for making Taft-Hartley acceptable to organized labor.

Taft has suggested that the Senate Labor subcommittee might take his and other suggestions and write its own bill. Smith has expressed opposition to "wide-open" hearings and has not yet set a date for whatever hearings the Senate group will hold. He is reported, however, to be planning to start them about Mar. 1.

In contrast, Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, announced that he will begin lengthy hearings on all phases of Taft-Hartley during the week of Feb. 9. He said his group will go through the entire law "systematically" and that all interested parties would have full opportunity to tell how the act affects them.

"It is the intention of the committee to present to the Congress a full and open record of the overall operations of this controversial legislation," McConnell declared.

Only after the hearings are over, McConnell added, will the committee "endeavor to write a bill containing amendments based on this testimony." He made clear that he intends to give separate and extensive consideration to the T-H injunction barring strikes for 80 days in national emergency disputes.

Injunctions Condemned

McConnell previously had differed with Taft's contention that no change should be made in this provision. All branches of organized labor have bitterly assailed it as working one-sidedly against labor. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther recently pointed out that it actually has provoked many strikes because industry depended on the use of an injunction to prevent a walkout instead of trying to reach a settlement.

In his campaign Eisenhower proposed that the non-Communist oath requirement should also be required from employers. He likewise objected to the T-H provision which prevents strikers replaced during a walkout from voting in NLRB representation elections, branding this a "union-busting" device.

One of Taft's amendments would repeal this section of the law, allowing replaced strikers to vote. Taft emphasized, however, that he does not personally favor this step and was proposing it only as a "concession."

"I still think the original approach was right, but I don't think it is important enough to keep on arguing about it for years," the New York Times quoted him as saying.

Typical Gimmick

Taft's amendment extending the non-Communist oath requirements to employers actually goes beyond this and contains a gimmick greatly broadening its application to unions. Instead of signatures of union officers as at present, the oath would also be required from all members of "policy-forming and governing bodies of the union."

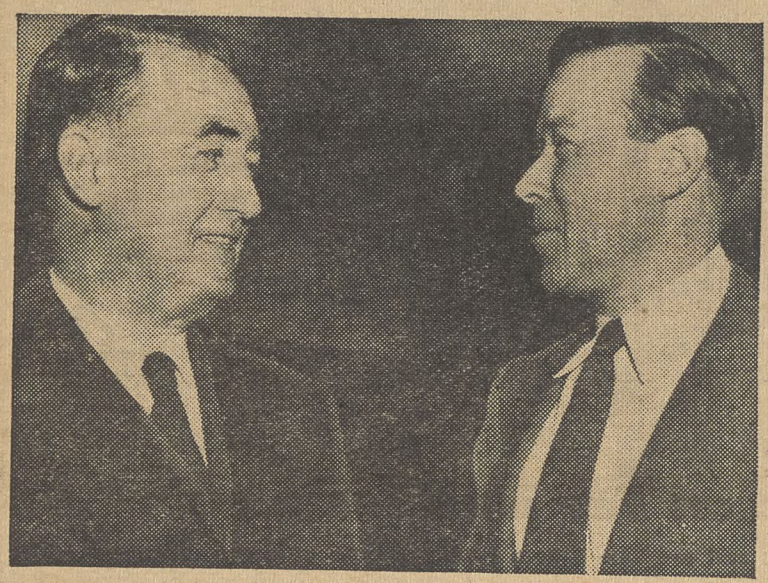
Since under most union constitutions the entire membership is the principal policy-forming and governing body, this provision might be interpreted to require the oath from every member.

Taft's proposal also would expand the oath itself to provide that those taking it do not believe in "seeking by force or violence to deny other persons their rights, under the Constitution of the United States." This apparently is an ambiguous attempt to take into account, without spelling out, the demand of Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) that a non-Fascist oath be written into the act.

Taft admitted that the non-Communist oath requirement has "practically broken down." He added that "the whole subject will have to be gone into deeply" by the Senate Labor subcommittee. In a recent report, the House Un-American Activities Committee condemned the T-H oath requirement as working in practice to aid Communists, and urged its repeal.

Big business organizations, meanwhile, are readying an all-out fight to make the law even more anti-labor than it now is. Over 700 industrialists met at the National Industrial Relations Conference in Cleveland under sponsorship of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and came up with a demand that the anti-trust laws be extended to apply to labor unions.

Summing up developments, the Wall Street Journal said "it's clear enough that Mr. Taft is going to have more to say than anybody about what's done to his law." It also predicted: "The revised law will still be a lot more palatable to management than it will be to union leaders."



CONFER ON LABOR DEPT.—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right) and Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin chat after Washington luncheon on CIO representation in Labor Dept. Reuther said CIO is ready to propose Labor Dept. aide if he "will have responsibility, status and a voice in policy decisions."

Taft Proposals In Digest—

Here are some of the main changes in the Taft-Hartley Act proposed in bills introduced last week by Sen. Taft:

"UNION-BUSTING": Eliminate T-H prohibition against discharged strikers voting in plant elections on which union should represent workers. Lifting this prohibition, as Pres. Eisenhower has suggested, would help, but it would still leave the cards stacked against the union, since NLRB decisions under the Wagner Act also allowed scabs to vote in such cases along with discharged strikers. Another desirable change, but not of major significance, would strike out T-H provision that if a union fails to give notice before striking, the strikers lose their status under the act as employes.

NON-COMMUNIST OATH: Require management officials as well as union officers to file non-Communist affidavits before they could use the NLRB. This also was called for by Pres. Eisenhower during the campaign, and while it may make the provision less of an affront to unions, it is of little practical importance. Taft's proposal, however, also would broaden the union-oath requirement to include all members of "policy-forming and governing bodies."

SECONDARY BOYCOTTS: Eliminate T-H requirement making the NLRB get an injunction from a district court in all secondary boycott and jurisdictional strike cases. This provision is clearly desirable, although it is of most significance to the AFL, since CIO unions are seldom charged with secondary boycotts or jurisdictional strikes.

Another desirable amendment would relax prohibition against secondary strikes or boycotts by permitting workers to refuse to handle work, but it falls far short of adequately liberalizing T-H secondary strike or boycott provisions.

UNION SECURITY: Permit employers to refuse to checkoff fines and assessments, and require only the checkoff of dues. This is clearly undesirable, since it would weaken a basic union security measure.

Taft also would amend the union security provisions to permit unions to seek the discharge of persons expelled from membership as Communists, and would permit union shop contracts in the building and construction industry to require union membership after 7 instead of 30 days. The latter goes part of the way toward meeting the needs of workers in the building trades, but does nothing for other unions in sporadic employment industries, including maritime and others.

NLRB: Enlarge the National Labor Relations Board from five to seven members and provide that board powers can be exercised by any four instead of three members as at present. While enlargement of the board may be desirable in the interests of faster handling of cases, the requirement of four members' participation would prevent the speeding up that might result from more members. Taft said it would speed up GOP "control" of the NLRB.

Taft also wants to separate the office of the general counsel from the board, which would only increase the present divided authority under T-H. In 1949, Taft supported the Thomas-Lesinski proposal to end the separate status of the counsel and make him simply an employe of the board; now he wants to make the counsel overshadow the board in importance.

It's GOP vs. GOP As Congress Feuding Starts

REPUBLICANS in Congress took turns belaboring Pres. Eisenhower—and each other—on policy matters last week even before the new President set his Administration's tone in his first State of the Union message.

The message was due on Feb. 2. Meantime, there were these developments:

1. Chairman Reed (R., N. Y.) of the House Ways and Means Committee, where tax legislation starts, stated flatly that his committee, when it meets on Feb. 16, will approve an 11% income tax cut, effective June 30. Any delay in House passage, he declared, would be "over my dead body."

Speaker Martin, ignoring the funereal implications, promptly announced the House must "do some budget-cutting" before considering lower taxes (as promised by Eisenhower in the campaign). This is a process that takes months. Eisenhower is reported to be thinking along the same lines, but Reed consulted neither him nor Martin. Democrats on the committee indicated they would support Reed.

2. Committees in House and Senate gave Eisenhower a direct slap by refusing him power to reorganize government agencies on the same basis as former Pres. Truman.

The present act, which dies April 1, requires a constitutional majority—218 votes in the House, 49 in the Senate—to kill a specific reorganization plan. Republican-controlled committees, over Administration and Democratic objections, approved bills to let simple majorities—as low as 110 in the House and 25 in the Senate—kill a proposed plan.

3. Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich) of the House Banking Committee, with no guidance formal or informal from the White House, predicted that wage and price controls will end on or before Apr. 30, when the present law expires. A standby law—on which Eisenhower likewise has been silent — would "do more harm than good," Wolcott said, because it would not allow business, industry and agriculture to plan ahead.

Reuther On Radio, TV Twice In Fortnight

CIO PRES. WALTER REUTHER will be heard on radio and television twice in the next two weeks.

On Saturday night, Feb. 7, excerpts from a talk by Reuther before the National Press Club will be heard on the ABC radio network. Reuther's talk will be aired at 6:45 p.m. E.S.T. in the time segment usually filled by Robert R. Nathan, noted economist, who broadcasts for the CIO.

On Sunday, Feb. 15, Pres. Reuther will appear on the CBS television show, "Man of the Week." The program is seen on many CBS TV stations at 3:30 p.m. E.S.T. Reuther will be interviewed by a group of leading Washington newspapermen.

The 'Independent' Voter

During the campaign, the Republicans paid of lot of attention to getting the support of the independent voter.

One Independent whose vote they certainly have not captured is that of the militantly independent Senator from Oregan, Wayne Morse.

Morse, the one Republican in the Senate with a consistently liberal voting record, hopped off the GOP elephant in mid-campaign. He indicated, in no weasel words, that he was fed up with official GOP appeasement of the McCarthy's, and with slippery compaign tactics in general.

When Congress opened, the Republican leadership had decided that the Oregon Senator would be punished—and silenced—for his stubborn belief in his principles of liberalism and good government.

This, as everybody in Washington now knows, was not the smartest or most realistic decision the Republican leadership has ever known. By depriving Senator Morse of his major committee assignments, the GOP has given Wayne Morse the freedom of time and action to represent all the people.

He is, at the moment, something of a Senator-at-large. He is also, without question, following the remarkable footsteps of the late George Norris of Nebraska—another independent who won intense public esteem for his single-handed fight against the special interests.

So we doff our hat to the militant Indepndent from Oregon. And, knowing that the Independent's role is oft a lonely one, we think it would be a fine tribute to a great Senator if a lot of citizens could find the time to send a postcard or note expressing their support. Address Sen. Wayne Morse at the Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

No Sugar-Coating

In expressing the CIO's views on Taft-Hartley, CIO Pres. Reuther pointed out that the CIO amendments were meant to make the law "more workable and more just."

When the proper time comes, in the next month or two, the CIO will present to committees of the Congress its views as to what sort of amendments can make T-H "more workable and more just."

The Congressmen—even the most reactionary of them—would do well to listen, for no group in the country, unfortunately, has had more experience than CIO with the Taft-Hartley Act. Our lessons have been those of bitter experience.

'Back To McKinley'

With all due allowance for the exaggerations of campaign orators, there was something in the Democrats' claim that the Republicans wanted to go back to the days of William McKinley and "dominion over palm and pine" in the 19th Century.

Last week Oliver Bolton, an Ohio Republican whose mama also is in the House, avowed that McKinley's principles "stand out as beacons" from now to eternity. All of which reminds us of Adlai Stevenson's comment about Republicans "who were dragged screaming and hollering into the 20th Century."

In Other Words—

The Lesson For Businessmen

Big businessmen in government still are "humanly illiterate," says A. A. Berle, former assistant secretary of state, in this copyrighted article digested from The Reporter magazine:

By A. A. BERLE

IN THE TWENTY YEARS between the exit of Pres. Hoover and the inauguration of Pres. Eisenhower, American government has come full circle. The new Republican Administration is repeating with surprising fidelity the pattern of Hoover—a government of big business, manned by big business.

Striking as are the similarities, there are deep and fundamental differences. For big business, 1953, is not the same as big business, 1929. Its representative men have grown in a different stand of timber. In Hoover's time they represented property and ownership. Now they represent power and administration.

On the credit side must be counted the fact that the present group have been professional business politicians, though they do not say so. They have had to operate their businesses in the presence of public opinion—and in the framework of an unrecognized but very real government structure.

These men absorbed (though they did not announce) the fact that the government was an essential factor in their own business. They inveighed against "planned economy." But they planned the economics of their own industries whenever they could, and when necessary they invoked government intervention to help them do it.

Pres. Franklin Roosevelt once complained that big business was not bad but was often humanly illiterate. There is no evidence indicating a change in that respect.

THE BIG BUSINESSMEN, though they've been in politics, commonly have not done the political work themselves. They have relied on public relations staffs to write the speeches, set up the press releases and radio programs, and lay out the propaganda lines. These men naturally think primarily not of the public but how best to further general and specific measures and policies serving the financial interests of their companies.

Their outpourings make it clear that big business repeats slogans of a generation ago. The theme song is "individual initiative"—but big business from sulphur to aluminum is more often than not urging or working under a national plan that circumscribes areas of freedom. The foe is "government in business"—though this "government" is the largest customer, sometimes the principal supplier of capital and always the ultimate stabilizer.

Corporation executives have sought security of markets and prices and insurance against risks for their concerns. But when labor and individuals, who were in far more dangerous positions, have sought insurance against unemployment and old age, business has talked the language of laissez faire.

IF AN INDIVIDUAL was benefited by a public measure, sturdy Americanism was being undermined and "creeping socialism" threatened the Republic. But it was merely good business to advocate fair trade laws to allow price-fixing, to attack the enforcement of the anti-trust laws, and to plug for high tariffs preventing foreign competition. Corporate theorists have not yet absorbed the idea that "free enterprise" for General Motors means one thing and free enterprise for Joe Doakes means quite another.

This illiteracy runs through the whole line of corporate propaganda. Individuals, it is said, think too much of "security"—Americans ought to like taking risks, reaping rewards for courage, initiative and so forth. But the corporation never runs an avoidable risk. It will stabilize prices, will adjust production to consumption wherever possible, will invoke the help of the government in time of trouble.

The corporate executive who complains when his labor wants a guaranteed annual wage and retirement pension will demand for himself the most elaborate contract and pension rights.

Businessmen have one great lesson to learn. In the world of ideas, dreams and hopes that makes a democratic government tick, they are often so many children. In politics, masses of men are swayed by ideas they consider greater than themselves. The American public knows that it reaches for ideals: peace, freedom from fear, reasonable probability that the children will surpass their fathers, a human society free from hatred.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

BUSINESSMEN expect a "minor" to "moderate" recession in 1954 or 1955. A recession is a mild depression.

This statement is based on a survey, reported here last week, conducted by the New York Journal of Commerce. The survey shows that 93% of the businessmen sampled expect a recession by 1955 and 84% by 1954.

A New Column For Our Feature Page

The fear is largely based on anticipated cuts in defense spending.

How do businessmen plan to meet the recession they expect and what will their plans mean to our various economic groups?

A recent Public Affairs Institute study revealed that when defense spending levels off private business will have to make up for $20 billion in production to prevent any widespread unemployment. This is in addition to $10 billion increase in our sales and services each year as a result of our expanding population and production output increase per worker.

Most businesses have to meet some type of competition, so they are unwilling to reveal detailed plans. As a group, however, it is possible to report their probable behavior under certain conditions.

Plans To Cut Wages

A total of 42% of the businessmen surveyed by the Journal of Commerce would try to forestall a recession or a deflation by planning to reduce costs in their individual enterprises. This would be done by savings in labor, material, sales or overhead costs.

Some 29% of the businessmen would reduce costs through modernizing equipment. Although essential to most businesses in protecting their position it often has been followed by reductions in employment and wages. A total of 33% are planning to prop up their sales by offering new products.

There's another group of businessmen who settle on "protective planning." They would make financial adjustments in their businesses which would actually add to the deflation. Over one-third of the businessmen would do this, for example, by taking money out of circulation through reducing their debt, paying off bank loans and mortgages.

About one-fifth of the businessmen would crawl into their shells and postpone plant and equipment expenditures.

And then there is the "wait and see" group. They expect a slump but are willing to let things take their course. One out of five businessmen fit into this group. They greatly weaken the arguments of those who urge reliance on the business community and expect that individual businessmen will take preventive action to halt a weakening of the market.

A surprisingly large percentage of businessmen expect and would even welcome government action to combat a slump. They don't want welfare and subsidy programs, however, they want action which provides business "relief."

Aid For Business Only

At least 95% of the businessmen surveyed are opposed to welfare and subsidy payments to stop a deflation while over one-half approve of the government undertaking a program of public works. Welfare and subsidy payments mean a redistribution of income. Public works, on the other hand, would mean a rise in government purchases of materials and equipment from business and increased business income.

As a whole, it seems clear that individual businessmen are not preparing strong aggressive steps in their own operations to counteract the "minor to moderate" recession which most of them expect when defense spending is cut. They will act defensively and protectively. And they would largely confine government action to "relief" for business.

This attitude might be contrasted with the views of prominent business analysts as presented in a recent study by the U. S. Dept. of Commerce entitled "Markets After Defense Expansion." These experts feel in the event of a "pronounced downturn," only vigorous intervention by the Federal Government can prevent the decline from getting out of hand.

Pamphlet Review—

Farm Migrants Still A Scandal After 50 Years Of Reports

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE UNJUST, chaotic and inefficient system under which hundreds of thousands of migrant workers are forced to labor to keep the U. S. the best fed nation in the world has long been a national scandal. It still is.

Several years ago, ex-Pres. Truman appointed a Commission on Migratory Labor which held extensive hearings for many months in 1950-51 in various farm centers throughout the country and in Washington.

In its report submitted to the President early in 1951, the Commission noted that although migratory labor has been dealt with in many investigations and reports by federal, state and private agencies during the last 50 years, "not much has been accomplished."

The Commission expressed the earnest hope that its report would not meet this fate but would "lead to the correction of the fundamental causes of the various problems, with resulting benefits to the migratory farm workers, to the farm employers and to the public."

'Not Much' Has Been Done

Just what has happened to improve our disgraceful migratory labor problems since this exhaustive 188-page report was issued? The answer is still "not much."

Varden Fuller, who was executive secretary of the Commission, brings the story of the neglect of migrant labor up to date in a pamphlet just published by the Public Affairs Committee, a nonprofit educational group with offices at 22 East 38 St., New York 16. The Committee issues a series of 25c pamphlets dealing with economic and social problems.

Fuller's pamphlet, "No Work Today! The Plight of America's Migrants," is a summary in simple language of the Commission's voluminous report, with a brief account of subsequent legislative consideration of the problem.

Who are the migratory workers? They are a widely diversified group, the pamphlet explains. They include 15 to 20 thousand Negroes and thousands of "Mexicans" (the large part of them born in Texas of Mexican parentage).

"There are also thousands of Anglo migrants—including the remnants of the very large and very famous migration of 'Okies' and 'Arkies' into California and Arizona during the thirties," the pamphlet says.

About a half of them are citizens working in family groups. The other half, mostly aliens, are in the U. S. as single males. This nonfamily group includes a few thousand Puerto Ricans (American citizens), and a few thousand workers from Jamaica and the Bahamas. But the largest group of nonfamily aliens are Mexican nationals, some 200,000 of whom are imported each year under temporary contracts. The number of Mexican "wetbacks" who cross the border illegally is estimated to range from 500,000 to one million.

Work is uncertain (100 days during the year is high for the adult male migrant) and earnings are low (average, about $600 a year). The Commission estimated that some 200 million days of the possible labor of migrants was wasted under the backward hiring methods practiced.

"The whole system of migratory labor is so chaotic and unsystematic that a comfortable balance of labor supply and demand is rare and unusual. Either surpluses or shortages are more normal," says the pamphlet.

For the family groups, unsanitary and inadequate housing, lack of schooling and medical care, and child labor in addition to inadequate earnings are the main problems.

Ignored By Congress

Attempts to pass federal legislation which would improve some aspects of the migrant labor problem posed in the Commission's report were made in amendments offered when the Mexican labor bill (S. 984) was before Congress. The bill was passed in July 1951, but not before it was "swept clean" of any trace of the Commission's recommendations," says Fuller.

And there—as it has for the last 50 years—still stands the matter of federal legislative aid to the long neglected migrant farm workers.

Nathan Says—

Builders' Lobby Wants More Aid

The CIO's radio broadcaster, Economist Robert R. Nathan, had some pertinent observations on the National Association of Home Builders' convention and the "Millionaires' Amendment" on his program over the ABC network. Here are some excerpts:

NAHB: This organization is part of the so-called real estate lobby, which has opposed practically every liberal measure affecting housing.

The home builders were not quite sure what to ask from the new Administration. However, they soon overcame their shyness and told the government that they wanted help for themselves and that they were against government help for others. They are against public housing, low-rent housing and slum clearance. This is a repetition of the home builders' complaints year in and year out. That is the "do nothing" side of their program. They are against any government action that does not help them.

Builders Have 'Gimmes'

But they also want something for themselves. The association is asking for increased government assistance and increased government cooperation in the field of home financing. They want easier lending terms on government mortgage financing. They want lower down payments and longer mortgages guaranteed by the government. These proposals are good for the builders as well as for the home buyers, so the builders give their blessing to such measures.

But low-rent public housing and rent controls and slum clearance are designed primarily to help the tenant and not the builder. So the real estate lobby fights such measures on the grounds of "government interference" and "creeping socialism" and other slogans.

Some of the most reactionary forces in America have been plotting to shift the tax burden from the higher income groups and from corporations to the people with small incomes. Congressman Chauncey Reed and Sen. Everett Dirksen, both of Illinois, are the spokesmen for these reactionaries. They want to put a 25% ceiling on the power of Congress to tax income.

Knowing that there was not much chance to get such an absurd measure adopted by Congress, the reactionaries have been working on State Legislatures, on behalf of the Millionaires' Amendment to the Constitution. An effort has been made to get 32 states to request Congress to call a constitutional convention to consider this Millionaires' Amendment to limit tax rates to 25%. The Constitution says that Congress shall call a convention if two-thirds of the states request it.

Soak-The-Poor Plan

If the country were to adopt such an amendment, either we would have to cut our military program drastically, and thereby endanger our national security; or we would have tremendous federal deficits in periods of national emergency, such as the present; or the workers and farmers and other lower income groups would have to pay $15 to $20 billion more in taxes and corporations and the big income receivers would pay $15 to $20 billion less.

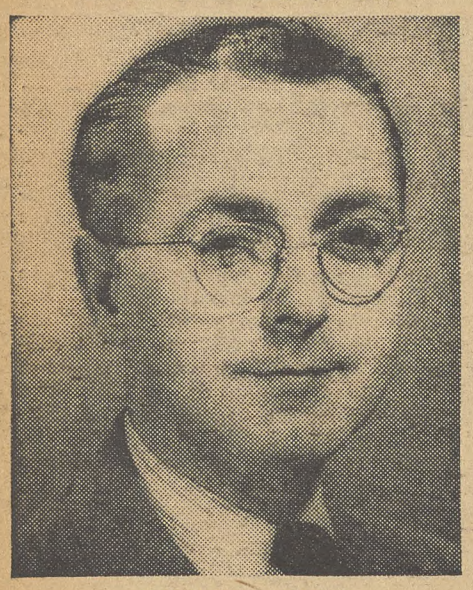
That certainly would endanger the prosperity of the country. A sales tax of 10% on everything everyone buys would be needed to offset the loss in revenue from corporations and the higher income groups. This would mean at least a 10% hike in the prices of food and clothing and other necessities. That could bring on one of the worst depressions in American history, because it would severely reduce the buying power of the mass of American consumers and businessmen couldn't sell their products.

Unless the American people wake up to the dangers of such an amendment, they may find themselves with a law which would carry us back generations, economically. The money stakes for the rich boys are high, but more important than money, the freedom and prosperity of every American is at stake. Get in touch with your state legislators and tell them you are against this amendment.

CIO-CSC To Present 5 Philip Murray Awards

THE LATE PHILIP MURRAY
Honored by CSC awards

EMIL MAZEY
Auto Workers cited for . . .



ANDREW BROWN
. . . community services work

THREE individuals and two organizations will be honored with Philip Murray Awards by the National CIO Community Services Committee at a memorial dinner in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, the night of Feb. 2.

The awards, honoring the late president of the CIO, are given as a token of the gratitude of American workers for outstanding contributions to their health and welfare.

To be honored are:

Oscar R. Ewing, former Federal Security administrator, for his work in social legislation.

Robert H. MacRae, executive director of the Welfare Council of Metropolitan Chicago, for his accomplishments in community organization and planning.

Wilbur F. Maxwell, director of the Labor Participation Dept. of the Community Chests and Councils of America, for his pioneering work in increasing labor participation in community affairs.

UAW Department Cited

The Community Services Dept. of the CIO Auto Workers for developing an intensive and unionwide community services program.

The United Nations Intl. Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF) for work in child and overseas relief.

The UAW Community Services Dept. award will be given Emil Mazey, head of the department as well as UAW secretary-treasurer. Asst. Dir. Andrew Brown also will be present.

Byron Price, UN assistant secretary general, will receive the UNICEF award on behalf of Maurice Pate, UNICEF executive director, who is in India and will not be able to attend the dinner, and Trygve Lie, UN secretary general.

Each recipient will be given $500 and a Philip Murray Plaque.

"This year," explained Leo Perlis, the committee's national director, "we wanted to honor the men and organizations who have been active on a working level in the development of a fuller and more integrated community and social welfare program."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will make the principal address at the dinner. At least part of his speech will be broadcast nationally by the Mutual Broadcasting System. Irving Abramson, CIO-CSC chairman, will preside at the dinner and serve as master of ceremonies.

A special feature will be a dramatic presentation as a memorial tribute to Philip Murray.

Ralph Bellamy, the noted actor, will be the narrator. He will be assisted by the Schola Cantorum of New York. This phase of the program will be broadcast from 9 to 9:30 p.m., by the National Broadcasting Co.

The CIO-CSC was originally set up in 1941 to raise funds for war-stricken countries abroad. From that beginning it developed into a coordinating body for CIO participation in and contributions to community health, welfare and recreation activities.

Pillar of CIO

At a dinner in 1951 marking its 10th anniversary, Murray described it as "a pillar of the CIO." Reuther, then a CIO vice president and, as now, president of the Auto Workers, declared that it "has always symbolized the human feeling of Philip Murray that we cannot solve our social and economic problems in a vacuum."

"The agencies that wage war on battlefronts can get $100 million from Congress," Reuther added.

"The agencies that wage war on illness or poverty have to stand on the street corners and beg for nickels. It is time that the importance of both battlefronts be fully recognized."

The work of the CIO-CSC covers a wide range of activities. It has helped place 15,000 CIO representatives on the boards and committees of community agencies in all parts of the country. It has helped channel several hundred million dollars in contributions from CIO members into the treasuries of community chests and councils.

It has helped servicemen and their families, and it has helped strikers and their families. It has helped communities in time of flood and other disaster, including the localized depressions that have followed removal of industries.

It has helped establish civil defense programs and currently, with the CIO International Committee, is raising funds to equip anti-Communist unions overseas with organizational materials.

Past Winners

The 1953 Philip Murray Awards are the first to go to more than one individual.

The last winner was Sen. James E. Murray, Montana Democrat, who was honored in 1951 for his long and outstanding service to humanity. Previously, awards had been made in 1948 to the late Sen. Robert F. Wagner (N.Y.), father of the National Labor Relations Act, housing legislation and other liberal laws, and to Gen. Omar Bradley in 1947.

CSC Members

CIO National Rep. Irving Abramson is chairman of the National CIO Community Service Committee, and Leo Perlis is national director.

Treasurer is John Brophy, and secretary, Ted F. Silvey. Other members are Joseph A. Beirne, Harry Boyer, Joseph W. Childs, Harold J. Garno, John J. Grogan, Bessie Hillman, Louis Hollander, Emil Mazey, David J. McDonald, August Scholle and Milton Weihrauch.

'GM Charlie' Confirmed In Defense Post

WAIT FOR THE WAKE. —Sen. Wayne Morse (Ind. Ore.) collapsed in Senate lobby after jaw operation. He returned to vote against confirmation of Defense Sec. C. E. Wilson, next day told political foes: "Boys, you're going to have to wait for the wake."

THE BIG HASSEL over "GM Charlie" Wilson ended last week with Pres. Eisenhower's defense secretary coming "clean as a hound's tooth."

The former General Motors president — after hemming and hawing all through inauguration week—decided to break all financial ties with GM, the nation's No. One defense contractor.

Within the next few weeks, he will sell or dispose of some 40,000 GM shares worth $2.5 million. He'll also give up another 1800 GM shares and $635,000 bonus payments due in the future.

THEREBY Wilson brought himself in line with U. S. "conflict of interests" laws. Those measures, long on the books, provide that government officials can not do business with firms from which they'll profit.

Wilson's decision to break his ties with GM brought Senate committee approval after a three hour hearing. Early last week, the Senate itself confirmed his nomination by a 77 to 6 vote.

As defense chief, Wilson will be in charge of the biggest spending operations of the government. And GM is the biggest cog in those operations. Its defense contracts total a massive $5.4 billion. They account for 7.8% of all defense contracts (compared with 3.5% for General Electric with $2.4 billion in contracts and 3.2% for Chrysler with $2.2 billion in awards).

While the Senate voted overwhelmingly for confirmation, a number of Senators agreed with Sen. Johnson (D. Tex.) in voicing "strong misgivings." Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) charged the Defense Dept. and GM with a "freezing out policy" toward small business and Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.) condemned Wilson's statement that "what's good for GM is good for the country." Those interests, said Lehman may be "very much at variance."

Voting against confirmation were Democratic Sens. Kilgore (W. Va.), Neely (W. Va.), Johnson (S.C.), Smith (N. C.) and Lehman, and Morse.

JOINING Wilson in breaking all financial ties with GM was Roger M. Kyes, whose nomination as deputy defense secretary was sent to the Senate. Kyes, a former GM vice president, agreed to sell his $193,000 worth of stock in the auto firm.

One stalled nomination was that of Harold E. Talbott as Air Force secretary. He owns 2000 shares of Chrysler.

The other was that of Robert T. B. Stevens as Army secretary. He is a major owner of J. T. Stevens & Co., one of the nation's largest textile firms. It is No. 46 in Business Week's list of 50 major defense firms and has some $230 million in contracts.

THE WAY to their confirmation was cleared last week when they agreed to sell their stock. Stevens consented to dispose of holdings in the family firm if the Senate Armed Services Committee "insists." The committee voted approval the same day.

Wilson's first act after taking over the office was to issue an order barring Defense Dept. officials from negotiating contracts with any companies in which they might have financial interests.

Strong opposition to confirmation of Stevens was voiced by Emil Rieve, CIO Textile Workers president, "because of his pronounced and persistent opposition to organized labor." Rieve said the Stevens firm led the "runaway shop" flight of textile firms from New England to the South, and then refused to bargain with organized Southern textile workers.

'What's Sauce For The Goose . . .

. . . should be sauce for the gander," said Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) in effect during the dispute over confirmation of Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson.

Tobey said Senators considering Wilson's General Motors stock holdings should "come out with clean hands" and reveal their own business interests. While Dixiecrat Sen. Smathers (Fla.) objected that Senators don't make government contracts, Tobey retorted: "Some do."

California CIO Asks Cut In State Sales Tax

REDUCTION of the State sales tax, improved legislation and enactment of civil rights measures highlighted proposals by the California CIO Council to the State Legislature.

CIO proposed that the State sales tax be cut from 3% to 2% with corresponding increases in the state income tax in the above $5000 bracket.

"Lowering of the sales tax would principally benefit low income groups who are forced by this type tax to pay the same rate as high income groups," said Council Sec.-Treas. John A. Despol.

"Raising of the income tax rates for those making $5000 a year or more would assure no loss in revenue for the State, and shift tax burdens to those more able to pay."

Other California CIO legislative proposals, in summary:

- A minimum wage of $1.25 an hour. Present State laws set a 75c minimum for women, nothing for men.
- Increases in maximum unemployment and disability insurance benefits to $40 a week. Pledging "full and forceful support" from the 200,000 CIO members, Despol said present maximums of $25 for unemployment and $30 for disability bear no realistic relationship to the cost of living.
- Equal pay for women doing the same work as men, through a law prohibiting discrimination in wages on the basis of sex.
- A "Fair Educational Practices Act" prohibiting discrimination against minority groups by schools and colleges. Despol called for a bill barring use of the quota system and other devices for discriminating against minority groups.
- A State commission on fair employment practices, with enforcement power. Despol said a States FEPC is needed because discrimination "foments domestic strife and unrest and deprives the State of the fullest utilization of its capacities for development."

The CIO Council also urged enactment of a Civil Peace Act, aimed at improving relations among racial groups and special training of law enforcement officers to prevent inter-group conflicts. The act would appropriate $100,000 for such training and $250,000 for agencies dealing with discrimination in such fields as employment, education or housing.

'Right To Work' Bills Presented

Two anti-labor measures, authored by Assemblyman Harold K. Levering, have been introduced in the California Legislature.

Levering, who wrote the two "loyalty oath" amendments to the state constitution adopted last year, said the bills were:

A so-called "right to work" bill providing that no one shall be denied employment because of membership or non-membership in a union.

Another "right to work" measure providing college students working during their school careers shall not be required to join a union.

A half-dozen other anti-union measures would outlaw union security, write the open shop into the California Constitution, abolish the State Conciliation Service, and ban secondary picketing or boycotts. (LPA)

Job Total High

Employment in non-farm industries set an all-time record of 48.8 million in mid-December, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

CCL Urges Labor Code In PAC Program

A 20-POINT legislative program was drawn up by the Political Action Committee of the Canadian Congress of Labor at a two-day meeting in Toronto in anticipation of the coming national election.

At the same time, delegates representing each province and all affiliated unions touched off a drive to round up support for Canadian Commonwealth Federation candidates in the election. The CCF has been endorsed by CCL conventions for several years.

The legislative program includes higher unemployment benefits, a national health plan as proposed by the CCF, social security legislation, federal aid to education, a national labor code safe-guarding labor's right to organize, full employment, the check-off and a guaranteed annual wage; low cost housing, 40-hour week and a minimum wage, higher old age pensions without a means test, an excess profits tax and lower income taxes.

The program also demanded adequate farm prices to insure Canadian farmers a fair income from their work.

Curbs Urged On Big Spending

The Senate elections Subcommittee set up in the 82 Congress, in its final report last week, made the following recommendations for plugging loop-holes in the Corrupt Practices Act:

- Raising the legal limit on annual expenditures of national political committees from $3 to $10 million and of committees supporting senatorial candidates from $25,000 to $250,000.
- Requiring donors of more than $5000 to political organizations to report their gifts to a "central authority" before Election Day.
- Tightening and standardizing the reporting requirements of political groups so they may be available at a central source for public inspection.
- Applying the Corrupt Practices Act to primary election and state conventions in which candidates for federal offices are chosen.

McCarran Act Aids Commies In Italy, O'Grady Warns

THE McCARRAN-Walter Immigration Act may well serve to give Italy to the Communists, Msgr. John O'Grady, executive secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Charities, declared last week.

Msgr. O'Grady was a member of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, which in a recent report recommended major changes in U. S. immigration and naturalization laws. He spoke at a meeting in Rome sponsored by the Italian Catholic Migration Committee.

"There is a great danger," he said, "lest many Italians, on the basis of complete disillusionment in regard to our immigration legislation, may vote for the Communists in the next election . . .

"It is conceivable that by reason of our immigration legislation, Italy could go over to the Communists during the next few months."

He added that "there is every evidence that the Communists will make full use of the discrimination against Italians" in the McCarran-Walter Act.

Senate Body Raps Dirty Campaigning

DELIBERATE use of "scurrilous or defamatory" campaign literature should legally disqualify a candidate for Congress from taking office, the Elections Subcommittee of the Senate Rules Committee recommended last week.

At the same time, it proposed a new set of rules on campaign expenditures aimed at tightening the Corrupt Practices Act, which it found "loaded with loop-holes."

The recommendations were made in the final report of the subcommittee, set up in the last Congress. Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) was chairman; members were Sen. Hayden (D. Ariz.) and Sen. Hendrickson (R. N.J.). It has been succeeded by a subcommittee made up of Sen. Barrett (R. Wyo.), chairman, Sen. Potter (R. Mich.) and Hennings.

THE REPORT described the deliberate use of scurrilous or defamatory literature in campaigns as "one of the most vicious political devices."

"It appears," the report said, "in many and varied forms—a 'confidential inside story' in complete book form, handbills, pamphlets, or comic books; forged photostatic letters, documents and pictures.

"Its appeal is emotional, and is frenquently designed to excite racial or religious hatred."

ACKNOWLEDGING the difficulty of a complete cure of the practice, which it said might require years, the subcommittee recommended a penalty of $5000 fine or five years in jail, or both, for defaming a congressional candidate in anonymously published literature, as well as barring a candidate who knowingly uses it from taking office.

The subcommittee estimated the cost of the 1952 election campaign at $100 million. Radio and television expenditures by the two major parties cost more than $6 million, according to a questionnaire to the industry.

'No Retreat,' Connecticut CIO Warns GOP

By HAROLD SENIOR

RESOUNDING endorsement of the CIO's political action program was given by delegates to the 15th annual convention of the Connecticut CIO Council at Bridgeport.

Support of the program was shown by the delegates by their overwhelming defeat of a minority resolution calling for a labor party.

Mitchell Sviridoff, council president, praised the PAC effort in the last election, but said the program must be broadened to include more elements of the community.

HE SAID "the Republican party and its leaders will ignore at their own peril the fact that the Eisenhower sweep was a personal victory and not a victory for reaction."

"Full responsibility is now theirs," Sviridoff continued. "If they dare to about face in the direction of a return to Harding-Hoover so-called normalcy, as the Republican platform and many of the recent big business appointments suggest, the American people are certain to be quickly disillusioned and to react with indignation.

"The American people want the progress of the past 20 years continued. They do not intend to be cheated."

Sviridoff was re-elected for his sixth term. John J. Driscoll, secretary-treasurer, also was returned to the post he has held since the council was formed 15 years ago. Ferdinand Sylvia, state director of the CIO Textile Workers, was named assistant president.

POLITICS also was the theme of Rep. Dodd (D. Conn.), the State's lone Democrat in Congress. Commenting on the CIO-PAC campaign, Dodd said, "If others on my side of the fence had shown as much energy and effectiveness, I wouldn't be alone in Washington today."

CIO solidarity throughout the State was demonstrated when delegates unanimously declared their support, both financial and moral, of the CIO Auto Workers who have been on strike since last June at Plume & Atwood Manufacturing Co., Waterbury.

During the convention, contempt papers were served on five UAW officials charging them with violating a temporary injunction imposed on the union last September. Thomas J. Cooke, international representative of UAW, introduced the resolution calling for support of the strikers.

Contempt papers were signed by Judge Walter M. Pickett, whose confirmation to Common Pleas Court the convention unanimously opposed.

Gov. John Lodge (R.), who recently renominated Pickett for a new term on the bench, quoted Lincoln to the delegates on the dignity of labor. Cooke then told the delegates their governor "had the collosal gall to quote Lincoln" after re-appointing Pickett.

CIO's opposition to Pickett is based on his refusal to disqualify himself in injunction cases last fall. Pickett's son was employed by the law firm which handled the cases for the companies. Then the judge did not require a company to post bond as required by the Connecticut anti-injunction law and refused to allow the word "scab" to be used in the testimony.

The delegates endorsed a resolution calling for $40 weekly maximum on unemployment compensation and a $50 maximum of workmen's compensation, and for payment of workmen's compensation to strikers after four weeks. Another resolution praised former Gov. Chester Bowles of Connecticut for his services as Ambassador to India.

DRISCOLL reported the number of council affiliates increased in a year from 154 to 164 and per capita membership went up 5000. Noting a toughening attitude of employers, he warned that if they read into the election results a license to engage in "union hunting" they would find CIO unions ready to fight.

"Our locals in Connecticut have shown that, while they will not look for strikes, they will not run away from them if they are necessary for the protection of their membership," Driscoll said. "Such strikes will be extremely costly to any employers who take them on."

Court Ruling Tests Ike's Pledge On Bias

PRES. EISENHOWER'S repeated campaign pledge to wipe out "every vestige" of segregation in Washington was challenged almost as soon as he moved into the White House.

The challenge came in a District of Columbia Court of Appeals ruling that Washington restaurants may legally refuse to serve Negroes. The decision, on a 5-to-4 vote, was promptly labeled "a tragedy for the United States."

Dr. Mary Church Terrell, leader of Washington anti-discrimination forces and prominent in the test case, said the decision would be promptly appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court. She observed the court ruling meant communities could pass and enforce Jim Crow bans, but had no legal power to pass and enforce anti-Jim Crow measures.

The case tested the validity of two "lost laws" adopted in 1872 and 1873 when the residents of Washington ruled themselves. Now they are governed by laws adopted by Congress and have no vote in choosing those who make their laws.

THE "disappearing laws" vanished from the statute books for many years and the court ruled that the laws, ignored for 78 years, flew "in the face of custom" in Washington.

Meantime, a more direct challenge to Pres. Eisenhower to fulfill his campaign pledge to wipe out D. C. discrimination, came from Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.).

Morse introduced a bill which would redeem the Eisenhower pledge and remarked that any delay in enacting it would be "passing the buck."

Eisenhower confidantes indicated, however, that the President would adopt the "cautious approach" despite his pledges and that the Morse bill was destined to remain in a Senate pigeon-hole, at least for the time being.

URW Talks With 2 Firms

THE CIO Rubber Workers last week began negotiations in Cleveland with the General Tire & Rubber Co.

URW-CIO represents 2900 General employes in plants in Akron, O., and Waco, Tex. The present pact expires Mar. 1. URW-CIO Pres. L. S. Buckmaster and Harley V. Brown, international staff representative, headed the negotiating team.

URW-CIO also is in negotiations with Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., in whose plants it has 30,000 members.

A meeting of the union's international policy committee will be held in Cleveland on Mar. 13 and 14 to draw up the URW-CIO goals for the ensuing year. Representatives of more than 300 locals in the U. S. and Canada have been invited.

Wage Board Acts On 10,000 Cases

The Wage Stabilization Committee (formerly the WSB) has acted on 10,876 cases in the past six weeks, according to Chairman Charles C. Killingsworth. It has reduced its backlog to 10,596 cases.

Labor Spy Ban Asked

A BILL to outlaw labor spying—an ancient employer method of fighting unions—has been introduced by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) with the support of Sens. Douglas (D. Ill.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Lehman (D. N. Y.), and Morse (Ind. Ore.).

Murray, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee in the last Congress, said that a subcommittee had found "widespread evidence of labor espionage" and that the Taft-Hartley Act's provisions for a cease-and-desist order against the crime aren't strong enough to stop it.

His measure provides maximum penalties of two years in jail, a $5000 fine, or both.

Highlander Marks 21st Year With New Labor Courses

THE HIGHLANDER Folk School in Monteagle, Tenn., recently marked its twenty-first year at a meeting of its executive council when plans were announced for a series of joint CIO, AFL and independent union schools.

Sec. Tom White of the Tennessee Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen was re-elected chairman of the council. Between council meetings the school is run a committee composed of White and three others including Paul Christopher, Tennessee director of the CIO Organizing Committee.

Miles Horton, school director, reported that five education directors who were trained under a program conducted for the CIO Packinghouse Workers later taught 40 union leaders who are conducting classes in their own locals.

The Univ. of Minnesota announced that it will conduct its fifth annual industrial labor center conference of Feb. 4 and 5 at Minneapolis. The university's Industrial Relations Centers and Center for Continuation Study will cooperate with six CIO and AFL labor organizations in presenting a program on Public Relations Programs for Unions.

THE MINNESOTA, Hennepin County and Ramsey County CIO Councils are cooperating in the event. Speakers will include Robert D. Bollard, editor of Illinois Labor, publications of the Illinois CIO Council; Ray Davidson, publicity director of the CIO Oil Workers, and Glen Chinander, regional director of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, St. Paul.

In another development on the labor education front, the Home-Study Dept. of the Univ. of Chicago, 1375 East 16th St., Chicago 37, Ill., announced that it will make its home-study program available to local labor leaders throughout the U. S.

McMath Pardons Trio In Arkansas Strike Case

FORMER GOV. Sid McMath of Arkansas, in his last official move before retiring, pardoned three workers, men convicted under the State's Anti-Violence Act.

The legislation, popularly known as Act 193, provides heavy penalties for union members found guilty of participating in strike disorders.

Two recipients of McMath's clemency, Roy Cole and Louis James, both Negroes, were members of the Food & Tobacco Workers—then affiliated with the CIO—when they were indicted in 1945. They were on strike against the Southern Cotton Oil Co., Little Rock, and were arrested following a dispute in which a fellow-striker was killed by a scab.

They were found guilty, then given new trials on orders of the Arkansas Supreme Court and the U. S. Supreme Court. They were found guilty each time, and on a final appeal, the U. S. Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the law under which they were convicted.

"There is no evidence that either of the convicted men," said McMath, "was engaged in the altercation in anyway."

HE DESCRIBED the law as "harshly discriminating" and skirting "very closely to the doctrine so prevalent in Nazi and Communist countries of guilt by association."

The third man convicted, James Meek, engaged in a fight with a railroad employe over moving a car into the struck plant of the Standard Brake Shoe Co., Pine Bluff. The strike was settled two weeks later, relations have been amicable ever since, and Meek still employed, has been promoted.

BY PARDONING the trio, McMath carried out a pledge of long standing. While in office, he tried repeatedly but unsuccessfully to have the act repealed.

"These cases illustrate the injustices that can follow prosecution under the anti-violence law," he said. "An act committed by a striker results in a felony sentence of one to two years, while the same act committed by a non-striker is only a misdemeanor punishable by a small fine."

Joe Curran Says—

It's Past Time To Clean House Of Racketeers On N.Y. Waterfront

By JOSEPH CURRAN

THE WATERFRONT crime investigations have produced a lot of sensational news on how "racketeers and gangsters" can get control in an industry, and one of the unfortunate aspects of these investigations is that all newspapers, radio, and television programs attempt to slant this picture against the labor movement.

There is no doubt that the laxity of the membership in the AFL waterfront unions is partly responsible for the infiltration of gangsters and racketeers, but it is just as true that highly placed officials of the steamship companies and stevedoring companies were, in the first instance, responsible for the headway in controlling these waterfront unions by the gangsters and racketeers. Fear and loss of job have long made it dangerous for any rank and filer to stand up and fight, but if honest union officials would take aggressive action against gangsters, etc., the rank and file will rally behind such leadership and fight.

IN THE LAST couple of weeks the AFL Maritime Trades Dept. has held meetings designed to put an end to the racketeers and gangsters who have discredited their unions. This is a good sign, but it is a step that should have been taken years ago.

We can recall when these same people continuously charged our union with being under the domination of Communists, but it is well known that within the ranks of our union, without any outside "crime investigation," we did take the necessary steps to clean them out. Also, when the National CIO found a small local controlled by racketeers, that local was immediately suspended and its charter revoked.

This is the kind of job that can best be done by a union. It cannot be done by any outside investigating organization. It cannot be done by legislation. These things are designed only to weaken the unions.

Therefore, if the AFL Maritime Trades Dept. is sincere in a program to eliminate these characters, one of the first steps they should take is to do what we did back in 1936, and something all sea-going unions have since done, both AFL and CIO — establish central hiring halls, and do away with the miserable slave market shape-up that now exists on the waterfront.

Some people say that the longshoremen don't want hiring halls, but we can recall when such rank and filers as "Peter Panto" and others, fought for the hiring hall—but he was found buried in a lime pit for his efforts, and he certainly was not killed by the rank and file!

The maritime unions all over the world have prospered in the leadership of militant trade unions, and in the fight for clean unions, and the establishment of the hiring halls was the first step in doing away with the racketeering conditions that existed on the waterfront, when men were victimized by crimps, boarding houses, and other shanghaiing shipping masters.

If central hiring were established in New York under the jurisdiction of the Longshoremen's union, it would provide steady work for the regular gangs, and a fair system for replacements when needed.

Let us be clear on this: the NMU has no desire to interfere in the functions and operations of the Longshoremen or any other maritime unions on the waterfront. However, when politicians try to discredit one union, then all unions, whether CIO or AFL, or independent, suffer as a result.

WE HAVE a right to protest just as the other maritime unions had the right to insist we rid our union of Communists when they were bringing discredit to all maritime unions. We say we now have the right to call upon these unions to eliminate the gangsters and racketeers who have crawled into the waterfront, into the waterfront unions and who now victimize the membership.

We applaud the efforts of the AFL Maritime Trades Dept. in the steps they are taking, and we hope that they are sincere, and that they will eliminate any more sensational, so-called "crime investigations" that result in very little more than the working membership of the unions being injured, while the big time racketeer gets away with it, and some politicians pave their way into office through these "investigations."

The politicians who make up these "crime investigations" care very little about what happens to the gangsters or racketeers. Underlying all these investigations is the intent of reactionaries actually to destroy the effectiveness of the organized labor movement, and to prevent, above all, unity between the AFL and the CIO.

We in the NMU stand ready to fight shoulder to shoulder with our sister unions in the AFL on the waterfront in eliminating this cancer within the trade union movement, and we will fight shoulder to shoulder to eliminate outside interference, just as we did against the Communists, who were no different from the local gangsters, except that they were directed from the Kremlin!

Background

For weeks hearings before a New York State Crime Commission have revealed a pattern of payoffs by employers, racketeering and crime on the New York City waterfront. The testimony involves shipping firms, gangsters and some officials of the AFL Intl. Longshoremen's Association.

A warning that anti-labor politicians are behind the inquiry and that labor should clean its own house was voiced by Joseph Curran, CIO Maritime Union president and a CIO vice president. His comment in The NMU Pilot is reprinted in large part.

Rail Union Asks Pennsy For Increase

THE CIO Railroad Workers have asked the Pennsylvania Railroad for a productivity increase for its 36,000 members in the maintenance of equipment department.

This was the opening step in a program to get productivity increases from all railroads with which URRWA-CIO has contracts.

The contracts provide for the discussion at this time of such increases. The campaign was given added force by a decision of the Railroad and Airline Wage Stabilization Board giving such an increase to some rail workers.

WHILE all the carriers under URRWA-CIO contracts have been notified of the union's desire to win these raises, the Pennsylvania Railroad is the only railroad with which URRWA-CIO has met.

URRWA-CIO won agreement from the big carrier for an improved vacation clause and an understanding that the railroad would print and distribute copies of the URRWA-CIO contract, a matter which has been delayed a year.

Local 1463, URRWA-CIO, which represents marine railroad workers on the New York City waterfront, also has presented formal demands on nine railroads for additional contract improvements.

'You're Way Behind,' Perlis Tells Greater N. Y. Fund

THE APPROACH of New Yorkers toward integration of welfare work was criticized by Leo Perlis, national director of the National CIO Community Services Committee.

He spoke at commencement exercises for 18 CIO welfare counsellors, who completed a course on health and welfare facilities sponsored by the Greater New York Fund.

DIPLOMA for completing health and welfare course for CIO union counsellors sponsored by the Greater New York Fund is presented to Morris H. Strichartz, port agent of American Radio Association, by Hugh H. Cuthrell, president of Brooklyn Union Gas Co.

"Neither the Welfare Council, the Greater New York Fund nor the CIO did much in past years," he said, "to develop an integrated program of service and participation in community health and welfare agencies.

"YOU'RE WAY behind. There are towns in the U.S. where management and labor sit down on the boards of social agencies as a matter of course. Not as window dressing, but as an adult realization that management can contribute ideas to labor and labor to management."

Raymond M. Hilliard, executive director of the Welfare and Health Council of New York City, said the community must "plead guilty."

Certificates attesting to completion of the course were given counsellors from locals of the Auto Workers, Electrical Workers, Government & Civic Employees, Communications Workers, American Radio Association, Textile Workers, Packinghouse Workers, Brewery Workers, Shipbuilders, Clothing Workers and Local Industrial Union 1735.

63 Million Jobs Seen

Employment will reach a new high of 63 million when the farm harvest season is at its peak in June or July, Robert C. Goodwin, director of the U. S. Bureau of Employment Security, predicted last week.

Dewey Pal Figures In Racket Inquiry

THE SPREADING investigation of labor and gangster racketeering on the New York waterfront moved out of the AFL Longshoremen's Union into the AFL Teamsters Union last week and cuddled up right next to Gov. Dewey.

Dewey is the two-time Republican candidate for president—1944 and 1948—who has received what many regard as an informal blessing from GOP Pres. Eisenhower for another crack at the job in 1956.

Witnesses before the New York State Crime Commission testified that Joseph G. Papa, president of Teamsters Local 202, and Peter Costello, its business delegate until he resigned in December, had cut themselves in for thousands of dollars of the profits of concerns doing business in Washington Market.

The commission also heard testimony of a shortage in Local 202's accounts under the regime of Papa and Sec.-Treas. Arthur A. Dorf.

PAPA succeeded to the presidency of Local 202 in 1940, after Dewey, as district attorney, had sent a procession of the local's officers to prison on extortion convictions.

In 1946 Papa, an influential figure in labor and political circles, was secretary of a statewide Republican labor committee backing Dewey for reelection. In 1950 he was chairman of the GOP labor committee in the city campaign.

He also is one of three labor members named by Dewey to the New York State Industrial Commission, and he has been chairman of the Joint Industry Committee for the Improvement of Washington Market.

THE MARKET is the place where wholesalers and distributors handle about 80% of the $400 million worth of fruits and vegetables consumed each year in and around New York. The gravy the racketeers siphoned off the top profits came directly from the purses of housewives.

Michael A. Moretti, whose wife is a cousin of Papa's wife, told the commission he was a $55-a-week truck driver in 1945 when Papa "invited" him to become a partner with two others in a trucking firm. Until 1951, when one of the partners died, his share of the earnings was $241,000, he said.

He testified he "gave" Papa $21,000 and "loaned" him $25,000.

Dave Beck international president of the Teamsters, moved quickly on hearing of the testimony. He ordered Intl. Vice Pres. Thomas L. Hickey in New York to step in as trustee of Local 202 and to administer it.

IUE Sets Wage, Pension Goals

THE CIO ELECTRICAL Workers have drafted their collective bargaining progam for 1953 and have told employers of their plans to gain wage, pension and other improvements.

In a letter to firms with which IUE holds contracts, Pres. James B. Carey said:

"The decisions we make in collective bargaining may determine whether we go on higher levels of production, employment and prosperity that are open to us or whether we stumble into recession and unemployment."

The program was adopted unanimously at a two-day meeting of the IUE-CIO Executive Board in Washington.

It noted "this year is likely to be a year of extradordinarly high production and profits," and "it is also likely that the excess profits tax on corporations will be ended when it is due to expire June 30."

"This fact, alone," the IUE continued, "will increase profits after taxes in the electrical industry by nearly 30% or by nearly $200 million. This extra $200 million windfall is equal to more than $200 per employe in the industry or about 10c an hour."

The wage section of the report called for:

- "An automatic escalator clause providing wage increases in proportion to increases in living costs. All present clauses should be brought up to date so that they correspond in justice in terms of the new cost of living index . . .
- "An automatic increase of not less than 2.5-3% a year based on minimum estimates of increases in national per worker productivity . . .
- "Revision of outmoded incentive systems to assure that take home pay of workers increases in proportion to increases in production."

Other program highlights were:

Discrimination: This clause "should be clear, vigorous and prohibit discrimination because of race, color, sex, religion or national origin."

Pensions: "Social Security should be separated from company payments in pension programs as we mean to do in 1952."

Health insurance: Employers should pay "a larger share of the plan, if not all of it . . . and full protection for maternity."

Profit-sharing: Two plans which have just been negotiated "should serve as models."

Union security: "Out of the 71 major companies in all industries studied (by the National Industrial Conference Board) in September, 1952, only a bare dozen did not have union security provisions. Among this dozen is General Electric . . . a major holdout."

IUE Board Warns Of New Shift In Commie Line

A WARNING of a shift in the Communist line has been issued by the CIO Electrical Workers Executive Board to all of the union's locals and leaders.

The board said, in a resolution, that "we of the IUE-CIO, largest union in the nation's most critically sensitive industry—electrical manufacturing — have already encountered this new Communist line in operation."

The board cited the Communist purpose as twofold: "to attempt by infiltration to capture sections of the union or to influence its policies, and to find a cloak of respectability behind which they can conceal their totalitarian plotting."

The board said the Communist efforts "have to date been quickly detected and thwarted." It resolved to "intensify our efforts to eradicate any and all Communist influence or penetration of our critically important defense industry." (LPA)

Tunisian Labor Sends Thanks To Reuther

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has received a message of thanks from the General Union of Tunisian Workers for the cablegram of sympathy sent when the UGTT secretary general, Farhat Hached, was assassinated on Dec. 5.

The reply was sent by M. Abbassi, assistant secretary general of the UGTT.

Hached, he said, "will remain for us a hero who symbolizes the struggle of the workers and of the nation as a whole for his ideals of liberty and justice."

"HIS IDEALS are ours," he said, "and no blows struck us shall divert us from the path we have set ourselves. Since creation of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions Hached was the first to realize that that powerful organization, of which we are now a part, answered our own conceptions of social liberation and national freedom for workers.

"International free trade unionism, and particularly your own great organization, will not fail in their task."

Hached, 39-year-old leader of moderate trade union and nationalist forces throughout the Middle East, was shot and beaten to death on the outskirts of Tunis as he drove to a union meeting.

Reuther expressed "regret and horror" at the assassination, which has never been solved. He said the French government must bear a large share of the responsibility because of its refusal to respond realistically to growing nationalism in Tunisia.

Widespread disorder in North Africa followed Hached's murder. Many labor leaders including Hached's successor, Mahmoud Messadi, were thrown into jails and concentration camps.

AN ICFTU delegation consisting of Pres. R. Dekeyzer of the Belgian Transportworkers' Union and Sec. Adrian Vermeulen of the Netherlands Federation of Trade Unions has just reported back after visiting Tunisia.

They conveyed the condolences of the ICFTU to Hached's family and intervened with the French Resident General on behalf of Messadi.

They obtained from him a promise that Messadi and five other UGTT executive committee members would soon be transferred from the military zone to the civil zone, where conditions of internment are easier, pending their ultimate release.

CIO Warns Benson On Wood Policy

THE CIO last week asked Sec. of Agriculture Benson to resist "pressure by the wood-using industries" to block a survey of timber lands and future resources, and to support plans for regulation of timber cutting on both public and privately-owned lands.

The views of the CIO on the two questions were placed before Benson in a letter from Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

ON THE TIMBER Resources Review being planned by the U. S. Forest Service, Smith recalled that the CIO has a direct interest through the CIO Woodworkers, "whose members are vitally concerned with the sound management of our forest resources;" through other unions in the paper, chemical and publishing industries, and by virtue of a concern for the public welfare.

"It has been abundantly apparent to us," he wrote, "that the wood-using industries intend to resist to the utmost any genuine effort to gather adequate data on the condition of privately-owned timberlands and on the methods of cutting and management being employed . . .

"The CIO submits that such obstructionism endangers national security at a time when we are engaged in foreign military conflict. It also endangers the welfare of the American people in peace-time terms."

SMITH DESCRIBED regulation of timber cutting as part of a bipartisan forestry program begun under Pres. Theodore Roosevelt and the administration of Chief Forester Gifford Pinchot and continued under Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The CIO favors federal regulation of cutting on privately-owned land, Smith wrote. The Forest Service favors trying state regulation under federal standards. A "most casual inspection" of the figures, he added, proves some form of control is necessary "if this country is to achieve the timber and wood products production needs."

Lincoln Re-elected

Murray Lincoln, president of the Ohio Farm Bureau Insurance Companies, was re-elected president of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. at a recent directors' meeting in Chicago.

CIO Wins Sugar Wage Hike To 75c In Puerto Rico

THE ECONOMY of Puerto Rico received one of its sharpest boosts in years last week when Wage-Hour Administrator William R. McComb ordered a 75c an hour minimum wage in the island's sugar manufacturing industry.

The order is effective Mar. 2. It means a pay boost of 20c an hour for most of the 10,000 workers in the industry, and represents an important victory for the CIO, which has long sought higher minimum wage rates in Puerto Rico.

A majority of the workers who will benefit are members of the Sugar Div. of the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

The increase was recommended by an industry committee on which two of the three labor members represented the CIO. They were David Sternback, CIO regional director in Puerto Rico, and Nat Goldfinger, CIO associate director of research. The third was Prudencio Rivera-Martinez, of the AFL, which represents the employes of a few sugar mills.

The hearings, at which the workers' case was presented in detail by Pres. Ralph Helstein of the UPWA, were conducted in San Juan last June, and were spread over several weeks. The committee recommended the 75c minimum to McComb by a 6-3 vote, with the public and labor members forming the majority.

Before issuing the order, McComb conducted day-long hearings in Washington at which the industry presented objections.

THE NEW higher rate will put hundreds of thousands of badly needed dollars into the pockets of Puerto Rican sugar mill workers each year. Wages in the industry—and in most of the island's other industries as well—are close to the legal minimums. In sugar, in spite of the progress the CIO has made in the last few years, the average was estimated at between 57 and 58c an hour by the Puerto Rico Dept. of Labor.

'Always Milder' Chesterfield Ads Arouse FTC's Ire

THOSE BIG "always milder . . . better tasting . . . cooler smoking . . . no unpleasant aftertaste" Chesterfield cigaret ads have left a bad after-taste with the Federal Trade Commission.

So bad, in fact, that the FTC has just begun its second complaint action against Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

All of the advertising claims that Chesterfields are milder, cooler, will calm the nerves and leave no unpleasant after-taste just aren't so, the FTC says. Its complaint, in fact, calls them "false, misleading and deceptive."

The FTC has another action pending against Liggett & Myers, charging some of its earlier ads verged too much on the medical.

The makers of Camels, Old Golds and Philip Morris also figure in other FTC complaints against high-wide-and-handsome cigaret ads.

Humphrey Blocks Knifing Of Small Business Group

REPUBLICAN Senate leaders' reported plans to abolish the Senate Small Business Committee were quickly repudiated last week by Chairman Knowland of the GOP Policy Committee after Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) made public a summary of the committee's accomplishments.

Humphrey wrote Republican Leader Taft, reportedly behind the move, to urge continuance of "this vitally important committee." He pointed out that anticipated defense cutbacks bring "a new and grave threat to small manufacturers, contractors, subcontractors and other types of small business enterprise."

The committee's efforts, Humphrey said, were to a large degree responsible for the sharp increase in the percentage of contracts awarded small business in the last half of 1952. The committee has exposed monopoly practices and brought substantial savings to the government, he added.

New head of the committee probably will be Sen. Thye (R. Minn.). In the last Congress, it was headed by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), who was the Democratic vice presidential nominee.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER attended and was principal speaker at a recent testimonial dinner for Father Charles Owen Rice, Pittsburgh's nationally known champion of labor and protector of the underprivileged. Leaders from labor, government, industry, and civic groups were on hand to pay their respects to Father Rice, a long-time friend of our beloved departed, Philip Murray.

Speaking in that great iron and steel center, the writer reminded all present of the Little Steel Strike, when Father Rice marched the picket line, shoulder to shoulder with the strikers, when the goon squads were shooting down American workers for attempting to exercise their right to organize freely and bargain collectively. I also referred to the great steel strike of 1946, when Father Rice took to the airways in a nationwide broadcast on behalf of the Steelworkers.

Other speakers joined in praise of Father Rice for his work among the down-trodden and underprivileged which has earned for him the title, "Pastor of the Down-and-Outers." It was a source of pleasure to me to see CIO so well represented at this affair in honor of a great friend of labor.

The writer is grieved to report the death of Brother Howard McNamara. He was with the CIO from the early days and served our movement faithfully and well on assignments in Ohio, Indiana, and Arizona. My deepest sympathies go to his family and friends.

Harry Truman and Mrs. Truman are back in Independence, Mo., as private citizens. Mr. Truman in leaving Washington carried with him the knowledge that the working men and women of this country appreciate the noble things he stood for and did on their behalf.

He will go down in history as a man with tremendous courage, unafraid to make decisions in grave domestic and international matters: the building of the United Nations and its continuing support, stopping of aggression in Korea, the Point 4 Program, his forthright stand in the steel dispute.

We wish him and his family many years of happiness with a fullness richly deserved.

TWU Ends N.Y. Bus Strike

MORE THAN 8000 CIO Transport Workers last week ended their month-old strike in New York City against eight privately-owned bus companies for a 40-hour week with no cut in pay.

The strike was ended when the companies finally agreed to submit the dispute to arbitration on the terms demanded by TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill and backed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president.

Chief arbitration stipulation won by the union was the recognition of "the right of the men to the 40-hour week with no cut in pay."

Earlier the membership of TWU Local 100 approved the arbitration plan by a secret vote of 4313 to 994 after a noisy group at a rally refused to let Quill explain the formula.

QUILL told newsmen Theodore W. Kheel, former impartial chairman of the New York City private transit industry, deserved credit for breaking the stalemate. Kheel early last week flew back from the Bahamas where he was on vacation.

The head of the arbitration board is Walter A. Lynch, former Congressman and Democratic candidate for New York Governor in 1950. He was chosen by TWU and the companies as impartial chairman.

Michael Mann, CIO regional director in the New York City area, was selected as an arbitrator by the union. The companies were to name a third arbitrator.

The companies' united front was broken on Jan. 28 when the Third Avenue line signed the arbitration agreement. One by one the other firms came to terms with the union until less than 10 hours later all of them had signed the agreement.

Murray Praised By Coast NAACP

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN

PHILIP MURRAY, late president of CIO and the Steelworkers, was honored posthumously at a "Human Rights Award" banquet in Los Angeles.

Some 700 labor and community leaders attended the award dinner sponsored by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

They heard Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, say Murray "never pussyfooted on the subject of human rights. He showed great courage and a complete refusal to compromise on the issue of discrimination."

In his presentation, White said, "I considered Philip Murray one of the great human beings of our time. He was always there with that quiet wisdom which was his greatest gift."

White also praised the similar stands of Walter P. Reuther, Auto Workers and new CIO president, and David J. McDonald, USA-CIO acting president.

THE AWARD to Murray was scheduled for the CIO convention originally to have been held in Los Angeles, but was delayed by Murray's death early in November.

In accepting the award—for Murray's long service in the field of human rights — McDonald said "the basic beliefs of Philip Murray did catch on. By his practical work, he was able to wake a social conscience in the minds of the steel workers. By putting over these fundamental ideas with a million steel workers, his ideas will be spread over all America."

Among those present were Los Angeles' Mayor Fletcher Bowron, who made a welcoming talk, and Edward G. Robinson, motion picture star, who paid tribute to Murray as a champion of democracy.

The event was chaired by John H. Dial, Jr., president of California NAACP, and an organizer for CIO Clothing Workers. And McDonald was introduced by Charles J. Smith, USA-CIO Dist. 38 director.

Among others who spoke briefly were Sue Adams, representing the AFL Central Labor Council; Jerome Posner, Los Angeles ACWA Joint Board manager, who also spoke for the Jewish Community Council and Jewish Labor Committee; George Beavers, Los Angeles Urban League president; Tony Rios, Los Angeles Community Services Organization president; and Dr. E. I. Robinson, Los Angeles NAACP chapter president.

Utility Union Wins To 15.5c

A 12-DAY STRIKE last week won 350 CIO Utility Workers hourly wage increases of 12.5c to 15.5c at the Jamaica (Long Island, N. Y.) Water Supply Co.

The basic wage increase is 12.5c an hour for the maintenance and office employes, and 3c an hour was added to the present 5c an hour night differential. Terms of the contract are retroactive to Jan. 1, when the old pact expired.

Meanwhile, after a month of talks negotiators for the UWUA-CIO and the big Consolidated Edison Co. of New York were substantially apart. The union's 10-point program includes a 17.5c hourly increase covering general raises, reclassifications and promotions. The present pact expires Feb. 28.

Steel Local Joins CIO News List

The big Local 4408 of the CIO Steelworkers at Providence, R. I., has joined the growing list of CIO locals subscribing to The CIO News for their full membership.

A subscription order for 1011 copies weekly was entered by Joseph G. Cote, Local 4408 recording-secretary.

Information on special full membership subscription rates is available from The CIO News Circulation Dept., 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

UPA Gains New Increase At Westvaco

THE CIO Paperworkers have won a wage increase averaging 2.5c an hour from the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Co. after winning a 4c hourly increase in a recent strike.

Workers at the Westvaco mills at Covington, Va., Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa., who conducted a three-month strike, will get the new increase. These workers also are scheduled to get an additional 4c hourly increase in the spring if their locals approve a job evaluation plan conducted jointly by the company and the UPA.

The CIO union has won increases of 75c an hour and other benefits since the workers at the three plants voted for it in 1945, UPA reported. Earlier increases during nine years under an AFL union were only 12c an hour, UPA noted.

The UPA has made other recent gains as follows:

- Wage increases of at least 5c an hour and other benefits at Hinde and Dauch Paper Co. plants in Buffalo, N. Y.; Detroit, land, O., and two plants at Sandusky, O.
- Minimum raises of 5c per hour and fringe benefits from the companies represented by UPA Amalgamated Local 35, Philadelphia, Pa.
- A package increase of more than 6c an hour for employes of Wilson-Jones Co. in three states.

GOP Gets Set To Probe Everybody In Sight

By MILTON PLUMB

IT WAS SAID of the Republican 80th Congress that it "began every session with a prayer and closed it with a probe."

The same pattern of "investigative" ax-grinding, smearing, and politicking — including the "junkets" connected with it—appears to be developing in the Republican 83rd Congress. It's going to cost U. S. taxpayers a whale of a lot of money.

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) set the pace by seeking—and getting —$200,000 to finance his Investigating subcommittee for one year. That is double the amount allowed in 1952.

ON THE other side of Capitol Hill, Rep. Velde (R. Ill.), head of the House Un-American Activities Committee, which spent more than any other House committee in the last Congress, made clear that his call for funds will exceed the record $285,000 spent in 1952.

From this, it appears that GOP lawmakers never intended their "economy" promise to apply to themselves. When they controlled the 80th Congress, Republican committee chairmen ran up a new record of expenditures for probes; House "investigations" alone cost $1,887,000 in 1947-48.

—Herblock in Washington Post

"I'll Learn Ya."

Now that they're back in power, they've an even higher total to top. The Dixiegop-controlled 82nd Congress was even more investigation-minded than its predecessor; it reportedly spent about $7.5 million.

REP. LECOMPTE (R. Ia.), chairman of the House Administration Committee, said House committees got $3,779,500 to finance their 1951-52 work. Senate Rules Committee aides estimate that Senate investigation funds were about the same.

LeCompte and other GOP leaders previously have said they hope to hold investigation costs below last year. Some said that the emphasis would be on legislation and that investigations would subside.

Already a wide variety of probes is in the offing.

McCarthy and Velde have been getting headlines to date, but other committee chairmen are determined to get in the run. Rep. Hoffman (R. Mich.), who heads the House committee corresponding to McCarthy's, has never been shy about making sensational charges similar to those of his Senate counterpart.

The same can be said of Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), who replaced Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) as chairman of the Senate Judiciary subcommittee to probe Communists. The quality of his judgment as an investigator is indicated by his description of Gen. George C. Marshall as a "traitor."

The House Judiciary subcommittee headed by Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.) is investigating the Justice Dept., and the Ways and Means subcommittee under the chairmanship of Rep. Kean (R. N. J.) is probing the Internal Revenue Bureau. Each has asked $100,000 for the first six months of 1952 .

REP. O'KONSKI (R. Wis.) wants to grill the Securities & Exchange Commission; Chairman Wolverton (R. N. J.) of the Commerce Committee wants to look into all independent boards and commissions, and Chairman Rees (R. Kan.) of the Civil Service Committee plans a probe of the loyalty program.

Rep. Dies (D. Tex.) wants a probe of "Socialists and all who don't believe in our form of government." He said he has the names of 100,000 "subversives."

The Un-American Activities group last week announced that it would conduct "simultaneous" probes of Communist penetration of (1) government, (2) labor unions, (3) entertainment and (4) education. Its goal, Velde said, is to inform the public of "all subversive activities in the country."

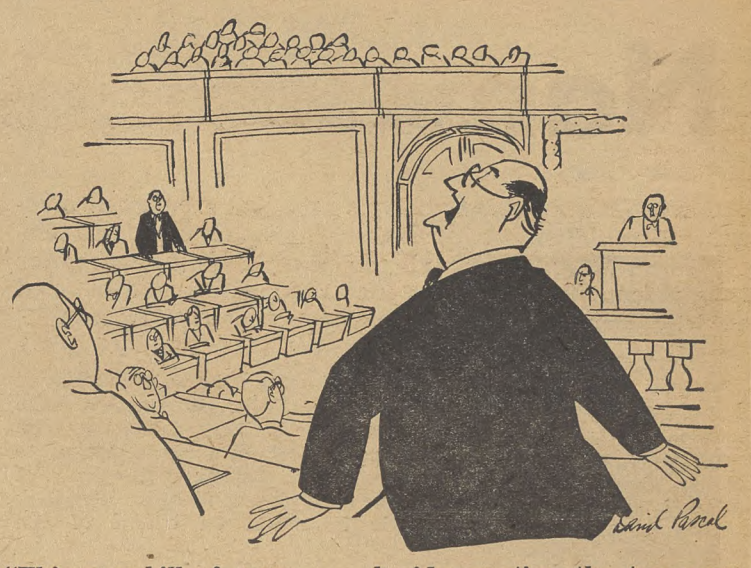
Speaker Martin has lifted the 10-month ban on television, radio and newreel coverage imposed by former Speaker Rayburn (D. Tex.) last year. Velde says he'll permit televising some hearings to "enhance" the committee's prestige. Keating favors televising the continuing investigation of Communists in the United Nations.

MONOTONY alone could stymie this plan, since there is so much overlapping. No less than three committees in each house have launched probes of "subversion" although GOP leaders earlier said they hoped to prevent such overlaps.

For example, the Defense Dept. in 1952 had to testify to virtually the same thing to no less than 30 different subcommittees investigating it at the same time.

Last year, when they didn't control the committees, Republicans charged there was — in the words of Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.)— "excessive overstaffing."

They're silent on this point now. McCarthy says he'll double his staff, and Velde wants to increase his committee's present staff of 50.



"This new bill of yours . . . besides costing the taxpayers millions, do you know what it will cost us personally?"

Oveta Steps In Where GOP Fears To Tread

LEAVE IT TO the ladies—some of them will spill the beans almost every time. Take the case of Oveta Culp Hobby, the wartime WAC director and anti-labor Houston publisher who has returned to Washington as federal security administrator.

Before an audience of 1500 select Republican women — including the wives of most of the Cabinet members and other high-ranking appointees of Pres. Eisenhower—Mrs. Hobby outlined some of the things the GOP is going to do to social legislation.

Mrs. Hobby didn't spell it out, but she made plain the ax is about to swing. (Her views were aired way back in the social pages of the Washington Star.)

For example, Mrs. Hobby sweepingly declared that some of the New Deal-Fair Deal social welfare programs "may have been needed at the time but is now obsolescent." The GOP, she said, is trying to figure out "what to save, what to modify and what to change radically."

The new FSA chief also avowed that, while it would be unfair "to junk at once all that came to us from the preceding Administration," it would be "as unfair to the nation to make permanent all past legislation which was intended for emergency action."

At campaign times, Republicans don't mention the words, but Mrs. Hobby also said the GOP is engaged in what she called thoughtful planning on where it will whittle and where it will whack.

Mrs. Hobby as FSA chief now is sitting in on Eisenhower Cabinet meetings. There have been reports of moves to strip the Labor Dept. of some of its remaining functions and shift them to FSA, perhaps even transforming that agency into a Health and Welfare Dept.

Sharp Curb On Welfare Urged

The business-supported Tax Foundation last week came out with proposals to cut federal welfare grants and legislation and turn such service over to the states.

The tax outfit quoted a survey of various state officials, all of whom were in favor of taking over present U. S. functions.

Powers of the Federal Security Agency to set "floors" under state welfare programs using U. S. funds would be restricted, for example. Another proposal was to extend relative responsibility laws which are used to disqualify applicants for public assistance, old age and other welfare payments.

CIO Board To Consider T-H Changes

THE FIRST meeting of the CIO Executive Board since the Atlantic City convention in December will be held Feb. 5 and 6, with representatives from each CIO affiliate scheduled to attend.

It will be preceded by a meeting of the CIO Executive Committee, made up of the three top officers and the vice presidents, on Feb. 3 and 4. Both sessions will be held in National headquarters in Washington.

The principal item on the agenda for both meetings is expected to be legislative developments. Earmarked for particularly detailed discussion are pending congressional hearings and CIO-proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

The Executive Board also is expected to take formal action on a pledge by the late CIO Pres. Philip Murray to help finance the proposed Truman Memorial Library. Shortly before he died, Murray pledged $150,000 from the CIO and $100,000 from the CIO Steelworkers, which he also headed.

Benson For End Of Meat Grading

Ezra T. Benson, Secretary of Agriculture, last week said he is "doing all possible" to end grading of meat. He said removal of OPS compulsory grading "would be a good thing for all segments of the industry and the consuming public."

For 7 Long Years, Mill Owner 'Ducks' The Union

THE PIEDMONT Cotton Mills manufactures duck at Egan, Ga., and it's a "duck" mill in more than one meaning. For seven years, it has "ducked" bargaining with the CIO Textile Workers, and it's still getting away with it.

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans recently called both sides into chambers and lectured them for two hours. It acted after the National Labor Relations Board petitioned that the firm be cited for contempt of court for failing to obey a court order now two years old.

According to H. D. Lisk and Earl Taylor, TWUA representatives, the judges ordered the company to make written proposals to the union and the union to make alternate proposals. Under the court order, there will be fact-to-face collective bargaining for 14 days with a court stenographer paid by the company to take down all proceedings. Both parties are to report back to the court by Mar. 2, the union men reported.

Back in January, 1951, the court found the mills guilty of refusing to bargain with TWUA, ordered the firm to negotiate, reinstate the local's president fired for union activity and pay certain sums to other workers fired.

It remains to be seen whether the court action will permit Piedmont Mills to continue "ducking." TWUA said that Thomas Lift, the mill's owner, and John H. Weekes, his lawyer, gave the impression that the court action will not cause the firm to make a proposal acceptable to the union.

The concern is an old hand at "ducking."

TWUA was certified in 1945 as collective bargaining agent for the 600 workers in the mill village at the outskirts of Atlanta.

The firm refused to renew the next year. TWUA charged refusal to bargain and was upheld by the NLRB—but not until 1948.

The company appealed to the courts. It was not until 1951 that it was ordered to bargain.

TWUA tried all through 1951 and 1952 to get the firm to bargain. According to the NLRB brief seeking a citation for criminal contempt of court, the company stalled, evaded bargaining and finally refused to meet with the union.

TWUA said Egan is one of the worst mill villages in the South. The Wage and Hour Administration, two years ago found the plant paying a minimum of 75c an hour, when the figure should have been 87c, the union reported.

A Republican Said It—

"Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital, and deserves much the higher consideration."

CIO Board Says—

'Taft Amendments Fall Short Of Ike's Stand'

Here are the texts in large part of statements adopted by the CIO Executive Board at its two-day meeting in Washington:

Taft-Hartley Amendments

THE AMENDMENTS to the Taft-Hartley Act proposed by Sen. Taft do not carry the promise of Pres. Eisenhower to restore justice and fairness to our labor-management relations law.

Some of the Taft amendments, to be sure, do represent a limited improvement in the present law. However, other amendments impose additional anti-labor restrictions, or are designed to hamper and embarrass the administration of the act.

On the whole, Sen. Taft's amendments do not go even as far toward improving the law as his 1949 amendments, which were inadequate and in certain respects were a backward step.

The 1953 Taft amendments do not deal with the truly fundamental issues of Taft-Hartley. They fall far short of eliminating government-by-injunction and they do not restore the Norris-LaGuardia Act. They do not remove the undue governmental interference which Taft-Hartley has imposed on collective bargaining. In fact, certain of these amendments increase this interference.

The Taft proposals do not strengthen the right of workers to organize. They do not, except for the amendment dealing with the right of economic strikers to vote, rid the Taft-Hartley Law of the provisions designed to harass and weaken unions.

Finally they do not simplify and clarify the law, nor do they reduce the present inordinate delays in its procedures and enforcement. While one Taft bill provides minor improvements in Labor Board procedures, another creates a new administrative set-up that will cause further complications and delays in the Board's already cumbersome procedures.

Sen. Taft proposes to split the Labor Board into two separate agencies. One headed by an Administrator would replace the already independent general counsel. The other agency would be an enlarged board. Functioning separately together, they would add chaos to the already existing confusion.

It is easy to see further delays in this weird set-up. It is hard to understand how the board will function at all.

Another step backwards is the Taft amendment dealing with so-called "employer free speech" provision of the law. In 1949, Sen. Taft proposed to narrow the scope of this provision, which employers have used as an instrument of anti-labor intimidation and coercion. In his present amendment, however, Sen. Taft would give more license to employers to engage in anti-labor intimidation and coercion, even to the point of making a free Labor Board election impossible of achievement.

The CIO will soon present to Congress its views on each of the Taft amendments. Meanwhile, let no one get the impression that these Taft amendments meet the standard of justice and fairness to labor promised by Pres. Eisenhower.

Reuther Quizzed On TV Feb. 15

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on the CBS television broadcast, "Man of the Week," on Sunday, Feb. 15.

The program is seen on many CBS TV stations at 3:30 p.m. Reuther will be interviewed by a panel of leading Washington newspapermen.

Comment On Ike's Message

PRES. EISENHOWER'S State of the Union message contains many broad generalities with which few Americans would disagree. The implementation of these broad objectives by specific constructive legislation on the part of a Congress led by a reactionary Republican leadership remains to be seen.

This message, like the Inaugural address devoted primarily to international affairs, reveals a division between the outlook of Pres. Eisenhower and the Republican party and their Dixiecrat allies in Congress.

IT'S A GAG, SON!—Caught in a mirthquake was CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, "fall guy" at a Saints and Sinners luncheon in New York. He was given an oversize spark plug, as a "reminder" of his presidency of the CIO Auto Workers, by Harold Hoffman, once governor of New Jersey.

Notwithstanding the general tone of the message and some forward-looking proposals, such as improving social security, the message both expressly and through omission, caused us considerable concern.

Among the matters of concern to us are:

1. No reference whatsoever to our national objective for insuring full employment through proper governmental policies and programs. Only an economic program and government policies dedicated to insuring full employment can guarantee our continuing prosperity.

2. No reference whatsoever was made to improving our minimum wage law, now at an inadequate 75c an hour. Without improvement to at least $1.25 per hour, the minimum wage law does not adequately protect against sub-standard living conditions.

3. No reference to a broad civil rights program. The specific and desirable reference to eliminating segregation in the District of Columbia and Armed Forces merely serves to highlight the discrimination which is rampant in other parts of the country.

4. The recommendation against the enactment of standby controls after Apr. 30, and the recommendation against strengthening present inadequate rent controls.

We have joined Pres. Eisenhower in holding that wage and price controls, except for rents, should now be eliminated. However, we think the national interest requires the immediate adoption of legislation for standby controls in the event that inflationary pressures accumulate.

5. No reference whatsoever to the desirability of a comprehensive public housing program for the low income groups now condemned to the nation's slums. No reference to the necessity for housing for our nation's veterans now gouged by landlords taking advantage of abolition or relaxation of rent controls.

6. No reference to a public works program which, if properly planned, can be a bulwark against any decline in our nation's economy when the impact of the curtailment of our defense program is felt.

7. No reference to the foreign economic aid program in general and in particular to the future of the Point Four program, which must be a cornerstone of the positive aspects of our nation's foreign policy.

These omissions, others which could be cited, and the general philosophy of Pres. Eisenhower's laissez faire approach can result in grave economic dislocations to our country and its people.

We hope that as Pres. Eisenhower recommends specific legislation to the Congress he will come to recognize that an economic program based on the absolute necessity for full employment and the utilization of the great productive capacity of our democracy is essential.

We reaffirm what we have often said that we can have both liberty and security in America. We know that Pres. Eisenhower joins with us in this belief. We call upon him to express these beliefs in a practical program of constructive economic and social policies.

Communist Anti-Semitism

IN RECENT MONTHS indisputable evidence of anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and the Communist satellite nations have pierced the Iron Curtain. The results of this developing new Soviet policy are tangible.

In Moscow, Jewish doctors are arrested and undoubtedly will be executed. In East Germany, the handful of Jews who survived Hitler's anti-Semitism are rushing for their lives away from Stalinist anti-Semitism into democratic Western Berlin.

In Budapest, the head of the Jewish Community suddenly renounces the charitable work of the Jewish organizations. In Czechoslovakia and Rumania, there are reports of suicides and pervading fear among the Jewish population.

No policy of any totalitarian government ever comes as a complete surprise however brutal it may be, however it may reverse a previous policy. In years

Barden Beats NAM Drums For Industry Contract Curbs

REP. BARDEN (D. N. C.), who was chairman of the House Labor Committee in the last Congress and now is ranking minority member, gives his views on Taft-Hartley Act changes to the National Association of Manufacturers in the current issue of the NAM magazine, U. S. A.

It sounds more like the NAM talking to a Congressman than it does like a Congressman talking to the NAM.

Barden, one of the sturdier Dixiecrats, hasn't voted with labor on anything since Oct. 5, 1949, when he opposed a motion to recommit a bill to improve social security in order to make way for a weaker measure.

He begins his NAM article by laying down as fact some of the propaganda the NAM and other anti-union groups have been spewing for years—that T-H hasn't hurt any unions, that organized labor is as "big" as organized industry, that a few union leaders can bring some or all of the country's economy to a standstill even against the wishes of their members, and that individual members must be "protected" from their unions.

Then he gets into a confusing discussion of industry-wide and company-wide bargaining. Like many big business groups, Barden talks against industry-wide bargaining (covering many companies in one industry, like in the northern coal mines) but he indicates his main goal is curbing company-wide bargaining (which means a contract by one union with all plants of one firm, like U. S. Steel or General Motors). And then he tosses in a few words on "pattern bargaining" to add to the haze.

Barden says his main concern is strikes in basic industries that bring about "a complete shutdown of vital services and deprive the country of essential materials, and sometimes involve even national safety."

The national emergency provisions of T-H haven't worked, he declares, "aside from the refusal of the Chief Executive to use" them. He examines the reasons for and against a prohibition on industry-wide bargaining, and rejects such a proposal. He also turns down as impractical plans to bring unions within the scope of the anti-trust laws.

"My suggestion," he concludes, "is that there need be no interference with collective bargaining practices now in effect—until and after such collective bargaining has become a threat to the national health, safety or security.

"But once there has been such a threat, and the emergency provisions of Taft-Hartley have been invoked to meet such a threat, it is my opinion that industrywide bargaining in that industry must thereafter be prohibited by law . . .

"Penalties for violation (by either labor or management) of the proposed law could take the form of unfair labor practice proceedings as now provided in the Taft-Hartley Act for other abuses of the collective bargaining process, or the violations could be made subject to the provisions of the anti-trust laws, or both."

Whee!

Wyngate Rides Again

A bill to "establish equality of economic power," between labor and management, the standard reactionary description for stacking things against a union, was introduced last week by Rep. Wyngate Lucas (D. Tex.), a member of the House Labor Committee. His measure would prohibit bargaining on a broader scale than the plant level and would outlaw industry-wide, unionwide, group and regional bargaining.

CIO Board Prepares T-H Amendments

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

CIO'S 46-member Executive Board held its first full-dress meeting since the election of Pres. Walter Reuther in Washington last week and covered a wide range of key policy matters.

In the course of a heavy two-day schedule, the Board took the following actions:

1. Named an 11-man unity committee to meet with representatives of the AFL in Washington on February 24 to discuss possible courses to organic unity between CIO and AFL. (Story on this page.)

2. Issued a sharp attack on the amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act proposed by Sen. Taft (R. O.). The Board after approving a detailed analysis of the Taft amendments, said "they do not carry the promise of President Eisenhower to restore justice and fairness to our labor-management relations law." (See Page 2.)

3. Formulated general attitude on the basic amendments needed to Taft-Hartley, about which CIO witnesses will testify at forthcoming hearings of the Senate and House Labor Committees.

4. Voiced "considerable" concern over numerous omissions in Pres. Eisenhower's State of the Union message, particularly the fact that there was "no reference whatsoever to our national objective for insuring full employment," and warned that "the general philosophy of Pres. Eisenhower's laissez faire approach can result in grave economic dislocations to our country and its people."

The CIO statement reaffirmed that "we can have both liberty and security in America" and called upon Eisenhower "to express these beliefs in a practical program of constructive economic and social policies."

5. Endorsed a letter from CIO Pres. Reuther to Pres. Eisenhower, in which the CIO leader called for immediate action to end wage controls and thereby cut down hardship for workers involved in thousands of cases pending before the dying Wage Stabilization Board. (See Page 7.)

6. Shuffled assignments to major CIO standing and special committees, with the purpose of better "sharing the work" among CIO's executive officers, vice-presidents and board members. (See Page 6.)

7. Ratified purchase of the national CIO headquarters building from the CIO Steelworkers, for a sum of $500,000. A joint statement by CIO officers and Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the steel union pointed out the move had been long contemplated in order to provide more space both for CIO and for the Washington offices of the union.

8. Assailed growing anti-Semitism throughout the Soviet world, and called upon the Dept. of State to keep up a string of protests against the Communist governments on this issue.

9. Reaffirmed past CIO statements on conserving the nation's valuable natural resources —which some GOP leaders would like to turn over to private ownership for profit-making exploitation. Called for "federal public ownership and operation" of all atomic energy resources, facilities and plants.

10. Expressed grief over the death of 87 - year - old Charles Ervin, long associated with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and known as the "dean of American labor journalists." (See Page 7.)

"Considerable concern" was voiced by the CIO board on the omission of detailed domestic policies from the new President's message to Congress early last week, apart from a "forward looking proposal" on social security.

Along with the absence of "full employment" recommendations, the CIO statement cited Eisenhower's silence on increasing minimum wages, a broad civil rights program, standby controls, a comprehensive public housing program, planning for public works as a "bulwark" against depression, and no reference to foreign aid.

Shortly after the meeting adjourned on Feb. 6, Reuther and Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers crossed LaFayette Square in downtown Washington for a visit with Pres. Eisenhower at the White House.

PURPOSE of the meeting, which occurred as The CIO News was going to press, was not revealed. It was the first get-together of Eisenhower with CIO officers since the day after Thanksgiving, when a group met with the then President-elect at the Hotel Commodore in New York.

On Feb. 5, Reuther spoke at a luncheon at the National Press Club in Washington. The turnout of several hundred newsmen and their invited guests (it was one of the largest crowds in recent months) heard the CIO president call for a vast up-turn in the nation's production to insure both articles of civilian use and the weapons of defense.

REUTHER hammered hard at the need for discarding the "fear of economic abundance" harbored by many business people.

"We believe that men do not have to trade their freedom for bread," he said.

"We have to realize that we cannot make peace and freedom secure by sharing scarcity . . . When we're cutting up a little pie, there is a lot greater chance for conflict than when we're cutting up a big pie."

Reuther spoke of the desirability of labor unity, about which the CIO and AFL will speak formally later this month. But he emphasized that the AFL would have to clean its house of all crooks and racketeers before CIO would be willing to proceed very far down the road toward merger. (See Page 6)

A number of changes in the leadership and composition of CIO's standing and special committees were approved by the Board. The general reshuffling of posts had been approved by the Board last December when Pres. Reuther proposed that all executive officers and vice presidents share more equally in the task of carrying out the organization's functions.

Five major committee chairmanships were unaffected. They were International Affairs, Economic Policy, Anti-Discrimination, Oragnization, and Maritime.

PRES. REUTHER became chairman of the Legislative Committee; Pres. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers was named to head the Veterans Committee; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Clothing Workers was named chairman of the Union Label Committee.

In other shifts, Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union was selected as chairman of the Social Security Committee; Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, Resources & Regional Development Committee; Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, Community Service Committee; Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, Health and Safety, and Vice Pres. James Thimmes of the steel union as head of the Housing committee.

Pres. Reuther succeeded the late Philip Murray as chairman of the Executive Board of the Political Action Committee. USA-CIO Acting Pres. David J. McDonald continues as PAC secretary-treasurer, and Jack Kroll as director.

Cleveland Picked For Convention

CIO's fifteenth constitutional convention will be held next fall in Cleveland.

The Executive Board set Nov. 16 for opening date of the convention, with the Executive Committee and board meeting the previous week. The Hollenden Hotel will be convention headquarters, with sessions in the Public Auditorium.

CIO's last convention in Cleveland was in 1949, when clean-up proceedings against Communist-dominated unions were initiated.

CIO Buys Headquarters Building From Steel Union

THE CIO last week announced purchase from the Steelworkers union of the CIO national headquarters building in Washington.

With the sale, the USA-CIO announced that it is moving its Washington legislative office to another building.

A joint announcement by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and the other CIO executive officers and David J. McDonald, USA-CIO acting president, said:

"We have concluded an amicable arrangement for the transfer of the ownership of the headquarters building occupied by the CIO from the Steelworkers union to the CIO.

"This transfer has been contemplated for a long time. Both the CIO and the United Steelworkers of America need additional space. This arrangement will afford the CIO the space now occupied by the Steelworkers in the CIO building. The Steelworkers have leased space for their Washington purposes at 1001 Connecticut Avenue, NW., to which they will move in approximately one month.

"The purchase price for the transfer is $500,000, representing the appraisal value of the building and equipment."

Talmadge Foe Wins In Georgia

J. L. Pilcher won a special congressional election in Georgia last week, leading a six-man field that included four supporters of the Talmadge machine.

Pilcher, a farmer and businessman critical of the Talmadge Dixiecrats, won the vacancy created by the death of Rep. Eugene Cox at Christmas time. Cox was one of the worst Dixiecrats in Congress.

The almost complete vote gave Pilcher 11,704 votes to 9600 for Grady Rawls and 6000 for H. L. Wingate, both Talmadge men.

11 CIO Officials Picked For Unity Talks With AFL

THE CIO Executive Board last week named an 11-man committee, composed of top CIO officials, to meet with an AFL committee to discuss unity between the two big labor organizations.

The first meeting of the combined committees will be on Feb. 24 in Washington.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will lead the 11-man committee which includes the other executive officers of CIO, Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president, and James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer.

Others on the committee are: David J. McDonald, acting president, Steelworkers; Joseph Beirne, president, Communications Workers; L. S. Buckmaster, president, Rubber Workers; Joseph Curran, president, Maritime Union; O. A. Knight, president, Oil Workers; Michael Quill, president, Transport Workers; Emil Rieve, president, Textile Workers, and Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer, Clothing Workers.

REPRESENTING the AFL will be a nine-man committee headed by Pres. George Meany. Other AFL representatives will be William L. Hutcheson, Carpenters; Matthew Woll, Photoengravers; Daniel J. Tobin, Teamsters; Harry C. Bates, Bricklayers; W. C. Doherty, Letter Carriers; David Dubinsky, Ladies Garment Workers; Charles J. MacGowan, Boilermakers; and Daniel W. Tracy, Electrical Workers.

Naming of the committees followed a recent Washington luncheon meeting between Reuther and Meany.

The Press Is Happy

The 80%-one-party press hauled out all the gaudy adjectives of praise to be found in Webster's Dictionary in their comments about Pres. Eisenhower's first State of the Union Message.

Like a lot of other products, the message had its good points, its bad points, and a good many half way in between. As a minimum, it was a good deal better than could have been expected in the calamitous event that Sen. Taft had won the GOP nomination and managed to achieve his lifetime ambition.

Pres. Eisenhower's views on many issues are not altogether clear—even after a long campaign and a lengthy message to the Congress. There are many points in both his domestic and international programs that need considerable clarification.

It's unfortunate that the President did not discuss the question of full employment, and all its implications.

In jobs for all lies America's hope for a stable future. But there are important men in the GOP, the heads of great corporations, who dream of the day when hungry men will always be in supply as a cheap labor force.

Any policy, any program that does not work for abundance, for full employment will not serve the nation well.

It is to be hoped, as the Eisenhower program is revealed in fuller detail, that generally constructive points will be made much more specific, reliance on 1932 economic principles will be forsaken, and the full employment philosophy fully accepted by the Administration.

Leadership Team

Three months after the election of Walter Reuther as head of the CIO, the unity and teamwork towards which he promised to strive are rapidly coming into being.

The recent CIO Executive Board meeting again nailed the speculative gossip that the CIO would be unable to survive. It was a meeting of full discussion, with a voice for everyone—and it showed that the unions of CIO and their leaders are working together.

The resolutions and the discussion clearly demonstrate that the CIO is on the march. Its goals are clear, its purpose is steady, its stride is firm. Both officers and members of this organization can be proud of the record that they continue to build.

A 'Happy Warrior'

When Charlie Ervin died last week at 87, millions of American workers lost a friend they could ill afford to lose.

For some 45 years, he was in and out of the labor movement, always fighting labor's good fight—no matter how tough the sledding or how unpopular the cause.

Charlie Ervin was a labor newspaperman, long an editor and a publicity counsel for the CIO Clothing Workers. As the CIO Executive Board noted in mourning the loss of this "happy warrior," he helped bring to that union "a great sense of crusading spirit and a picture of the great and happy future" which unionism will bring.

Strength, intelligence, daring and fortitude were common factors in men on labor of the generation of Charlie Ervin, the ACWA's Sidney Hillman and the CIO's own Philip Murray. And that strength and fortitude will serve as well in the future.

In Other Words—

One Answer To One-Party Press

The one-party press results from the stake publishers have in achieving a big business-dominated government, said Ralph B. Novak, executive vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild, in an address to the New York Guild local. In this article from the Guild Reporter, he outlines his views.

By RALPH B. NOVAK

WE HAVE HEARD a great deal of discussion since the election about the one-party press in this country. It seems to have come as quite a shock to many people that the vast majority of papers in this country should support the Republican candidate and the Republican philosophy.

According to Editor & Publisher's final poll, 67.34% of the daily newspapers with 80.24% of the total daily circulation supported Pres. Eisenhower.

Pres. Eisenhower received 55% of the total popular vote. Gov. Stevenson was supported by 14.52% of the daily newspapers with only 10.88% of the total daily circulation. Gov. Stevenson received 44% of the total popular vote.

I am sure that if people had thought about it a little bit, they would not have been so surprised. Despite all the cries on the part of the press that it is a quasi-public institution, it has come more and more to act as just what it is, a business enterprise. Since the Republican Party is the party of property and business enterprises, where else would a publisher's interest lie?

Waste Of Time

For the past several months we have heard many people cry out against the one-party press; many fine, intelligent, well-intentioned people. Some of them have called for probes and commissions, to study freedom of the press.

Some have suggested that the press set its own house in order by investigating itself. My own opinion is that this would be a vast waste of time. While confession may be good for the soul, I am extremely doubtful that the publishers investigating themselves will confess or would confess to abuses of freedom of the press.

In my opinion, most publishing enterprises have the same attitude as the Los Angeles Times took in an editorial on Nov. 1. This editorial was entitled, "We Can Take It And We Like It." This piece was written in reference to the criticism the press had incurred from 94 authors. You may recall that the authors found that newspapers furnished unfavorable placement of stories concerning Democrats and unfavorable volume of Democratic news. Concerning the foregoing finding, the Times said that the briefest and the best answer to these complaints is "Oh, nuts"!

While commissions and studies may highlight the problem, I do not believe that they will make for any change in it. My opinion is that the only way to bring about a change in this unfair balance is for the public, including Guild members, to take a greater interest in the newspaper industry.

Most newspaper properties are closely held and are responsive only to their owners and not to pressure of the general public as a rule. Newspapers, being business enterprises, are susceptible to the same type of pressure to which any other business enterprise is susceptible. If they cannot sell their product because of their attitude, they will soon change their attitude.

Supply Competition

Of course, even this type of pressure is not valid in cities which have but one newspaper. There the only answer seems to be to supply competition by starting newspapers. You may remember that the Guild talked about such a project. The project today is not dead.

A few weeks ago I met with a group of Senators and they, too, talked about starting a newspaper. One newspaper, or even two newspapers, on a national scale will not correct the evil. What is needed is many newspapers across the country, owned by the people and operated in their best interests, and with full compliance with the tenets of freedom of the press.

That day must come, and will come; but only when the people themselves are sufficiently aroused to do something about it. Looking for the publishers to do something about it themselves, I think, is unrealistic.

If they did nothing about it in the years of their futility, years in which they supported the Republican candidate only to see him defeated, they certainly will not do anything about it now when they will claim that with their help the Republican candidate was elected.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

THERE IS A KEY and basic conflict between the new Administration of Pres. Eisenhower and the outgoing Administration of Pres. Truman over the role of government in combating a recession.

The new President's view of this role was expressed in a speech at Boston the last week of the campaign. He said:

"I will enlist every resource—of private industry and of the federal government — to protect him (the worker) against the awful consequences of a depression and joblessness. I will work unceasingly to build an economy that will maintain for him a high level of wages with steady purchasing power so he and his family can share fully in the comforts of American living."

The first sentence describes what he will do after a depression hits. The second sentence explains what he will do before a depression. He has detailed this more in other speeches and statements.

Danger Of 'Tight' Dollar

There will be heavy reliance on "indirect controls" including fiscal, money and credit policies. Inflation would be halted and the present prosperity maintained by raising interest rates, balancing the budget and reducing spending. On the other hand, deflation or a recession would be stopped by lowering interest rates and reducing taxes.

One point has been continually stressed by Eisenhower and his advisers: the first and most important thing for which to strive is a stable dollar.

A stern warning has been issued against this policy in the final report of President Truman's outgoing Council of Economic Advisers. They stated:

"We should guard against the dangerous solution of trying to avoid the problem of preventing inflation by abandoning the pursuit of full employment . . . We must realize that our primary purpose is full production and employment and the fair distribution of this abundance among all people and all groups . . . These comments apply to monetary policy."

They are saying that basic stress on a stable or "tight" dollar may conflict with the primary goal—which is full production and full employment. Such a policy can restrict expansion of productive capacity by making money for such expansion harder to get.

Expand Our Economy

These economic advisers believe that we are going to avoid a recession only if our economy continues to expand. This means that the buying power of the people has to increase several billion dollars each year. The council believes that this will have to come by increasing money incomes—largely those of workers.

These varying approaches reach right into the legislative field:

Eisenhower's support of Taft-Hartley, even though willing to see it amended, presumes acceptance of its recognized central economic purpose—that of curbing labor's bargaining power. Truman would repeal Taft-Hartley.

Eisenhower would oppose continuing an excess profits tax. Truman would support it.

Eisenhower would favor increased interest rates. Truman has opposed them.

Eisenhower would oppose direct wage and price controls except in all-out war. Truman would use them to combat inflation and stabilize the economy.

These are the courses of action which follow naturally from the positions each side has taken. However, political considerations and strong pressures may force them to alter their courses.

Reuther Faith In Worker Hailed By Church Paper

A CHURCHMAN'S praise for CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther for his "working faith for the worker" and for his alertness to "the moral and spiritual issues in politics and economics" was voiced recently by The Christian Advocate.

In a lengthy editorial, the Methodist Church magazine said in part:

"Americans who believe that labor leaders, as well as employers of labor and government officials, ought to depend on religious faith will be glad that the CIO has chosen Walter Reuther as its leader. He has a working faith for the worker.

"He has often been described as a combination of scholar, fighter and orator. Surely he is one of the most daring of labor's leaders, and one of the most progressive. He was crippled by a shot fired by an assassin in an attempt on his life."

The Christian Advocate editorial then discusses the possibility of labor unity through pending CIO-AFL negotiations and continues:

"Walter Reuther is a thorough believer in the democratic processes. He knows the value of compromise and the importance of teamwork. He is strong for the free exercise of public opinion, and he has studied the ways of molding and reflecting it.

"Most important of all, he is alert to the moral and spiritual issues in politics and economics. We may expect from him responsible and responsive leadership."

Nathan Reports—

Falling Farm Prices Put A Chill On Ike's New Agriculture Chief

Last week the Agriculture Dept. reported that farm prices dropped for the fifth straight month, posing an immediate problem for the new Administration. In his regular CIO broadcast over the ABC network, Economist Robert Nathan discussed that problem.

By ROBERT NATHAN

THE NEW SECRETARY of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, will soon learn that the climate in Washington can be hot even in the middle of winter. Farm production is high and farm prices have been falling.

The farmers and the senators and congressmen from the farm states are keeping a close watch on Sec. Benson to see what he does about farm price supports.

Nearly one out of every seven persons in the United States lives on farms. In the old days a much larger portion of the total population resided in rural areas. One of the signs of a developed and industrialized country is the relatively low ratio of rural to urban populations. With mechanization and fertilizers and irrigation, less workers on the farms can feed more people in the cities.

The 23 million persons on the farms are politically as well as economically important. They are pretty well organized. They may be highly individualistic, but they want prosperity and economic safety. They want the government to help them to be prosperous and secure.

Effect On Consumers

The new Administration is faced with many policy problems in the field of agriculture. These policies are important not only because they affect the 23 million people who live on farms, but also because the other 135 million Americans are very much concerned about the prices they pay for the food they buy and for the cotton and wool and other raw materials that go into finished products our city population produces and buys.

Agriculture production is high. Crops were near record levels last year. Farm prices are down. At the present time the wholesale level of farm prices is off one-seventh from the peak in March 1951.

In November, for the first time in more than two years, farm prices were below parity. That means, the prices paid by farmers were lower than the prices received by farmers, relative to the base period used by the Dept. of Agriculture for measuring parity.

There is the dilemma of assuring fair prices to the farmer and at the same time giving the city consumer a good break. Various farm price support programs were developed under the New Deal and Fair Deal Administrations. On the whole, these programs resulted in reasonably equitable arrangements between the farm and city populations.

Pres. Eisenhower in his campaign committed himself to continue price supports for farm goods. Benson hasn't been quite so firm on this point. Just what new policies will emerge—no one can yet tell.

Some Answers Coming

But some answers will soon be forthcoming. Under a present price support policy, the Government is buying butter in large quantities to prevent the price of butter from falling below 90% of parity. Within a couple of months a new policy will have to be set on butter, so Sec. Benson will soon be on the spot.

It is highly unlikely that we will go back to a completely free market for farm goods without regard for the well-being of the farmer. The prosperity of our rural population is important to the city worker because the farmers buy many factory goods.

Policies should be designed to give fair prices and continued buying power to the farm population, and at the same time, to make farm products available at fair prices to city dwellers.

Vic Reuther Says—

Europe Fears GOP Congress Doesn't Know The Score

By VICTOR G. REUTHER
CIO European Representative

IF THE PEOPLE of Western Europe, instead of the people of America, had been privileged to vote in the U. S. election last Nov. 4, chances are about 10 to 1 they would have sent Adlai Stevenson to the White House.

Eisenhower came to Europe in the dark days of the last war as a liberator. He was still a popular conquering hero when he left SHAPE last summer to begin his successful campaign for the Presidency. Most Western Europeans regard him as one of the greatest of modern generals.

Stevenson, on the other hand, was little more than a symbol—but he was a symbol of the generous aid America had given Europe during the past four years under a Democratic Administration.

Unfriendly To Labor

The Eisenhower victory came at a time when Europeans were beginning to express concern over growing U. S. emphasis on military assistance and decreasing emphasis on economic aid. That's part of the explanation.

Pres. Roosevelt also was a hero to most Europeans. He and his Administration were known over the Continent as the heads of the party friendly to labor. Truman strengthened the European belief that the Democratic Party was the party of labor.

When Eisenhower aligned himself with the Republicans he became head of the party unfriendly to labor and unsympathetic to workers' desires for economic and social progress. That is how a big part of European labor figures it—and this has created a condition with which the new Administration must deal because the U. S. has a big program in Europe and because labor plays a big role in European political affairs.

There is strong feeling over here that the new President is thoroughly familiar with this situation. But there is fear that the new Congress doesn't share Eisenhower's knowledge and appreciation of the facts of European political life.

And there is fear, too, that Eisenhower will be unwilling or unable to buck Congress if the latter decides it should put nearly all of its "aid eggs" in one big "military defense basket."

Too Little Bread Feared

This fear does not stem from labor belief that Western Europe should not be prepared to put up a strong military defense if the need arises. Labor favors such preparedness. But labor feels that a proper balance between bread and guns must be maintained.

It feels that preparations for the "hot" war that may never come must be made in such a way that the Reds will continue to lose ground in the "cold" war that is being fought throughout Western Europe today. (LPA)

"The trouble with you, Willis, is you're too willing to accept the world as it is."

'We Must Share Abundance'—

Reuther Meets Press, Urges Jobs For All

By GERVASE N. LOVE

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther "thought out loud" for some of Washington's foremost correspondents last week and told them about some of the things the CIO thinks might be done to solve the problems of the labor movement, the United States and the world.

He spoke at a jammed luncheon meeting of the National Press Club after receiving a generous hand from reporters representing hundreds of newspapers and news magazines.

Pres. Edward Koop of the Press Club introduced him as one "who probably knows more about General Motors than anyone except Charlie Wilson," and declared he was a man who could truthfully say "I'd Reuther be right than president."

Reuther told the correspondents and their guests, who included a number of CIO leaders, that the CIO believes the United States has the capacity to meet both the needs of armament and to create "the tools for peace." Its economy is "freedom's greatest asset," he declared.

Areas Of Agreement

How this capacity is used, he said, depends in large part on "what labor and management are able to work out in the way of a constructive climate to insure an expanding economy and full employment."

"We recognize no artificial limits," he declared.

The areas of agreement bulk larger than those of disagreement and must be expanded, he said.

"Fundamentally," he continued, "the struggle of the world we're leading is a struggle to find a way to satisfy man's basic, fundamental needs without sacrificing any of his freedoms. We believe that men do not have to trade their freedom for bread."

The CIO believes that the most fundamental unsolved problem in our own country is that of providing full employment in time of peace, he said.

"We believe we have to get greater acceptance of the need for a fight against this fifth fear of economic abundance," he declared.

"We have to realize that we cannot make peace and freedom secure by sharing scarcity. We must share abundance. When we're cutting up a little pie there is a lot greater chance for conflict than when we're cutting up a big pie."

The real test will come, he predicted, when defense production approaches its end. The opportunity offered us will be that of producing an abundance of peace-time goods to raise the living standards of the underprivileged in this country, he said, and to help the underprivileged of the rest of the world improve themselves.

In discussing specific questions, Reuther reminded the correspondents that the recent CIO convention passed a resolution to meet with the AFL and try to unite the labor movement "only on the basis of an honorable peace, with no surrender of principle and not as a sacrifice to political expediency."

Warns On Rackets

A "basic set of principles" must be worked out, he insisted, adding that one "we hope the AFL will face up to" is racketeering in some AFL unions.

"We are very encouraged," he added, "that the AFL Executive Board has taken the first step."

The CIO wants a united labor movement, he said, with all the Communists and racketeers kicked out. The CIO rid itself of nine Communist unions some years ago, he recalled.

Reuther described the Taft-Hartley Act as a "negative approach to a problem that requires a positive approach." Some of the amendments introduced by Sen. Taft (R.O.) will help with the "housekeeping and administration" of the act, he said, and some are bad, "but none is fundamental in character." He predicted ultimate repeal.

After his address he was asked many questions about the change in the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Price Index and outlined the CIO and UAW-CIO positions. He denied that the auto union tried to use the change to reopen its major contracts, and said that to settle the problem raised by the change "we'll do what all sensible people would do—we'll work it out."

He reiterated the CIO's pleasure at the appointment of Martin P. Durkin as secretary of labor. If a CIO man is named assistant secretary, he added, he is "confident" that he can contribute to the department's effectiveness.

Asked if he thought Durkin or Taft would have the greater influence on labor legislation, Reuther expressed the hope that Pres. Eisenhower "will have more influence in shaping the basic policies and legislative program of his Administration than the people at the other end of the axis."

Just Picture The Short Circuits!

If the Eisenhower Cabinet had "13 plumbers and one millionaire" instead of just about the opposite, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the National Press Club luncheon, "this town would be rocking."

"And you'd have to have a lot more electricians," he added, "because every member of the National Association of Manufacturers would blow his main fuse."

"WELCOME to the Press Club," says Pres. Edward Koop as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther signs guest register before addressing Washington's newspapermen's club.

Reuther, CIO Condemn Ike's Extension Of 'Old' BLS Index

PRES. EISENHOWER last week gave the Bureau of Labor Statistics the impossible task of reviving the old Consumer Price Index and issuing it simultaneously with the new one until June 30.

The CIO Executive Committee directed Stanley H. Ruttenberg to issue a statement objecting to the Administration's action as bowing to "political pressures by specific companies and representatives of industry groups."

It declared that "ill-considered actions of this type" can undermine the work of the BLS and shake public confidence in its cost of living figures.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, as president of the CIO Auto Workers, made public the text of an administrative letter advising UAW locals that the old index no longer is acceptable to the union as a basis for determining wage movements under escalator clauses in contracts with major producers and many other employers.

Durkin Dubious

Eisenhower's order was issued after Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin had pointed out that the department no longer had the money to continue the old index, as Congress had cut off funds at the end of 1952. Besides, he added, he preferred the new index in any case.

Ewan Clague, BLS commissioner, indicated clearly that any effort to develop an index figure for Jan. 15 would be impossible. All the BLS can do, he said, is to revive the old index in the best form it can. He warned that "allowance will have to be made for the problems we shall encounter in obtaining back prices as of Jan. 15."

In issuing the order to continue the old index for six months, the White House made it clear that the "official" reading will be that provided by the new index.

Although it branded the old index "obsolete," the statement said it will be kept up temporarily "for the purpose of meeting the needs of certain labor unions and business concerns which have contracts based on it."

The AFL, the Railroad Brotherhoods, Chairman Smith (R. N.J.) of the Senate Labor Committee and Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) of the House Labor Committee asked that it be continued. The UAW opposed it.

UAW Opposition

In his administrative letter to UAW locals, Reuther recalled that labor and industry have known for more than a year when the new index figure would begin. After the inauguration on Jan. 20, he said, "certain corporation pressure was exerted to have the government reconstitute the old BLS index."

The UAW made its opposition known to Durkin and Smith at meetings, and also sent them a long telegram on Jan. 26. In the wire he reminded them he had said the action then contemplated "would further complicate collective bargaining problems" which had appeared in negotiations already under way with major UAW-CIO employers.

He spelled out why failure to collect January prices made it impossible to compute the January index "in conformity with past practice." He particularly cited food prices, which have a weight of 35.1% of the old index and 30.1% of the new. They were not collected in January in 36 of the 56 cities where they had been gathered in the past, Reuther said, and "are now impossible to obtain."

He urged Durkin and Smith to reject "any effort to publish an artificial substitute for the old index for January."

The January figure is important because it will determine possible changes in UAW contracts covering nearly one million members. Any change is due to become effective on Mar. 1, but whatever figure the BLS comes up with for Jan. 15 will not be made public until some time in April.

Continue Talks

"As we stated in our telegram," the UAW-CIO administrative letter said, "the UAW-CIO felt that any effort to reconstitute the old index would be questionable and would, therefore, be unacceptable to the UAW-CIO.

"The decision of the Eisenhower Administration to continue the old index for a six-month period under these circumstances has not changed our position, and we are advising management that the union is prepared to continue negotiatons, and that further we consider management obligated under our agreements to continue to facilitate the conversion to the new BLS index . . .

"It does not . . . alter the basic soundness and correctness of the union's position, and we are confident that management will recognize the equity of our demands . . .

"The UAW-CIO's position remains sound and unchanged—our strategy will reflect developments in negotiations."

CIO Committee Chiefs Appointed

NEW CHAIRMEN of CIO standing committees were announced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther at last week's CIO Executive Board meeting.

The chairmen (in most cases they are CIO officers or vice presidents) are:

Legislative: Walter P. Reuther, with the CIO officers and vice presidents as other members.

International Affairs: Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers president.

Economic Policy: Emil Rieve, Textile Workers president.

Veterans: L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers president, chairman; Emil Mazey, Auto Workers secretary-treasurer, secretary.

Anti-Discrimination: James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer and Electrical Workers president.

Union Label: Frank Rosenblum, ACWA secretary-treasurer, chairman; Karl Feller, Brewery Workers president, secretary.

Organizational Policy, and Southern drive and general organizational subcommittees: Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president and director of organization and councils.

Social Security: Joseph P. Curran, Maritime Union president.

Resources and Regional Development: O. A. Knight, Oil Workers president.

Community Services: Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers president.

Health and Safety: Michael J. Quill, Transport Workers president.

Housing: James G. Thimmes, Steelworkers vice president.

Reuther was elected chairman of the Political Action Committee Executive Board, with PAC Sec. Treas. David J. McDonald, incoming USA-CIO president, and PAC Dir. Jack Kroll as board members.

Chairman of CIO special committees are:

Philip Murray Memorial: Rieve, chairman; Carey, secretary-treasurer.

Finance: Rosenblum.

Maritime: Curran.

Guaranteed Annual Wage: Otis Brubaker, USA-CIO research director.

WSB Shutting Down As Decontrol Orders Issued

THE GOVERNMENT'S economic controls program—featuring tight wage ceilings and relaxed price curbs—is going out the window.

Issued last weekend were executive orders by Pres. Eisenhower formally wiping out wage controls and ending almost all existing price ceilings.

The moves to end controls developed swiftly in the wake of Eisenhower's State of the Union message.

PRICE Stabilizer Joseph H. Freehill earlier said decontrolling of all meat prices — only beef had been under ceilings at all levels—and almost all consumer goods was in the works.

According to press dispatches, the order would affect most foods, textiles, clothing, numerous department store items, restaurant meals, etc.

The Eisenhower order provided that pending wage adjustments can be made immediately. However, authority was continued to impose penalties for past violations of regulations.

The Wage Stabilization Board earlier had started packing its bags.

Its first step was to case the processing of pending cases. Its second was to hand dismissal notices to its 1700 employes, effective Mar. 5.

The Salary Stabilization Board, with 340 employes, and the Railroad and Airline Wage Board, with a staff of 10, went through the same motions.

WSB operations in regional offices throughout the country were halted on orders from Washington headquarters, and lay-off notices given everybody from the lowest-rated clerk to the board members.

The moves followed by only one day Pres. Eisenhower's announcement, in his State of the Union message, that he did not intend to ask for continuation of wage and price controls when they expire Apr. 30.

The WSB action was announced to Washington employes by Chairman Charles Killingsworth.

"This is it," he told a staff meeting. "We're out of business."

Other emergency agencies also were facing heavy layoffs. Orders were expected soon dismissing most employes of the Economic Stabilization Agency, Office of Defense Mobilization, Defense Production Administration and National Production Authority. Total firings between now and Apr. 30 may reach 10,000, it was indicated.

When the dismissal notices went out last week, the board and its regional offices had about 9700 cases awaiting action. Many of them involved contracts negotiated by CIO unions with their employers.

8 Senators Again Urge Curb On Filibusters

CIVIL RIGHTS legislation on all fronts is shaping up in the Senate, with Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) and seven other Democrats last week launching a new drive to change Senate rules to make it easier to end filibusters.

Lehman introduced a resolution which would permit two-thirds of the Senators voting to end debate on "national emergency legislation" and a simple majority to invoke cloture on other matters. This would permit as few as 33 Senators to end debate after two days on national emergency bills and as few as 25 to stop filibusters on other matters.

"I believe the Senate must have effective rules which protect not only the majority's right to full and free debate, but also protect the majority in its right to vote on matters which affect the welfare of our country and the world," Lehman said.

THE SENATE beat down an effort to change the rules on filibusters at the beginning of the session, but the GOP leadership, which opposed the move, promised that the entire subject of cloture would be fully considered later in the year.

On another civil rights front, the Senate Judiciary Committee is considering legislation for a Constitutional amendment outlawing poll taxes in elections for federal office. The proposal was sponsored by Sen. Holland (D. Fla.) and nine other Southern Democrats.

Similar legislation was introduced in the last two Congresses but died in the committee each time. If passed by Congress, 36 states would have to ratify it before it became effective.

In the field of fair employment practices legislation, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has introduced a bill setting up a presidential "watch-dog" commission to study and make recommendations in civil rights matters. It would have no powers of enforcement.

HUMPHREY also has joined with Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) in reintroducing the Federal Equality of Opportunity in Employment Bill that died in the last Congress. He made clear that his new proposal is designed as a "moderate" step in an effort to get some kind of civil rights measure adopted this session.

Still another civil rights measure, introduced by Lehman and 18 others, would make assaults against servicemen a federal crime.

'Roll Call' Tells Filibuster Story

The full story of the filibuster, which the Dixiecrat-GOP coalition ordered continued in the Senate, is told in the newest publication of the CIO Political Action Committee.

"Roll Call," a pocket-sized magazine, is published by the CIO-PAC "in the belief that the business of the Congress of the United States is the business of the people and the people have a right to know what's happening to their business."

The first issue traces the history of the filibuster and documents of the recent unsuccessful battle to change Senate rules so as to eliminate this anti-democratic device.

Strengthening Of Walsh-Healey Act Proposed

A BILL to repeal the Fulbright Amendment which seriously weakened the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act was introduced last week by Sen. Green (D. R. I.).

Green called the Fulbright Amendment "a serious legislative error" which "merely adds another obstacle in the way of effective administration of the Walsh-Healey Act." He pointed out that the New England Governors' Textile Industry Committee shares his view.

The amendment, adopted in the last Congress over strenuous CIO protests, provides for court review of minimum wage determinations by the Secretary of Labor.

Reuther Writes To Ike: 'End Wage Freeze Now'

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week urged Pres. Eisenhower immediately to issue an executive order "terminating all wage controls." The text of Reuther's letter to the President follows:

IN DECEMBER 1952, the CIO Convention urged that in the present state of the economy, controls over wages were no longer necessary and should be removed.

In your State of the Union Message of Feb. 2, you stated that you did not intend to ask for a renewal of wage and price controls on Apr. 30, 1953. You also said that "in the meantime, steps will be taken to eliminate controls in an orderly manner."

In anticipation of the termination of wage controls, the Wage Stabilization Board has virtually ceased to function. Termination notices have been issued to the staff of the Board. More importantly, both the National Board and the Regional Boards have halted all work on pending cases.

As you know, under WSB regulations, many wage contracts mutually agreed upon by empoyers and their employes can be placed into effect only after approval by the WSB.

Other contracts are being negotiated daily. The result of the present situation, in which the Board has ceased to function is what the Wall Street Journal today called "the tightest wage freeze in history." Hundreds of thousands of workers are being denied wage benefits which have been negotiated through collective bargaining and which would be approved by the WSB in the normal course of its operations if that Board were still functioning.

I AM SURE that you did not intend that the result of your message of Feb. 2 should be the imposition of "the tightest wage freeze in history." In view of the pending termination of controls, however, continued processing of petitions by the Board would appear to be futile.

I urge you most emphatically, therefore, to take affirmative action to end this unfortunate situation by promptly issuing an Executive Order terminating all wage controls. Time is of the essence, and I am confident you share our desire to avoid further injustices to American wage earners and their families.

Charlie Ervin, Who Fought Labor's Good Fight, Dies At 87

By C. EDMUND FISHER

CHARLES W. ERVIN, dean of American labor journalists, died Feb. 5 at his home in Bronxville, N. Y. He was 87.

Ervin was public relations adviser of the CIO Clothing Workers since 1924 and associate editor of the union's official organ, The Advance, since 1944. He was a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild.

When word was received of Ervin's death, the CIO Executive Board in session at Washington adopted a resolution and stood in silent tribute for a minute.

Ervin was eulogized by ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood and Executive Vice Pres. Willian Pollock of the Textile Workers.

"During his more than four score years, Charlie Ervin gave to the workers of America his great journalistic talents, his tremendous vitality, and his warm humanitarian sense," the board resolution said.

"Whenever workers needed organization, whenever they strove for a better, more dignified life, Charlie Ervin could be found."

During the late 30's, Ervin was a valued aide of the late Sidney Hillman, founder and first president of ACWA, in the Textile Workers Organizing Committee campaigns and in the Amalgamated membership drive among the shirt workers.

FOR OVER 45 years, Ervin espoused what were then unpopular causes including suffrage for women, the abolition of child labor, war opposition, and supporting labor's right to bargain collectively. He stumped numerous platforms up and down the country expounding his views on many subjects in a powerful voice that belied his years.

Born in Philadelphia on Nov. 22, 1865, he was the son and grandson of textile and machinery manufacturers. His grandfather built one of the first textile mills in that city and his father was a manufacturer of heavy machinery.

In 1906, Ervin became active in the labor and Socialist movements. He engaged in many bouts with the authorities, notably during, and shortly after World War I, when as editor of the New York Call, he ran afoul of the then U. S. Atty. Gen. Palmer and Postmaster Gen. Burleson.

Asked recently what he thought he had accomplished in life, Charlie Ervin replied:

"I feel perfectly satisfied if I have been able to show the masses how they can do everything themselves by taking political and industrial power and using such power to give themselves those things to which they are entitled when doing their share."

Talks Broken Off—

TWUA Warns Ike On Pay Cut Plea

"IF THE FIRST major wage movement under the Eisenhower Administration is a move downward, this will likely be the last Republican Administration in history."

That was the warning of William Pollock, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, to the rejection by Fall River and New Bedford, Mass., textile manufacturers of the TWUA demand for 6.5% wage increase.

The increase would have restored a wage cut forced on the union by an arbitrator last June. The associations, representing manufacturers who employ approximately 18,000 workers, asked for an eight-point program which they estimated would "save" them 7c to 10c an hour.

POLLOCK spoke at TWUA meetings in the two cities.

Negotiations with the Fall River Cotton Manufacturers' Association, which represents 13 mills employing 12,000, broke down earlier when TWUA's demand for the pay cut restoration was rejected.

TWUA refused to accept the eight-point wage-cut program. The contracts expire Mar. 15 and TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve said "we don't work without a contract."

The New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers' Association, which speaks for seven mills employing 6000 workers, was not represented in the negotiations because the National Labor Relations Board is deciding whether to grant the petition of the AFL textile union for an election.

The manufacturers wanted to cut vacations to one week a year, whack holidays from six to two and reduce insurance benefits. They also wanted to eliminate retirement pay, severance pay and premium pay for holidays, and change the piecework-hourly pay relationship.

TWUA Denied Hearing On Stevens Nomination

THE SENATE last week confirmed the appointment of Robert T. B. Stevens, big anti-union textile manufacturer, as Secretary of the Army after refusing the CIO Textile Workers a chance to testify at a committee hearing.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve asked for an opportunity to appear against Stevens in a wire to Chairman Saltonstall (R. Mass.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee. TWUA said its message was not acknowledged.

Two days later, when John W. Edelman, Washington TWUA representative, appeared at a committee hearing, Saltonstall asked him to testify. Edelman replied that Rieve had requested an opportunity to be heard but that at that time he was tied up in important union negotiations in Massachusetts.

EDELMAN'S request to give the union time to prepare a statement for the committee's printed record was not granted.

After the committee sent the nomination of Stevens to the Senate but before the Senate acted, Rieve sent to all Senators the statement he had prepared for presentation to the committee.

RIEVE said that Stevens moved four textile mills from the North to the South "to escape collective bargaining; and we further contend that the liquidations were unnecessarily ruthless with regard to the interests of the workers and the communities affected."

"I do not think it is a coincidence that these four mills (where 4000 workers were once employed) were the only New England textile units of the Stevens chain which were organized by our union," he continued.

Rieve explained TWUA never asks the industry "to impose arbitrary restrictions on work assignments, but a chance to study proposed changes — and if no agreement is reached after trial —arbitration.

"But what is good enough for the rest of industry was not good enough for Stevens," Rieve said.

STEVENS did not get committee approval until he agreed to dispose of his stock in J. P. Stevens & Co.

Poor's Register of Directors and Executives for 1950 listed Stevens as holding the following positions:

Vice president, Association of Cotton Textile Manufacturers; chairman of the board, J. P. Stevens & Co. and Federal Reserve Bank of New York; trustee, Mutual Life Insurance Co. and Roosevelt Hospital, New York; director, Heminway & Bartlett Manufacturing Co., New York Telephone Co., Alexander Smith & Sons, General Electric Co., General Foods Corp., Marion Manufacturing Co., and Jackson Mills.

ACW Asks Pay Hikes

THE CIO Clothing Workers union is asking a wage increase for most of its 375,000 members.

The opening gun in this campaign will be fired this week when negotiations will open with the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the U.S.A. in New York City. The association represents some 850 concerns doing over 90% of the men's clothing manufacturing.

Wage talks with the cotton garment and the outerwear industries will follow, the ACWA's executive board decided.

The union and the men's clothing group last fall signed a five-year contract providing for yearly reopening for adjustments in wage and working conditions. There has been a sharp increase in the men's clothing business.

'Citizen CIO' Is Praised As CSC Presents 5 Philip Murray Awards

PHILIP MURRAY Awards for outstanding work in community activity were distributed last week to three individuals and two organizations.

Before several hundred dinner guests in New York City, the CIO Community Services Committee presented plaques and $500 checks to:

- Robert H. MacRae, of the Metropolitan Chicago Welfare Council.
- Wilbur F. Maxwell, head of labor participation for the Community Chests of America.
- Oscar Ewing, recently retired head of the Federal Security Administration and a tireless campaigner for national health insurance.
- The CIO Auto Workers, which has established a full-time Community Services Dept. to handle problems of family welfare, strike counselling services, training programs, and other projects.
- The United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, which has spent nearly $175 million in 72 countries on programs to benefit the kids of the world in an era of post-war hardship.

CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, and other speakers at the meeting, hailed the awards as a memorial to the broad community interests of the late Philip Murray.

"Progress for the whole community—that was Philip Murray's watchword," Reuther said.

"Philip Murray knew that a listing of democracy's virtues was not enough. He knew that the greatness of a civilization has to be measured by its sense of moral responsibility and community service—not just by Wall Street ticker reports or production indexes.

"So Philip Murray gave of his faith, his strength and his inspiration to the CIO Community Services Committee."

A highlight of the CSC dinner was a half-hour dramatic presentation, starring actor Ralph Bellamy, which highlighted the work of the CIO committee.

A DEEP silence fell over the room when the tape-recorded voice of the late Philip Murray talked of the value of union community services programs. The excerpts came from a speech by Murray at a CSC dinner in Detroit two years ago.

CIO leaders who presented the awards, and the recipients, all praised the leadership that Murray had given to CIO's unique activities in making "Citizen CIO" a vital force in hundreds of towns throughout the nation.

Thousands of union counsellors, trained through CSC programs, are helping their shopmates to gain the benefits of community welfare programs in times of need or distress.

IN ADDITION, CIO unions are now represented as never before on local and national social agencies, help collect large amounts of funds for these causes, and are acting to make the agencies more responsible to the people who support them.

The awards were presented to the winners by Vice-Pres. James Thimmes of the Steelworkers; CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; and CIO Executive Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

Irving S. Abramson and Leo Perlis, chairman and director of the Community Services Committee, presided.

The audience was made up of hundreds of national and local leaders of CIO unions.

$23,000 In Grants Listed By Hillman Foundation

SCHOLARSHIP awards and grant-in-aid for 1953 totalling $23,000 were made last week by the trustees of the Sidney Hillman Foundation. The foundation is named for the late president of the CIO Clothing Workers, who died in 1946.

Established in 1947 to further the aims and ideals of Hillman in the fields of labor-management relations, race relations and world peace, the foundation awarded its scholarships to 11 institutions in the United States, Puerto Rico, Israel and India.

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the ACWA and of the Sidney Hillman Foundation, said the following received scholarship awards:

Roosevelt College, Chicago; Amal School, Jerusalem; Brandeis Univ., Waltham, Mass.; New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.; Howard Univ., Washington, D. C.; Educational Foundation for the Apparel Industry, New York City; New School for Social Research, New York City.

Also Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn.; Labor Relations Institute, Univ. of Puerto Rico, Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico; the ICFTU Asian Trade Union College, Calcutta; and Goddard College Plainfield, Vt.

THE FOUNDATION also made a grant-in-aid to the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, for its community work.

Potofsky said during its first five years the foundation had disbursed $75,000 for scholarships, $100,000 for medical research and $15,000 for grants-in-aid. In addition $1000 annual awards were made for meritorious public service and $500 annual awards in daily and periodical journalism and the fields of fiction and non-fiction.

High Court Decides On T-H Case

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board can continue its practice of accepting the filing of charges against an employer by a union whose officers have not signed non-Communist oaths, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled last week.

However, the officers—local, international and CIO or AFL—must be in compliance before the board can issue a complaint.

The ruling upset a decision by the San Francisco Circuit Court of Appeals, which held that all union officers whose compliance is required must be in compliance when the charges are filed.

It grew out of charges filed by the CIO Woodworkers against Dant & Russell, an Oregon lumber firm, based upon the discharge of two employes, before compliance by CIO officers. The complaint was issued after the CIO officers had complied.

A MORE important continuing application of the decision, however, if it should be generally followed, would be to situations where the charging union is inadvertently out of compliance.

The practice of the NLRB of allowing unions to correct such non-compliance prior to issuing a complaint, outlawed by the Court of Appeals decision, was in effect approved by the Supreme Court ruling.

The CIO filed a friend of the court brief explaining that union officers at every level are often out of compliance through no fault of their own because of deaths, elections and other changes. Rejection of the validity of charges filed while new affidavits are being prepared and forwarded would cause undue hardship to the unions, the brief contended, and contribute nothing to the unmasking of Communists.

Levitsky Named

The CIO Steelworkers have assigned Stephen Levitsky to Washington to work with Legislative Representative Frank N. Hoffman. Levitsky has been associated with the USA in various capacities for 12 years.

URW Defeats Mississippi Bias Firing

CIO'S CONSTITUTION lists as its first objective "to bring about the effective organization of the working men and women of America regardless of race, creed, color or nationality."

In Jackson, Miss., that principle has been given meaning on the job by a local of the CIO Rubber Workers which wouldn't take a Jim Crow firing from anybody.

The grievance involved Lannie Cooper, member of URW Local 363 at the Jackson plant of Armstrong Cork Co.

ARMSTRONG fired Cooper, saying the plant-wide seniority clause in its contract with the Rubber Workers didn't apply because Cooper is a Negro.

That was discrimination and denial of union contract protection, and the union grievance committee quickly went to bat.

After several sessions with Armstrong officials, they won a full victory: reinstatement of Cooper on the job, and payment of his lost wages of some $694.

Along with Local Pres. Ray Smithhart, other union committeemen who successfully handled the grievance were E. E. Sylvester and Tom Snipes.

That's the brief story from Jackson—just an example of the job protection that CIO unionism means for all workers in the South.

Willys To Build Clinic For UAW

The big Toledo Local 12 of the CIO Auto Workers announced that Willys-Overland Co. has agreed to build a $450,000 diagnostic clinic to be owned and operated by the local's Willys-Overland unit.

All members of the Toledo-wide Auto local will be allowed to use the medical service, the local said. The center will be operated by the local's health insurance fund.

Senate Staff Report—

'Little Totalitarian' Rule Charged To Ship Cooks

CREATION of "a little totalitarian system" has enabled the pro-Communist leadership of the Marine Cooks & Stewards to retain control of that West Coast organization, a Senate staff report charged last week.

The report detailed force and terrorism used by officials of the MCS, which the CIO expelled in 1950 for Communist domination, against cooks and stewards who sought to return the MCS to CIO union ranks.

The heavily-documented, 250-page report called the MCS "the last Communist outpost among the unlicensed seafaring unions."

THE REPORT was issued by the staff of the outgoing Senate Labor subcommittee. Its chairman, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), said in a preface that the MCS report shows "how a Communist-dominated union stays in power."

"It stays in power," he observed, "by terrorizing the real and imagined dissidents within the union, by depriving critics of their jobs, by slander, vilifications; by intimidating government witnesses to its illegal activities, by perverting the union's judicial machinery into an instrument of reprisal, by intimidating the employers into becoming parties to their totalitarian methods.

"In brief, this Communist-dominated union has remained in power by corrupting the basic democracy of a union to create a little totalitarian system all of its own."

DETAILED in the report was the story of those members of the MCS who attempted to purge Communist control of the small West Coast union and return it to CIO ranks.

Sen. Humphrey paid tribute to "the moral and physical courage of the men, and at least one woman, who have risked their livelihood and indeed their lives, to fight the good fight for democratic unionism."

He noted his admiration "is all the greater because they were not glorified by the press, by the glare of television cameras . . . they have had no opportunity to write best-seller books or series of syndicated articles."

"Their anti-communism," Humphrey wrote, "is having to stand the test of dark alleyways, of goon squads, of beatings, and of a union hall made into an arsenal."

THE REPORT, based on sworn affidavits and sworn testimony, pointed out the importance of control of a seafaring union like the MCS.

"Such control eases the problem of infiltration of agents and propaganda for world-wide communism," the report declared.

"What distinguishes the Marine Cooks & Stewards from non-Communists unions is the intensity with which it pursues Communist political objectives," declared the report.

It noted all unions are concerned with political objectives in one form or another, but no non-Communist union in the United States makes the commitment to political goals the major test of union loyalty.

In the MCS, the report said, union members who met all the tests of union loyalty, but refused to knuckle down to MCS policy in the Wallace campaign or its underwriting of Soviet foreign policy were the victims of immediate reprisals.

Physical violence, the report noted, was a favorite weapon of the union and in at least one case the wife of an active anti-Communist was beaten in her home.

IN GREAT detail, the report told the story of threats, beatings, job blacklists, kangaroo trials and expulsions which were directed against non-Communists in the MCS. Also cited were efforts to block action by the National Labor Relations Board on unfair practices cases brought against some MCS officials.

The report covered the period 1949-50, including the months during which the CIO Maritime Union sought to organize the West Coast stewards.

Ship Employers' Collusion Cited

"Evidence of employers' collusion" with the CIO-expelled Marine Cooks & Stewards was cited in the Senate Labor subcommittee staff report.

Shipping operators were charged with allowing discriminatory operation of the hiring hall.

"The employers," the report said, "permitted themselves, without too much protest, to become vehicles through which the MCS leadership imposed its rule of terrorism and discrimination against all elements who dared to oppose its Communist policies.

"It is not unfair to say that the sweep of MCS power could not have been as effective, by far, if many employers had not been supine."

Lobbying Curb Again Tossed Out

THE FEDERAL Lobbying Act has been declared unconstitutional for a second time by Federal Judge Alexander Holtzoff.

Holtzoff dismissed charges brought under the law against four persons. He said the registration requirement of the act is unenforceable because the penalty imposed for violations is forbidden by the First Amendment.

Passed in 1946, the Lobbying Law requires lobbyists to register their activities, file regular reports of receipts and expenditures, and keep records. The general penalty for violation of its requirements is a $5000 fine and a year in jail, and a second penalty provision forbids anyone convicted from attempting to influence legislation for three years.

THIS SECOND penalty, Holtzoff ruled, conflicts with the right of every person, guaranteed by the First Amendment, to petition Congress. This right, he pointed out, cannot be abridged by an act of Congress.

Holtzoff's action was based on a previous decision to the same effect in a case he decided last year involving the National Association of Manufacturers. The effect of the NAM ruling was to invalidate the entire act, although only one section of the law was actually at issue.

Registrations under the act have fallen sharply since that decision. At present there are only 850 persons and organizations registered as lobbyists, although 1200 once were registered.

ICFTU Accuses French In Protest To ILO

A COMPLAINT charging violation of trade union rights by the French government in Morocco has been filed with the Intl. Labor Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The complaint is based on the ILO international convention on freedom of trade unions, which has been ratified by the French government.

"Since 1936 European workers in Morocco have had the right to set up trade unions," said an ICFTU statement summarizing the complaint.

"MOROCCAN workers, on the other hand, are not allowed to form their own unions, and until 1950 were not even allowed to join the European unions. This was, in any case, a concession of doubtful value since the majority of these organizations owed allegiance to the Communist-controlled French General Confederation of Labor (CGT).

"The French authorities are now proposing to allow Moroccan workers to form unions provided, however, that half the membership of the national and regional governing bodies is French. Even this limited right is not to be extended to agricultural workers."

BOTH THE present law and the French proposal violate the ILO convention, Oldenbroek charged.

"It is a matter for the workers, and for them alone, to designate freely those who are to be in charge of defending their interests," he declared.

The ICFTU called on the ILO, in accordance with established procedure, to declare there is a case to answer, and to ask the French government to submit it to the ILO Fact-finding & Conciliation Committee on Trade Union Freedom.

Low Man On Totem Pole

Consumers Get A Break In Resolution By Sen. Gillette

THERE ARE many kinds of congressional committees. There are committees to protect the interests of this group and that group, but there is no committee to see that the consumer does not get gypped.

Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) wants to elevate the consumer from his position of low man on the totem pole. Almost a third of the Democrats and the Republicans in the Senate have joined him in sponsoring a resolution to set up a Senate Consumers Interest Committee.

THE RESOLUTION, which is supported by the CIO, would:

- Provide a forum where consumers and housewives could air opinions of millions of citizens who are never heard by other committees.
- Keep federal agencies which are supposed to protect the consumers more aware of the consumers' problems.
- Protect these same agencies against senseless, crippling budget cuts.

Albert Q. Maisel in the current issue of Redbook magazine considers the case of the consumer as the low man on the totem pole and calls for support of the Gillette resolution. Maisel writes:

"Between Sad Fact No. 1—the lack of consumer organization—and Sad Fact No. 2—the way the Washington setup reflects a pattern of producer-slanted thinking and responsibilities, we're bound to put up a poor showing for ourselves (or get half a hearing) when we try to speak as consumers."

He points out that agencies that are supposed to protect the consumers are hamstrung by disputes between rival groups of producers and by a budget-whacking Congress.

Maisel says the $3 million that Congress appropriated three years ago to revise the consumer price index "might as well have been poured down a rathole."

"For the old index used to be compiled on the basis of surveys of 34 cities," he continues. "Under its slashed appropriations, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has had to drop 14 cities from its list . . . at the very time when the cost of living has been jumping."

GILLETTE first introduced the consumer representation resolution last year. It was supported by the CIO and other organizations, but the Rules Committee did not report it out until it was too late to get action.

If you want it enacted this session, write to Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), chairman of the Senate Rules and Administration Committee, Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.

Farm Electric Co-op Critic Put In Charge Of REA

THE THREE million farm families who get their electricity or telephone service through rural electrification cooperatives are wondering what is in store for them, now that the Pres. Eisenhower's Agriculture Dept. is beginning to take shape.

When Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson "streamlined" the department after taking office, he put Romeo Short, of Brinkley, Ark., in charge of the Rural Electrification, Farmers' Home and Farm Credit Administrations.

Users of REA current are concerned because Short, a vice president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, was chairman of the resolutions committee at the AFBF convention in Seattle in December. His committee came up with a statement that private utilities companies should have first priority in generating and distributing electric power.

WHAT EFFECT his position will have on pending public power developments was a matter of concern to the 4400 delegates attending the convention of the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association, held recently in San Francisco.

Government policy in the past has been to give REA co-ops first chance at the current generated at public power installations. Private utilities have long sought the right to distribute such power, and in some cases want the federal government to sell them the dams and facilities.

The NRECA parley denounced proposals made recently by some Republicans to sell installations such as the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Bonneville Power Administration to private investors.

The delegates branded the surrender of such public resources to "corporate ownership for exploitation for private profit" as nothing more than a "barehanded raid on the commonwealth."

UAW Auxiliaries Aid Polio Drive

The CIO Auto Workers Auxiliaries last week won the commendation of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis for their work on behalf of the March of Dime Drive.

The auxiliaries were commended because their members manned the March of Dimes Booth in the heart of Detroit for eight days during the drive, according to Mrs. Catherine Gelles, auxiliaries' secretary.

'Revolution' In Ermine Hits Capital

THE GOP invasion of Washington has brought its own kind of "social revolution," it is revealed by a close scrutiny of society page stories in papers of the nation's capital.

- Mrs. Alice Nicholas Longworth, long a leading figure in Washington's social scene, says with a sparkle: "The Republican millionaires are back—now we'll all have a gay, scandalous time."
- The Inaugural Housing Committee was kept busy meeting the whims of the nation's financial upper crust. Reports the Washington Post: "A Republican mogul asked for a room for his chauffeur and a heated garage for his car, explaining, 'My chauffeur doesn't like to get into a cold car'."
- Mrs. Robert Low Bacon threw a fancy dinner for Winthrop Aldrich, new ambassador to Great Britain, who as head of the Chase National Bank, hasn't eaten in a one-armed lunch in years. Reported a local paper:

"The 46 guests sipped and supped from a gold service. Long flowery branches were arranged in a center of the table. A rosy glow was suffused through pink azaleas, floating in a miniature sunken garden stretching almost the full length of the table."

All Is Not Gold That Glitters—

Glitter Products, Inc., a Detroit auto polish maker, has promised the Federal Trade Commission to take some of the high gloss off its advertising claims for Glitter Super Glaze.

Among various glittering claims which the company agreed to discard: That its auto polish is not a polish, that it will restore a car's original finish, and that it will last twice as long as any other polish. (LPA)

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

(As a new weekly feature of interest to our readers, The CIO News with this issue begins publication of Sidney Margolius' "How To Buy" column. Margolius is a well-known writer in the labor press on consumer problems—The Editor.)

CLEANING and straightening the house is the biggest household chore. For the average family it consumes a back-breaking 16 hours a week, according to surveys by home economists.

Efficient equipment and work methods can save much of his backbreaking job. Here are tips on how to do it; and also, how to save money on the many cleaning preparations families must buy for household use.

Efficient Cleansers: One of the most efficient and least expensive all-round cleaning preparations is a chemical called trisodium phosphate ("TSP"). It's sold under various brand names, so simply buy the least costly, or buy it under its own name in a paint store. A half tablespoon of TSP in a gallon of water generally will remove any dirt ordinary detergent and water won't. But a too-strong solution will remove paint from woodwork (in fact, TSP is sold under still different brand names as a paint-brush cleaner, showing how manufacturers package the same ordinary chemical under several names for different purposes—and at different prices).

For use as a scouring powder, you can make up a mild, efficient preparation by buying whiting at a paint store and adding a very little TSP and ordinary detergent.

In furniture polishes, many of the cheaper ones are chiefly mineral oil. You can make a polish which also cleans furniture by mixing a half cup of linseed oil, three-fourths of a pint of water and a half cup of denatured alcohol. Or melt one ounce of beeswax in a half pint of linseed oil and a pint of turpentine (away from the flame).

For cleaning rugs and upholstery, you need a soapless cleanser. But there's no need to buy a special preparation. Among the best and mildest soapless cleansers are the same synthetic detergents many families now use for dishes and laundry.

"Dustless" Mops: You can make a professional-type dustless mop yourself by spraying the top part of the strands with a little kerosene. Let it travel to the ends and hang the mop outside to dry. You can also make a dustless dust cloth by soaking it in kerosene, wringing it out and letting it dry out in the open. For polishing furniture, wet a cloth, then wring it out so it's a little damp. It will polish faster and use less polish.

"Dirt-Resistant Walls": Washing down walls is one of the toughest jobs in a house. Much of it can be eliminated by coating walls with a thin starch solution. Then when you wash the wall the starch dissolves and takes off the dirt that has settled on it.

Tips on Cleaning Methods: You'll save much annoying running back and forth for equipment while house-cleaning, if you assemble your cleansers, sponges, pail and other needs in a wheeled cart like a shopping or laundry cart. Or you can use a cleaning box or basket with handle to transport equipment.

Picking Good Equipment: For sweeping, a long-handled push-broom and long-handled dustpan like professional janitors use, saves much bending. It pays to buy a good hair pushbroom. For waxing, a long-handled applicator used with self-polishing wax saves much work.

One thing is certain: It isn't necessary to pay high prices for liquid wax. Private brands sold by supermarkets and department stores are not only half or less the price of some widely advertised brands, but sometimes contain even more solids, which is what makes a floor wax last longer.

Delaney Asks Tighter Curb On Use Of Drugs In Foods

FOOD AND cosmetic producers will have to prove articles containing chemicals are safe for human use before marketing them under two bills introduced by Rep. Delaney (D. N. Y.).

Under the present law, the government has to prove that a food or a cosmetic actually harms users before it can be removed from the market.

Delaney's bills were based on the recommendations of a House investigating committee on the use of chemicals in foods and cosmetics. The committee, of which he was chairman, was created by the 81st Congress and continued through the 82nd Congress, with 59 days of public hearings.

Testimony was taken from 217 witnesses from consumers' groups, colleges, agricultural experimental stations, and from the chemical, food and cosmetic industries.

The Food and the Drug Administration and the Public Health Service reported that only 428 of the 704 chemicals used in foods are definitely known to be safe.

The committee found that during 1951 some hair shampoos inadvertently caused eye injuries. One Delaney bill would require cosmetics ingredients to be identified on labels to afford protection from dangerous coal-tar dyes that are used in some cosmetics.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE WRITER had the pleasure of attending the Philip Murray Award dinner of the CIO Community Services Committee. The audience heard the voice of our beloved, departed leader, Philip Murray, praising the CIO-CSC as the great effort of CIO to bring betterment to the local, state and national communities.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and the writer had the honor and privilege to give awards to the following: Oscar R. Ewing, former Federal Security Administrator; Robert H. MacRae, director of the Welfare Council of Metropolitan Chicago; Wilbur F. Maxwell, director of the Labor Participation Dept. of Community Chests and Councils of America; and to Brother Emil Mazey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Auto Workers on behalf of the UAW. The Philip Murray Award was also presented to Byron Price, United Nations assistant secretary-general, on behalf of the UN International Children's Emergency Fund.

PRES. WALTER REUTHER made a stirring address commending the CSC for a fine job well done. All present also paid tribute to Irving Abramson and Leo Perlis and their staff of men and women who have worked so hard to make the CSC the wonderful organization it is.

While in New York, I went to the Annual Dance and Entertainment of Local 1-2 of the Utility Workers of America. It was very enjoyable spending the evening with the officers, members and their families of the local, as well as the international union officers, Joe Fisher, Bill Pachler, Harold Straub. Patty McGrath of Local 1-2 has done a fine job and it was a pleasure being with him and his people.

New York State CIO Fights To 'Hold The Line' On Rents

THE NEW YORK State CIO Council last week began a double-pronged attack in its campaign to "hold the line" on State rent control.

Since May, 1950, the Empire State has had its own rent control law, and has not been under federal rent ceilings.

Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno stated the Council's views before the Temporary Commission on Rents and Rent Conditions at an Albany hearing attended by more than 1000 often noisy landlords, tenants and their representatives. Earlier Council Pres. Louis Hollander and Garno sent a letter to all members of the Legislature opposing rent increases.

"WEAKENING of controls would be an economic and social calamity for the State," Garno told the commission.

He urged that the Legislature "hold the line" on all rents in all parts of the State.

Landlords' proposals included a minimum return of 6% on property valuation, a general rent ceiling 20% above the June 30, 1947, levels and decontrol of "luxury" apartments.

Garno cited 1950 census figures showing a vacancy ratio of 1% or less in all major cities of the State. He said the lowest responsible estimates of a normal or healthy vacancy ratio are from 5.5% to 10%.

THE COUNCIL official said the average rent rise in Saratoga, Albany and Delaware counties was 40%. These counties voted decontrol when the federal law was still in effect.

The hearing also was attended by 40 CIO council and union officials from Buffalo, Rochester and Utica, who also called on legislators to urge them to continue controls.

Hollander and Garno wrote the lawmakers:

"Weaking of controls . . . will lower living standards, cut purchasing power and may well disrupt the economic stability of this State. Under such conditions we of the labor movement will have to protect the living standards of our people by the means that are available to us . . ."

"Those of the Republicans who may think they were given a mandate in the last elections to do away with rent control are badly mistaken. No one has been given a mandate to visit suffering and economic strife on the State in the service of the real estate interests."

More About CIO Board Resolutions

past, the leaders of the Soviet Union have boasted of their alleged fight against racial discrimination.

But in the absence of democracy and full acceptance of the rights of the common people, no minority is safe from policies and programs of oppression and torture. Where civil liberties and the fundamental freedoms are in jeopardy, the rights of every person, whether he be a member of the majority or a minority, are uncertain. The Jews, the Catholics, the Protestants and people of other religious faiths have all suffered and been persecuted by the Communist regimes.

Free and democratic people cannot tolerate persecution and denial of fundamental freedoms. The Executive Board of the CIO lends its voice to the international protest against this revival of flagrant anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and the satellite world.

We call upon free people everywhere to raise their voices against these outrageous policies in the hope that Soviet leaders will heed our cries and end this anti-Semitic program before it endangers the lives of the millions of Jews in the Soviet Union and the satellite nations.

We call upon the Dept. of State to register a strong and constant protest with the government of the USSR and to make explicit at all times the revulsion of the people of the United States of America at this outburst of racialism.

SEN. JENNER

He's Out $14,000

SEN. JENNER (R. Ind.), one of the louder shouters about government spending during Democratic Administrations, is going to have to return an estimated $14,000 he collected from Uncle Sam as a disabled veteran.

An Air Force captain in World War II, Jenner has been collecting monthly disability pensions since he left the service to enter the Senate in 1944.

The General Accounting Office ruled that he is not entitled to the pension and he has agreed to return it.

CIO Revokes Charter Of Puerto Rican CGT

THE CERTIFICATE of affiliation to the CIO of the Puerto Rican General Confederation of Labor (CGT) was revoked last week by CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood on the ground that it has ceased to be representative of the CIO in its territory.

Reg. Dir. David Sternback was placed in full charge of all CIO affairs in the island. He is setting up a temporary organization which will apply for a charter as a CIO council. A convention to elect permanent officers will be held later.

THE REVOCATION of the CGT certificate of affiliation was ordered by Haywood in his capacity as executive vice president, director of councils, and designee of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in accordance with Rule 25 of the CIO Rules for Industrial Union Councils. The pertinent part of Rule 25 reads:

"The President or his designee, on notice and hearings, may revoke the certificate of affiliation of any council for violation of the CIO Constitution or the Rules Governing Councils, or on the ground that it has ceased to be representative of the CIO in its territory."

Haywood acted on the recommendation of Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel. Goldberg conducted a hearing, of which due notice was given, in San Juan on Dec. 24.

"On the basis of the uncontradicted testimony received at the hearing," he advised Haywood, "there can be no question that the General Confederation of Labor of Puerto Rico (CGT) has ceased to be representative of the CIO in its territory, in that the great majority of the membership and their unions have severed their affiliation to or otherwise have ceased to participate in the CGT, and have affiliated directly to the CIO or to unions affiliated to the CIO."

The testimony was given by officers and members of several unions. It showed that about 95% of CIO membership in Puerto Rico belongs to the Sugar Div. of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, which disaffiliated from the CGT last November. Locals of the CIO Transport Workers, which also has a large membership, are no longer affiliated.

McDonald Spikes Claims Of Alco On Strike Settlement

AMERICAN Locomotive Co., after months of blocking CIO Steelworkers seeking wage increases already won in basic steel, last week turned to outright distortion of fact.

In an obvious attempt to create a rift between the USA-CIO and the locals at its strikebound plants, Alco Pres. Perry T. Egbert claimed an agreement had been reached between the company and David J. McDonald, acting president of the Steelworkers.

McDonald categorically denied this, labeling it a "distortion of facts." Egbert had said McDonald had been unable to "sell" the proposal to the locals.

In a statement, McDonald traced the history of the long dispute with Alco, which has strike-bound plants at Schenectady and Auburn, N. Y., and a plant at Dunkirk, N. Y., where union members are working under a Taft-Hartley injunction.

McDonald said in their Jan. 21 meeting, Egbert had made "suggestions" which the union president agreed to carry to the negotiating committee.

"Mr. Egbert specifically stated that if this committee did not accept his suggestions we (the company) have made no offer," McDonald said.

"I deny categorically that the union accepted a proposal," McDonald continued. "I deny categorically that the company and the union have reached an agreement as to settlement which is binding on either the company or the union. I deny categorically that either the union or I, in any sense, has violated any of the accepted precepts of sound collective bargaining."

The union negotiating committee found Egbert's suggestions "inadequate and refused to accept them as a basis for settlement," McDonald said.

Bethlehem Steel Has Top Quarter

The Bethlehem Steel Corp., the country's second largest steel producer, had the best fourth quarter in its history during the three months ended Dec. 31, 1952.

Net profit, according to its report, was more than $49.4 million, or $4.99 a share, compared to $39.9 million, or $3.93 a share, in the same period of 1951.

Tax Dodge Leader Gets High Post

Craig R. Sheaffer, of Chicago, president of the W. A. Sheaffer Pen Co. and a director of the Western Tax Council, was nominated as assistant secretary of commerce last week.

The Western Tax Council, which has its headquarters in Chicago, has been one of the leading groups in the drive to have state legislatures force Congress to call a constitutional convention to enact the "millionaires' relief amendment." This is the one that would limit the federal taxing power to 25% of income.

State Of The Union

Ike Proposes, But Taft's Congress Disposes

By MILTON PLUMB

PRES. EISENHOWER last week laid down the blueprint of his Administration's foreign and domestic programs. He charted a middle course on domestic affairs, but announced important changes in U. S. foreign policy.

In his first State of the Union message, delivered in person before a joint session of Congress, Eisenhower called for a "new, positive foreign policy," and announced that he had ordered the U. S. Seventh Fleet "no longer" to prevent possible Chinese Nationalist attacks from Formosa against Communist China. (See accompanying story.)

Most Republicans agreed with Senate Majority Leader Taft's appraisal that it was "a great speech."

"IN GENERAL," declared Senate Democratic Leader Johnson, "it is a comprehensive statement. I am gratified that the President does not propose the repeal of any of the gains made during Democratic administrations."

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.), however, called it "full of much preachment, some sound principles but mainly political generalities." He expressed hope that it will not increase the dangers of war.

Although Eisenhower's remarks received applause at the rate of one round per minute of his 56-minute, 7000-word address, the volume varied widely. His remarks on Formosa, for example were greeted with a deafening outburst, but the applause was much less when he called for a balanced budget before tax cuts, and it was only scattered when he promised once again to end segregation in the nation's capital.

On some important matters of domestic policy, notably Taft-Hartley revision and farm price supports, Eisenhower avoided spelling out his views in detail. He indicated, however, that he would send messages concerning these problems to Congress at a later date.

EISENHOWER insisted that only a law supported by both labor and management can help prevent strikes and asked for revision of the Taft-Hartley Act. He said that although Taft has already introduced amendments, the Labor Dept. will submit "further specific recommendations."

Sec. of Labor Durkin said afterwards that his department is "not anywhere near" completion of its study and that he doesn't know how soon the proposals for T-H changes will be ready. He also said that he will ask Congress for supplemental appropriations to keep the old cost-of-living price index until June 30, as ordered by the White House.

Other highlights of Eisenhower's domestic program:

ECONOMIC CONTROLS: Congress was asked to let wage and price controls expire Apr. 30, and the President did not request stand-by powers but said he would seek new legislation if the need arose. He wants authority for federal rent ceilings continued beyond June 30 in areas where serious housing shortages exist. Instead of continued materials and production controls, he wants priorities established for scarce items.

Acting Defense Mobilizer Arthur Flemming immediately notified all mobilization and stabilization agencies to begin laying off their employes, now totaling over 12,000. Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) of the Senate Banking Committee ignored Eisenhower's message, however, and introduced a bill calling for stand-by wage-price-rent controls. Sens. Hill (D. Ala.) and Douglas (D. Ill.) joined him in calling for stand-by legislation.

TAXES AND BUDGET: Eisenhower said it is necessary to reduce federal spending and balance the budget, and that tax cuts—a big GOP promise—can be justified "only as we show we can succeed in bringing the budget under control." At the same time, he said the Treasury will put more of the existing federal debt into the "hands of long-term investors," which will mean that the government—and private borrowers, too — must pay higher interest rates.

Here, too, Eisenhower ran into opposition from the Republican chairman of a congressional committee directly concerned. Rep. Reed (R. N.Y.) said he still favors an early tax cut and that he will bring his bill calling for an 11% reduction in personal income taxes before his House Ways and Means Committee Feb. 11. A big majority of members of the committee have expressed support for the bill.

REORGANIZATION: Eisenhower asked extension—without easy congressional veto — of "present" authority to reorganize governmental departments and agencies, essential if he is to carry out GOP campaign pledges to reduce federal spending.

Thanks to a mixup in signals between the White House and Capitol Hill, House and Senate committees already had approved bills cutting down the President's reorganizational powers. Last week, after the message, the House reversed its committee and voted to extend the reorganization bill without weakening amendments. Action was still pending in the Senate.

CIVIL RIGHTS: The President promised to do all that he can to end segregation in the District of Columbia, in the federal government and the armed forces, and pledged his Administration to the broad objective of "equality for all" without proposing civil rights legislation.

Southern Democrats promptly served notice they will fight his move as it affects the capital. Sen. Russell (D. Ga.), leading Dixiecrat spokesman, declared "I am, of course, opposed to racial integration in public schools and in the fire department." Rep. Davis (D. Ga.) promised to continue his fight in the House against efforts to end D. C. segregation.

Ike's China Order Causes Jitters Among U. S. Allies

THE ONLY immediate result of Pres. Eisenhower's "new, positive foreign policy" rescinding ex-Pres. Truman's 1950 order directing the U. S. Seventh Fleet to patrol the Formosa Strait has been to arouse concern among our allies.

Many military experts question if much more can result for some time to come. They point out that the Chinese Nationalists have no navy or air force capable of any significant "invasion" of the Chinese mainland, even if their army were equipped and trained for such an undertaking.

T. F. TSIANG, Chinese Nationalist delegate to the United Nations, said only last week that even if the U. S. provided Chiang Kai-shek with enough ships and planes and other equipment to launch a major offensive, the build-up would take at least a year.

Strong protests against the Eisenhower action were voiced by Britain, with Foreign Sec. Anthony Eden saying it "will have unfortunate political repercussions without compensating military advantages."

What worries U. S. allies in Europe is that, should this country support such a build-up, supplies needed by NATO forces would have to be diverted to the Far East. A full-dress debate on the Formosa order seemed likely in the UN General Asembly when it reconvenes in New York on Feb. 24.

Both Gen. Omar N. Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Admiral Radford, who commands the U. S. Pacific Fleet, agreed that no important Nationalist raids on the mainland can be expected in the near future.

ASKED if the U. S. would "bail out" Chiang's forces if they launch a beachhead in China and get into trouble, Bradley said that the answer called for a political decision and not a military one.

He added, however, that he personally "would hate to see us get too much of our military strength tied up in China and that would certainly be getting a lot of it tied up on the mainland of China."

Bradley testified earlier during the hearings on the removal of Gen. MacArthur as U. S. Far Eastern Commander, that a war with Red China would be "the wrong war at the wrong place and the wrong time with the wrong enemy."

SEN. MORSE (Ind. Ore.) warned that the order "may play into Russia's hands and be the source of a wedge being driven between us and our allies."

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) expressed hope that the Formosa decision "does not contemplate backing up any landings or aggressive moves on the Chinese mainland by Chiang Kai-shek's forces."

Ike Text: 'Some Corrective Action' On T-H Urged

Here is the Republican Administration's statement on labor policy as voiced by Pres. Eisenhower in his State of the Union message to Congress:

THE DETERMINATION of labor policy must be governed not by the vagaries of political expediency but by the firmest principles and convictions. Slanted partisan appeals to American workers, spoken as if they were a group apart, necessitating a special language and treatment, are an affront to the fullness of their dignity as American citizens.

The truth in matters of labor policy has become obscured in controversies. The very meaning of economic freedom as it affects labor has become confused. This misunderstanding has provided a climate of opinion favoring the growth of governmental paternalism in labor relations.

This tendency, if left uncorrected, could end only by producing a bureaucratic despotism. Economic freedom is, in fact, the requisite of greater prosperity for every American who earns his own living.

In the field of labor legislation, only a law that merits the respect and support of both labor and management can help reduce the loss of wages and of production through strikes and stoppages, and thus add to the total economic strength of our Nation.

We have now had five years' experience with the Labor Management Act of 1947, commonly known as the Taft-Hartley Act. That experience has shown the need for some corrective action, and we should promptly proceed to amend that act.

I know that the Congress is already proceeding with renewed studies of this whole subject. Meanwhile, the Dept. of Labor is at once beginning work to devise further specific recommendations for your consideration.

In the careful working out of legislation, I know you will give thoughtful consideration—as will we in the executive branch—to the views of labor, and of management, and of the general public.

In this process, it is only human that each of us should bring forward the arguments of self-interest. But if all conduct their arguments in the overpowering light of national interest—which is enlightened self-interest—we shall get the right answers. I profoundly hope that every citizen of our country will follow with understanding your progress in this work. The welfare of all of us is involved.

ESPECIALLY must we remember that the institutions of trade unionism and collective bargaining are monuments to the freedom that must prevail in our industrial life. They have a century of honorable achievement behind them. Our faith in them is proven, firm and final.

Government can do a great deal to aid the settlement of labor disputes without allowing itself to be employed as an ally of either side. Its proper role in industrial strife is to encourage the processes of mediation and conciliation. These processes can successfully be directed only by a government free from the taint of any suspicion that it is partial or punitive.

THE ADMINISTRATION intends to strengthen and to improve the services which the Dept. of Labor can render to the worker and to the whole national community. This department was created—just 40 years ago—to serve the Nation. It must aid, for example, employers and employes alike in improving training programs that will develop skilled and competent workers.

It must enjoy the confidence and respect of labor and industry in order to play a significant role in the planning of America's economic future. To that end, I am authorizing the Dept. of Labor to establish promptly a tripartite Advisory Committee consisting of representatives of employers, labor, and the public.

'No Sugar-Coating'

CIO Proposes 7 'Fundamental' Improvements In Taft-Hartley

"Substantial" improvements of the Taft-Hartley Act in seven "truly fundamental" provisions were urged last week by the CIO Executive Board, "if real justice and fairness are to be achieved" in U. S. labor-management relations.

Here are highlights of the CIO statement, issued as congressional T-H hearings began:

THE 83rd Congress is now about to start hearings on Taft-Hartley. Pres. Eisenhower, and many leading figures in the Senate and House have expressed a desire to improve our basic labor-management relations act.

We agree that such action is as worthy as it is overdue.

The CIO, though pledged to the ultimate repeal of Taft-Hartley, welcomes this desire to improve the law. Leaders in the new Republican Administration have recognized that the Taft-Hartley law has substantial defects.

We are ready—because of the realities of the situation—to cooperate with a sincere effort to amend the law by eliminating its union-busting and other anti-labor provisions.

The entire country will benefit if the law is so changed. Industrial peace will be fostered. When undue restrictions against unions are eliminated, responsible management and responsible labor will move forward toward our common goal of insuring economic and social justice, which is the bulwark of our national prosperity and security.

If amendments to Taft-Hartley are to achieve the goal of restoring equity to our labor-management relations, they must be of a substantial nature. Mere sugar-coating won't do. Justice and fairness in the law are what Pres. Eisenhower has promised to labor. Justice and fairness are all we ask. Justice and fairness, we hope, are what the Congress wants.

JUSTICE and fairness cannot be achieved by the limited amendments which have been proposed in some quarters. If real justice and fairness are to be achieved, amendments to Taft-Hartley must deal with truly fundamental issues. The amendments must:

1. Eliminate government by injunction and restore the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

This means that Taft-Hartley's three separate provisions for the issuance of injunctions in labor disputes "without regard to" the provisions of Norris-LaGuardia must be repealed.

2. Remove the undue governmental interference which Taft-Hartley has imposed on collective bargaining, and thereby restore free collective bargaining between management and labor as the cornerstone of our nation's labor policy.

Union and management should be left free to negotiate the terms of collective bargaining agreements without unnecessary and unwise government restrictions. They should be free to negotiate whatever type of union security arrangements they deem appropriate and suited to their particular situation.

3. Strengthen the rights of workers to organize in bona fide unions of their own choosing by the elimination of hampering restraints imposed or encouraged by the present law.

4. Rid the Taft-Hartley law of the provisions designed to harass and weaken unions.

5. Simplify and clarify the law: Provide for the rule of reason in its administration, and reduce the present inordinate delays in its procedures and enforcement.

6. Protect both unions and employers in industries organized on an industrial union basis from the disruption of established and orderly collective bargaining by artificial carving out of craft units on an untenable and unworkable basis.

The Taft-Hartley Act, in an attempt to weaken industrial unionism and drive a wedge between craft and industrial unions, enacted certain provisions designed to favor the former. This "carving out" process frequently destroys the bargaining power of workers in plants, and replaces stable labor relations with chaos. This Balkanization of bargaining units is bad for both employers and workers.

7. Prevent employer coercion and intimidation of employes under the guise of protecting free speech —a principle to which we, like all good Americans, firmly adhere.

On the pretext of protecting the rights of employers to free speech, the Taft-Hartley Act has opened the door to employer prevention of union organization by threats and intimidation of workers. This Taft-Hartley provision has no bona fide purpose and never had.

A good-faith desire to improve the Taft-Hartley Act will be judged by how Congress acts on these seven fundamental issues.

WE are convinced that responsible management and responsible labor, working together with government, can achieve fairness and justice in our national labor relations policy. It is essential that we do so—essential for our domestic prosperity and for our security and dignity throughout the free world.

Substantial changes in the Taft-Hartley Act would demonstrate to our friends and allies that in democratic America, free labor and free management can work together in a spirit of national unity for the good and welfare of all the people.

In this year of 1953 that message is perhaps the most important we can transmit to the millions here at home and the millions abroad who abhor totalitarianism and cherish the democratic way of life.

Taber Calls In Big Business To Ax Budget

By MILTON PLUMB

REP. JOHN TABER (R. N.Y.), the "economy"-minded chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, has appointed an investigating staff reported to include nearly 40 business men to help him wield the hatchet on government departments.

Some of these business "experts" are sitting in at the committee's secret stategy huddles on appropriations for agencies which regulate the companies they represent.

For example, The CIO News has learned that representatives of Standard Oil of Calif. and the California-Texas Co.—both part of the oil cartel now under indictment by the government—sat in at a secret meeting two weeks ago on independent offices appropriations.

The latter include funds for the Federal Trade Commission, which the oil firms have bitterly attacked for its report that led to their indictment.

ALSO PRESENT as part of the industry advisory panel, this reporter was told, were representatives of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. and the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. The latter firm is subject to regulation by the Federal Communications Commission, whose appropriations are included in the independent offices group.

Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.), chairman of the independent offices subcommittee, also attended.

Similar panels of "appropriate" business men, it is understood, are assigned by Rep. Taber to consider appropriations for other government agencies. They are meeting regularly with members of the committee staff behind closed doors in the old Executive Offices Building.

None of the several Democratic members of the House Appropriations Committee to whom this reporter spoke knew about the proceedings. All agreed, however, that consumers, small business and labor representatives should have at least as much a voice in determining appropriations as big business.

THE BUSINESS group is said to be under Donald Belcher, of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. Members of the Appropriations Committee staff say, however, that Robert E. Lee, who was also chief investigator in the 80th Congress and minority clerk in succeeding Congresses, is directing their operations. He is a former FBI man.

Despite the "hush hush" atmosphere surrounding the group's operations, it was learned that most of the business "experts" are on the committee's payroll as per diem employes. Others have been named as regular salaried employes, however, and are on leave from their business employment.

A similar set-up, drawn largely from men assigned by various chambers of commerce, operated under Taber and Lee in the 80th Congress. When the transcripts of hearings which the Appropriations Committee conducted at that time were published, newspaper men held them up as startling examples of "witch hunts" because of their widespread attacks on individual government employes in each agency.

Harassed heads of government agencies called in to testify were asked about affiliations even with organizations as conservative as the American Economic Association. The head of one agency retorted that "the only smoke around my agency is that from the stink bomb which your committee investigator set off."

The appearance of the two oil company men at the closed meeting on the budget for the Federal Trade Commission is reason to wonder if a similar attack is in the offing.

The oil lobby has been trying to smear the FTC as "Communist-minded" ever since the oil cartel report appeared. Actually, the FTC has a perfect loyalty record.

THE HUGE investigative staff assembled by Taber, if published reports that it numbers 40 are true, is alone larger than the total staff of the committee when it was run by the Democrats. There were 37 full and part-time employes on the committee's payroll throughout the last six months of last year.

Although Taber apparently has more than doubled his own committee staff, government departments will find a different kind of hatchet is being readied for them. The chairman has said he'll knock at least $12 billion off the $78.6 billion requested by Pres. Truman to run the government in 1954.

The man who likes a big staff for himself swung the "economy" ax so wildly back in 1946 and 1947 that over 100,000 federal employes were fired.

In contrast with Taber's "closed door" investigations, Senate Appropriations Chairman Bridges (R. N.H.) this year is planning to hold public hearings on all appropriations except where national security is involved.

Campaign Pledges Shelved As Congress Program Revealed

PRES. EISENHOWER and GOP Congressional leaders last week charted the Republican legislative program for 1953. Only 11 proposals were designated "must" legislation for this session of Congress.

Republican leaders also announced that they expect Congress to adjourn no later than July 4.

The sparse legislative program, announced in a joint statement by Senate Republican Leader Taft and House Speaker Martin after a conference with the President, omits many issues on which the GOP has promised action.

There is no mention of nearly a score of GOP platform and campaign pledges.

TAX CUTS—a major Republican campaign promise—are nowhere referred to, nor is revision of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, which Eisenhower has repeatedly said should be changed. Likewise, there is no mention of statehood for Alaska, which votes Democratic, although Hawaii, which votes Republican, is singled out for separate action.

The program is silent, too, on all civil rights matters, despite Eisenhower's promise to end segregation in the District of Columbia. Republican pledges on D. C. home rule are also forgotten, and no mention is made of the promise of Senate Republican leaders during the opening week of Congress to consider a change in the Senate rules to make it possible to end filibusters, also called for by the President.

No provision is made either for standby price controls, which Eisenhower has said he doesn't want, or for continuing rent controls, which he called for in his State of the Union message. There is also no reference to farm legislation, despite rapidly falling farm income, and no health legislation, although the report of ex-Pres. Truman's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation shows a pressing need.

Other important omissions include legislation for development of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, conservation and resource development, industrial health and safety, child welfare, monopoly curbs, migratory labor, public housing, and improvement of the minimum wage and fair labor standards laws.

The program also makes no mention of foreign aid legislation. Taft said that authorization for continuance of the mutual security program should be included under the appropriations program.

Separate legislation to authorize such continuation, however, will have to be enacted before Congress considers appropriation of funds. Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.) of the House Appropriations Committee has said he wants to eliminate all of the $7.6 billion requested for foreign aid in President's Truman's budget.

TAFT and Martin said that the 11-point program "was not intended to be exclusive" and that others might be added later, but they emphasized that full agreement had not been reached on details of even the proposals listed. They also said that in presenting the program of "must" legislation they did not mean that it necessarily had to pass Congress.

All that they intended, they said, was to list legislation "which must be considered by Congress at this session."

While legislation not on the approved list can be considered by Congress, it has much harder going. This is because the Rules Committees traditionally back up the congressional leadership's program and refuse to report out to the floor measures not cleared for action.

AN EXAMPLE of how this works developed last week as Republicans in Congress continued their wrangle over the bill of Chairman Reed (R. N. Y.) ending the excess profits tax on corporations June 30 and cutting personal income taxes by 11% the same date. Eisenhower has called for budget cuts before taxes are reduced.

Reed, however, predicted that his committee definitely will approve his bill over Administration objections on Feb. 16. He pointed out that Republicans generally campaigned on a pledge to cut taxes and contended that "the party now has an obligation to keep faith with the people."

Here's The GOP Program—

Here is the Republican legislative program for this year in Congress:

1. Reorganization bill already passed. (Congress finally gave Pres. Eisenhower the government reorganization powers he wanted, after both House and Senate Government Operations Committees had voted to curb them.)
2. Appropriations bills to reach the Senate not later than May 15.
3. Hawaiian statehood bill.
4. Taft-Hartley amendments.
5. Limited extension of allocations controls dealing with materials required for the defense program and critical defense areas.
6. Legislation relating to tidelands oil.
7. Extension of Reciprocal Trade Act.
8. Bill simplifying U. S. customs.
9. Extension of old-age and survivors insurance to cover groups presently excluded.
10. Extension of temporary aid to schools in critical areas.
11. Adding two commissioners for the District of Columbia.

Employment Council 'Dismantling' Periled

FUTURE of the hard-won Employment Act of 1946 and operations of the President's Council of Economic Advisers is in doubt.

As first revealed by CIO, the entire staff of the council—which functions in the economic field to plan government programs barring depression and promoting full employment—has been given discharge notices.

Emil Rieve, Chairman of the CIO Economic Policy Committee and Textile Workers president, revealed the layoff notices.

He called it "an alarming move," indicating "virtual dismantling" of the council, and questioned whether the Republicans Administration is abandoning the full employment philosophy.

At the White House, Press Sec. James Hagerty confirmed that the firing notices, effective on Mar. 4, had been sent out because the agency's funds expire on Mar. 30. Former Pres. Truman had asked a supplemental appropriation to carry the council through to June 30, but Congress hasn't acted yet.

When Hagerty was asked if the council will be continued if the new funds are voted, he replied: "I cannot say."

The last council member, Vice Chairman John D. Clarke, formally resigned last week. Chairman Leon Keyserling and Robert C. Turner quit earlier.

CIO's EXECUTIVE Board, at its recent meeting, pointed out there was no mention of insuring full employment in Pres. Eisenhower's State of the Union message to Congress. In addition, Rieve said:

"Dismissal of the CEA staff, and the absence of any White House statement about the future of the Council of Economic Advisers, and a sudden rash of criticism of the full employment philosophy in big business quarters, lead us to fear that the Administration is consciously putting aside the necessary and constant search for means by which all Americans may find a job.

"If that is so, we are apt to find ourseleves soon enwrapped in a depression psychology that would be disastrous for the American people."

CIO Proposes 7 Basic Taft-Hartley Changes

"SUBSTANTIAL" changes and improvements in the Taft-Hartley Act in seven "truly fundamental" fields were proposed by the CIO Executive Board last week.

An end to "government by injunction" led the revisions suggested by the CIO board, as hearings on the labor-management law began before the House Labor Committee.

"Mere sugar-coating" amendments will not be acceptable to labor, the CIO emphasized. The board said five bills introduced by Sen. Taft (R. O.) "Are not even a beginning toward replacing the Taft-Hartley Act with a fair and just labor relations law."

In a detailed statement, the CIO said that it believes that it would be better to wipe the slate clean and enact a new law, but that "we nevertheless are ready —because of the realities of the situation—to cooperate with a sincere effort to amend the law by union-busting and other anti-labor provisions." (See statement highlights, Page 1)

'All We Ask'

Recalling that Pres. Eisenhower has promised labor "justice and fairness," the CIO board said:

"Justice and fairness are all we ask. Justice and fairness, we hope, are what the Congress wants."

There was no indication that such was the case, however, at the opening of hearings on Capitol Hill. Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.), a member of the House Labor Committee, led off by appearing in support of his bill to make Taft-Hartley even more anti-labor by banning industry-wide bargaining.

Parroting phrases of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers and other big business lobbies about "labor monopoly", Lucas said his measure would "protect" the American people against "those few labor bosses who, through mere whim or caprice, can shut down an entire industry."

The Lucus bill is almost identical to a section of the original Hartley bill that passed the House in 1947 and was struck out by one vote in the Senate. It would outlaw "industry-wide" bargaining by forbidding any union to represent the employes of any two competing employers in the same industry more than 50 miles apart and employing more than 100 persons.

Several Republican members indicated approval of Lucas' proposal, but his chief support came from his fellow Dixiecrat, Rep. Bardon (D. N.C.).

Other Democratic committee members, however, attacked their position and Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.) brought a laugh from the packed hearing room when, after Lucas had spent almost an hour trying to explain his plan, he asked what his bill meant by industry-wide bargaining.

Under questioning, Lucas showed he didn't know, indicating that he also intends to include area-wide and pattern bargaining, and wasn't sure what he intended to do about company-wide bargaining. In general, he said, he wanted the term "industry-wide" bargaining as used in his bill to cover any situation in which employer associations or national unions could control collective bargaining.

Rep. Weir (D.-FL. Minn.) former Minneapolis AFL official, told Lucas his proposal would "take the labor movement of the nation back to the 1920's and destroy a lot of unions." Democrats Powell (N. Y.), Howell (N. J.), Perkins (Ky.) and Bailey (W. Va.) also criticized the bill.

Senate hearings are scheduled to begin the first week in March. Opening testimony before the House Committee was limited to Congressmen who have introduced bills making amendments in the law.

Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.), who wants the non-Communist oath extended to employers and a clause protecting a union from being held responsible for acts of members acting as an individual, and Rep. Byrd (D. W. Va.), also testified last week.

Byrd has introduced a bill calling for outright repeal of Taft-Hartley and providing for a return to the Wagner Act. He said that the working people of America will never be satisfied until Taft-Harley has been "fully purified" by outright repeal.

Other Measures

Other bills calling for outright repeal have been introduced by Reps. Lane (D. Mass.) and Perkins (D. Ky.). The CIO Executive Board statement made it clear that it is "pledged to the ultimate repeal of Taft-Hartley" despite CIO readiness to cooperate in seeking improvements in the law during the present session.

Hearings will resume Feb. 17 when Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.) will appear in support of his proposal to allow the closed shop under certain circumstances. He will be followed by Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.) who also wants improvements in the law.

In addition to repeal of the 80-day injunction against strikes in national emergency disputes and prevention of employer coercion and intimidation of employes, the CIO statement called for a removal of undue governmental interference and a return to free collective bargaining, elimination of restraints on organizing and repeal of provisions designed to harass and weaken unions.

The CIO recalled and agreed with Eisenhower's support for lifting "the heavy hand of government intervention." This means, CIO said, that labor and management "should be free to negotiate whatever type of union security agreements" or welfare or pension fund they jointly deem advisable.

It demanded repeal of the T-H provision inviting state legislatures to frustrate collective bargaining on the subject of union security. The board observed that five years of welfare fund experience had brought no reports of abuses and no reason for governmental restrictions.

CIO charged that Taft-Hartley bars the traditional rights to refuse to handle struck work or sweat-shop-made goods and to engage in other legitimate economic boycotts. It added "the right to refuse to cross picket lines has been seriously challenged. The right to strike has been abridged."

Tabulating Taft-Hartley harrassments, CIO contended they run counter to Eisenhower's observation that without "strong unions" a worker cannot compete successfully for his share of the business dollar.

Among the harrassments which CIO charged weakened unions were nuisance damage suits encouraged by Taft-Hartley, which at the same time prohibits similar suits against employer unfair labor practices.

Affidavit Hit

CIO charged the present law is so intricate that "it can hardly be understood by the workers to whom it applies, or by employers either, for the matter." One of the examples cited was the non-Communist affidavit, which the CIO observed "has no proper place in labor relations legislation."

To achieve "justice and fairness" on the seven fundamental issues, an estimated 25 amendments will be required in the Taft-Harley law, the CIO Legal Dept. said.

Is It True What They Say About Dixie?

Rep. Barden, the Dixiecrat from North Carolina's rural belt, got stung by his own remarks when he attacked the power of labor unions in New York and New Jersey at the House Labor Committee hearings last week.

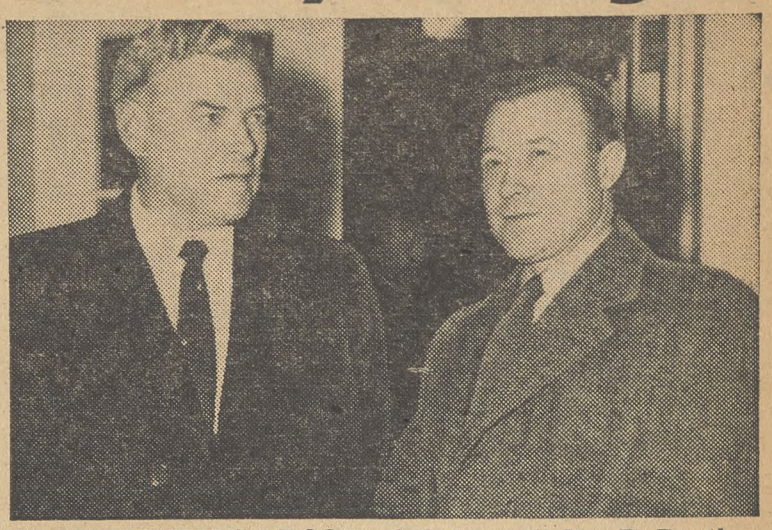
Boasting that similar conditions don't exist in the "wide open spaces" of his state, he said the unions "can't draw a rope around my neck."

Rep. Powell (D. N.Y.), with obvious reference to Barden's bitter opposition to civil rights, cut in quickly to remark that "It has been done to some people there, though."

UAW Aide Dies In Auto Accident

George F. Cranmore, assistant regional director of the CIO Auto Workers in the New York City area, was killed Feb. 12 in an auto accident near his home in Queens Borough, New York City.

He was returning from a business engagement when the accident occurred. Cranmore formerly resided in Saginaw, Mich., and was a UAW international representative before becoming assistant regional director.



AT WHITE HOUSE DOOR—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther (right) and David J. McDonald, CIO Steelworkers acting president, pause at White House door after meeting with Pres. Eisenhower. Reuther said they had a "general discussion of a number of general problems."

CIO Says: 'Government By Injunction' Must Be Ended

First of the seven "fundamental" improvements in Taft-Hartley proposed by the CIO Executive Board is to "eliminate government by injunction and restore the Norris-LaGuardia Act." This section of the board statement follows in large part:

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER has expressed pride that this Norris-LaGuardia statute was enacted during a prior Republican Administration. We note that it was emasculated by a later Republican Congress. We call upon this Republican Administration to reinstate this law to its original scope and effectiveness.

That means that Taft-Hartley's three separate provisions for the issuance of injunctions must be repealed.

Taft-Hartley calls for mandatory injunctions against certain union practices, but merely discretionary injunction action against employers. The Taft-Hartley solution for national emergency disputes is to enjoin workers for 80 days. It even provides for injunctions dealing with technical violations of the provisions relating to the check-off of dues and the administration of trust funds.

All of these injunction provisions should be stricken. As Pres. Eisenhower has said, "Injunctions . . . will not settle the underlying fundamental problems which cause a strike."

If government by injunction is to be ended, the policy of Norris-LaGuardia must be applied to labor injunctions in the state courts as well as in the federal courts. There is no excuse for the intervention of state courts in labor disputes falling within the jurisdiction of the national labor relations law.

The question then arises as to what proposal, if any, we are prepared to make for the resolution of national emergency disputes.

Our prime answer to this difficult problem is that national emergency disputes, like all disputes, can and should be settled through the progress of genuine give and take collective bargaining.

As has been pointed out by reliable authority, including the respected ex-Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, Cyrus Ching, in national emergency disputes cases employers have too often not engaged in collective bargaining because of their confidence that the processes of the Taft-Hartley Act will be employed and the union enjoined for the 80-day period.

THIS 80-DAY period has become in fact a cooling off period during which collective bargaining is cooled off, with the result that settlements are delayed rather than expedited. It is therefore our sincere conviction that if genuine collective bargaining does take place, and if employers know that the Government will not intervene on their side by the use of an anti-labor injunction national emergency disputes can be settled and harm and injury to the nation avoided.

Now it will be said that a national emergency dispute may nevertheless take place, resulting in a stoppage that will imperil in a substantial way the national health and safety.

The labor movement is, of course, deeply concerned with health and safety of the nation. We believe, however, that the term national emergency has been too often abused. We seriously doubt, on the basis of the facts now available, that any of the so-called national emergency strikes in recent years have genuinely and really created a national emergency.

Therefore, it is imperative that in considering this problem, the solution be fashioned only to genuine national emergencies. As Pres. Eisenhower has said so well, there are worse things than a strike, and one of the things that is worse is the loss of freedom attendant upon unjustified governmental intervention in labor - management situations merely because the hue and cry is raised of a national emergency when none exists in fact.

After careful consideration we have concluded that the best way to cope with genuine national emergencies is to continue to place responsibility on the parties themselves to settle their dispute through collective bargaining without blueprinting any general solution or procedures to be taken by the Government in the event collective bargaining fails.

THIS DOES not leave the nation remediless against the crisis which may result therefrom since, in the final analysis, Congress is always available and possesses the authority to act with a remedy tailor-made to the equities of the particular situation.

This solution possesses the overwhelming advantage that neither party to a dispute will be able to know in advance the form Government intervention may take and thus to calculate that its own interest will be better served by Government intervention than by negotiation.

'Justice & Fairness'

"Justice and fairness"—to borrow a phrase from Pres. Eisenhower—are all that the CIO is asking of Congress as the lawmakers get down to the job of amending the Taft-Hartley Act.

The President's message to Congress talked specifically about correcting faults in the law. That's a big assignment. There's evidence that a lot of GOP and Dixiecrat Congressmen want to duck it.

Some would like to leave all the old faults—and include a few new ones. They'd like to place unions unfairly under the anti-trust statutes, or break up industry-wide and company-wide bargaining, or write into the act a flock of new minor harassments.

The CIO Executive Board has pointed the finger at seven major areas of Taft-Hartley badly in need of change. If all, or most, of the CIO proposals are turned down by the conservatives in Congress, you can be sure that Taft-Hartley won't be corrected; it will be white-washed.

Voice Of America?

It's entirely possible that Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce will make a good American ambassador to Italy. She's scheduled to take over the job this spring.

Mrs. Luce is not only an earnest—yea, even an hysterical Republican; she is also the wife of Henry Luce, publisher of Time, Life and several other magazines.

Time & Life are slick; they are also overwhelmingly conservative; and their smart-aleck comments and editorials have aroused criticism in Europe. Just recently, the French government officially protested an editorial that displayed unusually bad taste, even for Life.

Thus, Mrs. Luce's family business connections, while they may promote her standing with the Administration, are no asset in the all-important job of explaining American democracy to the hard-pressed people of Italy.

It will be tragic for the democratic cause if Mrs. Luce, upon her arrival in Rome, sounds more like the tinny voice of Time-Life than like the real voice of America.

A Real Statesman

It's sad to realize that death has overtaken the Elbert Thomas, former Democratic Senator from Utah. During his many years in Washington, Sen. Thomas was a pillar of liberal thinking, a man who never took his eyes away from the goal of building a better and more peaceful world.

As an expert on Far Eastern affairs—he'd once been a missionary—Elbert Thomas knew there were no short-cut solutions to solving the complex problems of a poverty-stricken Asia. He kept in focus the need for lifting living standards as a basis for providing democracy and peace.

As chairman of the Senate Labor Committee until 1950, Elbert Thomas fought—and fought hard—against Taft-Hartley and the whole idea that the way to improve labor-management relations is to stack the cards against workers and their unions. He was a co-author of the Thomas-Lesinski bill in 1949; had it passed, Taft-Hartley would fortunately be in limbo and the country would be well along the road to better industrial relations.

The entire nation—and his native state of Utah—miss the passing of a great gentleman, a fair-minded legislator, and a real scholar.

Forgotten So Soon?

In Other Words—

Charlie Ervin's Last Column

Despite his 87 years, Charles W. Ervin, dean of American labor journalists, who died Feb. 5, could still pack a mean verbal wallop. Here is his last column in The Advance in large part:

By CHARLES W. ERVIN

THE GREAT MAJORITY of The Advance readers did not have to wait for this issue of their paper to learn about the inauguration of a new President and a new Cabinet and other new Republican Administration officials.

At least 90% of the newspapers and magazines serve the interests of the plutocracy and the plain rich, and supported the Republican candidates in the late election, so they could be expected to give the new Administration a big press.

It was not that what was happening was "news" and therefore entitled to being played up which was primarily responsible for this great coverage with no expenses spared. It was the publishers who expected large extra dividends from the new Administration who had their editors go the limit in reporting the inauguration.

This Ancient could tell the story of many other inaugurations and has watched them being played on the same stage in the Capital of the nation. The only difference has been in the cast of actors.

The leading actor, however, has always been selected by the cast, and the chorus—that is the people—have been allowed to ratify that choice. At times, however, there have been some attempts made to "cover up" the real ruler who was being inducted into office—that was the plutocracy. But in this year of 1953 no attempt was made to cover up those who were really being inducted into power.

THOSE IN CHARGE of this inauguration found a group of plutocrats more frank than those in the McKinley inauguration in 1897, when the group headed by the multi-millionaire, Mark Hanna, who made fellow plutocrats put up millions to buy the election, openly gloated over their victory.

Those placed in charge of the government for the next few years are the plutocrats themselves. They are not going to depend this time on mere political retainers.

No one claims that this group of plutocrats has lacked ability to manage affairs in their own interest. Their great wealth shows they have such ability. A few days ago, I received a letter from one who is possessed of that rare combination—an astute legal mind with social vision. He seems to me to have said the last word on those in charge of the new Administration. Here is what he pointed out regarding the Cabinet:

"Their experience and ability in private industry cannot be questioned. But they will approach their jobs with private-mindedness, not public-mindedness.

"IN MY judgment they are not capable of competently using the controls with which our delicately-balanced and better-balanced economy has operated. This will appear in their reluctance to use those controls and encourage a continued expansion of our economy."

This leads this Ancient to point out again that without expansion of our economy, there can be no continuous increase in our standard of living and that without that continuous increase, the Eisenhower Administration is sure to bring on an even worse depression than the Republican Hoover Administration.

Personally, I am not interested in what the future has for the Republican Party. What I am interested in is what the future has for the people under the Republican Administration.

'A Brave Soldier'

"CHARLIE ERVIN'S booming voice will not be heard by our ears, but will still ring in our hearts."

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers thus eulogized Ervin at services at New York City.

"His charming countenance will not be seen—but Charlie will long be remembered for the contributions he made—for the services he rendered," Potofsky said.

"He lived a useful life. He will be missed by his family and by the tens of thousands of fellow workers whom he inspired during his lifetime.

"Labor in this country lost one of its brave soldiers in the battle for industrial democracy—at a time when there is dire need for brave men to speak out against the forces of reaction and tyranny. Honor to his memory!"

By Public Affairs Institute

LAST YEAR American workers, farmers and self-employed produced some $230 billion in consumer goods and services.

Most of these goods were purchased with some $145 billion earned by 40 million people who work for privately-owned businesses and industries on wages and salaries. This is the base for this country's "mass purchasing power."

Whether we have continued prosperity depends, to a great extent, on what happens to the money these 40 million people earn.

The American labor movement—CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and independent unions—has 16 million of this number as members. The policies of the labor movement, though, vitally affect and largely determine the money incomes of all 40 million.

Each year, an average worker in this country increases his output 2.5%. This means that we can produce the same amount of goods each successive year with 2.5% fewer workers. In addition, about 700,000 new workers look for jobs each year. So, all told, unless we can increase the general demand for goods enough to provide 2 million more jobs each new year unemployment will increase.

Real Earnings Drop

We can only up the demand for goods if we increase "mass purchasing power" and raise wages and salaries of the 40 million privately employed.

What is undoubtedly alarming to the entire labor movement is the report of former Pres. Truman's economic advisers that "contrary to the common impression" real hourly earnings of workers in manufactuing "apparently have lagged significantly" behind the nation's output per worker since World War II.

The report said, further, that the increases in profits and other business earnings have reached such a point that a shift in favor of consumer income is needed. In other words, they are saying that there is not enough "mass purchasing power" to prevent rising unemployment when defense production slackens.

The report adds: "Since wages constitute the bulk of personal incomes, the preferable general formula—once wages, prices and profits are in a workable relationship—is for money wages to increase with productivity trends for the whole economy." Thus, they see the necessity for closing an existing gap.

An important reason why labor considers the Taft-Hartley Act a bad law is because it not only weakens labor's power to resist such wage cuts but also because it weakens its power to increase "mass purchasing power."

'Built-In Stabilizers'

Among the key tools used against the 1949 recession were the so-called "built-in stabilizers": social security, pension and welfare programs and unemployment compensation. They are called stabilizers because they rise when wages fall, maintaining purchasing power.

However, average unemployment compensation payments have fallen so far behind wages—40% since 1939—that unless increased they will not be able to serve their necessary function during large-scale layoffs.

One of the major items in the average worker's budget, which will greatly determine how much he can purchase each year, is his total taxes. Pres. Truman's economic advisers recommended that when taxes are reduced, a larger percentage of the cut be given low income groups.

While the difficult job of rate adjustments is being worked out, one quick way of raising purchasing power would be to increase personal income tax exemptions from $600 to $750.

One of the worst moves would be a federal sales tax which would reduce worker's purchasing power at a time when it should be raised.

How To Kill Your Union

1. Don't attend meetings.
2. If you go, go late.
3. If the weather isn't pleasant, stay home.
4. Don't accept any office; it's easier to criticize.
5. Never approve anything your officers or committees do.
6. Don't pay your dues until you have to.
7. Don't bother recruiting new members.
8. Insist on official notices being sent you, but don't pay any attention to them when you get them.
9. Don't waste any courtesy at a meeting. It's up to your officers to take it.
10. When you don't like what's going on say so, but under no circumstances offer any constructive suggestions.
11. Devote most of your time to talking; let someone else do the work.
12. If elected a delegate to a higher body or conventon, don't bother about attending meetings.
13. Then you can come home and report that the organizaton is in the hands of a political gang and that there's no use trying to do anything about it.
14. Look for hidden motives; don't credit brother or sister members with any ideals.
15. Don't cooperate with any officer or committee; make them go along with you.
16. Remember, you know more than anyone else about everything. If they don't agree with you, they're wrong.

You And Your Money—

Banks Will Cut Big 'Melon' As U. S. Interest Rates Climb

By WILLIAM MILLIS

WHEN Pres. Eisenhower told Congress the other day that the new Republican Administration would "properly handle the burden of our inheritance of debt and obligations," he was skirting around one of the most controversial economic policies now unfolding in Washington.

That is the announced GOP program for what is called "sound money."

It involves a complete turnabout in the Government's policies on handling the national debt, which World War II, Korea and defense preparations have pushed close to the $275 billion statutory limit.

Going by the boards is the Roosevelt-Truman policy of handling the national debt through short-term, low interest notes.

Incoming is what the GOP calls a "tighter money" policy of long-term high interest bonds.

The arguments over the shifting fiscal policy are voiced in the complicated language of high level economics, but what's at stake is relatively simple.

Consumers Will Pay More

If the Republicans carry through on their announced policy, here's what's ahead:

- Banks and big insurance companies (which hold most of the paper on the U. S. debt will cut a multi-billion dollar "melon" over the next few years because of a boost in interest rates.
- Taxpayers will have to dig in deeper to pay this "melon." Interest now takes 8c out of the U. S. budget dollar or some $6 billion a year. An increase of just .5% on the present interest rates (running from 2% to 2.5%) would cost an extra $1.3 billion.
- A boost in government interest rates would increase borrowing costs all along the line—on GI and FHA insured housing, on auto purchases, on installment buying on all types of consumer goods.

What Pres. Eisenhower told Congress in his State of the Union message was this:

"It is clear that too great a part of the national debt comes due in too short a time. The Dept. of the Treasury will undertake at suitable times a program of extending part of the debt over longer periods and gradually placing greater amounts in the hands of longer-term investors."

That marks a complete turnabout from past government policy—strenuously opposed by the banks and Federal Reserve Board—of handling the national debt at minimum cost.

With that debt now at the $267 billion mark, some 75% is due on a short-term basis. The short-term bonds have been at low interest rates, of from around 2% to 2.5%.

Now Treasury Sec. Humphrey and W. Randolph Burgess, his special deputy formerly of the National City Bank, are planning to "refund" the national debt on the basis of 20 to 30-year bonds at interest rates of 3% and over.

GOP Pledge Reversed

A first step was being taken last week, in refunding about $9 billion of the debt now coming due. The higher interest rates on just this portion will cost, it has been estimated, an extra $90 million—which is turning into reverse the GOP campaign pledges about "cutting government expenses to the bone."

In last week's refinancing, the interest rate on one-year certificates was raised from 1.7% to 2.4%. And interest on five-year bonds was set at 2.5%, which is the highest former Treasury Sec. Snyder paid on long-term bonds.

"For the economy as a whole," as the New Republic pointed out, and across-the-board increase in interest rates "means that the increased cost of servicing the debt will absorb anticipated cuts to be squeezed out of social welfare."

And "the economy as a whole"—small and large business firms, home buyers, farmers, and consumers—will be shaken up by the Republican's "sound money" program.

For the national debt of $267 billion is exceeded by private borrowing estimated by U. S. News & World Report to exceed $302 billion.

The biggest chunk of that private debt is owed by corporations, in long term and short term debts and business loans from banks amounting to $193 billion—and they're the people who scream the loudest about "red-ink government financing."

Then, there are home mortgages amounting to $59 billion.

And consumer credit—installment purchases, auto sales, charge accounts, etc.—are at an all time high of $23.7 billion, according to the latest report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

These figures indicate how much of the American economy is floated on a sea of credit. And a pushing up of interest rates on the government's debt will promptly force up interest rates on all forms of private debt.

This parallel relation is illustrated most closely in the field of home financing.

Turn Heat On Housing

While the banks and insurance companies are pushing for refunding of the U. S. debt, builders, mortgage bankers and home financing interests are turning the heat on the Veterans Administration and the Federal Housing Administration to boost interest rates on government-insured housing mortgages.

There's a drive on to boost GI housing interest from 4% to 4.5% and FHA interest rates from 4.25% to 5%.

Such GOP congressional leaders as Sens. Bricker (O.) and Capehart (Ind.) and Rep. Walcott (Mich.) are talking about "the need for raising interest rates."

A few days ago, Capehart's Senate Banking Committee deferred action on boosting interest rates—but that was more of a delaying move than a final decision.

There's a third technical step under way to force up interest rates. This was the action of the Federal Reserve Board, just as the Eisenhower Administration took office. That was to increase FRB rediscount rates—the amount charged banks for their borrowing—from 1.75% to 2%. The effect is to tighten credit and force banks to pass on the cost in higher interest rates on bank loans.

'A Broken Wheel'

So in three major fields—the national debt, home financing, and business and consumer credit—the push is on to pay off money lenders. From the advocates of the "sound dollar" there come promises that it will block inflation and deflation, too.

But even some of the warmest friends of the Eisenhower Administration, like the editors of Business Week, appear to have some reservations about how big banking direction of the government's fiscal policies is going to work out.

"At best," said Business Week editorially, "higher (interest) rates rarely squeeze evenly, smoothly, or predictably; as a brake, they are likely to slip for a while, then suddenly to bind (perhaps when least expected).

"It's a little like sticking a broom through a wheel: First thing you know, you've got a broken wheel; or if not, you've certainly got a broken broom handle."

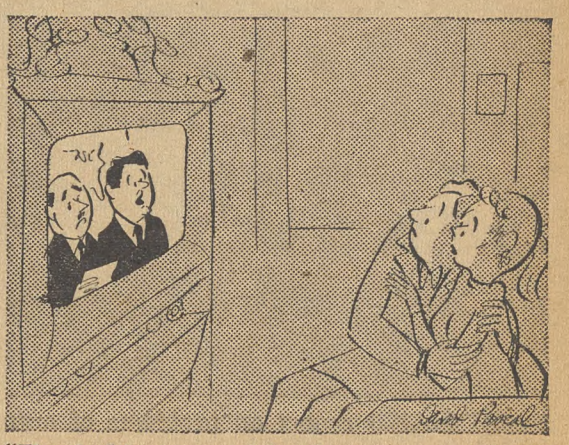
Here's What It Costs

Higher interest rates reduce the value of the consumer's borrowed dollar while boosting the earnings of a lender's dollar.

Here's what it means to a veteran seeking a GI housing loan (and the figures are comparable on FHA housing):

A $10,000 GI loan at 4% interest costs $14,544 if paid off over 20 years, $15,840 over 25 years, and $17,208 over 30 years.

If builders and mortgage bankers can get a .5% boost in interest to 4.5%, the cost would be $15,192 over 20 years, $16,840 over 25 years, and $18,252 over 30 years.



"The doubts expressed by the commentators are unfortunately those of the sponsor and this broadcasting company."

Economic Outlook Says—

Social Security Needs A Lot Of Changes

THE SOCIAL Security Act still needs a lot of changes to make it into an adequate program, the CIO believes.

The CIO's views are set forth in the current issue of the Economic Outlook, monthly publication of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

"There are still millions of people in the civilian labor force who are not protected by OASI (Old Age & Survivors Insurance) or other public retirement plans," the Outlook said after reference to improvements effective in 1951.

"The CIO advocates universal coverage.

"BENEFIT levels under the OASI program are still in need of substantial improvements. Social Security payments should be enough to maintain an American standard of living.

"The 'average monthly wage' should be calculated on earnings in the highest quarters (three-month periods) of the five consecutive years which produced the highest total earnings. This method would prevent periods of involuntary unemployment from substantially reducing workers' pension rights.

"The ceilings on earnings that may be credited in one year should be raised substantially from the present figure of $3600. The benefit formula should be further liberalized to give more weight to average monthly wages in excess of $100.

"As was the rule before the 1950 amendments, a worker's benefit should be raised 1% for each year of coverage, so that persons who have been paying contributions for many years will receive benefits in return.

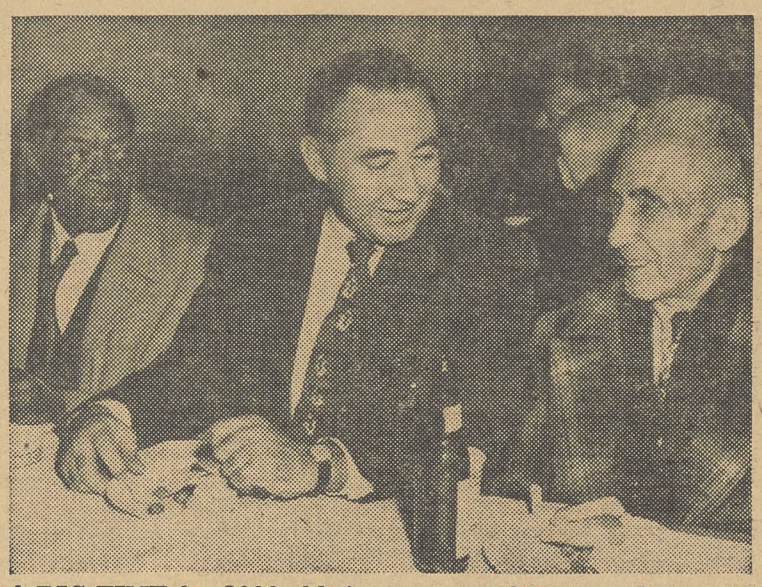
"THE MINIMUM primary benefit should be $50 a month, and the flat dollar maximum removed, leaving merely the limitation to 80% of the average monthly wage.

"The OASI program should recognize the fact that wives are usually younger than their husbands . . . The eligible retirement age for women should be lowered to 60, in place of the present 65-year requirement.

"Many retired people are poverty-stricken today as a result of permanent and total disabilities which took place before they reached 65. The only equitable and practical means of providing adequate income to a family whose breadwinner is permanently and totally disabled is through a federal govenment insurance program . . .

"The old-age assistance program is also in need of strengthening. Federal standards should be established to assure adequate help to needy people of retirement age . . ."

The CIO also criticized as capable of doing "grave harm" recent proposals of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce to water down social security benefits under the guise of helping all the aged. Under them, the Outlook asserts, "the huge corporations" which have been promoting them "would escape taxes an themselves and block adequate security for working men and women."



A BIG TIME for 3000 old-time auto workers was the recent celebration at the Michigan State Fair Grounds. Here UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey (center) lunches with two auto veterans retired under UAW's pension program.

OLD GUESSING GAME of "how many beans in the jar?" amused retired auto workers and their families. The union's recreation department and the Detroit UAW-CIO Retired Workers Organizing Committee helped plan the party.

Biz Magazine Tells Gimmick In Law

Who benefits, the boss or the worker, when pension plans and benefits are set up separately from Social Security payment.

The worker, says Modern Industry, a big business magazine.

"At present," the magazine says, "in a plan promising fixed benefits including Social Security, it is the employer who benefits when federal benefits are increased. His fund has a smaller difference to make up."

'You Can't Keep Good Men Down'- UAW Pensioners Build New Life

NOT SO LONG ago workers who had grown old on the job and could no longer hold up their end were laid off with less concern for what happened to them than might be given to a worn-out horse.

If any thought was given to retired workers, it was mostly to assume that they'd had the sense to save enough to provide for their old age. But if it turned out that through some misfortune, or because of low wages and unemployment, they hadn't been able to store up a nest egg, they were thrown on charity.

ALL THAT was ever done for such aged workers in those days "was to place them in institutions where they were supposed to fade away as quickly and quietly as possible," said John Barclay, chairman of the UAW-CIO Retired Workers Organizing Committee, a temporary group formed about 15 months ago in Detroit.

"No opportunity was ever lost to impress on these old people the idea that they were failures in life because they had failed to provide for their old age. They were made to feel that their days of usefulness either to themselves or the communities were over."

IT WAS to keep retired members from developing this feeling that the union decided to work out a program which would not only be for retired workers but would be carried out by them. Barclay said the committee's work has been closely watched by many social agencies interested in the problems of the aged.

"The committee has sent delegates to many conferences of these agencies and they have come away from them all feeling that the agencies are studying their problems from the wrong standpoint.

"In the first place they do not recognize that the chief problem is fundamentally economic, and in the second place that if any program is to be really successful, the retired workers themselves must have a big part in arranging it."

24,500 Gain Pension Benefits

More than one million workers in the auto, aircraft and related industries now are covered by pension programs incorporated into CIO Auto Workers' contracts.

In less than three years, a cumulative total of 24,500 workers have retired under UAW-negotiated pension plans.

The committee has held many successful and well attended meetings in Detroit, says Barclay, a member of UAW Local 205. Nearly 3000 members attended an affair held at the state fair grounds at which UAW Pres. Walter Reuther was presented with a scroll congratulating him on his election as CIO president. Text of the scroll was written by Frank Tuttle, retired member of Local 47.

Plans to set up a permanent organization will be considered at meetings to be held this month in five areas of Detroit.

Barclay said the problem of a suitable place for retired members to meet every day has been solved by the generosity of Hudson Local 154, which "has granted free use of part of their magnificent new hall to the retired members." This "drop-in" center, first one to be set up, was scheduled to open about Feb. 16.

TELEVISION, radio, library, card tables, games and all kinds of facilities for working on hobbies will be furnished by the international UAW's recreation department headed by Olga Madar.

"This new club house will not be in the same class for furniture and food served as the new $150,000 club house that has been opened by the Republicans opposite the Senate building in Washington," said Barclay, "but it will be in competition in hatching plots.

"The members of the club in Washington will hatch plots to benefit the millionaires — the members of the club in Detroit will plot to benefit the workers."

FIRST-HAND report on problems of auto pensioners was given by workers at "Workshop on the Aging" luncheon sponsored by Detroit United Community Services. Labor, social agencies, business, clergy and doctors participated.

JUSTICE WILLIAM DOUGLAS

Douglas Gives Hillman Grant To India Labor

THE $1000 Sidney Hillman award received by Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas in December has been sent to India to help further the advancement of labor in that country.

The award, for meritorious public service, is presented annually by the Sidney Hillman Foundation, established in 1947 as a memorial to the first president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

Douglas, who has traveled extensively in Asia, sent the money to Indian Prime Minister Nehru. He said in an accompanying letter that it was "a small amount and will not go far, but it is a token of the growing friendship between the people of the West and your people."

"My hope is," Douglas said, "that this small sum may multiply many times during the years ahead in a cause dedicated to the idea that Indian labor receive its fair share of the good things in life." (LPA)

World Of Labor—

German Miners Get 45-Hr. Week, Ask Wage Boost In New Contract

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE GERMAN Mine Workers Union, which has just breached for the first time the traditional 48-hour week in Germany, is preparing to write new post-war history.

It is paving the way for a return to an all-inclusive collective bargaining agreement in the industry, which since World War II has operated under conditions originally ordered during the Nazi regime.

The next step in the union program is a wage increase, notice of which was served on the employers at the same time the dispute over hours was settled. The union will not press for the pay hike immediately, but will concentrate on observing what the industry does to maintain production with the shorter work week.

THE CUT in hours, from 48 to 45 a week with no loss in pay, came at the end of nearly a year of negotiations that had a lot of overtones familiar to CIO bargainers in this country. For instance, after 11 months of meetings, the union committee learned that industry negotiators lacked the authority to conclude an agreement.

The fight to throw out the eight-hour day and install one of 7.5 hours began in March 1952. The management committee, representing hard coal producers in the Ruhr, Lower Saxony and Aachen fields, agreed in principle to the union demand. But it rejected the union proposal to put it into effect, and offered no counterproposal.

In October 1952, the Mine Workers called an extraordinary conference of 512 delegates who overwhelmingly empowered the executive committee to take a strike vote of the entire membership. The referendum, held the next month, showed a 97% majority of thsoe voting in favor of authorizing the executive committee to call a walkout if one was deemed necessary.

By this time resentment was growing stronger daily among the miners, and tension increased hourly. The strike threat was never, at any time, taken seriously by the employers, and their spokesmen calmly predicted there would be no concessions. However, the federal government was sufficiently concerned to get into the negotiations.

Federal Economics Minister Erhard called a meeting of both parties for Jan. 5, the day the mine union executive committee had picked for a meeting to call a strike. The union agreed to attend and postponed its meeting until Jan. 19—but when the government announced a "truce" until that date, set the time of the meeting ahead to Jan. 10.

So on Jan. 10 negotiations were resumed again, and it was at this session the union learned management spokesmen were powerless to act. Nothing came of the meeting, and the strike was set for Jan. 19.

THE NEXT week management offered an unsatisfactory counter proposal which was rejected.

The government called another meeting for Jan. 16. By this time the situation had grown so serious that Chancellor Adenauer himself sat in. After talking with both sides, he quickly recognized the justice of the union's demand, and induced management to accept it.

The shorter work week becomes effective Apr. 1. The union maintains it will not cut production, except for a small amount at the beginning, so long as management provides — as it can—better organizational methods, minor mechanical improvements, and faster transportation of miners to the coal faces.

The agreement has far-reaching significance. The Communists were quick to take advantage of the employers' long stalling and did their best to whip up wildcat strikes in the few weeks before the settlement, but had little success. Then, at the last minute, they tried to inject the question of higher wages, but again were overruled.

WINNING the shorter work day and week without a strike was a major victory for the union. Observers declare it will strengthen the hand of the anti-Communist leadership immeasurably, and also may be reflected in elections in March to plant works' councils throughout the country by defeat of Communist candidates.

The long range significance of the victory may be the end of the 48-hour week in Germany. The success of the miners in getting rid of it already has leaders of unions in other fields preparing for attack.

Finally, the political implications of Adenauer's personal role in the settlement are important. The government he heads had been viewed with growing disfavor by organized workers, and there is no doubt that his prestige with trade union members has now increased considerably.

Vic Reuther Hails German Unions As Bulwark Against Nazis

THE GERMAN Trade Union Federation (DGB) has again demonstrated that it is the most reliable bulwark against Nazi or Communist tyranny in Central Europe today, according to Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative.

Reuther's comment was based on the DGB's prompt approval of British action in arresting six former Nazi leaders for plotting the restoration of a Nazi government, and its offering of its own plan to insure against any half-hearted suppression of Hitlerism.

At the same time, he pointed out, the DGB supported the Adenauer government against an alleged anti-Semitic "blackmail" attempt by some Middle East governments. While this was going on, Russian-inspired Communists in East Germany were organizing anti-Semitic demonstrations.

CIO Urges Eisenhower To Block Tariff Increase

THE CIO last week asked Pres. Eisenhower to withhold approval of a Federal Tariff Commission recommendation to boost the tariff on imported pipes.

The FTC proposal is based on a claim by about half the American pipe industry, which employs only some 1600 persons, that low-priced imports from France and Italy threaten to put them out of business. U. S. makers of higher-priced pipes did not join in the complaint.

Concurrence in the recommendation "would do great harm to the international commitments and prestige" of this country, said Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO International Committees.

The CIO acted at the request of organized free trade unions in France and Italy, and at the behest of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. These bodies, Potofsky advised Eisenhower, "have pointed out to us the importance, employment-wise, to workers of the pipe industry" in the two countries, most of whose product has been exported to the U. S. in recent years.

THE CAST is not one for invoking the escape clause, Potofsky wrote, "but for giving consideration to the problems of the possible displacement of American workers, however few, if the duty remains unchanged." There should be opportunities for retraining, rehousing and supplementary unemployment compensation during adjustment, he added.

The situation is more important than appears because on its solution rests the whole tariff policy of the GOP Administration.

Ross To Speak At N. Y. Parley

Michael Ross, director of the CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, will be chairman of a group discussing new forces facing the labor movement at the annual Washington's Birthday Workers' Education Conference at the New York School for Social Research.

The conference will be under the auspices of the American Labor Education Service. Other CIO people participating will include Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman, of the Ohio CIO Council, and Brendan Sexton, education director of the CIO Auto Workers.

RCA Queried By IUE On Spanish Plant

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week called on the Radio Corp. of America to use the opening of a new plant in Spain as a wedge to restore civil liberties to the Spanish people.

The request was made by IUE-CIO Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett in a letter to David Sarnoff, RCA president, after public announcement of the firm's plan to build a new manufacturing plant in Spain.

Hartnett reminded Sarnoff that the company's decision will bring business and financial benefits "to a vicious Fascist regime" under which there is no free unionism or collective bargaining, and where "the denial of basic civil liberties has resulted in the jailing and murder of countless democratic labor leaders."

"We believe," the letter continued, "that you can and should propose to the Franco government that your new Spanish employes be given the right to: 1—Select their own bargaining agent by free, democratic election; and 2—Engage in free collective bargaining with RCA in the same fashion that the IUE-CIO bargains with your corporation in the U. S."

CCL Protests Arrests, Beatings In Oil Strike

STORM-TROOPER tactics of Quebec police in the seven-month strike of the CIO Oil Workers at the Canadian Copper Refineries, in Montreal East, were bitterly denounced last week by the executive council of the Canadian Congress of Labor.

OWIU members have been arrested, beaten and denied hearings or access to counsel while for 16 months the company has flatly refused to comply with the law, the CCL council charged.

"Action of the Quebec provincial police in taking into custody, questioning and ill-treating members of the OWIU in Montreal is an outright violation of the basic principles of British justice," it declared.

"TO DATE six members have been apprehended without warrants. They have been held in custody for days, in some cases, have not been brought before a justice of the peace nor have they been allowed to see or communicate with their families or legal counsel.

"It is known that in three cases the men were beaten. Before their release they were forced to sign statements saying that they would take no action against the police for treatment while they were in custody.

"The methods used by the Quebec provincial police appear to be a deliberate attempt to break this strike. In some instances workers' homes have been invaded and the men removed by the police without any explanation being given their families. Efforts of the families to determine their whereabouts and condition have met only evasive answers.

"The CCL proposes to give the utmost support to its affiliate, the OWIU, to have action taken against those responsible for the treatment accorded these men.

"Failure of Premier Duplessis to intervene, despite his knowledge of these arrests, would indicate that the actions of his police force have his approval."

Indian TUC Elects Steel Worker Head

Michael John, of the Iron & Steel Workers' Union, was elected president of the Indian National Trade Union Congress at the fifth annual convention, held in Modinagar, near Delhi. Gen. Sec. Hariharnath Shastri was re-elected.

Promises Recalled—

Ike Urged To Act On Textile Jobs

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week called on Pres. Eisenhower to fulfill his campaign pledge to relieve unemployment in the New England textile areas. He can redeem his promise only by taking direct responsibility for allocating defense contracts, TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka said.

Chupka, who is director of the union's woolen and worsted division, wrote the President that the government has issued many plans, reports and directives during TWUA's two-year struggle to get work for its unemployed members. None of these programs ever took real effect, he added.

"WE HAVE recited the detail of our experience and the many attempts to handle this problem to indicate that this issue, if it is to be dealt with effectively at all, must be the responsibility of the Executive Office of the President," Chupka wrote.

"Policies favoring such assistance exist. The primary question is whether effective administrative procedures will be directed to be established in the defense agencies for the allocation of defense contracts to the distressed areas.

"Such instructions must come from the very topmost executive agencies supervising the defense organization. They must be followed through from such office; otherwise our experience abundantly documents the sorry ending awaiting any effort."

TWUA offered to assist the President in making "workable plans" for the solution of the problem. The union asked "when we may meet with your representatives?"

"The upshot of the entire appeal was preferential treatment of plants operating less than 80 hours per week," Chupka wrote. "The further history of the handling of this concession indicates that it has since been emasculated and subverted."

"In the course of the months subsequent to its announcement, the defense authorities have even sought to take advantage of it to force uneconomic prices upon plants in distressed areas, thereby aggravating the pressures for wage reductions in these areas.

"In the New England cotton-rayon-industry wage cuts have been imposed and in the woolen worsted (industry), employers are asking for them."

Job Layoff Rate Starts Swinging Up

THE FACTORY unemployment rate is going up again. Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin last week reported "severe unemployment" in 37 areas with at least 6% of the labor force out of work.

Leading such areas is the textile city of Lawrence, Mass., where one worker in 10 is out of a job. Other unemployment areas included Providence, R. I., Wilkes-Barre and Hazelton, Pa., Cumberland, Md., and Winston-Salem, N. C.—mostly textile or coal mining areas or both.

A moderate labor surplus was reported in 81 areas in the survey, which covered 182 major areas with some 34 million nonfarm workers. Durkin said, however, the nation's manpower supply is "in better balance" than a year ago.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said preliminary estimates showed layoffs of factory workers rose from 7 to 11 per 1000 employes last December, halting the upward trend in consumer goods industries.

UTSE Asks Productivity Wage Boost

THE CIO Transport Service Employees union has asked 44 railroads for productivity wage increases for approximately 10,000 members.

How much the increase will be and when it will become effective are being considered by Dr. Paul N. Guthrie of the Univ. of North Carolina, referee named by former Pres. Truman.

UTSE PRES. Willard Townsend announced the filing of demands on behalf of the rep caps, dining car employes, train porters and Pullman laundry workers on the nation's railroads.

In its letters to the railroads and in presenting its case before Dr. Guthrie, UTSE asked for a 6c an hour wage increase retroactive to March 1952, and annual wage increases of 3 percent of the prevailing wage, the first to become effective March 1953.

TOWNSEND SAID these increases were sought under the "annual improvement factor" provision in the agreement signed early in 1951. The agreement also provided a 12.5c hourly wage increase and a cost-of-living escalator clause.

Under the "annual improvement factor" provision, railroad unions could ask for such increases provided they did not conflict with the now-discarded wage stabilization program.

70 Textile Firms Fight Wage Rule

SOME 70 anti-union textile firms last week took legal action to keep Uncle Sam from raising minimum wages 13c an hour for work on government contracts.

The companies asked federal court in Washington to restrain Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin from putting into effect the order boosting the minimum from 87c to $1 an hour under the Walsh-Healey Act. The order is scheduled to go in effect Feb. 21.

The complaint named Durkin, but really was directed against former Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin, who issued the order Jan. 15. Many of the firms are paying over $1 an hour and some of them are under contract with the CIO Textile Workers.

Here's Full Membership Of Score Of CIO Standing Committees

Membership of standing CIO committees, as approved by the CIO Executive Board, follow:

CIO-AFL UNITY

Walter P. Reuther, Allan S. Haywood, James B. Carey, L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; Joseph Curran, Maritime; Emil Rieve, Textile Workers; Frank Rosenblum, Clothing Workers; O. A. Knight, Oil Workers; Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers; Michael Quill, Transport Workers, and David J. McDonald, Steelworkers.

CIVIL RIGHTS

James B. Carey, chairman; C. Dale Buckius, Playthings; W. Richard Carter, Electrical Workers; Gustav Faber, Transport Workers; Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO; Neal Hanley, Maritime; Bessie Hillman, Clothing Workers; Cecil Martin, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; T. M. McCormick, Oil Workers; William Oliver, Auto Workers; Morris Pizer, Furniture Workers; Harry Read, CIO; Frank Shane, Steelworkers; Willard Townsend (secretary), Transport Service; James Turner, Rubber Workers; George L-P Weaver, director; Boyd Wilson, Steelworkers, and William Munger, Utility Workers.

COMMUNITY SERVICES

Joseph A. Beirne, chairman, Communications Workers; Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania IUC; Joseph Childs, Rubber Workers; John J. Grogan, Shipbuilding Workers; William J. Hart, Steelworkers; Al Hartnett, Electrical Workers; Bessie Hillman, Clothing Workers; Louis Hollander, New York State IUC; Emil Mazey, Auto Workers; Thomas Rusch, Brewery Workers; August Scholle, Michigan IUC; Sol Stetin, Textile Workers; M. Hedley Stone, Maritime; Ted Silvey (secretary), CIO; Leo Perlis (director), CIO, and John Brophy (treasurer), CIO.

ECONOMIC POLICY

Emil Rieve, chairman, Textile Workers; Walter P. Reuther; Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers; L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber Workers; James B. Carey; David J. McDonald, Steelworkers, and Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing Workers.

FINANCE

Frank Rosenblum, chairman, Clothing Workers; I. W. Abel, Steelworkers; Al Hartnett, Electrical Workers; Emil Mazey, Auto Workers; T. M. McCormick, Oil Workers; William Pollock, Textile Workers; Desmond Walker, Rubber Workers; C. W. Werkau, Communications Workers, and ex-officio, Walter P. Reuther, Allan S. Haywood and James B. Carey.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL WAGE

Otis Brubaker, chairman, Steelworkers; Solomon Barkin, Textile Workers; Lyle Cooper, Packinghouse Workers; Gladys Dickason, Clothing Workers; Katherine Ellickson, CIO; Joseph Joy, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; David Lasser, Electrical Workers; Henry Paley, Paperworkers; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO; Rosalind Shulman, Shipbuilding Workers; Joseph Swire, Electrical Workers, and Nat Weinberg, Auto Workers.

HOUSING

James G. Thimmes, chairman, Steelworkers; Ross D. Blood, Shipbuilding Workers; A. F. Hartung, Woodworkers; Ralph Helstein, Packinghouse Workers; John J. Moran, Communications Workers; Burl Phares, Glass Workers; William Snoots, Electrical Workers; Elwood Swisher, Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers; Willard Townsend, Transport Service; John Duffy, Electrical Workers, and Thomas Andert, Optical Workers.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Oliver Will Speak At AFPH Dinner

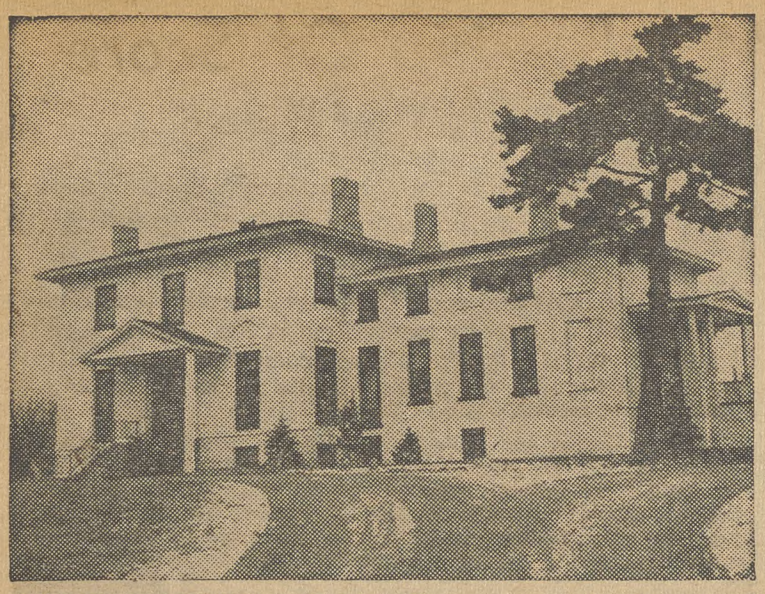
Robert Oliver, an assistant to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, will speak Feb. 19 at a dinner sponsored by the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped at the National Press Club Auditorium, Washington. The event honors the members of the House Labor Committee.

CIO Publishes Reuther Pamphlet

"We Shall March Together," a new pamphlet containing two recent statements of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, is now available, the CIO Publicity Dept. reported last week.

The pamphlet contains excerpts of Reuther's acceptance speech at the Atlantic City convention in December when he was elected president of CIO. It also contains Reuther's 1953 New Year statement.

The pamphlet can be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices are: 10c a copy, 12 for $1; 50 for $4; 100 for $7.50; 500 for $35.



HISTORIC HOUSE at Beloit, Wis., once on "underground railroad," will be headquarters of Local 1533, of the CIO Steelworkers.

Steel Local Buys Old House

THE HISTORIC A. B. Carpenter home, a landmark in Beloit, Wis., was built a century ago.

It was once reported to be a station on the "underground railroad," providing protection and shelter for runaway slaves. Tunnels connected the house with the Rock River bank and with a barn.

When Carpenter — a Beloit banker—and his family occupied the residence, he even built a small station where North Western railroad passenger trains stopped for the convenience of guests and the family.

Now the house has been purchased by Local 1533, CIO Steelworkers, which will remodel it to provide a meeting hall and offices.

Senate Report Hails U.S. Labor As Strong Force Against Reds

THE LABOR movement is doing more to destroy communism "than any other single force in American life," according to a report of the Senate subcommittee on labor-management relations.

At the same time, it denounced employers who have tried to exploit rivalry between Communist and non-Communist unions. It specifically cited the General Electric Co.'s "plague on both your houses" attitude toward efforts of the CIO Electrical Workers to oust the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers from some GE plants.

"We must in all candor recognize that an employer who sees rivalry between a Communist union and a non- or indeed anti-Communist union as simply ordinary trade union competitiveness is lacking in the insight and perspective which we need to rely on so heavily," the report said.

"We do not suggest . . . that the employer favor one union as against another . . . when he is confronted with a rival union situation involving a Communist-controlled and a non-Communist union. We do suggest, however, that an employer who takes advantage of such a situation to engage in divisive strategy is making no contribution to the common welfare."

3 Ways To Pick A Commie Outfit

The Senate labor-management relations subcommittee suggested three ways by which a Communist-dominated union may be identified. They were:

"By adherence of the union's leadership to the shifting pattern of the Communist Party line; by direct acts such as strikes which are designed to implement the interests of Soviet foreign policy; by systematic participation of Communist Party functionaries in the determination of union policy."

The report was issued by the subcommittee headed by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) during the last Congress. It made several recommendations on the non-Communist affidavits required by the Taft-Hartley Act.

One was that unions be further encouraged to "clean their own ranks of Communist influence" by amending Taft-Hartley to permit the affidavit requirement to be waived for unions that ban Communists from holding office and "enforce the ban in good faith."

Another was that if a union official signs a non-Communist affidavit and later refuses to tell a judicial or legislative body whether he is a Communist, the National Labor Relations Board should have the power to give the union 30 days to get rid of the officer or have its T-H compliance revoked.

The report also recommended that the Justice Dept. establish a special body to deal with reported violations of the T-H affidavit and to work with the NLRB and congressional investigating committees.

The report found that Communist-dominated unions are still operating in some defense industries. It urged that the government take steps to combat this "real danger" by closely supervising plants working on government contracts "to see that all appropriate safeguards against Communist infiltration are utilized." (LPA)

Seaway Power Grab Is Fought By FDR, Jr.

A MOVE by the electric utility lobby to take over the power development of the St. Lawrence Seaway for private gain is running into opposition in Congress.

Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) called on the Federal Power Commission to make sure that any license it may grant to the New York State Power Authority does not "divest the people of the U. S. of the control of one of our greatest natural resources."

The private power interests have joined railroad, port and other lobbies in opposing the international development of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project in accordance with the original treaty between the U. S. and Canada.

Canada is planning to go ahead with the canal-building phase alone, and the only seaway bill before the Senate would authorize U. S. participation in this undertaking, but not in the power development proposal.

Since the latter is certain to be highly profitable because of the general power shortage throughout the industrial northeastern states, the New York Authority wants permission to undertake it. John E. Burton, authority chairman, said, however, that he regards the long-standing federal policy of granting power preference to public bodies and cooperatives as "unsound."

ROOSEVELT called that comment "perfectly amazing" and said that the state authority should seek to "insure the same benefits to public agencies, municipalities, cooperatives and consumers generally as are already enjoyed in other areas of this country."

"It would, indeed, be a shocking reversal of Congressional policy if the U. S. share of the power of the St. Lawrence should be turned over to monopoly distribution by private interests," he added.

In an effort to prevent the power lobby from blocking a seaway bill in Congress, Republican leaders plan to omit power development from the measure and to authorize only U. S. participation in the canal construction program. Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.) has introduced such a seaway bill.

Five seaway measures have been introduced in the House. One, by Rep. Dondero (R. Mich.) would also split off the power development but authorize construction of some canals on the U. S. side of the river. Only Rep. Dingell (D. Mich.), on the other hand, introduced a "full-package" measure.

USO Chief Thanks CWA For Help

THE CONTRIBUTION of the CIO—particularly of the Communications Workers—in providing voluteer USO workers were praised recently by Edwin E. Bond, USO executive director. He wrote CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

"Volunteer service is at the heart of the USO program, and CIO has been most active in this direction," Bond wrote. "It would be impossible to mention all the services CIO volunteers are performing.

"One CIO union in particular —the Communications Workers of America—is deserving of special mention. There are no more loyal hostesses than the nation's telephone operators. There is no way of estimating how much the contribution of CIO has meant toward bringing a home away from home to servicemen and women when they visit strange cities and towns."

CIOers Give 50 Pints Of Blood To 'Bill' Crawford

OFFICIALS OF Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore were amazed at the response to an appeal for blood donors for W. H. (Bill) Crawford, Georgia CIO Council president.

When Crawford's need for blood for a liver operation was known, more than 50 pints were contributed. Crawford is also director of CIO Steelworkers' Dist. 53.

Donors included 12 members of USA Local 2401, Atlanta; six CIO staff members in Georgia; 16 CIO members in Lynchburg and Richmond, Va.; and 14 CIO members in Baltimore.

Crawford thanked all donors and all those who helped collect the blood. Those who helped round up donors included John J. Brownlee of the CIO Organizing Committee's legal staff and several Steelworkers district directors and CIO state directors.

CIO Urges Ike To Keep Off-Shore Oil For Navy

CIO CONCERN over inclusion of off-shore lands' legislation in Pres. Eisenhower's "must" legislative program was expressed last week by O. A. Knight, president of the CIO Oil Workers and chairman of the National CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

"We feel that the inclusion of these lands in the naval oil reserves was a sound action," he wired the President, "and reflects their true and proper status.

"We urge that you seriously re-examine and reconsider all proposals to transfer these lands from the naval oil reserves to the states. We urge instead that they be retained in federal status permanently."

Meantime, Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the CIO Rubber Workers urged Congress to keep title to the oil-rich coastal lands so the revenue can be earmarked for "oil for the lamps of learning."

He wrote Chairman Butler, of the Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, asking that Congress uphold Supreme Court rulings that the U. S. has "paramount rights in and full dominant power" over marginal oceans and the continental shelf.

THE NEED for sufficient oil reserves for national defense is apparent, he added, and relinquishing the tidelands deposits now "may lead to serious repercussions in the future."

"A look at our present school system in terms of the number of dilapidated schools, the need for more teachers and better qualified teachers, the number of areas where virtually no educational facilities whatever are available, all point to the sharp need for sizeable sums to improve the situation," Buckmaster, himself a onetime teacher, continued.

In addition to improving basic education, the URW president said, the United States must develop a large corps of scientists and technicians to carry out its leadership role in scientific, engineering and technical fields.

"THE URGENCY of the expansion and development of facilities for higher education to meet the demand for trained scientists and other technicians," he said, "is a field to which the revenues from oil deposits could make a significant contribution."

Meantime, a House Judiciary subcommittee headed by Rep. Graham (R. Pa.) prepared to open hearings Feb. 17 on 27 bills relating to the oil deposits. Pres. Eisenhower's "must" legislation includes a bill to give title to them to the states.

Straus Hits GOP 'Big Deal' Threats To U. S. Resources

RECLAMATION Commissioner Michael W. Straus stepped out of office last week with a resounding blast at the Eisenhower Administration's "Big Deal" threats to federal water and power programs.

In spite of what has already been accomplished, he said, vital water and power requirements that still remains to be satisfied are confronted with twin perils.

"First," he said, "there is the danger to a time-tested program inherent in administration under responsible officials who have testified to their disbelief in anti-monopoly requirements—specifically public power sections—of the laws they swear to uphold.

"A second danger is the officially proclaimed intention to stop, abandon, arrest or delay construction of the physical works themselves.

"Reclamation has prospered as a bipartisan effort under the Square Deal, the New Deal and the Fair Deal, and is consigned to the evolving philosophy of the Big Deal."

In a move aimed at another sector of the country's federally-held natural resources, Rep. Dawson (R. Utah) asked McKay for an "immediate review" of public land withheld from use in the past 20 years. Fear that the GOP might open millions of acres belonging to all the people to private exploitation have been expressed by many individuals and organizations, including the CIO.

GOP Warned Of Rout In 1954 If Farm Price Drop Continues

THE FARMERS who helped vote the Republican Administration into office in 1952 are going to throw it out in 1954 unless the GOP does something—and fast—about falling farm prices.

That's what congressional Democrats warned last week.

The drop has piled up to an average of 12.5% in recent months and has dumped the farmers' buying power dangerously close to its 1940 level. As the prices of the things he sells continued to sag—with little benefit to the consumer until recently—the prices of the things he buys have remained steady and high.

The result has been a growing wave of protests from the farmers.

Ezra Taft Benson, Pres. Eisenhower's secretary of agriculture, tried to quit them last week but only succeeded in stirring up more.

Speaking before the Central Livestock Association in St. Paul, Minn., he asserted farm price supports should be used as "disaster insurance." They should not, he declared, be used to encourage "uneconomic production" that might lead to surpluses and subsidies.

"Our efforts should be to reorient our present national policies and programs," he said, "so that they will contribute to the development of a prosperous and productive agriculture within our free enterprise system."

To the cattlemen he addressed and who have been hit extremely hard by falling prices, he offered no hope of relief.

Meanwhile, he said, present laws providing compulsory supports at 90% of parity this year and next will be carried out, he said.

BENSON'S speech, it was felt, heralded a major shift in the government's over-all farm policies from the ever-normal granery started by the New Deal, which he described as "government bounty," to a "free market economy."

The international executive board of the CIO Communications Workers, meeting in St. Louis, accused Benson of trying to depress the living standards of the country's farmers. The board said:

"Shifting government policy from one of price support for farm products to one where individual farmers would again be victims of the pressures of powerful middlemen and produce speculators would depress living standards of American farmers and take them back to the depression years. That would be real disaster, and Benson would need his 'disaster insurance.'"

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne observed that junking the price support program is "just about what the country can expect from an Agriculture Dept. whose policy appointees are mainly processors, bankers, handlers, agricultural industry representatives and others more interested in the welfare of business than of the farmer."

Sen. Young (R. N. D.) said flatly he did not like Benson's approach. The farmers don't like subsidies any more than anyone else," he added, "and are receiving less subsidies than business is getting."

Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) warned that Benson is "sowing the seeds" for a GOP defeat in 1954 by not acting "to halt the drop in beef and other farm prices."

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) also warned that in the past a farm depression has led to a general depression.

"Moreover," he added, "there is a direct relationship between the welfare of the farmer and the welfare of the miner, the factory worker and other segments of our economy. When the farmer's buying power is dangerously reduced, he unavoidably drags down with him the other parts of our economy."

Meat Buyers Warned On Upgrading As Ceilings End

A WARNING to housewives to watch out for up-grading of meat by retailers bent on making a few more cents a pound was sounded last week by Dir. Joseph H. Freehill, of the Office of Price Stabilization.

He issued it after Pres. Eisenhower ended price controls on a wide variety of consumer goods, including meats.

Since shortly after the start of World War II, Freehill explained, a buyer could ask for meat graded by the government as prime, choice or good, and could buy it at ceiling prices or less. Now, with the end of controls, the seller can put any label he wants to on it and sell it at whatever the traffic will bear.

"It is strictly a case of 'buyer beware,'" he said. "The housewife who does the shopping is going to have to act as her own meat grader.

"The average shopper, who hasn't had to worry about it for the past 10 years, just doesn't know enough to differentiate between the three grades of meat normally offered in the stores.

"There is bound to be some upgrading which will cause the consumer to pay more for inferior cuts."

Carson Gets GOP Bounce

THERE WAS rejoicing at NAM headquarters last week when Pres. Eisenhower withdrew the nomination of John Carson as a Federal Trade Commission member.

The ousting of Carson recalled the fight stirred up against him in 1949 when Truman nominated him.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., radio commentator, who usually peddles the big business line, conducted an anti-Carson campaign. Stirred up by Lewis and the NAM, business men sent many letters against Carson to Senators.

House Group Adds Backing For Consumer Bill

LIFTING of price controls has caused many Congressmen to be concerned over consumers' problems.

Twenty-three big-city representatives—18 of them Democrats—last week sponsored a resolution calling for creating a Joint Congressional Committee on Consumers.

Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.), earlier introduced a resolution to set up a special Senate Committee on Consumers Interest. Last week he urged the Senate Banking Committee to act "with the least possible delay" on the proposal.

The proposed House committee would study measures to safeguard the consumer.

CIO Auxiliaries Aide Recovers

Mrs. Bertha Perrin, secretary-treasurer of the National CIO Auxiliaries, is recovering from a major operation she underwent Jan. 31, and expects to return to her home in Warren, Ohio, this week.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

NEXT TO FOOD and rent, the federal income tax actually has become the biggest expense item in the average family's budget. If you're a typical wage-earner making the current average of $74 a week, and have a wife and one child, your 1952 tax amounts to about $380.

A wage-earner isn't able to practice the fine art of tax avoidance, which is a growing technique among well-to-do people. These can avoid taxes through such quite legal maneuvers as postponing receipt of income until a year when (they hope) the tax rate may be lower; by stock bonuses which can be converted into capital-gains transactions and taxed at a lower rate than salaried income; by giving partnerships in their businesses to their small children; by buying up businesses which have a tax deductable loss, and other shrewd tactics.

The effect of this spreading strategy of tax avoidance among the upper-bracket taxpayers is to shift more of the tax burden upon moderate-income families who can't tell the boss to hold up their pay until after Jan. 1. (If they did they'd have to quit eating.)

In self defense and because a workingman's taxes have jumped so heavily in the past three years, you and your family should know how to get all legal savings possible under the tax laws.

In filing tax returns, many families simply fill out the short form 1040A which allows a standard of 10% deduction for such expenses as medical care, union dues, interest, etc.

However, wage-earners could often reduce their tax bill by filling out the long form 1040 and itemizing permissible deductions. If you earn more than $5000 you have to use the long form anyway, but here too, you have a choice of a blanket deduction of 10% of your income or itemizing actual deductions you incurred last year. The wise method is to figure out your tax both ways to see which results in a lower tax.

Generally a family can save by itemizing deductions if it owns its home, had larger-than-normal medical expense, suffered a sizable property loss, paid sizable interest on loans or installment purchases, laid out extra dough for equipment or safety clothing needed in work, etc. More deductions are allowed than most families realize.

Here are some of the important ones:

Medical Costs: You can deduct all medical expenses in excess of 5% of your income. Example: if you earned $4000 and your medical expenses in 1952 were $300 you could deduct $100. If you or your wife are over 65 you can deduct the whole amount. But you can't deduct more than $1250 for medical costs on a single return or $2500 with one dependent; $2500 on a joint return, $3750 with an additional dependent, $5000 with two.

Work Clothes, Tools: Ordinary work clothes like dungarees aren't deductible. Distinctive uniforms such as worn by trainmen, bus drivers, sanitation workers, mail carriers, guards, nurses, firemen and police are deductible. So is safety clothing, including steel-toe shoes, safety gloves, helmets, aprons, goggles, and safety clothing worn by welders, some steelworkers, chemical workers, and others. Their upkeep, repair and laundry are also deductible.

Tools and supplies like patterns, if you buy them yourself, also are deductible. On small tools, you can deduct the entire cost. On expensive tools, you must "depreciate"—that is, deduct a proportionate amount each year of the tool's estimated useful life.

Other Work Expenses: You can deduct union dues and special assessments, and fees to employment agencies; also unemployment and state disability fund insurance in those states that levy these taxes on pay and the cost of technical books you need in your trade.

Church and Charity: All contributions to bonafide charities, non-profit hospitals, churches and welfare groups are deductible, including gifts made through payroll deductions.

Other Taxes: You can deduct all state and local taxes you pay (but not other federal taxes, like excise taxes, nor Social Security tax). Deductible taxes include property taxes on your home; state and local income taxes; state and local sales taxes; auto and driver's license fees and poll taxes.

Interest Charges: You can deduct interest you pay on your mortgage, and on debts, loans and installment purchases including that part of the payments on a car which is the inteerst or credit charge.

Rent Lids In Big Cities Backed

HOUSE DEMOCRATIC leader McCormack (D. Mass.) last week called for extension of the present rent control law, which expires Apr. 30.

Three Congressmen from big cities where the rent squeeze is being felt the hardest have called for continued — and stronger—rent controls during the next two years.

Rep. O'Hara (D. Ill.) introduced a bill that would give the President full powers to apply rent controls as they are needed. Similar measures were also introduced by his Democratic colleagues, Rep. Addonizio (N. J.), and Rep. Barrett (P.).

"I hope the Republican leaders realize," McCormack said, that it would be a "serious mistake not to continue the present law." He noted the law permits decontrol by local option.

He interpreted Pres. Eisenhower's request for continuance of rent controls to apply only to "critical areas" which would exclude Chicago, Boston and St. Louis" and some other urban areas.

The CIO Executive Board at its recent meeting took Eisenhower to task for his "recommendation against strengthening present inadequate rent controls."

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

DELIBERATIONS at the meetings of the CIO vice presidents and CIO Executive Board were constructive and enthusiastic. The program to intensify organizational activity was received with spirit, as was the program to activize fully and remain on the alert in the legislative field.

Three committees were established to intensify our organizational activity. There is a policy committee, composed of the vice presidents, and general organizational and southern organizational committees, composed of members of the Executive Board. The writer is chairman of these three committees. The committees' function will be to help chart the organizational course of the CIO in the future—to continue to organize the unorganized.

The meetings expressed opposition to the Taft-Hartley Law and its proposed amendments. Other matters of national and international importance were discussed.

Brother Irving Abramson has resigned as chairman of the Community Services Committee. He is a past president of the New Jersey CIO Council, a CIO national representative, and helps many of our CIO organizations with their legal matters. Brother Abramson's resignation from CSC does not mean he is severing his connection completely, as he will continue to assist in every way he can. He is to be commended for the fine job he has done.

Let us keep in mind our main objective and primary task of organizing the unorganized and protecting our hard-won gains and the interest of the people.

REG. DIR. ROY ATKINSON reports that in a representation election among bakers and helpers employed by the Seattle Bakers Bureau, Inc., Seattle, Wash., the CIO won by the following vote: CIO, 251; AFL, 224, no union, 5; challenged, 18.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports the following CIO representation election victories: Bowser Pump Co., Terryville, Conn., eligible, 127; IUE-CIO, 88; no union, 15, with IUE Rep. Martin Hogan conducting the campaign; and among garage mechanics of Motors, Inc., Waterbury, Conn., the vote was, eligible, 16; UAW, 12; no union, 4. UAW Rep. Robert Walkinshaw directed this situation.

Act. Reg. Dir. John Stocker reports a CIO representation election at the Beatrice Foods Co., Lincoln, Neb., won by a vote of 69 for CIO to 41 AFL and 3 no union. Credit for this victory belongs to Lincoln CIO members and their local union leadership, whose cooperation with the regional office was very effective and assured the margin of victory.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the IUE-CIO reports the following representation election victories: Phillips Electric, Brockville, Ont., Canada: IUE-CIO, 417; UE, 352; void, 2; Connecticut Tel. & Elec. Corp., Meriden, Conn.; IUE-CIO, 475; AFL, 298; void, 6.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election at the Queen Stove Works, Inc., Albert Lea, Minn., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers over the AFL by a vote of 266 to 133. The election was conducted by USA Reps. William Richter and Joe Kretche.

NATL. DIR. JOHN RIFFE, CIO Organizing Committee, reports six recent election victories in the South.

At the Alcoa Aluminum Co., Rockdale, Tex., the workers voted for USA-CIO, 173; AFL, 144; no union, 8. CIO Rep. Paul Hall was in charge of the organizing drive. At Tenn-Tex Alloy & Chemical Corp., Houston, Tex., where 90 were eligible, the vote was: USA-CIO, 87; no union, 1; challenged, 1. Asst. CIO Reg. Dir. Andy Hardesty and Rep. Harry Cochran were in charge.

Eighty-six were eligible to vote at National Engine Rebuilding Co., Atlanta, Ga., and the vote was: UAW-CIO, 79; no union, 4; void, 2. CIO Rep. Rupert Thrasher conducted the campaign.

Employes of two automobile dealers in Dickson, Tenn., the Huffmann & McCaslin Motor Co. and the Dickson Chevrolet Co., voted, CIO, 4, no union, 0, and CIO, 3, no union, 1, respectively. CIO Rep. Peter Haubner was the organizer.

Pact Gained By NABET

ELEVEN DAYS of negotiations won for 2000 members of the CIO Broadcast Engineers substantial wage increases and other benefits from two major TV-broadcast chains.

It was only a matter of minutes to a strike deadline when agreement was reached on 30 separate contracts covering 2000 employes — mostly radio and television engineers and technicians—of the American and National Broadcasting companies.

Negotiators were in session 14 hours on the final day of the bargaining talks at Atlantic City.

NABET membership in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Hollywood, Cleveland, and the District of Columbia had authorized their negotiators to call a strike at the expiration of the no-strike clauses of the contracts.

A substantial increase was won for the first year and a smaller flat boost was won for the second year. Eligibility for length of service increases was reduced from five to four-and-a-half years in the first contract year, and to four years in the second year.

George Maher, NABET executive secretary, said a "broad understanding which is expected to stabilize the future and improve relations in the industry represented by NABET was reached."

Brotherhood Week—

'52-Week-A-Year' Fight On Bias Is Proposed By Reuther

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week called for "a 52-week-a-year" fight against discrimination. In a statement on observance of Brotherhood Week, he said:

"Brotherhood and the fight against evil and discrimination are a 52-week-a-year necessity. What we preach during National Brotherhood Week, we must practice every day throughout 1953 and the years ahead.

"The American labor movement has a long record of constructive achievement in the splendid fight for improved relations among peoples of all races, creeds and colors.

"The CIO will continue to work side by side with other groups for these most desirable goals. We shall never halt our struggle until discrimination is banished."

Brotherhood Week observance this week is sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which this year is observing its 25th anniversary.

Simultaneously with Brotherhood Week observance, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People set in motion a campaign for 300,000 members in 1953.

The U. S. Supreme Court upheld, in a 6-3 decision, North Carolina's use of property and poll tax lists—on which few Negroes names appear—for selection of juries.

The Southern Regional Conference, Atlanta, reported that "a cold war of the ballot" is being waged against Negroes to deprive them of their voting rights in rural areas of the South.

CIO Tells Plan To End D. C. School Segregation

A COMPREHENSIVE program for integration of Washington schools has been presented by the District of Columbia CIO Council to School Supt. Hobart W. Corning.

Corning had asked interested organizations and individuals to give him his ideas for preparing the schools for integration. He took this step in the event that the Supreme Court rules out segregation as result of a case brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The CIO and other liberal organizations have filed "friends of the court" briefs in support of the NAACP stand.

THE COUNCIL'S program called for teacher and pupil integration, and preparation of the community for the end of school segregation.

The CIO affiliate also urged two immediate steps. One would merge the two teachers' colleges into a single institution, and the other would forbid segregation in the Columbia Institution for the Deaf.

The council urged a four-point program which would provide:

- A city-wide advisory council consisting of representatives of leading community organizations to work with the school superintendent.
- Enlisting the support of church groups such as the Catholic Interracial Council, the Jewish Community Council and the Commission on Community Life of the Washington Federation of Churches which favor integration.
- An educational program including newspaper articles on the experience of other communities on successful integration, and TV and radio presentations.
- Making speakers available to interpret integration plans to Parent-Teacher Associations.

Reuther Address Now On Records

Excerpts from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther's recent speech to the National Press Club in Washington are now available in 15-minute broadcast records.

The CIO Publicity Dept. said the recordings were "ideal material" for public service radio broadcasts, as they summarize clearly CIO's position on major national problems.

Copies can be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. They are available either in broadcast records at $6.50 each or on tape at $5.50 each.

Steelworkers Ballot On New Officers

TOP INTERNATIONAL officers of the CIO Steelworkers were picked at a referendum election Feb. 10 during which more than one million members of the union also balloted for international tellers, CIO convention delegates and regional directors.

Named without opposition to the top posts were David J. McDonald, president; James G. Thimmes, vice president, and I. W. Abel, secretary-treasurer. Contests for the other posts will be settled by the official count, which begins Feb. 20 in Pittsburgh. The new four-year terms start June 1.

McDonald, secretary-treasurer since the USA-CIO was founded, has been serving as acting president by direction of the executive board shortly after the death of Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the USA-CIO, in November.

Thimmes, who was reelected, first became vice president in 1946. Abel had been director of USA Dist. 27, with headquarters in Canton, O., for 10 years before the executive board recommended him for secretary-treasurer.

Sen. Thomas, Fighter For Labor, Dies

FORMER Sen. Elbert D. Thomas (D. Utah), a leader in the fight for the Wagner Labor Law and for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, is dead.

Thomas died at his home in Honolulu, where he was serving as High Commissioner of the U. S. Trust Territories of the Pacific. He was 69.

Thomas was elected in 1932 to the Senate, where he served three consecutive terms of 18 years.

During his Senate career, he was chairman of the Education and Labor Committee and the Military Affairs Committee and a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. He had an important role in drafting the 1938 wage-hour law.

HE ALSO HELPED pass the 1950 Selective Service Act and helped draft the first Congressional Act supporting the United Nations.

The labor movement applauded his efforts on behalf of the passage of the Wagner Act. While serving as chairman of the Labor Committee, he later led the fight for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Thomas' sympathy for labor probably first became known in 1922 when he was a major in the Army's Inspector General's Dept.

THOMAS was put in charge when the governor of Utah declared martial law during a big coal strike. But let him tell it:

"At first the unions thought I was their enemy. This was intensified when the employers ordered that the families of the striking miners must get out of the company homes by the end of the month. The union shipped in a number of tents from other areas.

"I ordered that they be not unloaded from the freight cars. The union members squawked—their children would be without homes, they said. But they cheered at the end of the month when I forbade the company from evicting the strikers."

Lifting Of Wage Freeze Clears Bargaining Path

THE CIO in the wake of the end of wage controls last week advised its affiliates that legal bars to making pay boosts effective no longer exist.

In a message to international unions, CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg said there is no stabilization rule now in effect which can prevent a union and an employer from putting into effect any wage adjustments that have been made in the past or may be made in the future.

The government, meantime, continued its price decontrol action. A second sweeping ceiling-ending order—ranging from gasoline, crude oil, poultry, to newsprint and metals—was issued late last week.

With the two orders, price officials said that only about 17% of items checked for the U. S. Consumer Price Index now are under price control.

In his executive order, Eisenhower said he was killing wage controls because the production of materials and services and the demand are "approaching a practicable balance;" a return to free collective bargaining will "strengthen the national economy and thereby the national security," and stabilization is no longer necessary to carry out the purposes of the Defense Production Act.

SPECIFICALLY, he ordered suspension of all regulations and orders stabilizing "wages, salaries and other compensation" under the Defense Production Act. The order continued:

"The wage, salary and other compensation adjustments proposed in petitions pending before wage and salary control agencies may now be placed in effect without the approval of such agencies.

"To the extent that agreement involved in such petitions are conditioned upon approval . . . this order shall be deemed such approval . . ."

HE PROVIDED that violators of regulations up to the time of ending controls shall remain subject to prosecution and punishment.

The CIO had favored ending controls. Its position was made clear at the National CIO convention in December, and was reiterated a few days before Eisenhower acted by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The day the order was issued, Reuther and Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers met briefly with the President. Later the CIO president told reporters that the ending of controls was "a constructive step that will permit wage adjustments for thousands of workers that have been held up in the wage stabilization setup for many months."

Chairman Charles C. Killingsworth of the Wage Stabilization Committee said approximately 9250 wage cases and 1500 health and welfare plans were pending at the time of the Eisenhower order, and now are going into effect. These involved an estimated one million workers who now are entitled to a undetermined amount of back pay.

CIO Statement On Wages

The following statement has been sent to all CIO international unions by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, and to all district directors of the CIO Steelworkers by Acting Pres. David J. McDonald:

All wage stabilization controls have been suspended by Pres. Eisenhower through issuance of Executive Order 10434. All adjustments waiting Wage Stabilization Board approval may now be placed in effect including retroactive application of any such adjustment.

Where adjustments in wages or fringes were negotiated and then denied or modified by the board, there is now no stabilization rule which would prevent the parties from putting into effect the adjustments originally negotiated. There is no longer any legal bar to putting into effect any increases or adjustments or to making any back pay settlements.

The handsome color picture was taken by Frank Turgeon, Jr., who also snapped the photo of Philip Murray which appeared on the Memorial Scroll distributed at the last CIO convention. Copies of the original color photographs of both Murray and Haywood, 24 inches by 30 inches and framed, may be purchased for $52.50 each, express pre-paid, from Frank Turgeon, Jr., Route No. 1, Rockville, Md.

Goodyear Talks Are Extended

The CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. last week extended the present contract covering seven plants while negotiating a new agreement.

A joint announcement said it was agreed "to extend the present contract on a day to day basis to give both sides more time for study." The contract expired Feb. 9.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster also announced that negotiations will open Mar. 2 in New York City With United States Rubber Co., largest employer in the rubber industry.

15c Increase Asked By ACW As Talks Begin

THE CIO Clothing Workers last week asked a 15c hourly increase and other improvements for 150,000 members in the men's clothing industry.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky headed the union committee that presented the demands to Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the U. S. A. as negotiations opened in New York City.

At the same time ACWA announced that it was seeking similar gains for 100,000 members in the shirt and cotton garment industries.

Managers of shirt and cotton locals and joint boards met late last week at the Amalgamated's headquarters in New York City to formulate demands in addition to the 15c hourly increase.

The clothing manufacturers' group represents some 850 concerns doing over 90% of the men's clothing business.

The union recently concluded negotiations with the association which won an additional employer contribution of 1% on weekly payrolls to the industry-wide health and welfare fund. The additional contribution, which increased the employer payment from 5% to 6%, will provide hospital coverage, beginning Mar. 1, to wives of union members and dependents up to the age of 18.

The paid vacation and holiday provisions of the contract also were strengthened. The agreement, which will expire June, 1957, contained a provision for reopening of wages at this time.

Guild Wins Raises To $39 A Week

Long-standing wage inequities on the Baltimore Sun and the Evening Sun were straightened out by the CIO Baltimore Newspaper Guild with a series of revisions that boosted rates by as much as $39 a week.

The settlement added more than $4000 to the $31,000 weekly payroll and averaged $7.36 a week for about 550 wokrers.

NMU Gains $5 Million In Back Pay

AN ESTIMATED $5 million in accumulated wage increases will be paid to 40,000 CIO Maritime Union members sailing on Atlantic and Gulf Coast ships.

A log-jam over putting into effect a 10% to 15% basic wage increase plus higher overtime pay—all retroactive to last June 1—was finally broken last week.

Three months ago, a decision by Arbitrator Aaron Horvitz granted the wage boosts, but then the award went to the Wage Stabilization Board. It was among the 10,000 cases pending when Pres. Eisenhower ended wage controls.

LAST WEEK shipping operators agreed to put into effect promptly the full wage and overtime increases of the award, and pay all accumulated retroactive gains.

Overtime rates were upped from $1.29 and $1.63 an hour, depending on job rating, to a new range of $1.48 and $1.87 an hour.

Sailings of two big NMU-manned ship, the Constitution of the U. S. Lines and the America of the American Export Lines, were delayed briefly in New York before the settlement of a dispute over the overtime rate was reached by NMU Pres. Joseph Curran and Walter E. Maloney, representing the ship operators.

'Rosie The Riveter' Squelched This Fashion Idea In A Hurry

NEVER UNDERESTIMATE the power of a woman—particularly "Rosie the Riveter" when she's being imposed upon.

Take the case of women workers in several Los Angeles aircraft plants, who were selected as guinea pigs for a "Fashions in Industry" project. The idea, according to its sponsor, was to "turn Rosie the Riveter and her sister factory worker into well-dressed ladies both on and off the job."

Among the fashion expert's prescriptions for "well-dressed ladies" were: "calf-hugging toreador pants" instead of blue jeans, "gay-colored riding or hunting caps" instead of turbans, and "instead of that horrible old lunch box, a smart wicker basket that contains a thermos matched to the trousers."

The gals—and the men in the aircraft plants—had their own ideas on how well-dressed they were. And the "Fashions in Industry" scheme was quickly smothered by female laughter—with, perhaps, a few bronx cheers.

Then the aircraft workers learned the whys and wherefores of "toreador pants" and "hunting caps": The fashion experts had discovered, as LPA reported, that "the average woman in industry earns more than twice as much as the female white collar worker."

'It Couldn't Happen Here?'— It Did To CIO Oil Strikers

"BABY IT'S COLD OUTSIDE . . . "—But the snowstorm which blurred the camera didn't cool the determination of CIO Oil Workers to continue their seven-month long strike at the Canadian Copper Refineries near Montreal. Mass arrests of pickets, grilling without legal counsel, beatings by Quebec police—all have marked efforts to break the strike. "You see the hand of Hitler's Gestapo or the arm of Stalin's secret police," writes Jack Williams in an exclusive eye-witness story of police attacks on the Montreal OWIU-CIO strikers. Taft-Hartley Hearing

FDR Jr. Attacks Bill To 'Pulverize' Labor

Now Hercules Ranks With Donora And Texas City

By WILLIAM MILLIS

Fifteen thousand American workers were killed on the job last year . . . More than two million were injured . . . Some 84,000 suffered permanent, crippling injuries.

Almost every week of the year, a federal or state agency issues such a report on industrial safety in American factories.

The latest, reporting on the year 1952, is from the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. Here is a story about the people behind an industrial disaster who will be facts and figures when the report for 1953 comes around:

It was summarized in scare-type banner headlines in the San Francisco papers a few days ago:

POWER PLANT EXPLOSION IN THE EAST BAY KILLS 12

Then below was a photo of what was left of the "dope house" at the Hercules Powder Co.'s big plant across the bay from San Francisco. It looked like those pictures you remember from Hiroshima or Nagasaki or Hamburg or Coventry during World War II.

And the news stories told the deathly facts from Hercules: The "dope house" where workers were mixing dynamite chemicals had blown sky high, with "a shock like an earthquake" that was felt 20 miles away and even jiggled the earthquake-gauge at the Univ. of California.

With the blast came a flash of fire and a pillar of smoke, and then the search for the dead began. Bodies and parts of bodies were found blown into a creekbed and splattered on trees as far as 250 feet away.

The dead—and the injured—were CIO men, members of Local 587 of the Oil Workers. Twelve of the Hercules workers were killed, and their white-faced wives and children began gathering at the barred plant gates. Five workers were seriously hurt and hospitalized, and a "number of others" were given first aid at the plant and sent home.

When the chemical mixing building blew up, Hercules management immediately clamped down—barring reporters from going within half a mile of the scene. A laconic company announcement said only that "a fire occurred. . . . Damage was estimated at $50,000. Some fatalities and injuries resulted."

But the members and officers of Oil Workers Local 587—one of the strongest of CIO affiliates in the heavily industrialized Contra Costa area east of San Francisco—couldn't be laconic about death and injury in a score of homes.

Now Hercules follows Texas City and Donora and all the places, big and little, where American workers were killed or crippled by their jobs. . . . Last year, the BLS said, there were 15,000 deaths and 2,031,000 work injuries, about as many as the year before.

Tax Cutters Give Ike A Headache

THE GOP House Ways and Means Committee last week rolled out a 10% income tax slash bill on schedule and as expected last week, without benefit of public hearings and in defiance of Pres. Eisenhower's pleas that Congress whittle the budget before it starts fiddling with taxes.

With Committee Chairman Reed (R. N.Y.) in full command, the committee approved the bill by a 21 to 4 vote.

The measure would move up from Dec. 31 to June 30 the expiration of the increased individual income tax voted after the Korean war began. The excess corporation profits tax also is due to end on June 30.

The committee failed to call in Sec. of Treasury Humphrey and Budget Bureau Dir. Dodge—the Administration's chief tax and spending experts — before okehing the tax reduction bill.

And Reed and GOP House leaders likewise turned down a CIO request for full hearing on tax loopholes and reforms before acting on the measure.

A hearing request was voiced by Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Dept. director, in letters to Speaker Martin, Majority Leader Halleck, Minority Leader Rayburn and Reed.

Cowan urged "full public hearings" because "the entire tax structure, anticipated revenue, the level of expenditure, the amount of the budget deficit or surplus must be carefully considered before any precipitous decision is made by the House Ways and Means Committee."

CIO IN a tax resolution adopted at the last convention urged: Ending the Korea-imposed tax increase on individuals earning up to $4000 a year, continuing the excess profits tax, tightening tax loopholes to increase federal revenue, and rejection of a federal sales tax.

After the Ways and Means Committee approved the tax bill, the Rules Committee said it would try to withhold it from floor action for 10 weeks or so.

Next day at his press conference, Pres. Eisenhower reiterated his stand that budget balancing should come before tax reduction.

The President objected once again to the Reed bill. Going a step further, he said he wouldn't agree to ending the excess profits tax on June 30 unless other revenue is provided.

Eisenhower also said that during the campaign, he had never promised tax reduction, that he had just said it was a desirable objective.

(At Hartford, Conn., last Oct. 23, Eisenhower said: "They say: 'You cannot cut taxes . . .' What kind of stuff is that—don't and can't? Of course we can.")

Tariff Boost Turned Down By President

PRES. EISENHOWER last week refused to raise import duties on briar pipes pending a further study on which his Administration's basic tariff and foreign trade proposals will be based.

The increase was recommended by the Federal Tariff Commission, as it is required to do under the law, when some U. S. manufacturers of low-cost briar pipes complained that foreign competition was ruining them. The American industry was born during the war, when imports were not available, and employs only 1600 men. Not all of these firms joined in the complaint.

THE PRESIDENT said he has asked the Tariff Commission for further information on which to base his over-all foreign trade program and his stand on the Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, which comes up for renewal in June. He expects to send his proposals to Congress "at an early date," he said.

Chairman Jacob S. Potofsky, of the CIO International Committee, had asked the President to reject the tariff commission's recommendation at the request of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the free labor movements of France and Italy, where briar pipe making is an important industry with many employes.

The higher tariff, Potofsky argued, "would do great harm to the international commitments and prestige of the United States."

CIO Protests Housing Job For Cole

A PROTEST against the rumored appointment of former Rep. Albert M. Cole, defeated Kansas Republican, as head of the Housing and Home Finance Agency has been filed with President Eisenhower by Chairman James G. Thimmes of the National CIO Housing Committee.

In a telegram to the President, Thimmes said the appointment of Cole, "widely known as an outspoken enemy of the housing program," would come "as a severe shock to all persons interested in slum clearance and good housing for veterans and low income families."

"WE URGE you intercede to prevent this ridiculous and harmful appointment," concluded Thimmes, who also is a vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

Cole formerly represented the 1st congressional district in Kansas, an agricultural area containing the site of the disputed Tuttle Creek Dam on the Blue River near its junction with the Kansas River.

Despite the Republican landslide last November, he was defeated by Rep. Howard S. Miller (D.) after a campaign based entirely on his support of the dam, which, if constructed, would flood 100,000 acres of top grade farm land, inundate 12 rural communities and drive an estimated 5000 people from their homes.

Business Takes Over On MSA Inquiry

BIG BUSINESS tightened its grip on the Eisenhower Administration last week when a group of 55 men, mostly "business and financial leaders," settled down to investigate Mutual Security Administration operations in 14 countries.

They were picked to evaluate MSA personnel and program by Mutual Security Dir. Harold Stassen and are headed by Clarence Francis, chairman of the board of directors of the General Foods Corp. They went on their assignment in 11 teams, with two teams covering more than one nation.

Some of them are genuine Grade A big business representatives whose firms have had millions of dollars in MSA contracts. Some are officers of banks which have handled hundreds of millions in MSA funds. Others are smaller—but not small—businessmen, and still others have military backgrounds.

TWO COME from universities—and NONE from organized labor. Labor, as as a matter of fact, was wondering just how the 55 come under Stassen's description of "persons of competence and experience who are in position to make an objective and independent judgment."

Among other things, Stassen said, they will exercise their competency and experience in making objective and independent judgments of the military end-item and training programs, the offshore procurement program, the use of defense-support goods or commodities financed by the MSA, and the productivity program in Europe.

Blue Chip Special Really 'Loaded'

Romping through assorted foreign countries on the Mutual Security Administration's Blue Chip junket are men associated with—among others—the following big firms:

General Foods, Swift & Co., General Mills, Gillette Co., First National Bank of Boston, Ford Intl., Westinghouse Corp., B. F. Goodrich Co., Marshall Field & Co., Pacific Power & Light Co., Guaranty Trust Co. of New York; Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Beane; Thompson Products, Inc., First National Bank of Portland (Ore.), Bank of America, Corn Products, and Armstrong Cork Co.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) teed off on the Stassen junket by calling on all good "liberals in and out of Congress" to "stop talking about a honeymoon."

"The issues are already joined," he declared in a Senate speech. "It is a fight between liberalism protecting the interests of the American people, and reaction which now seeks by law the enactment of proposals, which will appear on the floor of the Senate in the months ahead, to exploit the American people for the selfish interests of a few."

More Price Curbs Are Removed

PRICE CONTROLS went further into the discard last week as Pres. Eisenhower reaffirmed his intention of restoring the free play of supply and demand.

Lifted were restrictions on a wide range of articles and services that cost consumers an estimated $50 billion a year—a figure, according to Price Stabilizer Joseph Freehill, that probably will be boosted by price increases now ahead.

The list included, but was not confined to, milk, butter, oleomargine, cosmetics, drugs, sewing machines, vacuum cleaners, floor polishers, air conditioners, and repair services on radios, televisions and autos.

The price increases, said Freehill, are most likely on repair services and milk, and are possible on cosmetics and some drugs.

THE SWEEPING order was the third in the government's program of gradually eliminating controls by Apr. 30. It left only 13% of the items on the cost of living index still under full control. All consumer-type services are now decontrolled except laundry, dry cleaning, and linen and diaper supply services.

Eisenhower told his first press conference that he did not plan to ask Congress to give him standby price control authority when present legislation expires Apr. 30. He said he thought the laws of supply and demand would take care of any situation that might arise, but that if Congress wanted to pass such a bill he would accept it.

The CIO had urged that price and wage controls should be removed, as has been done except for the remaining 13% of price controls, but that standby legislation should be enacted.

Rep. Multer (D. N.Y.), announced he will introduce a bill to enable the President to freeze wages, prices and rents for 90 days in case of national emergency. Congressional Republicans have indicated their opposition. (Farm price story, Page 10.)

GRINS AND A HANDSHAKE were exchanged by Pres. Eisenhower and Adlai Stevenson (left) after the defeated Democratic presidential candidate had lunch at the White House. In an earlier New York address, Stevenson warned GOP policies may become a "big stick" abroad and a "big deal" at home.

FDR Jr. Attacks Lucas Bill To 'Pulverize' U.S. Labor

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE LUCAS BILL to hamstring unions—by forcing them to bargain with only one employer at a time—would "pulverize the American trade union movement into 100,000 plant and company fragments," Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) told the House Labor and Education Committee last week.

The committee continued hearings on changes in the Taft-Hartley Act, with witnesses restricted to members of the House.

Roosevelt said the bill sponsored by Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.) would upset present bargaining by making it illegal "for a union spokesman to represent the employes of two or more competing employers." It also would outlaw "national union advice or participation, even in local plant or company negotiations." he added.

If Lucas' bill—which has National Association of Manufacturers' backing—were to become law, he said, it would "drastically modify" collective bargaining relationships that are the fruits of 150 years of labor-management relations. And Lucas' plan almost won in 1947.

Bargaining for employes of more than one plant or one employer, Roosevelt said, is but one of the many forms of collective relationship that has "emerged in response to the special needs and traditions of our modern industrial system."

'Monopoly' Answered

Roosevelt ridiculed those who use the terms "labor monopoly" and "labor bosses."

"The combination of workers into national unions," he said, "leads to results far different for the welfare of America than the combination of businesses into monopolies. Corporate monopolies are anti-social conspiracies created only to restrict competition and increase profit to enrich the few at the expense of the many.

"Unions have grown to serve the many, not the privileged few. As a result of collective bargaining—local, regional or national—the living standards and opportunities of millions of workers, non-union as well as union, have been raised.

"In fact, all segments of the population, including the employers themselves, have shared in these benefits, since high wages supply the purchasing power on which our nation's prosperity depends."

Destruction of national unions and the bargaining forms that have stood the test of time are wrong answers to the problem of strikes affecting the national welfare, Roosevelt maintained.

"Congress can destroy the power of unions in order to make the problem of strikes disappear," he concluded. "Perhaps this would be welcome to certain groups within management. But its effect would be tragic for the nation's workers and for the American people."

Rep. Rhodes (D. Pa.) testified in favor of two union security bills he introduced. One proposed outright repeal of the T-H ban on the closed shop to permit any union to negotiate "any type of union security clause" regardless of laws in some states prohibiting the closed shop. The other would make the closed shop legal in the printing and publishing industry.

Rhodes also urged the committee to consider carefully the elimination of "other unfair provisions" in the act.

"As a worker I know what it was like in an industrial community before there was a Wagner Act," he said. (Rhodes is from Reading, Pa.)

"I lived and worked under Taft-Hartley. You need not read these laws to feel the difference between them. They affect not only the livelihood of organized workers, but all working people. They affect community life and the nation . . .

Condon's Proposals

"No matter how many times you may read the law, unless you are close to reality, you may fail to recognize the evils which grow from bad and unjust legislation."

Rep. Condon (D.), a veteran liberal and pro-labor member of the California Assembly now serving his first term in Congress, won the compliments of the committee for his able presentation of a series of amendments, most of which were technical or administrative.

The knowledge of the intricacies of the act he displayed was gained while he was acting as attorney for locals of the CIO Oil Workers in the East Bay area.

Condon would take away the arbitrary power of the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board to refuse to issue an unfair labor practices complaint by allowing appeals to the board, for which there is no provision at present.

He also proposed to give strikers a vote in bargaining representation elections, a change favored by Pres. Eisenhower and Sen. Taft (R. O.).

Rep. O'Hara (D. Ill.) called for outright repeal of T-H and a return to the pre-1947 Wagner Act.

Rep. McDonough (D. Cal.) sponsored amendments to ease the prohibition of union political contributions by allowing union newspapers to support candidates, and to require the non-Communist oath from employers.

'Sugar-Coating Won't Do' —Order Your Copy Now

CIO's position on Taft-Hartley Act amendments, issued recently by the CIO Executive Board, is now available in an eight-page pamphlet.

The pamphlet, "Sugar-Coating Won't Do," contains the text of the Lincoln Birthday statement in which CIO listed the seven truly fundamental improvements needed to bring justice and fairness to the federal labor relations law.

Copies of the pamphlet can be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Prices are: 5c a copy; 50 for $1.50; 100 for $2.50; 500 for $10 and 1000 for $18.00.

Reuther, McDonald Named To Labor Dept. Advisory Unit

TWO CIO leaders last week were appointed to a joint labor-management-public advisory committte to the Labor Dept.

CIO and Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Steelworkers Acting Pres. David J. McDonald were named to the 15-member group.

Sec. of Labor Durkin said the committee will be a "continuing body" for consultation on the Labor Dept.'s special problems. The committee was set up at request of Pres. Eisenhower.

First meeting of the advisory group was scheduled for Feb. 23 when, Durkin said, it will discuss proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act. He said he "hoped" some agreement could be reached.

Other labor members are AFL Pres. George Meany, Railway Clerks Pres. George Harrison, and Mine Workers Pres. John L. Lewis.

Industry members are Ben Moreell, Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. board chairman; Frank Rising, Automotive & Aviation Parts Association president; David Zellerbach, Crown-Zellerbach Corp. president; Harry M. Moses, Bituminous Coal Operators' Association president; and John J. O'Donnell, National Constructors Association president.

Named as public members were Cyrus Ching, former director of the Federal Mediation Service, and these university professors: Sumner H. Slichter, Harvard; Jean T. McKelvey, Cornell; Maurice T. Van Hecke, North Carolina; and Paul A. Dodd, Univ. of California at Los Angeles.

Senators Hit Jew Baiting By Commies

TWO RESOLUTIONS condemning the surge of anti-Semitism in Soviet Russia and her satellites were introduced in the Senate last week.

One, sponsored by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), proposed a denunciation of Communist anti-Semitism by the Senate and a request to the State Dept. to take up the question with Russia. Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), asked to be made a co-sponsor.

The other was introduced by Sens. Hendrickson and Smith, New Jersey Republicans.

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther sent a message to a conference of the National Committee for Labor Israel in New York saying that the CIO is proud to join in mobilizing free men "against the ruthless masters of the Kremlin in their latest acts of anti-Semitism."

"When the Communists hunt and persecute Jews while deploring discrimination and anti-Semitism in the West," he wrote, "we of the West have merely the latest proof that democracy confronts an aggressive force prepared . . . to exploit any prejudice to seize world power."

NAM Clangs The Alarm, Calls For 'Good Witnesses To Defend T-H'

A FOUR-ALARM call for help went out last week from Washington headquarters of the National Association of Manufacturers to big businessmen across the land.

It called almost for a "march on Washington" by friends and defenders of the Taft-Hartley Act.

The NAM, in its official Washington Bulletin, advised its members that unions are preparing strong cases for major revisions and improvements of T-H.

"Conservatives in Congress," the NAM said, "are disappointed at the lack of requests from business to testify at House and Senate hearings on revising the Taft-Hartley Act."

The NAM Bulletin said "the threat to Taft-Hartley"—that is, to all the anti-union provisions it contains—"is considered serious." Pleading for "strong business support," it asked NAM members who know "a good witness to defend Taft-Hartley" to come forward pronto.

The NAM also gave its official approval to Rep. Lucas' (D., Tex.) proposal to outlaw what he called industry-wide, union-wide or regional bargaining—in fact just about everything but company union deals.

P. S.—While the NAM is sounding its alarm, how about telling your congressman you want Taft-Hartley amended along lines the CIO has proposed?

Washington Invasion

"Two is company and three's a crowd" is an old saying that hints at, but scarcely describes, the invasion of Washington by a host of businessmen during the first month of the Republican Administration.

For many years the GOP spent millions on propaganda to try convincing America that it's not the party of big business. But the first 30 days since inauguration have completely undone the Republican's public relations efforts of the past decade.

The businessmen, it has been observed, are coming in the windows, coming in the doors, and by golly, coming through the floors in Washington.

Nobody objects to businessmen playing their proper part in government. But their growing monopolization of key posts is a cause of most serious concern.

The exclusive CIO News story, published last week, of Rep. John Taber's business advisory committee is a shocking case in point. Taber has "drafted"—and it must have been easy to do—a group of businessmen to aid his House Appropriations Committee.

Presumably the businessmen will recommend "economy cuts" in the funds of the very agencies that are supposed to regulate them. It's like giving ballplayers the right to overrule the umpire.

A second case in point is the appointment by Harold Stassen of a team of largely businessmen advisors to report on the efficiency of overseas posts of the Mutual Security Administrators. Many of them, we suspect, will decide that MSA's important overseas labor and welfare activities are "frills and fads."

It will be a national calamity if the Administration permits itself to be captured and hogtied by the big-money, special-interest boys. The trend is fast under way. It ought to be stopped.

'Meat Ax' At Work

Speaking of Rep. Taber, the head of the House Appropriations Committee has a nickname of "Meat Ax"—and he's reported to be proud of it.

Last week ole John was swinging his "meat ax" with a vengence, and when he got through, it was the school kids, the miners, and homecoming GI's trying to find a job who got it in the neck.

Taber's committee did itself proud, in its opinion, by whacking $1.4 billion from a deficiency spending bill. A big part of the cut was in the Defense Dept., but when you dig into what was cut from other government agencies, then the promises of "economy" stand out as hardship for the people. For example:

The cuts for the Council for Economic Advisers and for state unemployment services aren't going to help jobless workers in coming months.

The widows in Centralia, Ill., can tell you that mine safety programs need building up, but Taber's committee whacked off $474,000 for that purpose.

And ole John tossed clear out the window a $24 million federal grant for schools in special defense areas. The House, fortunately, had the intelligence largely to reverse Taber on that. The same cannot be said for the new swivel chairs the congressmen voted for themselves.

In Other Words—

Labor's Stake In Atomic Energy

CIO's continued support of public ownership and development of atomic energy resources was discussed on the NBC "Viewpoint USA" broadcast last week by Pres. Elwood Swisher of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, which represents many atomic workers. Swisher's comments, as interviewed by Ray Shearer, follow in part:

By ELWOOD SWISHER

THE CIO has always taken the position that all atomic energy resources, facilities and plants should be publicly owned and publicly operated.

The CIO Executive Board, when it met in Washington recently, reiterated that position. This action was taken at the suggestion of the Chemical Workers union and the CIO pledged itself to fight for that principle in the new Congress.

We have a new Congress and a new Administration. No one knows for sure just what their position will be on this subject. But the new Administration already carries a big business label.

And big business itself—I am not now talking about the Administration—has made it perfectly plain that it intends to use whatever influence it will have in the new Washington climate to promote a raid on the public interests.

Just One Example

The off-shore oil fields are one example. And there was the proposal of Charles E. Wilson, the former president of General Electric and a man who for many years spoke for big business. He has proposed turning the Tennessee Valley Authority over to private interests.

And, we are convinced, there will be a drive for private ownership and operation of atomic energy resources as well. Not, perhaps, the bomb production facilities, but certainly the facilities for peace-time use of atomic energy. And its peace-time potentials are simply fabulous.

Of course there was a bitter fight on Capitol Hill, in the early post-war days, over this very question. The private utilities lost at that time. But now, we fear, they will expect an Administration composed of former big business men to react far differently than did the Truman Administration.

Tom Stokes, the well-known columnist, discussed this matter in a recent column. He wrote:

"Keeping atomic energy in trust for our people was one of our historic decisions. Nor was it won without a battle in Congress, for private interests, including the utilities, had their eyes on this new source of energy then, and have been itching to get their hands into it ever since.

"You may remember how the utilities bitterly fought the nomination of David Lilienthal as first chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission because he had been long identified with TVA. They did not want in charge of AEC one so alert from long practical experience to the public interest in utilization of our power resources, and so knowing also of the ways of private utilities."

We of the CIO are firm believers in free enterprise . . . but we fail to see the justice or the fairness of allowing any private interest to profit from a resource which is owned by all the people of the United States and which was discovered and developed at the taxpayer's expense.

Rich Man's Welfare State

That, it seems to us, would be creating a welfare state—for the welfare of the very rich. We not only think it would be wrong to allow private groups to control and exploit the nation's atomic energy resource—we think it would be suicidal.

Private companies are operating many atomic energy installations under contract to the AEC. Thus our members are employes of private concerns, but they are treated in a far different manner than other workers in private industry. The company hires the workers. The company decides whether they are good security risks.

It can—and does—use lie detectors and a diabolical espionage system to spy on the workers. Their every word and action is under suspicion in many instances.

Now we have no argument with a legitimate security program. Obviously, the secrets of the atomic bomb must be protected. But if atomic energy were in the hands of private industry, the security check would be used as a union-busting device. And that would be the first step toward a Fascist state.

HOW SERIOUS is the farm recession? Many people are asking this question. The Senate Agriculture Committee has opened hearings on it. Here are some of the facts they've learned.

In the last year prices paid to farmers for their produce fell 11%. At the same time retail food prices in grocery stores dropped only 1%.

Farmers produced 3.5% more in 1952 than 1951, but received $500 million, or 3%, less net income.

For each dollar spent for food in the grocery store, the share to the farmer dropped from 50c to 45c in the last year. He is now getting the smallest share of the consumer's food dollar he has received since 1941.

Sen. Aiken (R. Vt.), chairman of the committee, said: "The rapidly declining prices of farm commodities are not only of serious concern to farmers, but should concern every wage earner, housewife and businessman as well.

"The drop in farm income and purchasing power can have serious consequences to the national economy if it continues."

Farm Crash Brings Job Layoffs

The Senator is saying that when 25 million Americans who live on farms have less purchasing power, they will buy fewer goods from the factories and shops. Then factories will slow down production and lay off workers, and shops will sell fewer goods.

No one can forget that the farm depression of the twenties was the forerunner of the general depression of the thirties.

What are the farmer's problems?

First there is the "price-scissors." The farmer is getting less for his produce, while his production costs keep rising. Interest rates and taxes have gone up too. And finally, his cost of living has arisen.

Declining farm prices are largely the result of an increased supply and a fall in total demand for food. Exports have dropped. Domestic demand for food has been limited by the small increases in "real" per capita incomes after taxes.

In addition, marketing costs have gone up. Transportation and processing companies are getting more of the food dollar. Wholesalers and retailers have passed their increases on and upped their prices. The consumer, then, pays more in the grocery store for the same amount of food in the market basket.

The declining demand situation is all the more alarming because the farmer's costs are relatively rigid. And today his cash costs per unit produced are 15% above prewar. A moderate drop in prices will put him in a financial squeeze quickly.

Some farmers suffer more than others. Particularly hard hit are the 1.7 million farm families, of the total 5.5 millions, who have been eking out a substandard living on poor land, unable to obtain new equipment or learn modern farming methods.

Farmers Vs. Food Processors

Although these farmers need more than price supports, uncertainty about price supports has contributed to farmers' apprehensions.

Some of the confusion surrounds what the new Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra Taft Benson, will do about government farm price support program.

During the campaign, Pres. Eisenhower promised high supports. However, Benson told the Senate Agriculture Committee: " . . . I do not think supports are a substitute for a fair price in the market place." He proposed more research and education, and expanding foreign markets. And he has condemned price supports except as "disaster insurance" in recent statements.

Benson has an advisory board made up largely of processors, packers and seedmen. Basically there is a real conflict of economic interests between this group and farmers. A farmer's income is cost to a processor or packer.

The problem of stemming a farm recession rests not in the market place—but with the federal government. Its policies will determine whether the present situation will be the forerunner of another depression.

"Nice room for a party—too bad they can't sit down."

Behind The Headlines—

GOP Is Figuring On How To Scuttle Jobs For All

Last week the White House said Pres. Eisenhower intends to continue his Council of Economic Advisers but the House soon thereafter decided to cut its funds from $75,000 to $25,000.

What's behind the fast devoloping GOP threat to full employment is discussed in the following article:

By IRVING FAGAN
For Labor Press Associated

THERE'S A LOT of heavy discussion going on behind the scene that will affect not only your wages and the prices you pay, but also whether you will have a job.

Of course it doesn't make juicy reading like the stuff about "corruption" and "waste" and the "mess in Washington" and so it doesn't get into the headlines. But the decisions on that issue made by the Eisenhower Administration and its Big Business backers will shape your life and that of your children, and perhaps even of your grandchildren.

It's about the Full Employment Act of 1946, with its goals of "full production" and "full employment."

The problem, as the New York Journal of Commerce puts it, is what would happen if the Eisenhower regime "were to adopt a less rigid interpretation" of the Full Employment Act.

How Far To Go?

In other words, how far is the GOP-Big-Business-Dixiecrat coalition prepared to go, or not to go, if, as, and when, there is what is politely called these days a recession?

Briefly, some economists say we can have full employment, but at the price of continued inflation; that is, a constant increase in the cost of all the things you buy. Or, we can have stable prices, and some unemployment. How much unemployment, no one hazards a guess. But these economists say we cannot have both full employment and stable prices at the same time.

One answer to fighting any downturn in the economy is government action, including lower interest rates, public works, higher social security payments. Or, comes a downturn, the government does nothing, hoping that the downturn will be mild, and soon correct itself.

Of course, doing nothing could mean thousands and perhaps millions of jobless, and misery and hunger. The Journal of Commerce, in discussing the alternative to a policy of full employment at all times, says the alternative is "a policy that does not hysterically shy away from any adjustments in the level of business activity once it becomes apparent that the dynamic force behind our economy has pushed some industries ahead at too fast a pace."

The Villain? You Guessed It!

Allan Sproul, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, told a convention of bankers the other day that "we have to make a choice and it is a fundamental choice. We can plump for a propped-up economy, with a perpetual bias toward inflation . . . The other choice is that of an economy which emphasizes increased productivity, taking some related ups and downs in its stride, and fitting into place those economic and social improvements which the rate of growth of productivity permits."

But Sproul sees another way out—"a better division of the rewards of increased productivity among management, labor and the consumer."

How can that be done? By avoiding "payment of tribute to pressure groups." And who's the villain? Organized labor, he claimed. Said Sproul:

"Increasing labor costs are going to push up prices, because powerful labor unions are able to force wage increases in excess of increases in productivity. In these circumstances expansion of the money supply is only the vehicle, not the cause, of inflation, and credit policy in reality is made at the collective bargaining table, not in the Federal Reserve System."

He Wants 'Maturity'

Organized labor, says Sproul, "has achieved such strength that it tends to claim the lion's share of what increased productivity produces." Sproul calls for "a more mature leadership in a more mature labor movement."

Was it a coincidence that the National Association of Manufacturers, a few days after the Sproul speech, declared that to tie wages to productivity increases is not practical?

Is the debate important? The Journal of Commerce declares that the Eisenhower Administration must make a decision on "full employment versus price stability before it can set its economic course with any degree of confidence."

And that's the decision that will say how much wages you'll get, whether your cost of living will go up or down, and even, perhaps, whether you have a job at all.

Report From Norway—

McCarran Act Costs Us Friends

How the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act is costing American friends among workers overseas was told by Eric Sevareid, well-known Washington radio reporter, in this recent CBS newscast:

THE NEW AMBASSADOR to Norway will confront a problem no other American Ambassador in Oslo has had to face in recent memory—a growing anti-Americanism among Norwegians, who have always regarded America almost as their second home.

The reason for this is the McCarran Immigration Act and what it is doing to the Norwegian merchant marine and Norwegian seamen. In Norway the merchant marine directly involves every other family; merchant sailing is an old and honorable way of life; these are proud and respectable men, largely family men.

Enforcement of the McCarran Act in American ports has resulted in startling experiences for these sailors, the stories of which are now spreading through every farm and hamlet in Norway. The act is designed, of course, to keep subversives and other undesirables out of this country. Under the act, no foreign seaman can remain here more than 29 days.

Churchgoers Questioned

Consider some of the experiences of the Norwegians alone. Not long ago immigration police tried to search the Norwegian Seamen's Home in Baltimore. There was a strong protest and they left. Later police stopped and cross-examined the worshippers as they walked out of the Norwegian Seamen's Lutheran Church in Baltimore.

If a seaman gets sick and overstays the 29 days, he can be put into Ellis Island to await deportation; among the others, there are about a dozen Norwegian sailors imprisoned on the island now because they were unable to sign on a ship within the time limits. Two young men voluntarily went to the immigration office when two of their 29 days still remained. Yet they were immediately taken to Ellis Island.

Many foreign seamen are not signing off in American ports even when allowed to, because they dare not. They have no way of knowing whether they can sign on again in time to avoid imprisonment.

Not One Commie Found

Interrogations under the new law have not yet discovered one Communist among Norwegian seamen; there may be some reds among them, but the real Communists, of course, simple deny it. Many American immigration officials detest what they must do under this law as much as do the victims.

For example, there are women serving on Norwegian ships as mess stewards or radio operators; this is a familiar and respectable career in Norway. When they reach America, these women are asked if they have ever engaged in prostitution; men are asked when they last visited a brothel, if they intend to commit bigamy in this country, and so on.

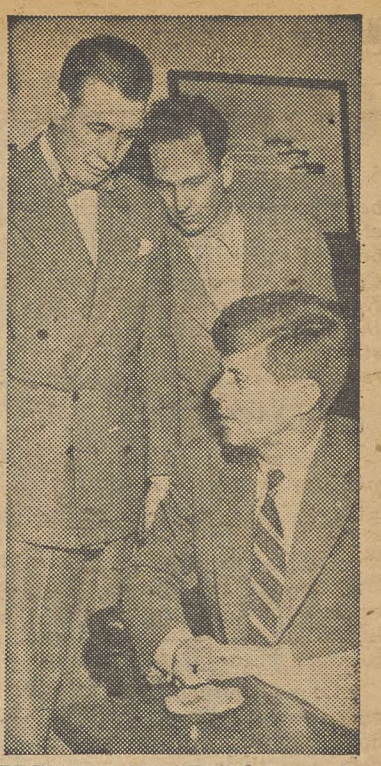
Stories about the humiliations suffered their seamen have spread throughout Norway. It has now become a popular by-word with them that life in an American port is like their life under the German occupation of Norway. One Norwegian official put it this way:

"You may as well close down your American information services in Norway. As long as this goes on, they are fighting a losing battle for the good will of my people."

URW Sees Congress In Action

ON CAPITOL STEPS, F. F. Haley (left) and Mose Lewis take in the view. They're from 2800-member Firestone Local 186 in Memphis.

WHEN 30 MEMBERS of the CIO Rubber Workers came to Washington last week, they spent several hours observing Senate committee hearings on the so-called "tidelands" bill. Then Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), at left, spelled out what multi-million dollar oil grab would mean to the nation as a whole in loss of revenue, depletion of valuable oil resources. Delegates to URW-CIO legislative institute came from 10 local unions in eight states.



UNEMPLOYMENT headaches of fellow CIO textile workers were aired by Lawrence, Mass., Local 243 delegates to Sen. Kennedy.

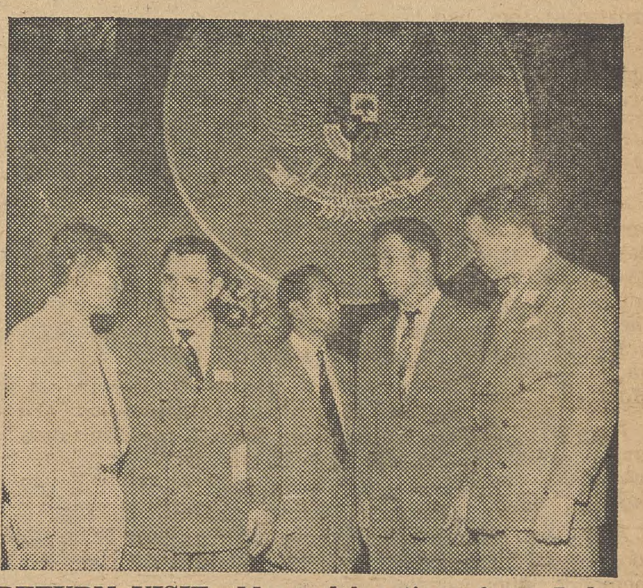
SOME SHENANIGANS of Dixiegop coalition in new Congress were outlined by Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) to rubber workers from Mansfield, O., and Lawrence, Mass. Taft-Hartley, oil lands, civil rights were main subjects of institute.



RETURN VISIT—Many delegations from Indonesian rubber workers' unions have met with URW-CIO while in the United States. So when the URW group was in Washington for four-day institute, they were guests at Indonesian Embassy.

Brownell Pot-Shots At Oil Land Order

ATTY. GEN. Brownell cast legal doubt last week on former Pres. Truman's action in the off-shore oil lands dispute with an informal ruling that met a prompt challenge from the Democrats.

Brownell, acting on a request from Sec. of Defense Wilson, said the executive order Truman issued on Jan. 16 failed to make the off-shore oil deposits a naval petroleum reserve.

Brownell's opinion was read into the record by Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.), who was presiding, as the Senate Interior Committee opened hearings on legislation to give the oil-rich submerged coastal lands to the states.

He said a review of Justice Dept. files showed that former Atty. Gen. James P. McGranery approved the order "on the understanding that it did not intend to, nor did it in fact or in law, create a naval petroleum reserve" within the meaning of the law, and objected on legal grounds to an order that would have "constituted these lands a naval preserve."

Brownell himself held the order served "merely to transfer to the secretary of the navy the authority over these lands which had previously been conferred upon the secretary of the interior."

It "did not intend to, and did not, create a naval petroleum reserve" to be administered under the law, he claimed.

SEN. ANDERSON (D. N.M.) and Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) joined in a statement that "none of the lawyers who participated in the discussions (on the executive order) ever expressed any doubt concerning the power of the President to set the lands on the Continental Shelf aside for the future use of the Navy under the designation of a naval petroleum reserve."

"I maintain nothing in the (Brownell) letter supports that in the slightest," Anderson asserted.

Two-Way Stretch In Profits, Sales For Goodyear

THE GIANT Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. stretched its business to record lengths on all fronts in 1952, according to the annual report to stockholders.

Net profit expanded to $39 million, or $8.30 a share, from $36.6 million, or $7.75 a share, in 1951. This was an increase of 6.75%.

Sales were distended to $1.138 billion from the 1951 figure of $1.011 billion, a jump of 3.33%, or $37 million.

P. W. Litchfield, chairman of the board of directors, attributed the rosy picture on the balance sheet to an increase in domestic sales during the last quarter which more than offset a drop in business outside the United States.

Business, in fact, was good all around in 1952. Firms listed on the New York Stock Exchange paid a record-smashing total of $5.5 billion in dividends during the year. Heading the list by industries were petroleum and natural gas firms, which gave shareholders $932 million in payments.

Three States Turn Down 'Millionaires' Tax Scheme

LEGISLATURES of three more states have turned down the proposed "millionaires' amendment" within the last few weeks. In Colorado, the move to force Congress to call a constitutional convention to enact an amendment limiting taxes on income to 25% was killed for the third time, with the Colorado CIO Council again leading the fight.

The measure was beaten by a 24 to 9 vote in the State Senate in spite of the fact it had the support of the Republican floor leader, Sen. Frank L. Gill. The forces behind it tossed a lavish party for the legislators at a Denver country club and overwhelmed them with literature, but all Democrats and 13 of the 22 Republicans in the Senate turned thumbs down.

The proposal also was rejected recently by the legislatures in New Mexico and West Virginia.

THE UNITED PRESS, on the basis of a nationwide survey, deflated claims of backers of the plan to shift more of the tax burden from the rich to the poor that 28 legislatures had acted favorably.

The survey showed that only 12 States have approved it. Five more legislatures endorsed it and later withdrew their approval—Alabama, Illinois, Kentucky, Rhode Island and Arkansas. Approvals by the Montana and Pennsylvania Legislatures were wiped out by gubernatorial vetoes.

The resolution is due to come up again this year in Illinois, Montana and Pennsylvania.

N. Y. Guild Hits Nation Firing

The New York Newspaper Guild and its Nation Unit have strongly protested the dismissal of Margaret Marshall after nearly 25 years' service on the Nation.

Miss Marshall had been literary editor of the publication since 1937 and was a charter member of the Guild.

Like Hitler And Stalin—

Quebec Cops Terrorize CIO Oil Strikers

Storm trooper tactics of Quebec provincial police against striking CIO Oil Workers have been strongly condemned by the Canadian Congress of Labour. Here is a first hand account of the seven-month long Montreal strike by the CCL's publicity director.

By JACK WILLIAMS

Who said it couldn't happen here?

Read this story and you will start thinking you see the hand of Hitler's Gestapo, or the arm of Stalin's secret police. This is the kind of thing that happened:

Six men picked up off the street or dragged from their homes; whisked off to cells; hidden from their families and legal counsel; some beaten over the stomach with night sticks; one forced to stand with his finger tips against the wall while he was grilled; men made to sign statements declaring they would take no action for the ill-treatment they had received.

Those responsible were the Quebec provincial police who operate under the direction of Premier Maurice Duplessis.

U. S. Firm Subsidiary

The incidents took place in and around Montreal in the last days of January and the first days of February. Those who suffered were six members of the CIO Oil Workers engaged in a seven-month-old strike at Canadian Copper Refineries in Montreal East.

(Canadian copper is a subsidiary of the Phelps-Dodge Corp., which has a long record of fighting U. S. unions.)

And their families suffered too, and so did their other union members who wondered from hour to hour what was happening to their brothers—and what would happen to themselves the next time night fell. For these kidnappings took place at night—the Quebec provincial police and the private detectives employed by the company preferred to work under the cover of darkness.

This story starts early the morning of Tuesday, Jan. 27, when Jean Paul Fournier, a rank-and-file OWIU member and a staunch supporter of the strike, was standing on a street corner. Fournier is a slim, cheerful French-Canadian popular with his fellow workers and rated a good union member. Fournier was about to head home when a policeman stepped up with the terse order, "We need you."

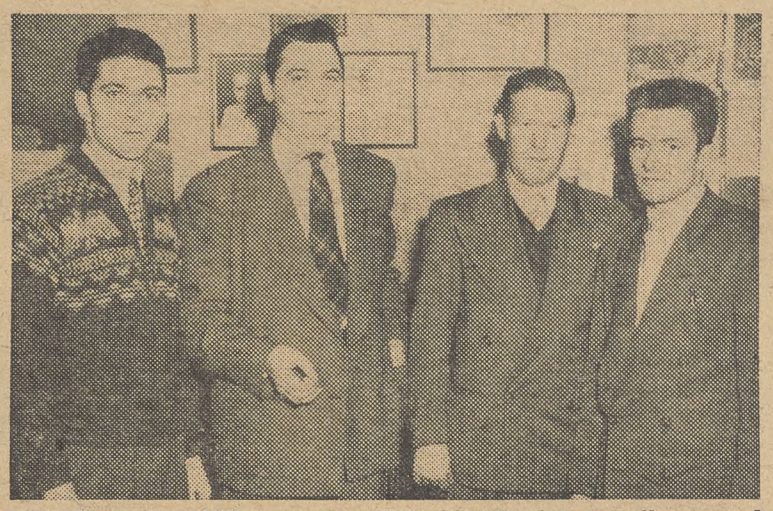
Hit In Stomach

Fournier was taken to provincial police headquarters and questioned throughout the night. It was 7 o'clock in the morning when he was tossed in a cell. Fournier later reported he had been struck in the stomach with night sticks and tapped behind the ears. When he was finally released and reappeared at union headquarters his ears were swollen.

On the morning of Jan. 28 he was presented with a form which he was told he would have to sign before he was released. The form said he would not take any action against the Quebec provincial police for anything that had happened while he was in custody. He finally signed. Eventually he was released.

While all this was going on, Larry Packwood, OWIU representative, got in touch with Marcel Jodoin, the union lawyer, and they hustled off to the Montreal East police station.

They were told that Fournier was at the downtown provincial police headquarters so they headed there. Packwood was pushed downstairs by an officer.



HERE ARE FOUR of the CIO Oil Workers strikers and representatives who have been third degreed by Quebec police in an effort to break the Canadian Copper strike. From left: Gaston Forrest, Intl. Rep. L. J. Packwood, Vincent Fitzpatrick and Jean Paul Fournier. Two other members jailed for two days were Aurele Mainville and Leon D'Argenson.

Jodoin was told that Fournier was not in custody. Four times the police refused to let him see the OWIU member.

Once it got dark the police went to work again. This time two other rank-and-file members, Leon D'Argenson and Aurele Mainville, were picked up. Early Friday evening—53 hours later—they stepped wearily off a bus and headed to Mainville's house. Mainville spoke with some difficulty. He said he had received a going over "in the guts with night sticks."

Grilled 3 Hours

D'Argenson was more fortunate. He was grilled for about three hours, but was not beaten. Before he was released he was made to sign a waiver.

One midnight Packwood was told that there were some strange cars outside the union hall. He went downstairs to take a look. Outside the door he saw the bulky form of a Montreal city detective, Lesserd, although the union office is in the city of Montreal East.

Lesserd pushed open the door, seized Packwood and pushed him into a car which, Packwood said, was driven by Jean Boyer, an employe of the Barnes Investigation Bureau which apparently has been employed by the company.

Then the car went to Rosemount and the home of Vincent Fitzpatrick, another union member. A provincial police car was outside and Packwood saw Fitzpatrick pushed into it. Fitzpatrick had been taken away despite the protests of relatives that police had produced no warrant.

The two cars went on to St. Jerome, 25 miles or so from Montreal. Packwood said he was made to stand a little more than an arm's length from the wall and then lean over until his fingertips touched the wall. He had to hold this position while he answered questions and if he moved he was kicked. The grilling lasted about four hours.

"The police hinted that they wanted to buy the strike off," Packwood said later.

On Saturday morning Packwood was transferred into Montreal. He was told that he was going to be charged with conspiracy but he was still refused permission to see his lawyer.

So far as all these men were concerned, their families, union officials, and the union lawyer were making repeated attempts to see or communicate with them. They met either outright refusals or evasive answers from the police.

Behind the reign of terror which Duplessis' provincial police have attempted to impose on OWIU members is outright defiance by Canadian Copper Refineries of the provincial labor laws.

Red Tape Invoked

Back in the summer of 1951 the union was certified by the Quebec Labour Relations Board. The company appealed but lost, then took the case to the courts and started a tangle of legal red tape which lawyers say cannot be unwound for at least another year or more.

With the company stubbornly refusing to bargain, the copper refinery employes walked out seven months ago.

For more than four months nothing happened. Then the company started importing scabs. Some of them were people from Italy who were found by Canadian immigration authorities to have entered Canada illegally. Scabs are still going into the plant under heavy police escort.

The facts speak for themselves. It CAN happen here.

Carey Decries Anti-Red Laws As 'Easy Way Out' Of Commie Issue

LEGISLATION to combat communism is a "shirking of our responsibilities" and the "easy way out for the lazy mentality," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey declared last week in a radio and television debate with Chairman Velde (R. Ill.) of the House un-American Activities Committee.

The two discussed how best to fight communism over a NBC hookup.

"THERE IS already sufficient legislation to cover any internal threat of communism to our political and economic life," said Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

"Restrictive legislation always carries within itself a potential menace to the broader civil rights and liberties of non-Communists. Ill-advised restrictive legislation is capable of doing more damage at home and abroad than no legislation."

Democratic unions can wipe out communism from the labor movement by themselves, Carey continued. They have already done more than half the job, he added, and now have the reds on the defensive.

"What we do need," he said, "and what congressmen like Rep. Velde can help provide, is a freer hand in doing this anti-Communist job. We want to see employers stop favoring Communist-controlled unions."

He challenged Velde and his committee to investigate employer support of Communist-dominated unions—"the part that profit-blinded industrialists have played in deliberately keeping Communist-controlled unions alive."

"The Senate Labor Subcommittee and the Ohio Un-American Activities Commission—among others—have condemned employers for encouraging and abetting Communists," he said.

"How does it happen that the House Un-American Activities Committee has been investigating communism for 12 long years and has kept silent on these facts that have been self-evident to other investigating groups?

"ARE THE Communists right? Is Velde's committee silent on this employer perfidy because it is really anti-union and pro-big business?

"Instead of hunting a Communist movement in Hollywood that died out many years ago, Velde's committee could perform a genuine public service by investigating big business favoritism toward Communist unions.

"At the very least . . . it might inspire employers to remain neutral, to stop encouraging communism . . .

"Does Mr. Velde's committee have the courage to do this? And why haven't they done it before?"

Valentino Resigns UPWA Local Post

Anthony Valentino, at liberty in $10,000 bail pending an appeal from a five-year prison sentence for falsely swearing to the National Labor Relations Board that he was not a Communist, has resigned as business agent of CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 80-A, Camden, N. J.

Valentino was re-elected after his conviction. His resignation was accepted unanimously by the Local 80-A executive board.

Reuther Answers Appeal—

CIO Urges U. S. Act To Aid Free Berlin

THE CIO last week appealed to the State Dept. and the Mutual Security Administration to "accelerate and increase" aid to help West Berlin handle the vast number of refugees from East Germany pouring in daily.

The requests were made by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther after an appeal from Mayor Ernst Reuter, of West Berlin, addressed to him as "a member of the community of free men in a world in which freedom is threatened by communism."

The city's precarious economic situation, "burdened for more than three years with 250,000 unemployed," is being aggravated by seekers of freedom from behind the Iron Curtain, Reuter said in a cable. He will fly to New York early next month to seek aid for the refugees.

"Despite our every effort," he continued, "we cannot provide adequate housing, food and clothing. There is no work and no hope of a normal life for them. We cannot turn them away because this would be a betrayal of the freedom which we have and they seek.

"We need vast shipments of food and clothing, especially for the children who come to us undernourished.

"In the dark days of the airlift, it was American tenacity and American courage which enabled us Free Berliners to maintain our freedom. These days are equally dark, and I call on you and a few other friends in America to make one more great effort to help us."

IN AN ANSWERING cable, Reuther saluted Reuter, as Mayor of Free Berlin, on behalf of all CIO members "for your mighty efforts to care for the increasing number of refugees fleeing for life and liberty from Soviet-controlled persecution."

"Rest assured that the CIO will spare no effort to assist Free Berlin to maintain its freedom as an heroic outpost of the democratic world and its status in an area surrounded by authoritarian dictatorship," Reuther said in pledging help.

Industry Succeeds in South Carolina

"We want industry to come to South Carolina. This State has a stable Government and a fair tax structure. We believe in private enterprise. Our workers try to see how much they can do well, not how little they can do.

"Good people and good Government are the reasons South Carolina is growing industrially. Come to South Carolina. You will be warmly welcomed and fairly treated."

ROCK HILL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Inc.

...And Here's Part of The Reason Why

"INDUSTRY Succeeds in South Carolina," proclaimed the New York Times in a special advertising section a few Sundays ago.

In page after page of pictures, stories and ads—from big textile firms like J. P. Stevens, for one—the glories of Southern industrialism (without benefit of union contracts) were promoted.

"Our workers try to see how much they can do," said Gov. James F. Byrnes.

And an ad from the Rock Hill Chamber of Commerce added this lure: "Good supply of highest type native-born labor."

ANOTHER chapter on Southern industrialism—and what happens to "highest type native-born labor" when they seek some of the prosperity of the new industrial era—was spelled out last week in a lengthy, legalistic report of the National Labor Relations Board.

The board acted in case of a Rock Hill plant with a record of fighting unions since long before Taft-Hartley.

And the case reached to the highest levels of the new Republican Administration, since it involved the Industrial Cotton Mills subsidiary of J. P. Stevens & Co.

That's the firm that was headed by Robert T. B. Stevens up until shortly before he was confirmed as Secretary of the Army.

And Stevens is the fellow charged by CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve with "pronounced and persistent opposition to organized labor."

Rieve made that charge to the Senate Armed Services Committee before it approved Steven's nomination without giving the TWUA president a chance to testify.

Robert Stevens was chairman of the board and the principal stockholder of J. P. Stevens & Co. until, reluctantly, he gave up those interests at the insistence of the committee. The firm, however, is still owned by his family.

THE NLRB order grew out of unfair labor practice charges brought by TWUA when the mills blacklisted a number of strikers after a walkout in 1951. The firm was ordered to:

- Reinstate two strikers, Matthew W. Stallings and Lewis R. Williams, restore their seniority and give them back pay until Aug. 20, 1951, when they were blacklisted.
- Stop discharging or refusing to reinstate employes because they took part in the strike.
- Stop discouraging membership in TWUA.
- Post the board's order at the mills, so that Stevens' workers will know their rights.

The trial examiner's report, on which the order was based, tossed out the company's claim against Stallings that he had tossed tacks around scabs' cars.

Williams was blacklisted because he had suffered from arthritis, although the company knew of his condition and had employed him since 1940. The trial examiner said that when Williams went back to the mill after the strike, he was told he would have to get a doctor's report, a procedure that was not required of the other returning strikers.

This is not the first time the NLRB has taken action against the Rock Hill mills. Back in 1943, the firm was ordered to reinstate with back pay workers fired for TWUA activity and to stop coercing workers against joining the union.

The TWUA won a NLRB election at the mills 462 to 75 in 1944, but the company refused to recognize it. Despite orders from the War Labor Board, the mills refused to bargain. In 1945, when WLB virtually wrote the contract and ordered both parties to sign, the company refused.

Within a month after the war and the wartime no-strike pledge ended, the Rock Hill workers struck for the union security clause the WLB had recommended.

THE COMPANY tried to evict strikers from company-owned houses, but the courts refused to comply. The firm even offered a 15c hourly increase to anyone who would scab, but only 32 of the 550 strikers accepted.

The strike lasted nine months and was settled along WLB lines.

The 1951 strike occurred when the firm refused to renew the contract. The company supplied bail, aid and comfort to the supervisors and strikebreakers involved in shootings but refused to reinstate strikers it accused of misbehavior, including the two now ordered reinstated by the NLRB.

When Rieve objected to the confirmation of Stevens "because of his pronounced and persistent opposition to organized labor," he knew what he was talking about.

EMIL RIEVE
TWUA president charged "persistent opposition to organized labor". . .

ROBERT T. B. STEVENS
. . . to new Army Secretary, and now Labor Board ruling upholds charge.

J. P. Stevens Is Doing Okeh—By NAM's Open Shop Standards

Only 750 of the 25,000 workers employed by J. P. Stevens & Co., one of the largest U. S. textile firms, are protected by union contract.

All the rest have the "benefit" of the open shop.

The concern has 20 mills in the following South Carolina towns: Anderson, Arlington, Clemson, Great Falls, Greenville, Greer, Jonesville, Laurens, Piedmont, Rock Hill, Seneca, Slater, Wallace and Whitmire.

CIO Textile Workers Pres. Emil Rieve said that Robert T. B. Stevens—largest stockholder of the firm until his confirmation as Army secretary—moved four mills from the North to the South "to escape collective bargaining." These were the only New England mills of the chain which were organized by TWUA, Rieve said.

THE U. S. District Court in Washington last week blocked Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin from applying the $1 minimum wage to 10 Georgia mills for work done under government contracts.

This was the first case in which the Fulbright Amendment to the Walsh-Healey Act was invoked.

Most of the mills don't have such government contracts, according to David Feller, CIO assistant general counsel. On behalf of the CIO and the CIO Textile Workers, Feller argued against issuing a preliminary injunction.

Some of the mills pay more than the $1 minimum, which was scheduled to go into effect Feb. 21, and two of them under contract with TWUA pay $1.03 minimums.

JUDGE Henry A. Schweinhaut, who issued the injunction, had ruled previously that the injunction applied to the entire textile industry on work done for Uncle Sam.

The Supreme Court ruled 13 years ago that an order issued by the labor secretary under the Walsh-Healey Act was not reviewable in court. Under the Fulbright Amendment, which was passed by the 82nd Congress, any employer in the affected industry can ask the court to stay the secretary's order.

THE PRELIMINARY injunction stands until the case is tried in U. S. District Court. Judge Schweinhaut required that each of the 10 companies post $2000 bond to assure that any workers paid less than $1 an hour get what's coming to them if Durkin is upheld.

Seventy other Southern textile mills have also asked the court to set aside the minimum wage order, which boosts pay from the present 87c an hour. Although the preliminary injunction was issued against Durkin, the wage order came from Labor Sec. Maurice J. Tobin as one of his last acts in office.

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week accepted a bust of Philip Murray presented to the CIO by the Jewish Labor Committee at ceremonies in New York City.

The bust was presented by Adolph Held, JLC chairman, and Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council and a JLC vice chairman, while top CIO and AFL officials and Joseph Murray, the late CIO president's son, looked on.

The bust is the work of Sculptor Joseph Hovell.

Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers greeted the 500 guests.

CIO Joins Drive For Effective FEP Law

THE CIO has joined with the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights in urging Pres. Eisenhower and Republican congressional leaders to press for an effective Fair Employment Practices law.

The conference consists of 53 national, civic, labor, fraternal, veterans and minority groups.

CIO was represented at a meeting of the conference steering committee in New York City that called on the Republicans for action by George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; William H. Oliver, co-chairman of the CIO Auto Workers Fair Employment Practices Dept.; Roy L. Reuther and Paul Sifton of the CIO Auto Workers.

HIGHLIGHT of the statement issued by the committee was the reiteration of "its profound conviction that the greatest single need in the field of civil rights is an effective federal law, enforceable through the courts, prohibiting discrimination in employment."

The conference called on Eisenhower and the Republican congressional leaders for immediate hearings "upon the bill introduced by Sens. Ives, Humphrey, Morse and 16 others of both major parties." It added:

"Although there are more than a score of cities and 11 states that have FEPC laws and ordinances of varying degrees of effectiveness, the grossest, most tragic and costly discrimination in employment remains untouched and will not be touched except by effective federal law uniformly enforced through the courts."

THE STATEMENT, which was issued by Walter White, conference chairman and executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, also urged:

- Statehood for Alaska.
- Immediate steps to end "segregation and other forms of discrimination from all areas under federal jurisdiction and control, including the District of Columbia and all employment under government contracts."
- Expansion and strengthening of the Civil Rights Section of the Justice Dept. and elevating it to a full division in the department headed by an assistant attorney general.
- Redemption of the pledge by Republican spokesmen "to make amendment of the cloture rule the first order of business in the Senate Rules Committee."

CIO, AFL Renew Demand For Curb On 'Wetbacks'

By FRED ROSS

THE CIO and the AFL last week called for sweeping legislative and administrative changes to prevent underpaid foreign labor from displacing Americans as farm workers.

The proposals were made by the Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee on Farm Labor, which consists of CIO and AFL representatives. Their report emphasized the scope of the problem, saying:

"Two hundred thousand Mexicans were brought in as contract farm workers in 1952, and the number of deportations of illegal entrants has increased to over 600,000 in one year, with the rate now rising sharply."

INCREASING shift of mexican workers from field jobs into food packing plants, displacing some 1000 members of the CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers LIU 78, was reported.

Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO regional director in Southern California, said that Mexicans paid 70c an hour have displaced skilled American workers in lettuce packingsheds who had been earning top rates of $3 to $4 an hour.

The advisory committee's proposals were divided into two classes—those calling for administrative decision by Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin and those calling for changes in Public Law 78 under which Mexican workers are brought into the U. S.

HEADING the list of proposed administrative changes was a recommendation for enforcement of the provisions in the U. S.-Mexican farm labor agreement that Mexicans shall have the right of selecting representatives of their own choosing for collective bargaining.

Both De Shelter and Nicholas Dragon, CIO regional director in Arizona, who also is a member of the committee, explained that the Mexicans do not actually have that right now. They sign "yellow dog" contracts with their employer promising to work for a low hourly rate, they said.

If they organize and go on strike, the CIO officials reported, the employer simply says they have violated the "yellow dog" agreement and they are sent back to Mexico.

'Wetbacks' Cross At 175 Per Hour

Mexican farm workers are "jumping the gun" on entering the U. S. and are swimming the Rio Grande in unprecedented numbers, according to the New York Times.

The "wetbacks"—as they are called because they swim the river—are entering the U. S. at an estimated rate of about 175 an hour, 24 times a day.

Other recommendations to Durkin asked the department to collect from the growers all unauthorized deductions from the Mexicans, to take steps to prevent the use of Mexicans in packing and processing work, and to hold public hearings on the availability of domestic labor and appropriate wages to be paid foreign workers.

CIO committee members said that large farmers now determine the prevailing wage and set it so low that Americans will not take the jobs and then call for more Mexicans. The committee called for tripartite committees representing workers, employers and the public to make recommendations to the labor secretary.

CIO committee members were particularly critical of the unfair encouragement given by Public Law 78 to employers to hire foreign farm workers.

The first recommended change in the law urged that American workers be given "the same conditions of employment, guarantees and protection offered foreign workers before the secretary shall permit the importation of Mexicans nationals or other foreign workers."

CIO REPRESENTATIVES pointed out the government pays the transportation of foreign workers to and from the job, $1.50 a day for sustenance, and provides lodging and an insurance policy. The employer pays the government $15 to provide for transportation of Mexicans to and from the U. S.

With DeShetler and Dragon other CIO members of the committee are Katherine Ellickson, John J. Murillo, Herbert McCreedy, Paul R. Christopher, Charles Lindberg, Charles Cowl and G. R. Hathaway.

CIO Tobacco Workers Set Long-Range Organizing

LONG-RANGE plans for organizing an estimated 50,000 cigar and tobacco workers in all parts of the country were laid at a conference of the Tobacco Workers Div. of the CIO Brewery Workers recently in Cincinnati, O.

Steps also were taken to establish a union educational course and, eventually, a central coordinating office to service the division's locals.

Representatives of six BW tobacco workers' locals in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and of six branch locals in Michigan and Ohio, heard Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, give assurance that the National CIO and all its departments will give active help to the organization drive in every way.

Existing BW tobacco locals and branch locals have a total membership of more than 5000. Some of the members, formerly in CIO local industrial unions in Eastern Pennsylvania, recently voted to affiliate with the Brewery Workers.

Others were formerly in the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, which was expelled from the CIO because of Communist domination. They voted almost solidly to join the BW and stay in the CIO.

PRES. Karl Feller and Gen. Organizer Charles H. Lindberg of the Brewery Workers told the delegates they saw in their spirit and enthusiasm a guarantee of rapid strides in developing the Tobacco Workers Div. to peak membership and with it, vastly improved wages and working conditions.

George S. Craig, CIO regional director in Philadelphia, as a result of dealing with the employes of cigar plants in that area, cited a potential membership of 15,000 among unorganized workers in Pennsylvania.

ORGANIZING the 50,000 unorganized workers estimated to be in the cigar and tobacco industry was planned at a recent conference of the Tobacco Workers Div. of the CIO Brewery Workers in Cincinnati, O. CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood (second from right, foreground) pledged full support of the National CIO. Pledges of cooperation also were given by several CIO Regional directors. At right of Haywood is UB Pres. Karl Feller; at left, UB Gen. Organizer Charles H. Lindberg. Delegates attended from four states.

Ike Stands Pat On Farm Prices; Reuther Hits Food Middlemen

THE ROLE of the middlemen moved into focus in the developing farm price problem last week.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther condemned those who "farm the farmers, milking the farmer on one end and the people on the other."

Amid numerous vocal protests by Republican and Democratic senators from the farm states, both Pres. Eisenhower and Sec. of Agriculture Ezra Benson were standing pat on the GOP's policy on farm price supports.

They indicated the Administration would go as far as mandatory under present laws, but wouldn't use discretionary powers now available to bolster meat prices, for example.

Reuther, in a CBS television forum, charged Benson with "leaning in the direction of helping the big farmer at the expense of the little farmer."

The middlemen — food processors, packers, wholesalers — are getting more than a fair share of income from farm products, he said, while farmers' returns are declining. (See "Washington Window," Page 5.)

"There are two kinds of farmers in America," Reuther said, "the farmers who farm the land and the farmers who farm the farmers.

"WE'RE WORRIED about the fact that Sec. Benson represents the farmers who farm the farmers—that is big business. Big business in agricultural acts like big business does generally—they try to squeeze out the little farmer."

Reuther called the farm price decline "danger signals on the horizon" for the Eisenhower Administration. And the President was carefully briefed by Benson and congressional GOP agriculture committee chiefs before he went into his first press conference and lead-off questioning on farm prices.

Eisenhower disclaimed GOP responsibility for the drop in farm prices. He said it was an inherited issue, that beef prices have been falling for two years. The armed services, he said, will be urged to buy a 120-day supply of beef.

As to the Administration's future farm policies, the President said he wants agricultural prosperity free—as he put it—of stifling governmental controls.

Eisenhower said the Administration has farm price headaches in several fields—butter, other dairy products, and wheat, as well as beef.

The beef price decline of about 12% is the biggest problem, since there now are a record 93 million head of cattle on the nation's farms. That's a 5.8 million increase in a year.

Only National Health Plan Will Fill The Bill—Harris

ONLY THROUGH a system of national health insurance can the health needs of Americans be met adequately, Seymour E. Harris, professor of economics at Harvard Univ., says in a new study on the subject.

Harris says that the United States and Canada are the only large countries in the western world that have no national health insurance program. Bitter opposition by the American Medical Association has been one of the main factors holding back this much needed social reform, he explains.

Although 50% of the people in the U. S. are covered by some form of voluntary insurance, only about 3 or 4% are protected by comprehensive systems, he says.

AMONG those who cannot afford to put aside $100 a year for voluntary health insurance, he lists the more than 4 million receiving public assistance, the 4.5 million disabled, the 4 million families (11% of the total) with incomes of $1000 to $2000.

A federal system of insurance, he contends, would assure wider coverage, provide larger benefits, have greater resources at its disposal and incur smaller administrative expenses. It would, he believes, encourage preventive medicine, particularly early diagnosis; contribute toward a better distribution of personnel engaged in health services; help in the development of needed personnel, education and research and adapt payments to ability to pay.

The medical profession, Harris says, "has no reason to fear the channelling of more resources into medicine under the federal health insurance system. Rewards to physicians will continue to rise, although their distribution will be improved."—H.R.

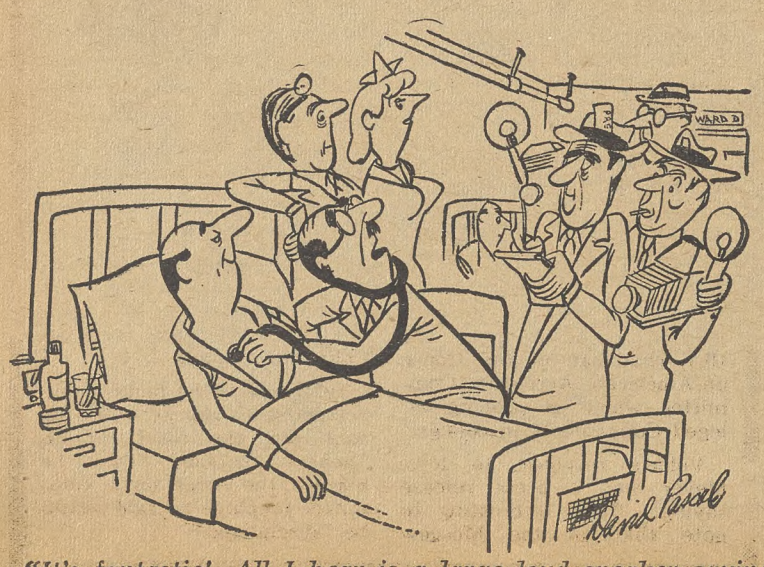
ACWA Takes Flu Fight To Plants

The Sidney Hillman Medical center in Philadelphia took the fight against the influenza epidemic into the plants where some 25,000 members of the CIO Clothing Workers are employed.

In cooperation with the Hahnemann Medical College virus laboratory, the center — which is operated by ACWA—sent teams of nurses to inoculate workers against the flu bug. Between 3500 and 4000 persons received the "shots" the day the program opened.



"It's fantastic! All I hear is a large loud speaker saying 'the AMA should stop lobbying against the nation's health.'"

Fee-Splitting By MDs Hit By Hawley

THE PUBLIC would be shocked at "the amount of surgery" performed by some doctors, Dr. Paul R. Hawley, director of the American College of Surgeons, charges in a copyrighted interview in the magazine U. S. News & World Report.

"Why do you suppose a doctor makes an unnecessary operation?" he was asked.

"Money."

"Just plain dishonest money-making?"

"Why, of course!"

He blamed the unnecessary surgery—as well as "a lot of bad surgery"—on fee-splitting, which is growing in spite of efforts to wipe it out.

"WE FIGURE that within the normal limits of human error there will always be some normal appendixes taken out," he explained in citing an example. "But we feel that when that gets over 15%—and I can show you places where 60 and 70% of the appendixes removed are normal —then there is something wrong."

Caesarian childbirths normally run 3 to 4%, he continued, but "there are hospitals where it runs to 15%."

Many unnecessary operations, Hawley added, are performed by "ghost" surgeons, "some young doctor starving to death" who operates for a better known colleague. The operating doctor gets about $50, he explained, while the non-operator charges all the traffic will bear.

THE BAD PART, he said, is that the "ghost" usually operates where the other doctor directs without making any examination or diagnosis himself.

Fee-splitting, he said, has been legalized in Iowa.

"They have rewritten medical ethics in that State," he said. "The movement is growing. It has spread to Illinois (No action has been taken.) We have evidence of its spread . . . into New York and California."

He also condemned doctors who abuse health and welfare plans by boosting fees.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

IN MARCH you'll get a little breather from the high cost of living—only a temporary respite, but of some help to the family budget if you play your cards right.

Food this month is cheaper than it's been for some time, especially because of the drop in the price of beef. In the past few weeks, beef costs have fallen 10 to 20c a pound, and according to the New York Extension Service, are as low as they've been in about three years. Lower beef prices are acting to hold down the price tags on other protein foods—pork, eggs, poultry.

Much of the low-priced beef now on the market is the less-tender lower grade known as "Good," but it's just as nutritious and savory as the costlier Choice grade (actually, a little more nutritious). You can make money doing some extra chewing, or more accurately, by using moist cooking methods to tenderize this lower-grade beef. If you have a freezer or locker, this is the time to put away beef. It will go up in price again when warm weather arrives.

Clothing for all members of the family also is at comparatively reasonable levels for this Spring. However, keep your pre-Easter shopping down to your immediate needs; there will be price cuts available in post-Easter sales and clearances.

THE GROWING living-cost threat these days is the stubbornly high price of housing, especially for those who don't already own their own homes. In recent months, rents have been rising at the rate of 8% a year. A number of cities have reported substantial rent increases since they allowed federal rent controls to expire last Fall. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports average rent increases of 4.2% in Chicago, 3.6 in Portland, Me., and boosts in Detroit, New Orleans, Cleveland, Denver, Houston and other cities.

Price tags on new houses continue high, and the only ray of light in the housing situation is a slight downward movement in asking prices for older houses, reported in some cities.

Here are tips on pre-Easter clothing shopping:

WOMEN'S WEAR: Prices of dresses are fairly reasonable this Spring. One of the better values being offered by stores is pure silk shantung dresses at $14-$15. You'll also find values in rayon faille dresses and two-piece Spring outfits. Beware of crepes, which are dressy but invariably shrink a little each time they're cleaned, even if dry-cleaned. Avoid paying too-high prices for orlon and dacron blouses and other garments.

MEN'S WEAR: In suits, you'll find gabardine cheaper this year because the style promotion is now temporarily on tweeds. You'll find more suits made of blended fibers, like rayon-wool, orlon-wool, orlon-rayon, etc. All-rayon suits are satisfactory for their low price if they have a crease-resistant finish (look for a label which says "CRF"). If the rayon material also contains at least 15% nylon, it will wear better and have more satisfactory shape-retention.

Food, Drug Proposal Backed

FEDERAL Security Administrator Oveta Culp Hobby has asked Congress for quick action amending the Food and Drug Act to permit factory inspections.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has introduced a bill making such a change.

Last December the Supreme Court virtually nullified enforcement of this law protecting consumers by upholding an Oregon food firm that had refused permission to inspect its plant. The Humphrey measure would eliminate the present requirement that FDA inspectors ask plant owners' permission and authorize inspections after written notice were given.

Organizationally Speaking

By Allan S. Haywood

THE CIO AND AFL members of the Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee on Farm Labor met with representatives of the Labor Dept. to protest exploitation of the Mexican workers in the U. S. which now is harming the wage and living standards of American farm workers.

The practice of displacing American farm workers is occurring in fruit and vegetable areas throughout the country and, as pointed out by Irwin DeShetler, CIO regional director in Southern California, Mexicans are displacing American workers in the fruit and vegetable packing sheds. This vitally affects the members of LIU-CIO No. 78.

The committee's proposals were divided into two classes—those calling for administrative decision by Labor Sec. Durkin and those calling for changes in Public Law 78 under which Mexican workers are brought into the U. S. We of the CIO believe in working closely with the Mexican labor movement in trying to bring about a settlement of this problem and in this connection have arranged a meeting with representatives of the Mexican trade union movement on Apr. 12, in El Paso, Tex. CIO members are: Irwin DeShetler, Nicholas Dragon, Katherine Ellickson, John Maurillo, Herbert McCreedy, Paul Christopher, Charles Cowl, Charles Lindberg and G. R. Hathaway.

Pangburn Candies Serves Up Sweat Shop In Fancy Package

PANGBURN candies should taste sour to every union member and anyone who believes in fair play, the CIO Packinghouse Workers said last week.

The UPWA has begun a nationwide drive to force the Pangburn Co., in Fort Worth, Tex., to negotiate a contract with its Local 374.

UPWA said the local was certified as collective bargaining agent more than four years ago but "the company has refused to negotiate a fair contract."

"Instead, it has stepped up its anti-labor practices," the union added as it cited some of the firm's tactics.

UPWA said Pangburn works its women employes—many with 25 years of service—nine hours a day and refuses to give them any rest period or sick leave.

And Pangburn cut the wages of some of its employes to the 75c hourly minimum when that minimum became law.

The firm sells the following brands of candy in 46 states: Ragtime, Ranch Rhythm, Texas Treasure, Golden Gift, Silver Package, All Nut, Extravaganza, Divinity, Frappe Cream, Luxury, Classic, Millionaire, Little Mints, Wagon Wheel, Palomino, Almond Taffe, Pecan Krunch, Round Up, Golden Package and Park Avenue.

CIO Urges Eisenhower Action On A-Bomb Plant Housing

A PROPOSAL that a national advisory commission be appointed to make a comprehensive study of housing and community policy in atomic energy centers was made by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in a letter to Pres. Eisenhower last week.

The suggestion was based on a recommendation by Harold Sandbank, a housing consultant, who surveyed the problem for the CIO National Housing Committee and the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, which has a substantial membership in Atomic Energy Commission centers.

Reuther pointed out to Eisenhower that serious housing and community problems have developed for the workers in each new atomic energy production center.

"No consistent program has been established under which workers in these atomic energy centers might solve their housing problems," he wrote. "In one place subsidized trailers have been used at great expense to the Federal Government. In another, the Government has undertaken construction of the total housing needed in the community.

"SERIOUS problems have developed as a result for which the varying program of the Atomic Energy Commission has prevented community solution . . .

"The CIO believes this problem deserves your serious attention. We can better win the world struggle for the hearts and minds of men if in the achievement of such significant developments as atomic energy we do not ignore the most fundamental problem of the workers employed in this industry."

Sandbank formerly was associated with the John B. Pearce Foundation in development of the initial housing proposals for the AEC community at Oak Ridge, Tenn.

A copy of his report was sent the President. It shows the need for a national policy on atomic energy center housing and community problems by reference to the present chaos. It also discusses in detail the situation at Oak Ridge, where disposal of government-owned housing and other property is being considered. (Related story, Page 4.)

ACWA Asks Pay Hike In Shirt Plants

REPRESENTATIVES of some 100,000 shirt and cotton garment workers throughout the U. S. drew up wage and other demands at a meeting at CIO Clothing Workers headquarters in New York City. ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky presided.

Like 150,000 fellow ACWA members in the men's and boys' clothing industry, the shirt and cotton garment workers will seek a 15c hourly wage increase. This and other proposals already have been presented to the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the U. S. A.

The shirt and cotton garment workers also are seeking an additional employer contribution of 1.% of weekly payrolls to the industry health and insurance fund. This money will provide hospitalization coverage for wives of union members and dependents up to the age of 18.

This improvement recently was won by ACWA in the clothing industry.

CIO Supports Heart Fund

THE CIO is supporting the campaign of the American Heart Association for $10 million to be used for research, rehabilitation, and educational and professional programs.

In accepting the invitation of Dr. Irving S. Wright, association president, to serve as a national sponsor of the organization, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said:

"The CIO, as I am certain you know, has been for many years deeply interested in problems involving the health of the American people. Like my predecessor, the late and beloved Philip Murray, who was greatly interested in the work of the American Heart Association, I feel strongly our responsibility to wage a vigorous and unceasing attack on the problem of heart disease."

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers sent a special letter to all 710 CWA locals of the 300,000-member union urging "all-out support of this great health crusade."

Iron Ore Miners Gain $15 Million Wage Boost

MEMBERS of the CIO Steelworkers who mine iron ore in the ranges of Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin have just finished collecting an estimated $12 million in back pay as the result of a two-year job evaluation project.

In addition, the yearly take-home pay of some 22,000 USA-CIO members will be boosted by about $15 million as the result of increases in job rates, according to Acting Dir. Earl T. Bester of Dist. 33.

The job evaluation plan was undertaken to restore a traditional relationship between wage structures in ore mining and basic steel.

HISTORICALLY, the relationship has been close. But it was upset by the old War Labor Board in 1946, when a technicality prevented the miners from getting increases permitted the steel workers.

Since then, rates in the mills had climbed as much as 50c an hour above pay for comparable classifications in the mines before the job evaluation restored the traditional balance.

The task of getting the same rates in mine and mill was enormous, Bester pointed out. It involved checking thousands of job descriptions turned in by committees set up by 78 locals in the three-state area.

THE ENTIRE wage structure was studied by a district committee headed by Staff Rep. Willard Beaudin. The head of the USA-CIO wage rate adjustment department, Elmer Maloy, went to the area from Pittsburgh to direct the task. He brought with him four staff specialists—William Karas, George Vogt, William Jacko and Ray DeMay. Elliot Bredhoft, of the USA-CIO and CIO legal staffs, also assisted.

The back wages which were paid were retroactive to Dec. 1, 1950. Most of the rate adjustments have already been made, Bester said, with final increases due July 1. At that time a 5.5c increment between job classifications also will become effective and wage parity with the mills will be complete.

Case History Of A Smear

THIS is the case history of a smear attack made by a member of Congress.

It began last week in Atlantic City when Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer, wife of the publisher of the Washington Post, addressed the American Association of School Administrators.

She warned of the attacks on schools and freedom of thought by "many self-appointed and self-styled 'patriots' who wish to establish thought control."

Among those she named was Rep. Harold Velde (R. Ill.), chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee which is probing alleged Communists in colleges.

Velde's response to Mrs. Meyer was a press release saying: "It is interesting to note that in the Moscow Pravda, dated April 30, 1947, Mrs. Agnes Meyer is quoted as writing to the journal 'Soviet Russia Today' as follows: 'We feel profound admiration for the people of the Soviet Union—it simply makes you sick at heart when you hear many radio commentators speaking so unjustly and disdainfully of the Russians.'"

Mrs. Meyer denied she ever made the statement. A check of the magazine by wire services proved the letter was written by Mrs. G. S. Mayer of Port Clements, British Columbia, Canada.

Informed of the facts, Velde retracted his charge, which he said was the result of an "honest mistake." Then he blamed the error on a committee employe he said would be "disciplined."

House Reverses Economy Drive On School Funds

THE REPUBLICAN'S loudly-promised economy drive slipped a gear late last week, when the House decided not to make the nation's school youngsters the first target of their spending cuts.

In floor action, the House largely rejected a move by the House Appropriations Committee to cut off entirely a $24 million federal grant for schools in overcrowded defense areas.

The House voted to restore $20.5 million of school funds, with several members saying the deletion by Rep. Taber's (R. N. Y.) Appropriations Committee, was false economy.

One of the Taft Republican leaders, Rep. Brown of Ohio, got himself a big hand by saying "I'm not going to start my economy practice by taking it out on a bunch of school kids."

The Appropriations Committee "took it out" on a number of labor and social agencies in reporting out the first money bill of the 83rd Congress.

The $2.3 billion bill was cut down to $924 million. The biggest chunk denied was $1.2 billion for the Defense Dept. to meet pay increases and other programs voted by the last Congress. But the Council of Economic Advisers, Labor Dept., Interior Dept. and other agencies were whittled down.

With House action completed, these other cuts were made:

Economic Advisers: Request of ex-Pres. Truman, supported by Pres. Eisenhower, for $75,000 was cut down to $25,000. With the council's staff already on layoff notice, Taber said the committee wants to "get that gang out that is in there now."

CIO previously warned that the attacks on the Council of Economic Advisers in big business and congressional quarters indicate "a depression psychology that would be disastrous for the American people." (See related story on Page 5.)

Labor Dept.: Cut by $7.2 million to $33.9 million, with $2 million whacked off grants to states for administering the unemployment compensation and insurance service.

Interior Dept.: Cut to $376,000, with $474,000 eliminated, mainly for health and safety work of the Bureau of Mines.

Veterans' Administration: Cut to $326 million, with $131 million whacked off of veteran's readjustment (i.e., unemployment) benefits.

The State, Commerce and Justice Dept. funds also were whittled, and Taber's committee also chopped Eisenhower's emergency fund from $350,000 down to $75,000.

But Taber's economy program did not extend to the benefits of office of members of the House. On that score, the committee okehed and the House voted some $58,000 for 225 well-upholstered swivel chairs and new rugs and carpets for House offices and two new limousines for House leaders.

'School Scandal Now U.S. Tragedy,' Reuther Tells Educators' Parley

THE PLIGHT of our schools "has deteriorated from a national scandal to a national tragedy," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the American Association of School Administrators at its convention in Atlantic City, N. J., last week.

"We in the CIO say flatly that the trend must be reversed," he declared.

Government priorities have been given to "inert natural resources" like zinc, steel and copper, he said, and now "it is high time that we give priority to the school children and their intense needs for better education."

HE REITERATED his support for continued federal ownership of off-shore oil fields with proceeds from the sale of oil used to help the country's education facilities. Opposition to this plan he described as "shortsighted and contrary to the nation's best interests."

The CIO president pointed out that the United States needs guns, tanks and planes for security, and continued:

"No sane man can refute the basic proposition that only an educated America—an America educated not only in the nation's material matters but equally in the fundamental spiritual bases of our democracy—can hope to meet the savage challenge of the totalitarians.

—Herblock in Washington Post

Big Operator

"The challenge of the Communists and the Fascists comes not through guns and tanks alone. Those are merely the last battle in the campaign. The preparatory night patrols, the skirmishes, the psychological warfare of the totalitarians are aimed against our minds and our emotions. And our first defense, our best defense, is an affirmative strength of ideas and beliefs in the democratic practices.

"We need a West Point, we need an Annapolis. But just as much, if not more, we need a healthy school system in every city and town and rural area.

"And we just don't have it."

Hundreds of thousands of workers, he noted, are employed in defense plants financed by the federal government and containing "not only the best of machinery but the best of light and ventilation and safety and health facilities."

"But the kids of those workers," he added, "are, in too many communities, forced to go to schools that are out-dated, or overcrowded, or understaffed, or makeshift, or obsolete.

"THE GOVERNMENT has gladly picked up the tab to convert our industrial defense plants into model factories. The same government, and the local and state governments, have refused to spend the money necessary to maintain the same rate of progress in our school system."

Reuther attacked as "false economy" the move of the House Appropriations Committee to knock out of the pending budget $24 million in supplemental appropriations for aid to education in defense areas.

Some conservative Republicans and conservative Southern Democrats seem confused about objectives, he charged.

"Instead of doing all that should be done to prosecute the cold war against the totalitarian threats to our welfare," he said, "they often seem more interested in prosecuting a cold war against our schools . . .

"That is one war of which we in labor want no part. We take our place with those who say that a nation with a booming economy must not practice false economy on the schools."

Wage Slash Turned Down By TWUA

THE CIO Textile Workers last week flatly rejected the 15% wage cut proposal of the American Woolen Co. The dispute appeared to be headed to arbitration.

John Chupka, TWUA's secretary-treasurer and woolen and worsted director, said the cut would average 24c an hour for 16,000 workers in 16 mills in New England, New York and Kentucky.

Chupka said American Woolen's 1952 net loss, reported to be about $6.5 million, marks the first time since 1938 that the company has been in the red.

FROM the end of World War II through 1951, American Woolen's annual profits after taxes have never dipped below $2.19 million (in 1949) and have ranged as high as $22.39 million (in 1946), he added.

"Now that the firm's record of lush profits has been temporarily interrupted," Chupka said, "it insists on recouping its losses by wringing a wage cut out of its workers.

"American Woolen should be thinking in terms of wage increases instead of wage cuts because the national economy can survive only on the basis of increased income so the consumer can take up the slack in the demand for industry's goods."

CIO-CSC Starts Fund Drive For Netherlands Flood Relief

THE CIO Community Services Committee has rushed CARE blanket and clothing textile packages to flood victims in the Netherlands and is campaigning among CIO unions to raise funds for further aid, Leo Perlis, national director of the committee, announced last week.

Trade union movements in many countries moved quickly to help the thousands made homeless by dike-crashing tides in the Netherlands, Belgium and England.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told Dutch and British trade union leaders "we are calling on our members to contribute in order to alleviate suffering." CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood urged all CIO councils to help.

Perlis said that the CIO-CSC gave CARE $1000 for wool blanket packages which were taken from CARE's Paris warehouse and flown to Holland for distribution by Victor G. Reuther, CIO European representative.

"CIO members in Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Missouri and other midwestern states," said Perlis, "who only recently were victims of floods themselves, have been especially responsive to the CIO-CSC appeal for CARE aid to their Dutch fellow-workers."

Perlis said that any CIO affiliate, individual member or auxiliary organization can help Dutch trade unionists by purchasing CARE blanket or textile packages or by making contributions of any amount through the CIO-CSC, 1776 Broadway, New York, or the CIO Representative, CARE, 20 Broad St., New York 5.

The Netherlands Trade Union Federation (NVV), many of whose members will be jobless until broken dikes are repaired and ruined land restored, contributed 250,000 guilders, or about $67,000, to the flood victims.

Haywood Died As He Lived, Practicing Brotherhood

(This report on Allan Haywood's last address is by a Wilkes-Barre newspaperman who is an international vice president of the CIO Newspaper Guild.)

By JOSEPH F. COLLIS

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD died as he lived — preaching and practicing brotherhood.

He was addressing 400 persons—colored and white—of various religions and national origins when he was stricken. He was outwardly calm and preparing to close his talk on brotherhood with his famous Flannigan story, which he said the late Philip Murray would not let him tell in New York City at the 1951 CIO Convention.

The theme of brotherhood had been launched by Orthodox Chief Rabbi I. M. Davidson, who had been invited to talk on brotherhood by the Wilkes-Barre Wyoming Valley CIO Council.

HAYWOOD had bemoaned the fact that a few weeks ago in a trip to the South he was unable to invite a colored brother to sit with him on a train and enjoy a fine meal that had been prepared by a colored chef.

"I was in Russia several years ago and saw the exploitation by the Communists of the working class under the pretense of creating a system of economics whereby the people will rule and share the nation's productivity," he said.

"But that system is failing and now the Russians appear to be starting a series of pogroms to cover up the failures of their economic theories."

The breaking off of diplomatic relations by Russia with Israel was seen by Haywood as a cover-up by the Russians of their failures and a move preparatory to launching a crusade of punishment against Jews.

FAMILIAR PROFILE of Allan S. Haywood—"Mr. CIO Himself"—is at right as he listens to James G. Thimmes, CIO Steelworkers vice president. A few minutes later, while speaking, Haywood collapsed and died.

The CIO has been in the forefront in the campaign for brotherhood, he said. It found that as workers got together from various plants, from various industries and from various parts of the world they found that they had common problems and that they could co-operate to solve these problems.

The human being was the common denominator for bringing people together, he went on, and the CIO expanded its activities from first organizing people to making certain that widows and orphans were protected with adequate insurance after the breadwinner of the family had died.

"I some times get figuring that we are slipping back two steps," Haywood said, "but when you complete the score you find out that while we may have slipped two steps we actually have gone ahead three steps, so that we finally are one step ahead from where we started."

HAYWOOD had paid high compliments to the late Philip Murray and recalled that he had addressed a dinner meeting the night before he died in San Francisco.

"I went to the train the next morning expecting to see Phil, but he didn't come and I got on the train to find him," Haywood said. "I didn't find him and it wasn't until the train had left the station about four hours that I received a telegram of his death."

He had delivered what CIO members who had heard him speak often termed "one of Haywood's best" speeches when he was stricken.

He suffered not a minute's illness. His hand slid along the microphone staff as he mumbled "I think I'm going to collapse."

Then his body slid easily toward the floor and peaceful death among 400 sons and daughters of the people Haywood worked for and loved—the mine workers.

Labor, Public Leaders Mourn Loss Of Haywood

HUNDREDS of messages of condolences on the death of Allan S. Haywood were received last week from leaders in labor, public life and national affairs throughout America and from overseas.

Many of the telegrams were sent to the grieving Haywood family at their home in Taylorville, Ill.

Here is a selection of the messages received at CIO headquarters in Washington:

Labor

The American Federation of Labor by Pres. George Meany:

"The workers of America have lost a devoted leader in Allan Haywood; he was a sincere trade unionist and an outstanding American."

CIO Rubber Workers by Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs and Sec.-Treas. Desmond Walker:

"Perhaps no one in CIO benefited more from Allan Haywood's wisdom, courage and leadership during its founding days and up to the present than did the United Rubber Workers. His passing is of incalculable loss to the workers of America to whom he devoted his life, and to the people of our country whose best interests were always the motives that inspired him."

CIO Clothing Workers by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum and Executive Vice Pres. Hyman Blumberg:

"Allan Haywood was a superb example of the best type of American trade unionist. Selfless and dedicated, he served labor with a singleness of purpose with a complete disregard of his personal health or interests. Allan Haywood was the personification of the CIO and all it stands for."

CIO Lithographers by Pres. John Blackburn:

"The loss of Allan Haywood from the ranks of fighters for America and her working people will be keenly felt by the CIO which he did so much to build, by the affiliated unions which he helped to strengthen and by multitudes of working people whose personal friend he was."

CIO Stone Workers by Sec.-Treas. John C. Lawson:

"The death of Allan S. Haywood removes from our midst one who was always ready to counsel and help. We deeply grieve the loss of another leader of the CIO who accomplished so much for the workers of America and for those of other lands. A great guy has passed on to his well deserved rest."

Mine Workers by Sec.-Treas. John Owens:

"His outstanding leadership in the field of labor and his sincere sympathy for the men and women who toil for a livelihood brought many tangible benefits to hundreds of thousands of American citizens whom he had the honor to represent.

"We are sure the hundreds of thousands of coal miners in America join us

Wire To Widow

The text of the telegram sent by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Mrs. Allan S. Haywood, widow of the late CIO executive vice president, follows:

"Please accept my heartfelt condolences upon the sudden and untimely death of your husband. He was a fighter for the rights of working men and women. We in the CIO mourn his loss as a warm-hearted and devoted leader of labor."

CIO Board Says—

'Never Has There Been A Happier Warrior—'

The following statement was issued last week by the CIO Executive Officers—Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey—on behalf of the CIO Executive Board:

DEATH has taken from our ranks a great and warm-hearted figure, Allan S. Haywood, who will always live in the memories of American trade union members.

Allan Haywood lived his life with the best interest of the workers as his guiding star. His memories of a childhood spent in the coal mines of his native Yorkshire, his early protests against exploitation and hate, were in his heart and his mind every waking hour.

Like Philip Murray, his close friend and colleague, he came to the United States as a young man, and went to work in the coal mines. But soon his belief in unions and his desire to help make a better world brought him into active union work. Never has there been a more industrious warrior for labor's rights, never has there been a happier warrior. Allan Haywood never forgot for a moment that democratic trade unions are organizations of the people, that their strength comes from the people and from the people's concern about the general welfare.

As Director of Organization and Councils of the CIO, and later as Executive Vice-President of the CIO, Allan Haywood never got lost behind a desk. Wherever there was a strike, wherever a crisis, wherever a celebration involving union members, you could expect to see Allan Haywood. Union members respected him and loved him because they knew instinctively he had no interest except their interest.

No meeting was too small or too distant if workers needed him, and the inspiration which he always brought them played a vital part in the unions of America. It was typical of Allan Haywood that he died "in harness" while addressing a meeting of CIO people in Wilkes-Barre.

We of the CIO will always cherish his memory. We recognize the tremendous contribution he made to the welfare of CIO. We know the hope and encouragement he gave to hundreds of unions, both local and national, in the ranks of the CIO.

We mourn his irreplaceable loss; but we pledge ourselves in the years ahead to live up to the great and humanitarian tradition which was the life of Allan S. Haywood.

Allan Haywood Dies At 64

By AL ZACK

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD is dead. The short, stocky man who rose from the coal mines to the No. 2 spot in the CIO died on Feb. 21 in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., of a heart attack.

Death came to the CIO executive vice president quickly and mercifully. He was talking to the workers he loved so well and had served faithfully for many years.

As was his custom, Allan Haywood was concluding his speech with his famous "Flannigan story"—one he had told often, but which he always enjoyed.

Suddenly he grasped the microphone stand and murmured, "I think I'm going to collapse." Then his body slid easily to the floor.

Twenty minutes later, the doctors reported that Allan S. Haywood had died at the age of 64.

Thus a courageous fighter for human rights, whose entire life had been identified with promoting the welfare of workers, died as he had often said he would die—"in the harness."

'A Grievous Loss'

CIO officials in Wilkes-Barre, who had been with Haywood during his last hours, immediately notified CIO Pres. Walter R. Reuther, who was at a New York meeting.

The death of Haywood, Reuther told reporters, was "a grievous loss" for CIO and the entire nation.

"His heart was instinctively attuned to the needs of the under-dog," said Reuther.

"Like his good and devoted friend, the late Philip Murray, Allan S. Haywood was a man of the coal mines who carried with him every day the dream of a better future for everyone. He will be mourned by the millions of trade unionists, at home and abroad, who knew him, respected him and loved him for his constant devotion to the common cause."

It was in terms of love, respect and admiration that thousands of grieving union members, government officials and friends of the late CIO official sent telegrams to CIO headquarters and to the Haywood family.

They echoed the sentiments expressed by Reuther and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey in their official telegram notifying fellow officers of the CIO of Haywood's death.

"Another great personal tragedy and organizational loss has befallen us," they said. "We are shocked into sorrow and mourning by the sudden death of Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

"His loss to us, his friends and colleagues, and to the movement for which he gave his life, can only be measured in terms of the inspiration, the guidance and the unceasing effort that was his constant contribution.

"Like Philip Murray, whom he followed in life and whom he so soon follows in death, he will continue to live in the work he has done."

Haywood was in apparent good health when he arrived in Wilkes-Barre that Saturday evening. He was the major speaker at a banquet of the Wilkes-Barre Wyoming Valley CIO Council.

Those who were present and had heard him speak on many occasions called it "one of Allan's best speeches." Ironically, in paying tribute to Philip Murray, his late chief and longtime personal friend, Haywood had noted that it was after a meeting "just like this" that Murray had died in San Francisco only three months before.

He talked of human rights, of organizing, of standing together. It was a speech that reflected his philosophy of more than 50 years in the labor movement. He had often summed up that philosophy in these words: "When you join a labor union it's like joining a church; you work for nothing else and believe in nothing else."

It had been that principle which brought Haywood to union meetings, strike rallies, picket lines and trouble spots all over the nation. Wherever CIO members needed him, he was there.

CIO officials who were at the Wilkes-Barre dinner summoned an emergency squad and oxygen was administered only moments after he collapsed. He was rushed to Wilkes-Barre General Hospital, but medical aid was in vain.

Workers Pay Tribute

The deputy coroner, Dr. Robert Strickler, reported death was due to a heart attack.

Arrangements for transferring his body from Wilkes-Barre to the modest Haywood home in Taylorville, Ill., were completed shortly. A guard of honor, composed of three of his long-time aides, accompanied the body on the long train trip.

They were: Joseph M. Walsh, CIO regional director in Wilkes-Barre; Walter Harris, CIO national representative, and Hugh Thompson, CIO regional director in Buffalo, N. Y.

At every stop along the route, crowds of workers, who had loved Allan Haywood, gathered to pay their respects.

At Taylorville, more than 100 miners, by whose side he had long fought, waited to pay their last respects. With them were his widow, Mrs. Kate Haywood, and his daughter, Mrs. Kathleen Lusk.

Haywood Goes Home To The Mine Fields For The Last Time

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

TAYLORVILLE, ILL.—In Oak Hill cemetery, on the outskirts of Taylorville, there stands the life-size statue of a coal miner.

Inscribed on the simple granite base are these words:

"George Bilyen. Lost his life fighting for industrial liberty at Virden, Illinois. October 12, 1898. United Mine Workers of America."

On Feb. 25, 1953, the body of another man who devoted his life to industrial liberty was laid at rest in Oak Hill cemetery.

Allan S. Haywood—"Mr. CIO" who had died at work for the cause he loved—came home to a pleasant knoll that rises out of the flat plainlands of this southern Illinois farming and mining country.

WITH HIM, to pay their final respects, came hundreds of the men and women of American labor, who had traveled from every union center in America to honor the man they loved and respected.

It was a grey, cool February day in Taylorville, Under leaden skies, a sharp, often angry, breeze blew in from the west. The Oak Hill cemetery, which in summer must be green and pleasant, was bare of foliage and brown of turf.

But in sharp contrast was the mass of bright-hued flowers that covered the grave-site and the path from the roadway. Bright red and orange gladiolus, early spring flowers, deep red roses were arrayed in great profusion.

The flowers had come from unions and union members. A great white cross of flowers came from the President and Vice-President of the United States.

Slowly the 100-car funeral cortege made its way, the eight or ten blocks from the mid-town First Presbyterian Church, through the gates of Oak Hill, and circled silently around the knoll.

A great bronze casket, adorned with red roses, was carried to its final resting places. The pall bearers—his friends and associates in the CIO—clearly showed their grief at the loss of a friend, a colleague, a buddy.

Following them came the Haywood family: Mrs. Haywood; their daughter, Mrs. Kathleen Lusk, and her teen-age daughter Beatrice; and their son, Albert.

Under a canopy that flapped noisily at times in the breeze, a prayer was said, a psalm was recited, by Rev. Ernest Harbaugh of the First Presbyterian Church. A minute of silence—and then the family and host of friends slowly moved out, back to town, back to the four corners of the nation from which they had come.

Funeral services had been held in the big First Presbyterian Church of Taylorville. Built of dark brown brick, with six massive columns rising from its steps, the church stands on a quiet residential street.

Its interior is plain, almost austere. But the flowers were everywhere; around the pulpit, clear across the front, on windowsills along the sides.

At 2 o'clock, family and relatives walked slowly, sadly up the church steps and into their reserved seats. Every pew was filled, with men and women from the unions that Allan Haywood had helped so much to build, and from the regional offices and councils of CIO across the country; and with townspeople who knew "Mr. CIO" as a friend and quiet benefactor.

PRAYERS were said. Rev. Harbaugh read the 23rd Psalm. He talked about Allan Haywood, the citizen of the town, the man who had carried his message of unionism to every corner of the country.

Promptly at 2:30, the services ended. CIO regional directors formed twin lines of honor down the steps, across the sidewalk to the street.

Between those lines came the pallbearers: Joseph Curran, Joseph Beirne, Walter Reuther, R. J. Thomas, O. A. Knight, James Carey, Frank Rosenblum, L. S. Buckmaster, Emil Rieve, Michael Quill, James Thimmes, Sir Archibald Gordon of the British Embassy.

In the cortege were the honorary pallbearers—CIO regional directors, members of the CIO Executive Board, old friends. The procession moved past little knots of townspeople, who drew themselves to solemn-faced attention as Allan Haywood moved on his last journey.

Taylorville was proud of Allan Haywood. Stores and restaurants and bars closed down for the afternoon if this county seat town of 9100—some 25 miles south of the state capital at Springfield.

Mayor Joe L. McAdam had declared the afternoon a period of public mourning, adding that "his loss is felt and mourned by his fellow citizens."

Marshall J. Burris, head of Taylorville's Association of Commerce had asked all business houses to close during the funeral hours—as "a gesture that will express to you in a small way the very high regard in which our community and Association held Mr. Haywood."

The Breeze-Courier — "Christian County's Only Daily"—expressed the hometown's views with quiet dignity:

"Labor," it said, "has lost a great and faithful servant whose first thoughts were ever dedicated to the working man of the nation, and who spent all his energies to the end that labor might gain its rightful place in this nation created for free men."

Officers To Meet

The CIO Executive Committee, composed of the top officers, will meet in National CIO headquarters in Washington on Mar. 2 to discuss the filling of the vacancy caused by the death of Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president and director of organizations and councils.

Talks Postponed

First meeting between the unity committees of the CIO and AFL, scheduled for Washington on Feb. 24, was postponed out of respect to CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood.

The session was postponed to Apr. 7. Haywood had been named as one of the CIO unity committee and had served on earlier committees created for the same purpose.

Allan Haywood

It's a sad task to write in the past tense about Allan Haywood, one of the stalwarts of the American trade unions. His accomplishments were many; we'd like to talk here about the man.

He was a friend—a "buddy"—of thousands of us. He had tremendous strength, physical and moral. The number of people, and the number of unions, to whom he gave help are countless.

We remember his best as a man with a smile, even when things looked most dark. Allan loved people, and loving them, he had faith in progress and betterment.

He knew that in every situation there is not only a solution but a smile. He enjoyed jokes and anecdotes, because they are about people at their best, or their worst—and people came alive to his listeners as he told his stories.

He liked companionship—the easy, pleasant association of men in the labor movement, devoted to good purposes and working hard to fulfill their goals.

And Allan Haywood was always ready for work—work to which he was devoted because it involved the welfare of the working people, whom he loved, and the welfare of their trade unions.

He was a good soldier in the ranks, and he rose through the ranks of trade union leadership on his merits. Being human, he liked victory; yet, in defeat, he was glorious. Nobody who attended the 1952 CIO convention will forget Allan Haywood's magnificent final talk, nor the emotion of the delegates as they sang, with Allan, at his request, "Roll The Union On."

Allan Haywood—"Mr. CIO Himself"—is no longer with us, and it won't ever be quite the same. He was a man whom we respected and loved, and whose memory we will always cherish.

'Young Bob' La Follette

The sudden tragic death of former Sen. Robert (Young Bob) LaFollette, Jr., of Wisconsin comes as a heavy blow to members of the CIO, following so shortly after the deaths of our own Philip Murray and Allan Haywood.

Young Bob was a great Senator. Being a great Senator was a family tradition, for his father (Old Bob) was one of the outstanding liberals of the first quarter of the century. Young Bob did not need his father's reputation as a cloak; he made his own during the years of the New Deal.

Young Bob's voting record was consistently "right" on labor and civil liberties issues. But even more, Bob LaFollette was a tremendously hard-working Senator. He gave not just his name and prestige, but his thought and his sweat to the work of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee.

There is not a union in the country that is not in debt, directly or indirectly, to that LaFollette Committee.

What it brought to light, veteran unionists had long known: labor spies, arsenals of tear gas and tommy guns, violence, conspiracy, bribery, and corruption. The revelations shocked America, and helped put a stop to anti-union practices from the back closets of industry.

He'll be missed—and his Senate Committee's reports will be "must" reading for students of industrial relations for years to come.

Haywood Said—

'We Had To Fight For What We Got'

Here are excerpts from the speech the late Allan S. Haywood, executive vice president of the CIO, delivered at the meeting of the General Council of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Berlin last year:

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

ON BEHALF OF the six million members of the CIO and, I am sure, of every free trade union in the United States, I bring you these words of warmest friendship and fraternity.

Berlin is a symbol of freedom and independence. It will live forever in the minds of mankind everywhere as a symbol of the free and brave human spirit. It is entirely fitting that the ICFTU should be meeting in this great city.

The problem of prices, wages and productivity is not a subject just for the professors of economics. This subject is fundamental to every trade union. It affects every phase of our trade union work, for our trade unions exist primarily to build a better life for working men and women.

The union which ignores the problems of prices, wages and productivity—the union which does not place these matters first—that union cannot in the long run provide service and progress for its members and for the community in which it lives.

THE CIO is less than 20 years old. But during those few years, our unions have made tremendous progress for the workers of America. They have increased wages, improved working conditions, and given American workers a new sense of human dignity. But I ask that you understand one simple fact:

America is not a land of millionaires. It is not a land where workers automatically get a decent life and a fair share of worldly goods. We have had to fight for what we got.

Some of our friends in other countries, I think, believe the CIO was born with a silver spoon in its mouth. The fact is that the CIO was born in an atmosphere of hunger and poverty—yes, and desperation. We organized, and we went on strike, we challenge the great corporations, and we resisted the nightsticks and the tear gas of the police. Our members were wounded and killed in this fight.

Today the trade unions of America have fought their way to acceptance by the corporations and the government. But keep this in mind: the CIO does not curry the popularity of corporations and politicians. We know that when we are popular with our members, we will win the respect of our foes. We win the confidence and support of our members by our constant fight on these major problems of prices, wages and productivity.

We do not discourage economic progress—in fact, we encourage it, but on one point we stand firm as the Rock of Gibraltar. We insist that through the collective bargaining process, there be a fair distribution of the products of our economic system.

WE KNOW that no government, no administration, no group of public officials, however friendly they may be, can make a just determination of the division of our national wealth. It is only our unions, supported by the solid determination of our members, which can insure it.

As our industrial society becomes more complex, in America and throughout the world, productivity problems have risen to a place of prime importance.

Let no confusion enter your minds. We fight the speedup; we fight unfair burdens placed on the worker at his machine. American employers have learned some lessons from our unions.

Our unions, on the other hand, know that to fight the introduction of new productive machinery is as futile as to tilt at windmills.

But, say we, the fruit of that new productivity of new machines and new processes must be fairly shared among workers and consumers. The trade unions must make the machine serve, not enslave, humanity.

IN AMERICA and throughout the world we have everything to lose if we fail and a world to win if we meet the challenge of our times. The challenge is not merely political. Today more than half the people of this troubled world are not getting enough to eat, are not wearing decent clothing, are not living in decent homes, are unable to give proper medical care to their children.

There is the challenge! The people need bread more than slogans. They will respond to trade union organization and economic progress faster by far than they will to mere anti-Communist slogans. We can win this battle for human liberty and a hopeful future by actions rather than by words.

Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen by Pres. D. B. Robertson:

"The passing of Allan Haywood is a distinct loss to the labor world. I extend sympathy to the CIO and the members of Haywood's family."

Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers by James P. Shields, grand chief engineer:

"The passing of Allan Haywood we know is a real loss to you. Please accept warmest regards and good wishes of the members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in your current action to consolidate the strength and inner support which Mr. Haywood did much to advance."

CIO Shoe Workers by Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell:

"Labor and workers in general have suffered a great loss, and his guidance and unceasing effort to aid both organized and unorganized workers will always be remembered. His death is a great shock to everyone in our union and his loss will be keenly felt by all."

Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen by Pres. W. P. Kennedy:

"The death of Brother Haywood who has thousands of friends within the ranks of our brotherhood is a loss not only to the CIO but also to all organized labor."

Victor G. Reuther and CIO staff in Europe:

"We are deeply shocked at the news of Allan Haywood's death. The world labor movement has lost a dedicated leader whose achievements contributed significantly to the cause of the working people everywhere. Extend our sympathy to his family."

CIO Newspaper Guild by Pres. Harry Martin:

"All labor knew him as a determined and courageous champion of its rights. We knew him as a wise and devoted friend as well, and we shall miss him sorely."

National

Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin:

"I join in tribute to his life and work with the millions of free people throughout the world who respected Allan Haywood as an advocate of freedom and their champion against tyranny and oppression. Allan Haywood's name shall shine bright on the list of those who have loved and served their fellow men."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.):

"I came to know Allan Haywood as one of the true symbols of the American labor movement. He provided a heart and soul to American labor which made the labor movement a permanent part of American life."

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.):

"Please express to the officers of the CIO my deep sympathy over the loss of Allan Haywood. His going is a sad loss to all of us."

W. Averell Harriman, former Mutual Security Administrator:

"It was my privilege to have known and to have worked with Allan Haywood for many years. His life was a symbol of American democracy at its finest."

Paul M. Herzog, chairman, for the National Labor Relations Board:

"The members of the National Labor Relations Board join in sorrow with the CIO in mourning the sudden loss of that pioneering labor statesman, Allan Haywood."

The Rev. R. A. McGowan, director, social action department, National Catholic Welfare Conference, to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

"You, the CIO and the whole organized labor movement have my deep sympathy upon the loss of that good labor man, Allan Haywood. I share in that loss, too, and in the loss of a personal friend."

The Rev. George G. Higgins, assistant director, social action department, National Catholic Welfare Conference:

"Few of his contemporaries contributed as much as he did to the cause of social justice and to the welfare of his adopted country which he loved so dearly. May God reward him with eternal happiness."

National Religion and Labor Foundation by Witherspoon Dodge, executive director:

"In the death of Allan Haywood not only the CIO but the entire labor movement, the nation and the world at large have lost the untiring services of one of the noblest souls. He was a man four square in his relations to his God, his fellow men, the labor movement and society as a whole."

International

Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions by J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary:

"The sad news about Allan Haywood's sudden death has caused great consternation in our ranks. The departure of this unassuming, always jovial stalwart among the world's labor leaders means an irreparable loss."

N. Y. Times Calls Haywood Pioneer

Under title of "A Labor Pioneer Passes," the New York Times editorially voiced this tribute to Allan S. Haywood:

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, executive vice president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, who died of a heart attack while addressing a union rally in Wilkes-Barre Saturday night, learned his unionism in a rugged school. When he started organizing for the United Mine Workers in Illinois forty years ago, a pistol was part of his travel kit. He had to battle opposition from the Ku Klux Klan as well as the coal operators.

When the CIO came into being, in 1935, he teamed up with John L. Lewis and Philip Murray to help unionize the mass-production industries. There was no limit to his energy or enthusiasm. If he slept, no one could figure out when he did it.

On the picket line he was a fount of warmth and eternal good humor; at the bargaining table he could always be counted on to ease strained tempers and promote the search for mutually acceptable solutions.

His death deprives American labor of one of its most stimulating and inspiring personalities, a link between the days when unions were struggling for survival and the present period of maturing economic power and social responsibility.

The Story Of Allan Haywood . . .

'Mr. CIO Himself' Helped R

By GERVASE N. LOVE

"Let's continue to organize the unorganized with a renewed vigor through the combined efforts of our international unions, city and state councils, and staff representatives."

That was Allan Shaw Haywood's gospel. They were the words he lived by. The quotation, from his last "Organizationally Speaking" column in The CIO News, was the guiding light of his life.

From the time he was a 13-year-old boy, doing a man's work in the coal mines of his native England, until death shared the platform with him at a CIO organizational meeting in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., on Feb. 21, he repeated those words in endless variations—in writing, in speaking, in working and in living.

HE DIED as he would have wanted to die, with his union boots on, preaching his gospel of organization to the people closest to his great heart—the men and women who make up the rank and file of CIO membership from the mills, the factories, the stores, the offices and the service trades.

Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, in nominating him for the presidency of the CIO at the last convention, called him "Mr. CIO himself." Nobody disputed the description.

And when the ballots were counted at Atlantic City just a few short weeks ago, and Walter P. Reuther had won, it was Haywood who led the delegates in singing that old labor song:

"We will roll the union on."

Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, seconding Haywood's nomination, referred to him as one of "the four horsemen of the young, struggling CIO" of the early days. Nobody disputed that, either.

Haywood was the latest of four early CIO leaders to go. Sidney Hillman first, then Van Bittner, and then Philip Murray last November.

Allan Haywood was born in the coal mining town of Monk Bretton in Yorkshire, England, on Oct. 9, 1888, the ninth of 10 children.

He followed his father and three of his brothers into the coal mines at the age of 13, and promptly joined the British Miners Federation.

His unionism was beaten into him a year later by the lash of a mine supervisor. It left scars on his back that he carried until the night he died.

In 1906, he came to the United States. His possessions were as few as those his intimate friend, the late Philip Murray, had carried when he came here from Scotland four years earlier. His most precious bit of baggage, like Murray's, was his union card.

He promptly joined the United Mine Workers and went to work in the coal pits of Illinois. Immediately he became active in union affairs. In short order he became a local union officer, then UMW sub-district vice president and president, later district executive board member and vice president of the Illinois Federation of Labor.

He married the former Kate Dewsnap on May 31, 1909, and settled down in Taylorville. They built a home at 918 Rich St., but Haywood saw little of it during the last few years.

THREE CHILDREN were born to the Haywoods—Albert, now on the CIO staff in Milwaukee; James, who died some years ago, and a daughter, now Mrs. Kathleen Lusk. They also adopted his nephew, William.

There is a brother, Albert, on the CIO Steelworkers staff in St. Louis, and two sisters, Mrs. Lucy Heminway, Fontana, Wisc., and Mrs. Austin Dodd, Witt, Ill.

When the Committee for Industrial Organizations was established, Allan Haywood came into his own. He quickly became a key figure in the stupendous organizing campaigns that brought millions of industrial workers into the union fold.

Always he preached his gospel of organization and solid unionism. He sometimes said:

"When you join a labor union it's like joining a church: you work for nothing else and believe in nothing else."

He became a living tradition as he jumped from one hot organizing campaign to another, from industry to industry, from city to city.

HE WORKED with the then fledgling Rubber Workers, and as an adviser helped negotiate the first signed contract in an industry that had been an anti-union bulwark, with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co.

He worked with the then weak United Auto Workers in organizing drives at Dodge, Chrysler and General Motors. He was a member of the UAW Policy Committee during the hectic days it was building itself with the help of sitdown strikes, and was a member of the UAW Executive Board.

He organized in the "jungle" of the packinghouse industry, and served as director of the Packinghouse Workers.

In May 1937 he was appointed CIO regional director in New York City. He helped in the election which won for the Transport Workers bargaining rights at Interborough Rapid Transit (IRT), and he helped negotiate the first union shop contract in the history of the city's transportation industry.

He became a sub-regional director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, and was at Philip Murray's side through the bitterly-contested organization drives that cracked the industry's anti-union front.

He red in the establishment of unions that now flourishing integral parts of the —as chairman of the Utility Workers anizing Committee, Optical Workers Organizing Committee, Paper Workers Organizing Committee, Telephone Workers Organizing Committee and Insurance Workers Organizing Committee.

In 1950, he was named director of industrial union councils.

His active interest extended into international affairs, too. He was one of the CIO delegates when the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions was established at a meeting in London in 1949. He also attended its council meeting in Berlin last year, making one of the major speeches.

Wherever Allan Haywood went in the course of his duties he made friends. He liked people, and they liked him. The lash of the mine boss may have scarred his back, but it didn't scar his soul or his spirit. He had the gifts of compassion and understanding, and he shared them generously with those who needed them most —the unorganized.

IT WAS AT the 1952 CIO convention, too, that Haywood made his bid for the CIO presidency following the death of his friend Philip Murray, which had affected him greatly. Before the ballots were cast, he said:

"Vote your conscience for the good of CIO, and I'm sure there will be no objections from either of the opposing candidates.

"The main thing is, when we do get through voting, let's all be the same gang going down the same road together. As for me, I shall be going down the road with you—always."

Ten days ago at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Allan Haywood came to the end of that road.

Boomerang—

Now Senate Neanderthals Say Taft Is 'Soft On Communists'

THE REPUBLICAN anti-Communist club boomeranged last week, catching "Mr. Republican" himself squarely in the neck.

The result: Sen. Taft (O.), GOP majority leader in the upper house, was charged with being "too soft on Communists." Leveling the charge were two other members of the Republican conservative wing, Sens. Jenner of Indiana and Welker of Idaho.

Here's how the latest smear campaign went:

Taft, speaking in Chicago, said he would not favor dismissing a Communist professor, unless he were sure the professor was effectively teaching Communism.

Taft, a fellow of the corporation of Yale Univ., said, "I must say as a member of the board of trustees of a university, I would not favor firing anyone for being a Communist unless I was certain that he was teaching communism and having some effect on the development of the thought of students."

He Dodges Mud Balls

For the rest of the week, Taft was dodging mud balls hurled by his Senate colleagues, all experts in that field.

Jenner said the boss Republican in the Senate was "rather naive."

He predicted the evidence from the college probe now under way by Jenner's Internal Security subcommittee "will be a complete answer to anything of that kind."

Welker said he was "disappointed" in Taft's stand. He pointed out Taft had said "Communists shouldn't be employed in government." Welker added Taft felt "it's all right for them to teach our youth."

"I can't follow Sen. Taft on that," Welker told reporters.

Sen. Johnston (D. S.C.), also a member of the Jenner subcommittee, said he regrets Taft's statement "very much." Johnston said any psychologist knows that no teacher can associate with a group of students "without indoctrinating them with his views."

It was the second time in two weeks a GOP smear campaign had backfired. Earlier a smear of Mrs. Agnes Meyers, wife of the Washington Post publisher, had blown back in the face of Rep. Velde (R. Ill.), chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee, which has just been voted another $300,000.

When Velde's smear had been proven completely false he at first tried to brazen it out, but later withdrew the charge in a statement in which he blamed a committee employe, who was fired.

'Code Of Conduct' Urged

The Velde episode touched off Senate speeches urging action along lines proposed by Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) to set up a "code of conduct" for committee hearings, which would protect the rights of accused persons.

Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) quoted the famous warning of Judge Learned Hand against "denunciation, without specification or backing." Morse also introduced a resolution to remedy "abuses" of the investigative procedures of Congress.

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) supported attempts to abolish the congressional smear, pointing out that unfair and baseless attacks have been made on the loyalty of patriotic Americans.

Key to the proposals of Morse and Kefauver would be protection of the rights of those accused by witnesses before Congressional committees.

They would be notified in advance of charges against them, permitted to submit evidence in their own defense and rebuttal statements; permitted attorneys for advice, and given the right to cross-examine accusers.

All these rights are traditional in American courts, where persons are presumed to be innocent until they are proven guilty. All are denied persons accused before congressional committees.

'Schools Of The Air'—

High Costs Stymie Educational TV

PHILIP MORRIS has just decided that it "loves Lucy" $8 million worth—while 242 non-commercial and educational television stations aren't on the air mainly because of the high finances required.

The cigaret firm has just signed an $8 million two-and-a-half year contract with CBS, Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz for "I Love Lucy," a comedy which is one of the top-drawing U. S. television programs.

And while television is getting bigger and more expensive and more innocuous with every passing day, the outlook for educational TV is growing dimmer.

The Federal Communications Commission months ago set aside 242 TV channels for non-commercial "schools of the air." So far less than two dozen applications have been filed for such stations. The deadline for FCC applications is coming soon, on June 2, and commercial telecasters are anxious to move in on all available channels.

When the American Association of School Administrators met recently in Atlantic City, TV exhibits and test broadcasts got wide interest. The school superintendents indicated they wanted an extension of the application deadline, but FCC Chairman Paul A. Walker took a dim view of such an extension.

'Monopoly Of Opinion'

What's stopping TV "schools of the air" is money: Constructing a station costs from $200,000 to more than $800,000, a transmitter tower alone comes to $150,000, and annual operations—even on a modest basis—could run up to $250,000.

What's at issue for labor on proposals for educational TV, basically, is the question of "monopolization of news and opinion."

That was illustrated in the formal application of the UAW-CIO Broadcasting Corp., a subsidiary of the CIO Auto Workers, to the FCC for permission to build an ultra-high frequency TV station on Channel 62 in Detroit. The UAW's application runs up against a previous request by the Knight newspaper chain, publishers of the Detroit Free Press and three other large dailies, for the same TV channel.

Over the past 20 years, newspaper publishers in major cities took over many of the big radio stations. When FM radio boomed briefly after the last war, it was subordinated to the same alliance. And now in many cities, TV is under the same control as newspapers and radio stations.

The result, on video, is a tide of suds and corn flakes—"I Love Lucy," "Captain Video" and so on.

Proponents of educational TV suggest it would provide a more balanced diet, as Prof. Charles A. Siepmann has said, in the form of "diversity of program choice" and "many sided discussion of controversial public issues." Siepmann, of New York Univ., is a well-known writer in the field of communications.

An Issue In N. Y.

The question of educational TV is coming to a head in New York State, with legislative action pending on a proposed 10-station network to be operated by the State Board of Regents.

The New York Chamber of Commerce has come out for delaying a decision, but both the State CIO Council and the State AFL strongly backed the network in recent hearings. Last week an investigating committee, in a split decision, turned down the educational TV proposal.

Opponents of educational TV, said State CIO Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno, "seem to be motivated by misunderstanding, lack of vision, distrust of our democratic processes or simple greed." And Hugh Thompson, Buffalo CIO regional director, said "selfish interests" are fighting to kill educational TV.

"Education," he said, "is not a luxury; it is a living, breathing process of democracy and anyone who says we can't afford educational television certainly doesn't have the best interests of the people at heart."

In California, CIO Council and UAW representatives participated in recent discussions of a similar statewide educational TV network. The Univ. of Southern California, with a private grant, hopes to get such a station on the air in April.

The Univ. of Houston, Tex., and Kansas State College have similar plans. But the only educational TV station which is telecasting now is Iowa State College's WOI-TV, and it's largely a commercial operation.

IT SOON may be more costly for veterans and those in the moderate and lower income brackets to secure loans for housing. A Senate committee has been conducting hearings on the question.

The government, through the Veterans Administration and the Federal Housing Administration, presently insures certain housing loans so that private lenders take minimum risks.

The VA guarantees and insures home mortgage loans with a maximum 4% interest rate. FHA insures loans with a maximum 4.25% interest rate.

The FHA program was set up to help moderate and lower income families get limited loans to purchase homes. The limit was recently upped to $16,000. To date three million loans have been processed by FHA. They total some $23 billion.

The VA program was established in 1944 to enable veterans, in a similar way, to get housing loans. Since then more than three million loans have been made with a total value of $19 billion.

Many—if not most—of the loans would not have been obtained without the help of VA and FHA guarantees.

A Long Campaign

For some years the lenders—mortgage bankers, building and loan associations and others—have worked hard to get the government to raise these interest rates.

Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) and Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.), chairmen of the Senate and House Banking and Currency Committees, where all forms of housing legislation originate, have announced that they favor an increase.

In some areas of the country, lenders have refused to lend money on the present VA and FHA rates. Some people have called this refusal a "strike" by the lenders for higher rates. Yet many lenders have claimed that "lack" of mortgage money justifies an increase.

Until recently the FHA and the VA were unmoved by these "strikes." Government officials maintained that on the basis of the minimum risk involved and the marketability of the mortgages the present rates are fair and competitive.

Most of the home mortgage business handled by private lenders has not been VA and FHA loans but so-called conventional loans at 5% or 6% interest, or higher. Last year these lenders handled $18 billion in home mortgages. Only $4.6 billion, or 26 per cent of the total, was through VA and FHA.

Last month FHA did permit lenders to add a .5% "service charge" for rural housing mortgages below $5000. Some believe this was the first step in the direction of raising all rates.

'Hard Money' Policy

There is considerable evidence that such an increase is in line with the "hard money" credit and fiscal policy of the Eisenhower Administration. Already interest rates on $9 billion government certificates have been increased .5%. This will cost the taxpayers $45 million more each year to service the Federal debt.

Increased mortgage interest rates would be reflected in rental housing loans, too, pointing to an increase in rents on new construction.

Handling federally insured home purchase loans is a big business. Last year 200,000 FHA loans and 300,000 VA loans totaled $4.6 billion. If interest rates on these loans had been increased only .25% it would have raised the annual interest payment nearly $8 million.

While a .25% increase would not be so critical as to stop many prospective buyers from purchasing homes, the $8 million burden would fall on veterans and newly established and lower income families who can least afford it.

These funds would normally be used to purchase consumer goods. Any substantial reduction in this vital "purchasing power" is an unhealthy economic step when an expanding economy is so essential to continued prosperity.

"Awright! Break it up!"

Coastal Oil Grab Bill Is Protested By CIO

THE CIO URGED Congress last week to retain the off-shore oil lands in the naval oil reserve "for the purposes of orderly development and devotion of the income to federal aid to education."

The organization's stand was made known to the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs by O. A. Knight, chairman of the National CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, a CIO vice president, and president of the CIO Oil Workers.

He testified at committee hearings on bills to give the off-shore lands, estimated to contain $40 billion in oil, to the states.

The Eisenhower Administration's stand also was first made known last week. Sec. of the Interior McKay asked the committee to give the states title to the submerged lands only to their historic boundaries, and to keep federal control beyond them.

PRIMARILY, the CIO plea was based on defense needs. The fact that former Pres. Truman set the lands aside as a naval oil reserve—regardless of the recent informal ruling of Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell—has cast the whole question of off-shore oil "in an entirely new light," Knight said. He added:

"CIO members . . . believe firmly, and we think most Americans do, that our defenses must be kept strong. A powerful Navy, with an adequate supply of fuel, is absolutely essential to a good strong defense.

"We can build the most powerful warships in the world, and we can build more of them than any other country, but they won't be a bit of use in defending our shores or those of our allies if they have to be tied up in San Francisco Bay or the Hudson River because the Navy hasn't enough fuel oil to run them."

In urging support of the Hill Amendment to use income from the lands for aid to schools, Knight said:

"The use of income from these lands for education would, I am sure, quiet the fears of many that we went through this business 30 years ago.

"The eager support the oil interests have given the claims of the states in this case, behind the scenes, inevitably reminds people of some aspects of the Teapot Dome scandal.

"It is making them wonder if the same type of interest that debauched our government to the extent that a few mink coats and deep freezes seem picayune is now trying to accomplish the same end in a somewhat more legal manner."

McDonald Reaffirms Unity Of CIO In Talks With AFL

CIO OFFICIALS will go into meetings with the AFL "as a solid, united delegation," David J. McDonald, acting president of the CIO Steelworkers, said last week.

McDonald, speaking in New York City, categorically denied rumors that he or other USA-CIO officials had been meeting separately with the AFL.

Such rumors were repeated at length by U. S. News & World Report magazine, whose publisher is David Lawrence, ultra-conservative Republican columnist. The magazine claimed "it's touch and go whether the CIO can survive."

HERE'S WHAT McDonald said, at the USA-CIO Dist. 4 conference covering all New York State locals of the steel union:

"There are rumors that I have been meeting with the AFL. I have met with the AFL in this manner: I recently went into a restaurant and one of the waiters, who is an AFL member, said to me, 'Hi ya, Dave' and he found me a seat.

"That is the extent of my meeting with the AFL."

On the pending CIO-AFL negotiations toward labor unity—which were delayed by the death of Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, from last week to Apr. 7—McDonald said:

"We are going to meet . . . with the idea of discussing unity. Certainly we are all for unity, but you lead from strength, not from weakness.

"The CIO will go into the meetings as a solid, united delegation."

Ives' Bills Would Kill Taft 80-Day Strike Ban

REPEAL of the 80-day injunction provision of the Taft-Hartley Act is called for in two separate bills introduced by Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.).

The New York member of the Senate Labor Committee last week followed up an earlier proposal for complete elimination of the injunction with a second measure also giving the President power to issue 60-day no-strike orders in national disputes.

Both bills would authorize the President to proclaim national emergencies in labor disputes and "call on" both sides to continue work. His second measure would put teeth in the President's request by making strikes or lockouts illegal during the 60-day period.

Meantime, it was announced that CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther would testify before the House Labor Committee on Mar. 12.

Ives told the Senate that the proper solution to national emergency disputes lies between the two bills.

HE QUESTIONED whether the injunction was "either sound or appropriate" as a permanent device available for use in labor disputes, and said his plan would encourage management and labor to settle differences voluntarily.

The first Ives' proposal would involve four steps:

1. When the President found a labor dispute endangered national health and safety, he would issue a proclamation calling on labor and management to refrain from a work stoppage or to resume work if one had occurred.

2. He would appoint an emergency board to investigate and try to promote a settlement. If no settlement were reached, the board would publish its recommendations within 30 days unless the time were extended by agreement.

3. The board would continue in existence for mediation purposes after reporting.

4. If a strike or lockout occurred or continued after his proclamation, the President would be required to report the situation to Congress—with recommendations if he wished. If Congress were not in session, he would be required to convene it immediately.

Meanwhile, Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) reintroduced for a third time his bill to amend Taft-Hartley by legalizing maritime hiring halls. It would permit maritime unions to demand establishment of a hiring system under which a union-run hiring hall would serve as a clearing house for men seeking work.

Hiring halls for seamen were ruled illegal in 1948 on the ground that they violated the T-H closed shop ban. Although unions still maintain employment facilities and process all seamen before they are sent to ships, they may not refuse to register any seaman having required Coast Guard documents.

PRES. JOSEPH CURRAN of the CIO Maritime Union pointed out that under the present law, the unions are flooded with many inexperienced men, often of questionable character, who must be given the same job opportunity as seasoned, reliable seamen. He said his organization will give full support to the Magnuson measure.

In another development, Chairman Paul M. Herzog of the National Labor Relations Board supported the position of the CIO in regard to one controversial section of the law. He asked Congress to eliminate the non-Communist oath for union leaders because it has "outlived its usefulness."

Testifying before the House Labor Committee, Herzog said that "the many labor organizations that have done such a splendid job in cleaning house themselves are entitled to the backing of us all." Besides, he added, the oaths don't work.

George J. Bott, general counsel of the NLRB, told the committee that lack of funds for adequate personnel is largely to blame for "long delay" in government handling of unfair labor practice cases.

Barden, It Seems, Doesn't Know What's In Law He Helped Write

IT'S GETTING so the Dixiegop lawmakers don't know what's in the laws they promote to destroy unions.

Rep. Barden (D. N.C.), Dixiecrat former chairman of the House Labor Committee, last week jumped on National Labor Relations Board Chairman Paul M. Herzog for not doing anything about NLRB field employes.

Accusing the field staff of being "vindictive" and "kicking businessmen in the teeth," Barden told Herzog, "We just can't separate the field offices from the functions of your board."

"You did, sir—in 1947," Herzog replied.

He reminded the Congressman that the Taft-Hartley Act, which Barden helped draft, took away the board's jurisdiction over the field offices and placed them under an independent general counsel. Herzog added that he had no information supporting Barden's attack on the field staff.

Ike Asks Funds For Economic Unit

Pres. Eisenhower wants to keep the Council of Economic Advisers alive despite reports to the contrary, the Senate Appropriations Committee was told last week by Sherman Adams, White House assistant.

The committee is holding hearings on the supplemental appropriation bill. Adams wrote it that Eisenhower believes "it is highly important that the agency be continued." The House cut out the $75,000 originally asked, then gave the President $25,000 for economic advice, when Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.) of the Appropriations Committee said Eisenhower had not objected to the slash.

N. Y. CIO Fights For Tenants, Hits 'Greedy' Rent Boost Drive

IRVING ABRAMSON

NEW YORK'S State CIO Council has gone to bat for the state's millions of tenants, calling a rent-boost drive by landlords "a greedy effort to enrich themselves at the expense of the living standards of the people."

The council's executive board has condemned pending moves in the Legislature to weaken the existing state rent control law, and has demanded that the act be extended for another two years.

"Untold suffering" would result from relaxation of rent lids, Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) said in a message to the council. And State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander said "every labor organization" in the state would demand higher wages if rents go up.

In an appeal to Gov. Dewey in support of the present state rent law, Hollander wrote:

"A rise in residential rents will increase the hardship which low and middle-income families are suffering because of the housing shortage. The purchasing power of individual families will be cut.

"Weakening of the (New York) city's commercial business controls will subject thousands of small enterprises to pressures which undoubtedly will force many of them to go out of business or to locate in lower rental areas outside the state. Many more will have to curtail operations.

"This will wipe out thousands of jobs and cause economic repercussions which will be felt in all parts of the state."

Reuther Hails Abramson's CSC Work

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week expressed "deep appreciation for splendid service" to Irving Abramson, retiring chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee.

Abramson held that post for 12 years. He has been succeeded by Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers.

Reuther's letter to Abramson said, in part:

"I am sorry indeed that because of the personal reasons, you have asked to be relieved of this difficult and exacting assignment.

"The Community Services Committee, under your chairmanship, has become an indispensable part of CIO's activity on behalf of workers and all the people.

"It is safe to say that the very type of program undertaken by the Community Services Committee during the past dozen years will serve as a foundation for similar permanent programs in the future. So we, and the thousands of local trade union members who have benefitted by the committee's activities and leadership, are grateful to you."

'Ma Bell' Boosts Profits—Wants Another Slice

THE BELL SYSTEM chalked up the greatest net profit in its history in 1952 and already it's screaming for more.

The consolidated net hit $418,461,896 last year, or $42.8 million more than the previous year. The yield was equal to $11.45 a share on 35.5 million shares of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. stock, compared to $11.76 a share on 4.5 million fewer shares in 1951.

But Pres. Cleo F. Craig of AT&T promised the company will seek "more adequate rates" in 1953. The cost of phone service jumped in 37 states last year, but Craig insisted that both rates and earnings lagged behind the rise in costs.

Tax-Cutter Reed Tries To Sit On Social Security Expansion

ANOTHER of Pres. Eisenhower's campaign promises has run into opposition in Congress from a key Republican leader. The result: there may be no social security legislation this session.

Chairman Reed (R. N.Y.) of the House Ways and Means Committee, who already is quarreling with the President over the need for an immediate tax reduction, has decided to ignore Eisenhower's plea for "prompt" action to extend social security coverage to millions.

INSTEAD, he's appointed a subcommittee to make a "detailed" study of the entire social security system. Reed said that the subcommittee "will study all of the complaints and problems before attempting to write a bill" and that social security legislation this year is unlikely.

Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), head of the subcommittee, also agreed that a detailed study probably would mean that there would be no social security measure this year.

Opposition to Reed's move to bury needed social security reforms is developing, however. Some 200 different bills calling for amendments in the social security law have already been introduced in the House this session. Many have bipartisan support.

Eisenhower called for expanded social security coverage during his campaign and in his State of the Union message he said it "should promptly be extended to cover millions of citizens who have been left out of the social security system."

Revision of social security also was listed as one of the 11 "must" measures in the GOP legislative program for this session.

AT LEAST one Republican member of the committee hinted that Reed may have taken his action in retaliation against House GOP leaders who have decided to bottle up his bill for a 10% tax cut in the Rules Committee until most appropriations measures are out of the way.

The United Press quoted this unidentified Republican as saying that he had "no doubt" that action on social security would be speeded up if the committee were assured of favorable consideration of its tax bill.

Democratic members of the committee, however, point to Reed's voting record as proof of his opposition to social security improvements.

"There's one thing about Mr. Reed that people ought to know," a high-ranking Democart said. "He is consistent. As long as I can remember he has voted against social security proposals."

Three Indicted As 'Butterleggers'

A New York federal grand jury last week indicted a corporation and three men as "butterleggers"—men who label colored oleomargarine as butter.

The defendants are Temp-Tee Foods, Inc., Bronx, N. Y.; Louis and Harold Alpert, officers of the firm, and Sol Abramson, Irvington, N. J. Food and Drug Administration inspectors said they found machinery for processing the oleo in a "concealed room" in the Temp-Tee plant.

Benson Declines To Meet With UPWA Delegation

AGRICULTURE Sec. Benson is not in when union and small farmer delegations come calling to urge government action to stop the drop in farmers' income.

At Des Moines, he refused to meet with representatives of the CIO Packinghouse Workers and the Iowa Farmers Union who urged meat "price supports at full parity."

Benson was in Des Moines to address the National Farm Institute. He said he was in favor of price supports but added that "price supports are not in themselves adequate to keep agriculture going."

The Agriculture Secretary said he would "welcome all sound counsel" on the farm price problem, but he wasn't in to the UPWA and Farmers Union.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

SEC. OF AGRICULTURE BENSON'S recent assurance to cattlemen that the end of compulsory federal grades will help stop the downtrend in meat prices is an amazing statement. It can only mean that he expects the livestock industry to get more money by selling lower grades at the higher prices, since the family shopping for meat will no longer be protected by the federal stamp indicating the grade. That's what is known as a concealed price rise.

Best Food Buys

You'll find reasonable price tags on these meat cuts in particular: smoked tongue, hamburger, short ribs, smoked pork shoulder, veal shoulder roast, loin of pork, smoked ham, shoulder of lamb and shoulder chops, and beef chuck.

Some markets are also offering specials on round steak, Prices of sirloin have also come down, but it's still costly eating.

You'll find poultry more reasonable this month too. Supplies of turkey are still heavy. Chicken has also come down a little in price. One of the best food buys this month is eggs, now at the peak of quality and near season's low in price.

Consumer and housewife organizations vigorously and swiftly protested the loss of this protection. They pointed out that grades are vital to family buyers in comparing prices they pay for meat, and that government departments themselves insist that meats be graded according to quality before they buy—why not families?

Now we're on our own and have to know what the various grades of beef and other meats look like, so we can see if the markets are giving us higher or lower qualities for our money.

There is nothing wrong with lower-grade beef nutritionally speaking. In fact, in some respects the lower grades have more food value. There's less fat, and therefore more actual meat to eat. The meat itself is usually richer in iron, and the yellowish fat of lower-grade beef has more vitamin A than the white fat of the expensive grades.

But what we don't want to do is pay the higher price for the lower grade.

The advantages of the higher grades are that they're more tender and juicy. They can be broiled, while the lower grades need moist cooking.

Some butchers may still voluntarily show on their meats the U. S. grades. Don't confuse the grade stamp with the round U. S. inspection stamp which means the meat was inspected and passed as wholesome, but doesn't guarantee whether it's Prime, Choice or Good.

Nor can you rely on packers and retailers' own "grades." They may declare in ads or signs that the meat is "Choice," Fancy," "Super," or whatever they want. But no impartial authority has said it is.

Here are the various official US grades, and their features:

U.S. Prime: This comes from young, well-fed cattle. The beef is smooth and velvety in appearance, the fat covering is thick and creamy-white, and the meat is marbled throughout with streaks of fat. The lean is bright and may range from pale to deep red in coloring. This grade is juicy and tender. But it's not good value because of the high amount of fat.

U.S. Choice: This grade has less fat and more lean. It's not as juicy as Prime, but still tender and quite juicy. The lean is moderately smooth and light to dark red with some marbling. The fat covering is less thick than on the Prime grade, but still firm.

U.S. Good: This is actually one of the lower grades, and one that's widely sold in stores. It's really the best buy for the amount of lean in proportion to fat, if you don't pay more than a lower-grade price for it.

U.S. Commercial: This is the lowest grade usually sold at retail. It's entirely nutritious, but not tender unless you use this grade in ground beef or use slow, moist cooking methods, such as stewing, boiling or pot roasting.

Help Urged For Handicapped

A CAMPAIGN to win congressional enactment of a bill establishing a Federal Agency for Handicapped Workers is under way.

Paul A. Strachan, president of the American Federation for the Physically Handicapped, said the measure is "an economic and humanitarian necessity."

Members of the Senate and House Labor Committees heard the proposal outlined at a Washington dinner sponsored by the AFPH. CIO was represented at the meet by Frank Fernbach, of the Education and Research Dept.

Goal of the proposed bill is to co-ordinate the activities of more than 35 federal agencies now concerned with employment of physically handicapped workers in productive employment.

According to Strachan, the nation now has 30 million handicapped persons. Some three million of them now have been employed. If the Federal Agency for Handicapped Workers bill were enacted, he said, some seven million handicapped persons who now are public or private charges could be absorbed in the economy.

The proposed bill would provide handicapped persons with medical treatment when needed, education, vocational training and counselling, and aid in job placement.

CIO Tells Lawmakers Of 'Ghost Town' Peril

THE NEW JERSEY congressional delegation was told last week that action is needed to keep several communities in the State from becoming "ghost towns."

Pres. James B. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers and a group of 30 CIO leaders from the State presented the problem to New Jersey's two senators and nine of the State's 14 representatives.

State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman and representatives of the Clothing Workers, Electrical Workers and Textile Workers participated in the meeting.

THE CIO group told the congressmen the migration from New Jersey in recent years of scores of textile, electrical, clothing and other plants "has resulted in the loss of thousands of jobs of New Jersey workers, and a decline in the purchasing power in New Jersey communities."

"If competitive conditions were equal between New Jersey and the Southern states, there would be little excuse for such migration," they continued. "We do not oppose expansion of Southern industry. We do oppose, however, the government laws and policies which create an artificial and unfair competitive advantage for the Southern states."

CAREY, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, attacked the job policy of General Electric which has announced that it is moving plants from Trenton, N. J., and White Plains, N. Y., to Louisville, Ky.

"The workers in both plants have been informed that they may apply to Louisville if they wish, but their applications will be treated in the same way as 17,000 applications GE already has received," Carey said. "Years of service with GE will provide no basis for preference in employment."

The CIO leaders urged an investigation of the tax bonanzas —certificates of necessity— granted corporations for expanded defense production. Firms are thus able to deduct from taxes for the construction of these plants for five years instead of 20 to 25 years.

Steelworkers Settle Long Alco Dispute With 16c Pay Hike

THE CIO Steelworkers have won agreements from the American Locomotive Co. on a 16c an hour general wage increase, a flat $150 in retroactive pay and the union shop in three large New York State plants, USA-CIO Dist. Dir. Joseph Malony reported last week in Buffalo, N.Y.

The wage agreement, plus progress in negotiating non-economic clauses of a new contract, heralded the end of an 18-week controversy highlighted by an 80-day Taft-Hartley Act injunction covering the 1800 employes of the company's Dunkirk, N.Y., shop.

The injunction was based on the fact that some Dunkirk workers make pipe used in atomic energy installations. A vote on the company's last offer, scheduled for Feb. 25 by the National Labor Relations Board, was called off. The "last offer" was a pay boost of 12c an hour and no retroactive pay.

In addition to the Dunkirk operation, agreement when fully negotiated will cover a plant at Schenectady, with 8000 workers, and another at Auburn, with 2000 employes.

THE DISPUTE was one of the longest in the history of USA Dist. 4, said Malony, and was settled with the assistance of David C. Cole, director of the U.S. Mediation and Conciliation Service. The company tried to make things tougher by misrepresenting the position of Acting Pres. David J. McDonald of the USA, but the effort backfired.

"Instead," said Malony, "he won the gratitude of every member involved. We strongly resent the company's effort to challenge his integrity."

Young Bob La Follette Dies; Champion Of Civil Liberties

FORMER SEN. Robert M. LaFollette, Jr., crusading liberal who represented Wisconsin in the upper chamber of Congress for 21 years, committed suicide in his home in Washington last week.

LaFollette, son and heir of the great tradition of a great father, "Fighting Bob" LaFollette the Elder, died after firing a bullet into his head from an old target pistol. He was 58.

Friends and family attributed his action to despondency over a heart condition. Some intimates said he felt strongly that he had failed to keep Wisconsin on the progressive path blazed by his father.

The CIO joined the thousands who mourned his loss.

"ALL AMERICA, and freedom-loving people everywhere," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther wired Mrs. LaFollette, "suffered a tremendous loss in the death of your husband. He was a liberal in the truest sense of the word; a great American who served his country faithfully and well, a fine gentleman whose memory will long be cherished.

"His work as sponsor and chairman of the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, and his lifetime of public service, merit him a position on the list of real American statesmen. It is with a deep sense of personal loss that I extend the condolences of the CIO's officers and members. A great and valued friend has passed from our midst."

"YOUNG BOB" LaFOLLETTE
Former senator is suicide.

The story of the lives of son and father fills many pages in the history of the American struggle to improve the lot of the people and to protect them from ruthless exploitation by the powerful. Both were sturdy and effective friends of organized labor and champions of civil liberties.

LaFollette the Younger left his greatest mark on the American scene by his work as chairman of a Senate subcommittee that investigated civil liberties—the body that has gone down in history as the LaFollette Committee.

Its work was done during the early days of the CIO, when unionism was first invading the mass production industries and challenging the untrammelled power of industrial despots.

It turned up a sickening story that left a lasting imprint on the country and was a factor in mobilizing public opinion behind the efforts of industrial workers to have something to say about living their own lives. It revealed the true facts of the 1937 Memorial Day massacre in Chicago.

IT SHOWED how many corporations, especially in Little Steel, had formed their own police forces, armed them with guns, tear and nausea gas and clubs, then turned them loose to kill and cripple workers who wanted to form their own unions.

LaFollette's father was Governor of Wisconsin when the son was six, and U. S. Senator when he was 11 years old. He became his father's secretary in 1924, and when the elder LaFollette ran for President in 1924 as a Progressive—not to be confused with the present Progressive Party—the son was his campaign manager.

He succeeded his father in the Senate on the latter's death in 1925. He was 30, the youngest man to serve in that body since Henry Clay. He was reelected regularly as a Progressive until 1946, when he disbanded the party and campaigned for the Republican nomination. Communists, who hated him, crossed party lines and helped win the nomination for Sen. McCarthy.

Since he left Congress he had been a consultant in Washington.

Cole, Long Foe Of Housing, Named To Housing Post

FORMER REP. Albert M. Cole (R. Kan.), long-time foe of public housing and staunch advocate of higher interest rates on federally insured or guaranteed mortgages, was nominated by Pres. Eisenhower last week as head of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

A protest against his pending appointment had been sent Eisenhower the week before by James G. Thimmes, chairman of the National CIO Housing Committee and vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

The HHFA supervises the Federal Housing Administration, Public Housing Agency and Home Loan Bank Board. Cole's appointment, it is feared, will mean important changes in government housing policies along lines sought by private building and mortgage interests.

Guild Wins Vote On Buffalo Paper

Editorial employes of the Buffalo, N. Y., Courier-Express picked the CIO Newspaper Guild as their bargaining representative in a National Labor Relations Board election that marked the end of a 16-year-old independent union.

With 102 eligible to vote, the tally showed 57 for the ANG-CIO, 38 for the Independent Editorial Federation and one for no union. Pres. Robert Van Waggoner of the Buffalo Newspaper Guild directed the campaign.

UFW Seeks 'Substantial' Pay Hike, 35-Hour Week

CIO FURNITURE Workers last week unveiled a double-barreled goal for 1953: "substantial wage increases" and the 35-hour week.

Meeting in New York City, the union's executive board also mapped plans for a stepped-up organizing campaign, with emphasis on the South.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, visiting the board meeting, discussed CIO's plans for an invigorated organizing drive which would "reawaken the old spirit which led to CIO's formation."

UFW PRES. Morris Pizer and Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford reported that prospects of $3.5 billion sales of furniture and bedding during the year should make is possible for the union "to make up some of the ground lost during the period of the wage freeze."

UFW members, they said, "cannot be content with the few pennies an hour they were able to squeeze out during the past two years of the wage freeze."

The 35-hour week is a "must," they said, because employers have been taking advantage of increasing productivity to arbitrarily reduce work forces.

Output per man hour rose about 45% from 1939 to 1952, they said in an economic report released at the board meeting. However, the report added, 12,000 to 15,000 jobs a year are being lost due to this increasing productivity. It was estimated the 35-hour week would create 25,000 to 35,000 new jobs.

At the same time, Pizer reported the UFW had won 134 representation elections during the past two and a half years and 31 out of 50 NLRB elections since the union convention last June.

The UFW board also declared the union will intensify its drive for a federal minimum wage of $1.25 an hour.

The 50c increase from the present floor of 75c would mean wage boosts for some 100,000 furniture and bedding workers, particularly in the South, the union said.

IUE Winner At DuMont

AFTER THREE unsuccessful efforts, the CIO last week won collective bargaining rights at five plants of Allen DuMont Laboratories, Inc., in the Passaic, N. J., area.

The CIO Electrical Workers last week received 2018 votes and no union 885 in a NLRB election. Milton Weihrauch, IUE Dist. 4 president, was in charge of the campaign at the plants, which make radio and television sets and parts.

Westinghouse Gains

Westinghouse Electric Corp. net profits for 1952 were $68,581,000, a jump of 6% over 1951 on an increase in sales of 17%.

Reuther Hits Tax Cut Bill As 'Phony GOP Carnival'

A "PHONY" tax reduction campaign was charged to Republican congressmen last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

He charged the GOP with a "propaganda carnival" featuring slight possible reduction in individual income taxes while granting big concessions to corporations. In the offing, he warned, is a drive for a federal sales tax.

Reuther called the Reed Bill—billed as giving tax relief up to 11%—a "false hope."

"In fact, there is no intention to pass it at this session," he added.

The House Ways and Means Committee voted approval of the Reed Bill over Pres. Eisenhower's protests that the budget should be balanced before taxes are reduced.

"The Reed Bill is nothing more than a smokescreen and a diversion to cloak the fact that the excess profits tax on corporations will expire in mid-year," Reuther said.

"The high pressure soap sellers hope that the American public will accept this tax relief for the big corporations in anticipation of so-called tax relief for themselves—an estimated 54c a week per family—which they will not actually get."

BECAUSE corporations will save up to $2.5 billion annually if the excess profits tax is allowed to lapse, Reuther pointed out that the government will have to get its tax money from some other source, probably a federal sales tax.

Eisenhower told a press conference that he would never agree to the elimination of the excess profits tax as called for in the Reed measure unless an alternative source of revenue is provided. He said there is a prospective deficit of $5.9 billion this year and that the 1954 budget will produce another $10 billion deficit unless cuts are made.

"Uncle Sam will have to get his tax money from somewhere. If the Republicans do not take it from the corporations, they will take it from the people.

"THEY WILL do so either by continuing the heavy income tax burden on the lower income families; or if they reduce income taxes even slightly for the millions of average Americans, they will more than make up for it by a federal sales tax, for which the big business lobby has been conducting a strenuous campaign with greater hope of success than in any past year.

"A federal sales tax will merely compound the sin of hitting hardest those least able to pay.

"These same spare-the wealthy groups are still pushing the millionaire's tax amendment, which would limit all income taxes to a maximum of 25% of any individual's or corporation's income. This would mean nothing for the people in the lower income brackets.

"FOR THE people with $100,000 annual incomes, it would represent a tax saving of $31,000 a year. For those with million-dollar incomes, it would represent a $621,000 annual tax saving. In sum, it would spare rich individuals and corporations $14 billion of the taxes they should pay. The only way to make up that money would be through a federal sales tax approximating 20%."

Reuther suggested that there is "a constructive alternative" which Congress should follow. He said:

"Let Congress plug the loopholes in the present tax structure, which serve the very wealthy who least need such special service from Uncle Sam. And if Congress wants to cut personal income taxes fairly, let it take the path of greatest equity by raising dependency exemptions from their present unrealistic levels."

Another Round Of Decontrol Orders

The government's fourth price decontrol wave struck last week when restrictions were lifted on prices of cigarets, all controlled groceries except coffee and bakery products, and copper, aluminum and some steel products.

Price Stabilizer Joseph Freehill estimated they cost consumers about $12 billion a year.

His forecast of price boosts was quickly borne out. Before the day was over, two major cigaret makers announced increases of about three-fourths of a cent a pack, milk jumped a half-cent a quart in Baltimore, and gasoline went up in New York and New England.

$250,000 Given For HST Memorial Library

CHECKS totaling $250,000 were presented last week to the Truman Library fund by the CIO and the United Steelworkers in ceremonies at CIO headquarters.

The contributions, authorized by the executive boards of both organizations, were presented to Basil O'Connor. He is chairman of the Executive Committee of the Harry S. Truman Library, planned as a memorial to the former president.

Making the presentations were CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and USA-CIO Acting Pres. David J. McDonald. The CIO contribution amounted to $150,000 and the Steelworkers gift was for $100,000.

IN TURNING over the CIO contribution to O'Connor, Carey said:

"The CIO is gratified to have this opportunity to contribute to so fundamentally valuable a project as the Harry S. Truman Memorial Library. We are convinced that the Library will become a greater center of learning and historical reference for millions of people throughout America, and especially the Midwest."

McDonald said the Steelworkers "feel proud to help develop what we believe will be a great educational and cultural center."

"Like my predecessor, the late Philip Murray, who made the original commitment for this gift," McDonald added, "I am proud to help, on behalf of my union, in the creation of such a library and educational project. It will be in addition a great monument to a very great president."

O'Connor expressed the gratitude of the trustees and officers of the library, saying it would "help preserve some of the most important historical records of recent years, and make them available to historians and students."

CIO Aid Pledged By Reuther To Red Cross

FULL COOPERATION of CIO members with the 1953 Red Cross fund campaign was pledged last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In a letter to E. Roland Harriman, president of the American Red Cross, Reuther said:

"On behalf of the CIO, I most wholeheartedly endorse the annual appeal of the American Red Cross.

"I feel certain that union members throughout America will give their full support to that appeal.

"Union members recognize the tremendous scope of the national emergency that confronts the nation, and they will, as they have in the past, do everything possible to help the Red Cross serve more ably the needs of our men in the armed services as well as the victims of disaster and misfortune throughout the country.

"Through our own CIO Community Services Committee, the members of our organization do much to promote such programs of aid and assistance. I feel certain that in 1953, our members will cooperate fully with the Red Cross to help insure the success of your program."

CIO News Report Confirmed

Taber Names 70 For Budget Hatchet Job

CHAIRMAN TABER (R. N.Y.) of the House Appropriations Committee last week confirmed the exclusive report in The CIO News two weeks ago that he has hired a corps of businessmen to help him do his hatchet job on government agencies.

Taber told the press that he has put 75 "foremost business and management experts" to work "squeezing every drop of water" out of former Pres. Truman's $78.6 billion budget. He called their project "Operation Economy."

TWELVE "task forces" are already at work under the committee's chief investigator, Robert E. Lee, he said, adding that the move has "the full approval of Pres. Eisenhower," as well as that of Budget Director Joseph M. Dodge.

The task forces vary in size from 18 men assigned to the Defense Dept. to three looking into the Commerce Dept. Taber set no specific goal for "savings" but he will have to hack off approximately $10 billion if he is to realize his announced goal of balancing the budget.

"The technique of using business and accounting experts on a temporary basis was first tried on a limited scale by the 80th Congress in 1947 and 1948," Taber said. "The results spoke for themselves."

Actually, those "results" included many blind cuts in appropriations. More than 100,000 experienced government workers had to be fired.

Taber did not comment on the question of letting business men sit in on appropriations for agencies of the government set up to supervise activities of the firms they represent.

Ship Radio Union Gets 9.5% Boost

A SECOND CIO maritime union, the American Radio Association, has reached a contract settlement with Atlantic and Gulf Coast shipping lines.

A flat 9.5% increase on past wages was reached in settlement of a wage reopening that had been pending for three months.

Under the new contract, the monthly base pay for radio operators was raised to $473.31. Other scales were graduated up to $619.50 for chief radio operators.

THE NEW ARA contract also provides for a 10c increase in the employers' daily per capita contribution to the union's welfare fund. The payment now will be 60c daily. Also incorporated into the settlement was a $3.10 an hour rate for overtime.

The wage settlement was retroactive to last June 16, and accumulated wage payments were estimated at $350,000. The East Coast agreement was expected to speed ARA negotiations with West Coast ship operators.

The ARA pact came after the CIO Maritime Union gained a 10% to 15% basic wage increase for 40,000 East and Gulf Coast seamen. The CIO Marine Engineers settled earlier on similar terms.

"FACTORIES IN THE FIELD" are proving just that in California's El Centro Valley, where big growers have introduced new field-packed, vacuum-cooled methods to handle the "green gold" lettuce pack. Some 1000 CIO packingshed workers have been displaced as their skilled trimming and packing jobs have been turned over to field workers (above). Low-wage Mexican field workers—some legal migratory workers, some illegal "wetbacks"—are handling the skilled jobs in violation of U.S.-Mexico farm labor agreement, to growers' benefit. (See Page 6.)

Challenge To Educators—

Carey Raps Investigations As 'Anti-Labor'

A WARNING that most congressional anti-Communist investigators also "are anti-liberal, anti-labor and pro-reaction" was voiced last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

Carey denounced the fast-moving inquiries of Sens. McCarthy, Jenner and Rep. Velde as efforts to "straitjacket the American mind."

And he bluntly challenged American educators—the immediate target of congressional investigations—to get angry and join with labor and other groups in the fight to save the schools from McCarthyism.

Straitjacketing Hit

Carey, who also is president of the CIO Electrical Workers, spoke at Howard Univ., the largely-Negro institution in Washington, on its annual Charter Day. He is a member of Howard's Board of Trustees.

After likening the present investigations to the way totalitarianism "straitjackets the thinking of its victims," Carey asked:

"Where are our academic leaders, the people most concerned in this insidious drive to undermine the educational pillars of our democratic structure?

"I have missed the strong, wrathful voices rising from the academic world to join with the protests of religious, labor and political leaders.

"I cannot believe that they are in retreat, that they have already been terrorized, that they are willing to let others wage the brunt of their battle for them.

"I am sure that these leaders will soon come forth from American education. They must come forth to challenge this threat to their democratic heritage, to one of the foundations of the free world."

All the signs of our times, Carey declared, proved the need for a new militant liberalism.

"Not simply a new liberalism of thought," he explained, "but a militant liberalism of thought joined to action.

"We need a new liberalism, fresh and sharp, no longer susceptible to the extremes of left or right, but militant in its own democratic courage."

Carey declared he would rather see a college full of young anarchists "all of them bickering and quarrelling and thinking among themselves," than one full of "driven young sheep such as we saw Hitler and Fascism produce by thought control."

"I am angry about it," Carey continued, "and it is time for the colleges and universities to get angry about it. They have been one of the chief, if not the chief, bulwark of American democracy, and yet they are now smeared with suspicion of being a menace to democracy.

"Yes, it's time for educators to get angry; and if there are any educational ivory towers left, it's best that they be abandoned before McCarthyism pulls them down on our heads.

"The only answer for you, as for all of us, is to join and become active. You know, and you've known long ago, that you can't defend yourselves individually nor your profession by yourself . . . Organization is your only strength.

"It's not enough to belong to a professional society or a liberal, anti-Communist political organization. Your hope, as well as ours in the non-academic world, is for you to bring your collective strength to bear."

Carey cited organized labor's constant fight to survive as an example of what academic freedom faces in the future. The menace to the academic world is greater than ever before, he said, because never in the past has it had to defend itself against ignorance, reaction and bigotry—as the labor movement has learned to do.

"GOD OF OUR FATHERS . . ." That's what CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey (first from right) joined William Winter, opera singer, Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love and Pres. Mordecai Johnson of Howard Univ. in singing at Charter Day rites. Carey denounced McCarthy-Velde-Jenner investigations for seeking to "strait-jacket the American mind."

The heart of the fight against such investigations lies primarily in the character of the men who conduct them and their motives, he said.

"First of all," Carey explained, "virtually all the investigations of alleged communism are conducted by men who are not simply anti-Communist. They are anti-liberal, anti-labor and pro-reaction.

Short-cut To Fame

"Second, virtually all investigations of alleged communism are conducted by men who cannot understand and refuse to understand the nature of communism. For them—and there are many prominent examples—anti-communism is purely and obsessively a stepping-stone to prestige, a short-cut to public notice and higher position.

"Third, virtually all such men, who have made careers out of anti-communism, would — wittingly or unwittingly—straitjacket the American mind in a fashion not far different from the way totalitarianism straitjackets the thinking of its victims.

"While imagining they are fighting 'regimentation' of the 'left' they are actually seeking a mental regimentation of the 'right.'

"The menace lies in the fact that the mental set of the professional anti-Communist is essentially one that would eventually suppress all dissent, all free inquiry."

Who Runs The State Dept.?—

McCarthy Has Dulles Running For Cover

WHO'S RUNNING the State Dept.? John Foster Dulles has the title of Secretary of State. But it's Sen. Joe McCarthy who is calling the shots.

Three times in one week, top State Dept. officials reversed policies as McCarthy indicated his "displeasure." Later Dulles told reporters he welcomed congressional inquiries that would make the department "more competent, loyal, and secure."

The Dulles statement flew in the face of Pres. Eisenhower's State-of-the-Union message, which noted that:

"THE PRIMARY responsibility for keeping out the disloyal and dangerous rests squarely upon the executive branch. When this branch so conducts itself as to require policing by another branch of the Government it invites disorder and confusion."

Last week McCarthy was creating "disorder and confusion" with a free-wheeling attack on the Voice of America, the State Dept. propaganda arm.

Included in the "disloyal" acts McCarthy claimed to have found were workers who didn't like their boss' decisions, workers who claimed other workers "didn't believe in God" and a man who wrote a book in 1932 calling for academic freedom.

Meantime, Dulles appointees were changing policies at McCarthy's slightest whim. Here are four recent examples:

1. McCarthy discovered the Voice of America used quotes from left-winger Howard Fast's writings, when the quotes were favorable to America. It is an old propaganda device, quoting an enemy speaking favorably, on the basis that it's more impressive than a quote from a friend.

McCarthy screamed.

Result: A State Dept. ban on quotes from any controversial person, "Communists, fellow travelers, etc." No one could explain who an "et cetera" was, but the blacklist seemed to halt overseas distribution of the New York Times, which prints statements by Communist spokesmen at the United Nations.

2. The State Dept. had informed employes they need not answer questions by McCarthy investigators unless a Senator was present. The obvious thought was that no third degree would take place in the presence of a Senator.

McCarthy screamed.

Result: Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, Dulles No. 2 man, changed the directive at once.

3. A McCarthy informant in the State Dept. was transferred, not demoted, to another job which he didn't like.

McCarthy screamed.

Result: The informant now has the job he wanted.

URW Signs Pact With Goodyear

THE FIRST major industrial contract of 1953 has been negotiated by the CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

The new pact covers 30,000 URW members in 10 plants in nine states. It contains 25 basic improvements over the old agreement, according to Pres. L. S. Buckmaster. It was signed just in time to head off a company-wide strike which workers had authorized union leaders to call.

With the first contract out of the way, the union moved to complete negotiations with the General Tire & Rubber Co., and opened bargaining sessions with the U. S. Rubber Co.

Wages were not covered in the new Goodyear agreement, as the union will not formulate its monetary proposals until its international policy committee meets in Cleveland on Mar. 13 and 14. They may be discussed by either party on 30 days' notice at any time during the two-year term of the agreement.

AMONG THE GAINS made by the union are triple time for work done on six paid holidays, double time for Sundays, and time and a half after 40 hours a week. The qualifying period for two weeks' paid vacation was reduced from five to three years.

The full union shop, first negotiated in the 1951-53 contract, was renewed and clarified. Clauses governing recall requirements, leaves of absence, severance pay, safety and health provisions, and off-standard pay were liberalized.

Reuther Writes Durkin—

'Crippling' Budget Cuts For Labor Dept. Rapped

FEAR THAT Labor Dept. activities "will be crippled by a shockingly low budget" was voiced last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In a letter to Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin, Reuther urged that he fight, for "an enlarged appropriation" for the department and pledged CIO's full support in such a drive.

"It would be tragic," Reuther wrote, "if the department itself, in submitting its revised estimate to the budget director, should compromise on any sums less than those required for proper performance of essential functions."

REUTHER revealed some divisions had already been seriously affected and others had been asked to describe activities which could be eliminated to bring budget cuts of from 10 to 20% "below the inadequate amounts included in Pres. Truman's budget request."

Reuther suggested some economies might be possible but that they should be more than offset by funds for expanded activities elsewhere in the department. "Any reduction in the total amounts recommended by Pres. Truman," he wrote, "would be a serious setback."

Writing on the eve of the department's 40th anniversary, Reuther listed six areas "seriously endangered" unless appropriations are adequate. Included were:

- Proper administration of the Walsh-Healey Act and Fair Labor Standards Act, including effective compliance work, holding of hearings, and legal efforts to establish the secretary's authority.
- Proper administration of responsibilities in connection with the federal-state system of unemployment insurance.
- More effective implementation of policies of non-discrimination in regard to minority groups.
- Policing the U. S.-Mexican Agreement on farm labor and improving placement facilities for American farm workers.
- Expanded and strengthened labor statistics, including wage surveys in many industries.
- Cooperation with state agencies on workmen's compensation, migrants, children and other activities.

Guild Plans UP Strike Ballot

A nationwide strike vote by United Press editorial workers has been authorized by the CIO Newspaper Guild's Intl. Executive Board.

Contract talks with the wire service are deadlocked on the issues of job security, grievance protection, wage proposals for a 15% increase, union security and hours.

New Price Index Shows Slight Drop

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics' new Consumer Price Index has made its debut—and showed a slight drop

The new figure of 113.9 for Jan. 15 bore no visible relationship to the 191 on which the old index bowed out on Dec. 15, 1952. However, it showed a drop of one-tenth of 1% in the one-month period, the BLS said. This made the January reading three-tenths of 1% under the new index's all-time high on Nov. 15.

The old index—on which escalator clauses governing wage movements of several million wrokers are based—and the new are not comparable.

THE OLD was based on 1935-39 prices, the new on costs of the 1947-49 period. The old reflected the prices of 225 articles and services, the new prices 300 items. Food accounted for 35% of family spending in the old index, but only 30% in the new. The communities where the articles are priced also have been changed.

The old index was not priced on Jan. 15, but Pres. Eisenhower ordered the BLS to develop a reading for that date and to continue the index for six months.

The January figure, on which a possible wage movement was based under contracts between the CIO Auto Workers and major auto manufacturers, will not be available until some time in April. The union and the CIO have announced their refusal to accept it on the ground that it is no longer an accurate measurement of price changes.

Price Curbs End On Bread, Autos

In its fifth slash at price ceilings, the government last week removed controls on bread, autos, laundry and dry cleaning services, and all but a few home appliances. Bread will go up in some parts of the country, Price Stabilizer Joseph Freehill predicted.

Iron Curtain At Atomic Plant—

CIO Demands U. S. Halt Arrests Of Organizers By DuPont Cops

THE CIO last week charged the DuPont Co. with "a serious violation of civil liberties" at the Savannah River atomic energy plant near Aiken, S. C.

In an official protest to Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell and Chairman Gordon Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey demanded immediate action to halt interference with union activities.

Carey's protest grew out of the Feb. 20 arrest of CIO organizers who were distributing union organizing literature "outside the barricade of the plant." The organizers were charged with disobeying a police officer."

The arrests were made by DuPont Co. police, after they had used "violent and profane language" and had urged workers to "run down" the CIO organizers.

'Open To Unions'

In his protests, Carey pointed out that the AEC had determined the plant was "open for organization by labor unions, and for the determination of bargaining representatives by the employes working in that plant." DuPont is constructing and operating the plant under an AEC contract.

DuPont, Carey said, "deems it has the right and privilege to impose limitations on the right of self-organization, and on the right of its employes to receive information concerning labor organizations. It appears to believe that it has, because of its obligations to maintain security regulations, the right to prevent the exercise of basic civil liberties by its employes."

This DuPont position, Carey said, "was clearly demonstrated" by the Feb. 20 arrests which he described as follows:

"At about 3:15 p.m. on that day, several organizers for the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers sought to distribute literature, as part of their organizing campaign, outside the barricade of the plant. This leaflet distribution was determined upon after W. A. Smith, DuPont security officer, as well as officials of the Atomic Energy Commission, stated that there was no security problem involved in a leaflet distribution.

"Nevertheless, a few minutes after these organizers began to distribute leaflets peacefully to workers coming through the barricades in their cars, the company guards directed the organizers to discontinue their distribution. When the guards were informed that the DuPont security officer had stated that there was no security violation involved, they telephoned the company officers for instructions.

"Immediately thereafter, the guards renewed their order that distribution should be discontinued, and when the union organizers refused to discontinue the distribution, two of them were arrested. They were taken to an office of a local magistrate by the company guards, charged with refusal to obey an order of a police officer, and jailed until they produced bond in the amount of $50 each."

That night, Carey said, other organizers were arrested under similar circumstances.

"It is intolerable," he added, "that a huge corporation, such as DuPont, should arrogantly assume the prerogative to determine what civil liberties its workers may exercise, particularly on premises not under control of the company. It would be even more indefensible if DuPont can continue such conduct with impunity."

In newspaper ads published immediately after arrests, Lloyd P. Vaughan, CIO director in South Carolina, said:

"DuPont's police are there to protect the security of the plant, not to interfere with the rights of the workers. It is the policy of the Atomic Energy Commission to guarantee that the rights of workers are upheld.

Basic Rights Denied

"DuPont has not only violated this policy, but has unleashed a denial of basic American rights that is equally as dangerous as the Communism we seek to defeat through our defense program.

"We feel that Southern workingmen and women are ready to welcome any new industry that brings with it a decent standard of living, but we also feel that if any corporation has the notion it can import the idea that they 'are the law,' they had best think it over carefully."

'Government By Press Agents' Now Pending Before Ike

By HENRY ZON

GOVERNMENT by public relations is the backstage proposal lying on Pres. Eisenhower's bedside table and in the hands of some of his Cabinet officers.

That's the word in the Wall Street Journal which describes in some detail the formation of a group calling itself "Research Associates" and its plans for selling the Republican party to the country.

Involved in the group, according to the financial journal, are Lewis Thompson, former vice president of a Standard Oil (N.J.) affiliate, Robert Winston, formerly with Pan American World Airways and an ex-Navy publicist, and others who played a key role in the campaign under the title, "Eisenhower-Nixon Research Service." The Journal report continued:

"This heavier-than-ever accent on 'scientific' public relations techniques crops up all over the place; it's seen in plans to televise presidential press conferences and in earnest efforts to control the flow of news in some of the bigger government agencies.

"AND BEHIND these more obvious portents there are hints that a carefully calculated, government-wide effort to cultivate the public may be in prospect.

"The aim would be political; the freshly installed Republicans not surprisingly want to stay popular—and in office. But the methods would be more reminiscent of those employed by a private company trying to figure out its customers' wants and how to satisfy them."

GM Falls Short In Contract Talks—UAW

THE PRINCIPLE laid down by the CIO Auto Workers that a long-term contract does not foreclose the working out of problems that may arise during its lifetime has been accepted by General Motors.

However, the company has not made the kind of offer in settlement of current problems which the union can accept, the UAW-CIO said last week.

The union had asked the industry for revisions in five areas where "it feels the various companies and corporations are economically and morally obligated to make needed adjustments" to give workers "the measure of equity to which the spirit of the agreement entitles them."

These were adjustments in basic wage rates, the annual improvement factor, the pension plan, wage inequities for the skilled trades, and the revision of the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics cost of living index on which the contracts' escalator clauses have been based.

THE UAW-CIO statement, dealing specifically with General Motors, recalled that 25c of every GM workers' hourly pay is not included in his base rate because of the abnormal increase in the cost of living since the contract was signed. A gross inequity has resulted, it continued, because cost of living increases have been incorporated into base wages in other industries.

"GM and other corporations are morally obligated," the statement said, "to correct this inequity by factoring all but 5c of the peak escalation figure (highest total cost of living increase) into the base rate . . .

"GM has accepted the principle that a portion of this cost of living 'float' should be a part of the base rate, but has offered to include only 14c."

The union asked that the annual improvement factor of 4c, based on the workers' contribution to increased productivity, be increased to 5c in order to continue the 2.5% ratio. The company refused.

GM ALSO declined to adjust payments to pensioners to reflect the increase in the cost of living and to restore their original purchasing power. It likewise declined to relax the requirement that employes retire at a fixed age without regard to their physical ability or current manpower requirements.

The union's effort to get a better deal for skilled workers, who are suffering gross wage inequities caused by the shortage in their field, was countered by the company with an offer of 5c an hour, which the UAW called "inadequate."

THE UNION did not spell out GM's offer in connection with the transition from the old BLS index to the new. It said, "the proposal . . . is not satisfactory to the union because it does not give the workers the full equity to which they are entitled."

The union is preparing to continue negotiations with GM in an effort to resolve the difficulties. Meantime, it scheduled similar talks with the Ford Motor Co. beginning Mar. 17, five days before the UAW-CIO convention opens in Atlantic City, N. J.

Injunction Menace

A little-publicized decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals in New York raises once again fears of the spreading use of government injunctions to "settle" labor disputes.

The court brought in its decision on the 80th day of the 80-day injunction against the CIO Steelworkers in the American Locomotive case. It said that "national emergency" injunctions under Taft-Hartley are legally valid in "any" strike which "affects" the national health or safety.

Previously it had been assumed that the national emergency strike bans could be applied only in cases where an entire important industry is shut down. Sen. Taft himself had indicated that that was his intention when the injunction section was written into Taft-Hartley.

The court's ruling opens the way for widespread use of injunctions in all sorts of strikes affecting only one plant, where that plant produces a product fairly vital for the national economy. The temptation will be great, and the pressures constant, for the President and the Dept. of Justice to end all such strikes by injunctions.

Two hours after the New York U. S. court handed down its ruling, the injunction in the American Locomotive case expired. So the case is "legally moot" and it cannot be appealed to the Supreme Court for final ruling.

But the dangerous precedent established, and the impossibility of appeal, make all the more important that Congress sharply amend the "national emergency injunction" provision of Taft-Hartley. Failing that, every union and almost any strike is in danger of being enjoined without regard to the merits or the justice of the case.

Hoarse 'Voice'

At a time when the Voice of America should be given full rein to do its important international education job, Sen. McCarthy and his cohorts are doing a typical "knife" job on this State Department agency.

The Senator—who badly trailed Ike in the Wisconsin elections—has taken it upon himself to be chief censor and policy director for the Voice. If the Voice's message to the people of the free world and the people enslaved behind the Iron Curtain must be tailored to please McCarthy, it will be nothing but a hoarse whisper—and nobody with any sense will listen.

GOP propaganda during the campaign indicated that McCarthyism would die out in an Eisenhower Administration. It hasn't; and it seems to be feeding on appeasement.

CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey—speaking not only of McCarthy but of Jenner and Velde as well—put his finger on their screwball tactics when he said they are not "simply anti-Communist" but also "anti-liberal, anti-labor, pro-reaction." They would "straitjacket the American mind in a fashion not far different from the way totalitarianism straitjackets the thinking of its victims."

It's time that McCarthy, Jenner and Velde were stopped, before their damage becomes permanent.

It's time for good Americans to demand of their Senators and Congressmen that halters be put on this Tyrannical Trio.

And it's time to tell the Administration that appeasement of these dinosaurs won't work.

How Times Have Changed

In Other Words—

Raids On The People's Resources

Because he was stripped of past committee posts by the GOP 83rd Congress, Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) says he is "doing my committee work on floor of the Senate" in a series of addresses on natural resources and power policy. Here are excerpts from his first speech:

By WAYNE MORSE

THE NATURAL RESOURCES of the country are held by the people of our generation in trust for the happiness and welfare of future generations of America.

We must be on guard against any and all attempts to waste and exploit these resources for selfish economic interests of those who inclined to place their profits above the general welfare.

During the past five decades there has been a constant struggle between those who believed that our natural resources and water power were for the benefit of all the people, and those who believed that they were for private exploitation.

Out of this long struggle, a great national electric power policy was evolved. What were these policies and what did Congress say?

After a historic struggle, Congress provided that federal dams should include facilities for generating electricity. This was a long time ago. It first occurred in the Reclamation Act of 1906 and has been continued ever since.

Let us now consider the next principle that was determined by Congress. The government is developing public property—streams and vast networks of rivers—belonging to the people. It is doing so with funds that are derived from all the people.

THEREFORE, it is both logical and reasonable that such public property, developed with public funds, should grant a preference to the same public—or their public or nonprofit agencies—which made such construction possible.

It seems incredible that after a generation of struggle we should hear today the old private utility chant that the privately owned and publicly operated utilities should be treated alike in receiving the use of power generated by public projects.

The pillar in our national electric power policy, public preference to public non-profit bodies, is a long and well-established congressional doctrine. Natural resources are the property of all the people, and must be preserved and developed for their benefit. They, and they alone, own the streams and other great natural resources of the U. S.

Those resources do not belong to the private utilities of our country. The forests do not belong to the lumber companies, to be used for exploitation purposes. The public domain does not belong to those who would seek to so use it that they would change the western plains of America into an eroded China.

It is the obligation of Congress to protect the heritage of all the people in the natural resources of this country. If we do not remain constantly on guard, the movement which is under way to exploit our natural resources will take the form of law. That is the way the selfish end of private interests will be accomplished.

If we are not on our guard, when multiple-purpose dams, to be built with the taxpayers' money, are being authorized, there will be inserted in the act a sleeper clause which will give to the private utilities the power at bus bar. If the private utilities are given the power, then we might as well give them the dam, because if they control the power they control the dam.

WHEN WE HEAR people talking about creeping socialism, just ask them to look at the Hoover Dam and the Bonneville Dam and the Grand Coulee Dam. In the case of each and every one of these multiple-purpose dams, if we look at the economic development around one of them, we find a prosperous, growing private enterprise system, with businesses coming in which never would have come in if the government had not built the dam. That is what I call coordination and teamwork between government and private enterprise.

The fact is that the best guarantee of the preservation of the private enterprise system is not to let monopoly gain a stranglehold on the nation's natural resources, because monopoly cannot be reconciled with private enterprise.

Monopoly chokes to death private enterprise, merely saves the profits for the "big boys," merely follows the table-crumb theory of brushing off just enough of the economic sustenance from the table to keep the masses satisfied. That is not enough. Our people are entitled to be partners and participants in the development of the natural resources of our country.

BEFORE ANYONE starts to count the money they will save from a tax cut it might be worthwhile finding out if there is going to be one.

Pres. Eisenhower and his advisers have said repeatedly that we cannot reduce taxes until we cut down on government expenditures and balance the budget. Here is the outlook as it appears to us:

Are Tax Cuts Possible?

The very tight budget which former Pres. Truman submitted to Congress puts the government in the red this fiscal year—which ends July 1, 1953—some $5.9 billion. Next fiscal year the expected deficit is $9.9 billion.

Advisers to Eisenhower admit that they are finding it difficult to reduce these deficits. His budget director reports that it will be impossible to balance the budget next fiscal year.

You should be on the alert for a different type of reporting of the deficit, however. Marion Folsom, the Treasury's top budget adviser, has long advocated reporting the "consolidated cash budget."

Shuffle The Receipts

This reporting would eliminate transactions between government agencies which amounted to $2.8 billion in 1952. It would also include social security and government insurance receipts subtracted from the regular budget statements.

Such bookkeeping adjustments would reduce the budget deficit about $3.5 billion this year.

Part of this year's budget deficit includes $2.2 billion in taxes which are scheduled to expire unless Congress continues them.

More than half of the total, $1.3 billion, is the excess profits tax. If it is allowed to expire it would save a few wealthy corporations millions of dollars. General Motors, for example, paid $177 million on the tax in 1951.

There is tremendous pressure to allow the tax on excess profits to die on June 30. Eisenhower has not said whether he will ask Congress to continue this tax but he did say that the revenue it brings in must not be lost.

Responsible authorities suggest that the President has two alternatives to substitute for the excess profits tax. One would be a corporation tax increase, hitting all business—not just the most profitable ones—or a higher excise or consumers' sales tax which would hit the smallest taxpayers hardest. A tax of this kind proposed in 1951 could, on the basis of current consumer expenditures, bring in $2.8 billion.

Political Dynamite

All of this, of course, is complicated by politics. Tax reductions were an issue in the last election. Giving one group tax relief at the expense of another is political dynamite.

Rep. Reed (R. N. Y.) would meet both the political and the fiscal problems by allowing tax cuts now to force budget reductions.

He has introduced a bill to move a scheduled 11% cut in individual income taxes up six months to June 30—to expire the same time as the excess profits tax.

If the Administration maintains its position that the budget must be reduced before taxes are cut, Reed will not have his way. Republican leaders in both the Senate and House have agreed to "bottle-up" his bill unless the political pressure becomes too great.

At this time it appears that a substitute for the excess profits tax may be passed while a reduction in individual income taxes is postponed. It is not an encouraging outlook for the smaller taxpayer.

It Happened In Cherryville—

'We're Allies, Not Enemies'

Sometimes in the South, ministers work with the mill owners to fight unionism. The antics of "Parson Jack" and fly-by-night anti-labor papers are well-known. A similar development occurred recently in Cherryville, N. C., when seven Protestant ministers urged workers at the Rhyne-Houser Manufacturing Co. to vote against the CIO Textile Workers.

After the ballots were counted, and the union had lost, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve replied to the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran and Church of God ministers. Rieve said in part:

By EMIL RIEVE

A COPY of your letter, addressed to the workers in the Rhyne-Houser Manufacturing Co., has been sent to me. Although by now I should be accustomed to almost every anti-union device, I must confess I was shocked.

You say in your letter, first, that union organization "will disturb the good spirit and fellowship in the community." What basis do you have for such a statement? Don't you know that the leaders of a union in Cherryville, N. C., would be chosen by democratic vote from among the workers—your own parishioners? Don't you know that the decisions of a local union are made by the membership—your own parishioners?

Do you doubt the ability of your parishioners to govern themselves? I must conclude that this is so; because a union is merely a step in the direction of economic self-government, yet you view it as a threat to "good spirit and fellowship." I suppose there is great "good spirit and fellowship" in all totalitarian societies, since the right to dissent is effectively smothered. I thought most of us in this country agreed that the merits of self-government outweighed the advantages of autocratic unanimity.

What Unions Accomplish

Your letter further expresses your conviction that union organization would be "greatly to the disadvantage" of the workers. You tell them they would lose "many of the benefits and special favors" they have enjoyed.

On whom, besides the mill-owner, did you rely in reaching such a conclusion? Have you studied the history of the textile industry? Are you familiar with the long struggle of the workers for a living wage? Do you realize that this struggle was fruitless until the formation of our union?

Do you know that wages in unorganized mills have risen only as a result of gains won by the union? Are you aware that wages and working conditions in Cherryville—including those "benefits and special favors" you refer to—are far inferior to wages and working conditions in unionized mills?

In all charity I must conclude that the answer in each case is in the negative. Otherwise you could not advise your parishioners or any other Christians to vote against their own best interests merely to safeguard the profits of the Pharisees.

Therefore I feel it is incumbent upon me to say a few words about the nature and aims of trade unionism. Our movement, like yours, is devoted to the improvement of mankind. You seek to exorcise spiritual degradation, and to salvage man's immortal soul. We seek to exorcise physical degradation, and to make man's life on earth richer, freer, more rewarding, or at the very least, more endurable.

As Strong As The People

We should not be enemies, but allies. Surely you do not want a nation of Jobs, infinitely patient in the face of infinite trouble. You are a citizen as well as a clergyman. You know that our nation, and the cause of freedom, can be strong only as our people are strong. And the strength of our people lies in their economic well-being and their freedom to govern themselves, as well as in their spiritual resources.

The evidence is clear that economic well-being and self-government strengthens the spiritual resources of any people. But in your gratuitous opposition to the self-organization of the workers in Cherryville you have set your face against these very benefits.

We in the labor movement believe with all our hearts that our work is truly Christian work, in the highest sense. Our whole effort is on behalf of the weak, the poor, the oppressed; our goal is to provide men and women with an instrument through which they can help themselves by helping each other. And when we succeed our greatest reward, like yours, is of the spirit.

'Unions Aren't Godless,' Graham Tells Steward

A lot of anti-unionists must have had a rude surprise when Evangelist Billy Graham, in his "My Answer" column in the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer, replied to the query of a local union shop steward.

The steward wanted to know if he should quit his union office since his conversion by the evangelist "because labor unions are godless organizations." Graham replied:

"Labor unions are not godless. I would retain my office as a steward if I were you. Unions . . . are necessary in our modern industrialized setup."

'His Place Was With The Weak'

Murray Kempton, New York Post columnist, paid tribute to the late Allan S. Haywood as the "last of the old brigade" in the following column:

By MURRAY KEMPTON

ALLAN HAYWOOD, who was called Mr. CIO, died on his feet telling jokes to an organizers' meeting in Wilkes-Barre. Wilkes-Barre is a coal town; Allan Haywood could wander the whole world over and, when he came to die, it was inevitable that he be taken in a coal town.

After Philip Murray died last fall, Haywood made a speech saying that now Phil was gone and Van Bittner was gone and he was the last of the old brigade. To belong to the old brigade, for Allan Haywood, you had to be a miner; he got his card in the United Mine Workers when he was just 13 years old.

When William Green died, Allan Haywood sat down and dictated an obituary. It was a rough document, but its lead was a very beautiful and a very solemn sentence: "Bill Green was a miner."

Something Of A Man

Allan Haywood was something of a figure in the labor movement when no one had heard of most of his associates in the CIO. Twenty years ago, Walter Reuther was a schoolboy, Joe Curran was sleeping on a bench in Battery Park, Mike Quill was a subway changemaker, and Allan Haywood was running the tumultuous Illinois district of the United Mine Workers.

A few months ago, he introduced a friend of his to Emil Mazey, secretary of the UAW.

"You know," said Haywood. "I was with these boys when they were having a tough time in Detroit in 1938. They're on their feet now, so they don't need me much any more."

The strong never needed Allan Haywood. His place was with the weak. There was no organizing drive too hopeless, no CIO union too feeble that Haywood would not rise out of his bed in the dark of the night, and come to fight for it. There was no assignment he would not take.

No one ever took care of Allan Haywood. He never went to bed. They never turned out the lights anywhere in town where there was a CIO convention without the last chorus being rung out by Allan Haywood.

'The Dirty Jobs'

As long as there was a frontier unorganized, Allan Haywood would be standing there—his feet apart, his jaw outthrust, the burr cutting the atmosphere like a knife.

I hope very much that the meaning and grandeur of his life did not escape him at the end. After Philip Murray died, for a very little while, Haywood dreamed of being president of the CIO. Walter Reuther beat him; Haywood led the convention in singing, "Roll the union on," and went back to the frontiers and the dirty jobs.

He was the platoon sergeant whose mission in life it is to rise and draw fire, whose responsibility it is to return to the field and bring back the wounded. He learned very young that, when you have lived a long time, you pick up a few loyalties; you have a family; you stand by that family, and nothing should make you leave it. He was in short an organization man. He was of a breed that is passing. We are not better off without them.

'Revolution' On The Farms—

Job Crisis In 'Grapes Of Wrath' Country

By HENRY SANTIESTEVAN
Special Correspondent

UNEMPLOYMENT grimly reminiscent of depression days stalks thousands of CIO packingshed workers today in Southern California's crop-rich Imperial Valley, which was "the land of hope" for thousands of impoverished Americans in the "Grapes of Wrath" era 20 years ago.

The touchy situation—a combination of farm mechanization plus illegal use of Mexican farm workers—was uncovered by CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers LIU 78.

Some 1000 Local 78 members, out of a force of 3200, have lost their highly-paid jobs in the El Centro area alone, according to Jim Smith, local president. And only 350 of them have been able to find other work.

THEY'VE been replaced by Mexican field workers—earning 70c an hour for the skilled lettuce packing jobs which formerly brought CIO members as high as $3 to $4 an hour.

The job displacement by Mexican workers—some of them legally admitted to the U. S., some of them illegal "wetbacks"—was confirmed on investigation by CIO Dirs. Irwin L. DeShetler and Nicholas Dragon.

CIO spokesman charged the use of low-paid field workers in packing jobs violates the U. S.-Mexican farm labor agreement.

Building up pressure in the lettuce industry are these developments:

1. Development of a new vacuum-cooled system for packing lettuce in the field, which by-passes the ice-cooled, shed-packing method.

2. Use of low-paid, imported labor to do the field packing shop, thus displacing skilled domestic workers receiving union wages in the sheds.

CIO Local 78 protests were underlined strongly by DeShetler and Dragon, who recently laid the problem before Sec. of Labor Martin J. Durkin in Washington. They are members of a joint AFL-CIO Advisory Committe on farm labor.

In a letter to Durkin, DeShetler charged violation of the agreement between the United States and Mexico.

"The contract specifically states that Mexican nationals are not to be permitted to do any skilled or semi-skilled work," he wrote.

"At the present time in the Imperial Valley there are hundreds of these Mexican nationals trimming and packing lettuce. They are doing this in the field and this deprives our packers and trimmers in the sheds of work that is normally theirs."

The industrial revolution hitting the lettuce industry came with the development of huge vacuum cooling tubes, eight feet in diameter and 60 feet long. A single tube cools two-thirds of a box car load of lettuce from a field temperature of 50 to 80 degrees to 33 degrees. And it's all done in 18 to 20 minutes.

Lettuce destined to be vacuum cooled is cut, trimmed and packed into cardboard cartons in the field. The cartons are then trucked to cooling plants and tagged in and out of the cooling tubes. The chilled lettuce is then loaded into refrigerated box cars for shipment to Eastern markets.

ICE-PACKED lettuce is cut in the fields, trucked to sheds where it is trimmed, packed and iced in wooden crates by skilled, rapidly-moving workers. The vacuum-cool process completely by-passes this process.

The vacuum process, first tried commercially in 1949, this year developed into major competition for ice-pack for the first time. This season, the total has zoomed to 50% of the crop in the Imperial Valley.

Reason for the quick success of the process is easily found in the dollars-and-cents columns. Under present conditions, growers and shippers are cutting labor costs drastically.

HOWEVER, industry figures admitted none of the saving was being passed on to the housewife in the form of cheaper lettuce.

"By the time the lettuce reaches the retail market, the difference per head is so small," they said, "it does not affect the price to the housewife."

(This is another way of saying food speculators between the grower and the consumer manage to eat up any difference.)

Union spokesmen made it clear they had no quarrel with technological advancement in the lettuce industry.

"Matter of fact," Perry said, "the vacuum workers belong to our local—and we're organizing the new plants as fast as they build them.

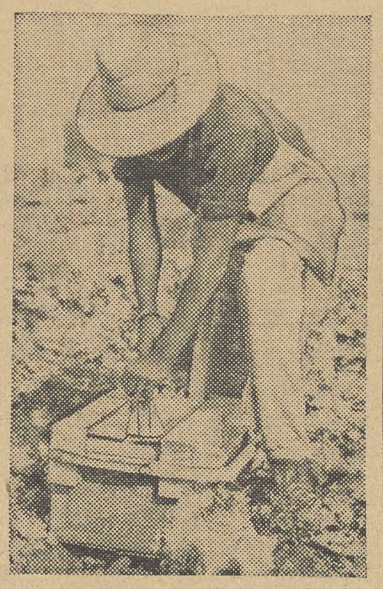
"But we're not going to stand for this cheap, slave-labor system—using 70c an hour workers to take the jobs away from our own members."

Perry also made it clear the union did not place the blame on the Mexican nationals, saying "we blame the growers for taking advantage of the nationals by assigning them to skilled and semi-skilled work."

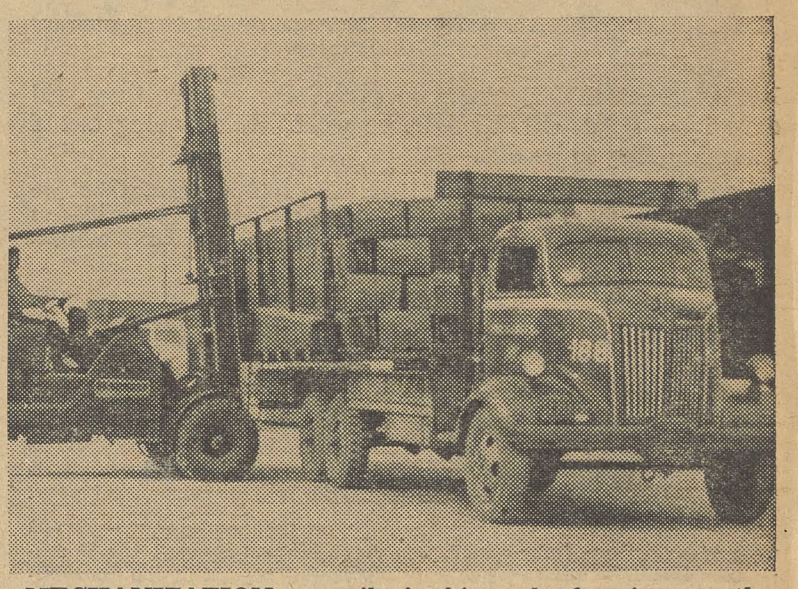
As veteran shedworker, Carl Smith, puts it,

"I've never seen it this rough since 1930."

FIELD WORKERS are taking on lettuce trimming job, displacing shed workers.



ONCE done in packingsheds, Mexican field worker nails lettuce crate tight.



MECHANIZATION prevails in big-scale farming on the West Coast. Worker operates fork-life hoist to load field-packed lettuce crates on truck enroute to cooling plant.

Curb Urged On Mexican Workers

The use of Mexican and other imported farm labor to harvest and pack fruits and vegetables should be halted "as long as we have sufficient domestic workers."

That's the demand of the CIO Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, voiced at its recent convention in El Centro, Calif.

The packingshed union, CIO LIU 78, represents some 15,000 workers in California and Arizona, where agriculture is on a big scale, mechanized basis.

Pennsylvania CIO Supports Aid For Farm Migrants

THE CIO has joined with other major labor groups in backing a series of legislative proposals to improve the lot of the migrant farm worker in Pennsylvania.

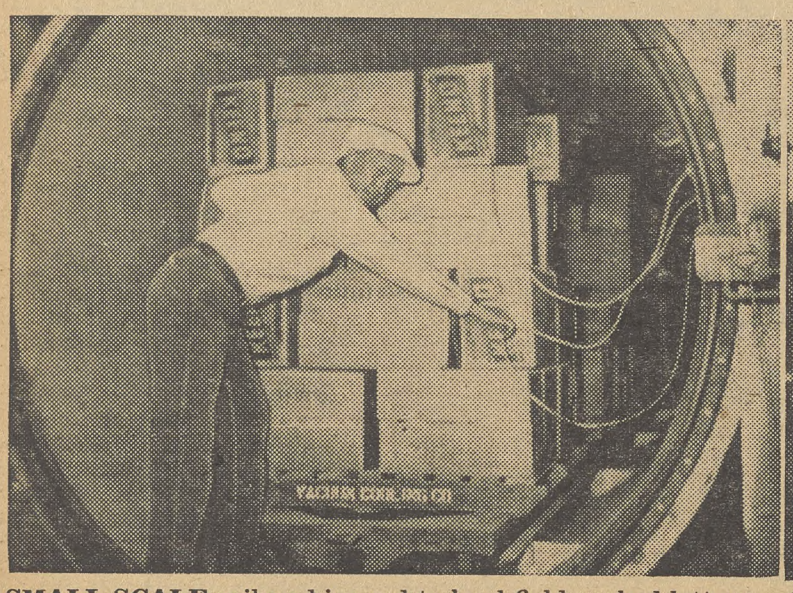
Plans to introduce the measures in the Pennsylvania Legislature were made at a meeting in Harrisburg sponsored by the State Conference of branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The proposals cover child labor camp certifications, licensing of labor agents, minimum wages and other aspects of the migrant farm labor problem.

Trade union representatives attended the meeting and declared:

"Our labor movement has a serious responsibility to the thousands of Negro farm workers . . . brought into Pennsylvania as migrant farm workers. The conditions under which these workers labor in the farm lands of our State can only be characterized as a form of brutal exploitation, with the existence of child labor, indecent camp facilities, and complete disregard for human rights."

In New Jersey, the State CIO Council called for the defeat of two bills that would permit 16-year-old youths to operate power-driven tractors and other farm machinery. Harry Kranz, the council's legislative director, cited figures showing that 62 children were killed or injured in accidents involving farm machinery during the last eight months of 1952.



SMALL-SCALE railroad is used to haul field-packed lettuce crates into vacuum-cooling plant which has revolutionized vegetable industry, displaced many skilled CIO workers.

CONVEYOR BELT then speeds lettuce to freight cars headed East. Growers pay 70c an hour to Mexican labor but the price of lettuce hasn't come down at your grocery.

"WE'VE LOST 1000 jobs" by new system, says Ben Perry of big CIO Local 78.

"KNOW WHY, KNOW HOW" was the theme of Colorado CIO Council's big annual educational conference, which 350 attended in Denver. At the mike, from left: PAC Western Dir. George Roberts, Steelworkers Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes, and Oil Workers Pres. O. A. (Jack) Knight.

'Too Much Army Brass In Big Business'—Thimmes

TOO MANY "generals and admirals have taken over the reins of big business," says James G. Thimmes, vice president of the CIO Steelworkers.

Addressing the Colorado CIO Council's state education conference in Denver, Thimmes said:

"Since 1946, 21 admirals and generals have left the service to enter big business. I see a definite danger in that.

"These high-ranking officers weren't hired for their administrative merit. They were hired for their connections in Washington."

The Steelworkers' vice president cited these examples of "the military in big business":

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, now board chairman of Remington-Rand, Inc., which has an anti-labor record as long as your arm.

Gen. Brehon Somervell, wartime Army supply chief and now president of the Koppers Co.

Despite the new Republican administration in Washington, Thimmes said, "It doesn't mean we're dead ducks. We can still do a good job—and that means organization."

A similar plea to "organize or die" was voiced by Joseph A. Beirne, CIO Communications Workers president, and, like Thimmes, a CIO vice president.

A third CIO vice president, O. A. (Jack) Knight, president of the Oil Workers with headquarters in Denver, also addressed the Colorado conference.

Jersey Get-Out-The-Vote Group Gets National Award

THE CIO-supported New Jersey Non-Partisan Register and Vote Council last week won the national first prize of the American Heritage Foundation "for the most effective register and vote effort by a non-partisan statewide citizens committee."

Competing for the award were 15,000 organizations, states, cities and counties. Harry Kranz, who is executive secretary of the organization, is the New Jersey CIO Council's legislative representative.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the State CIO Council last year called together the organizations which formed the Vote Council.

Beside the CIO Council and CIO Women's League of N. J., member groups were the State Council of the Americans for Democratic Action, State Education Association, State Citizens Housing Council, State Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, State Council of Negro Women, State Tenants Council, State Council of Churches and the State Council of Urban Leagues.

NEW JERSEY won the Middle Atlantic states regional award for getting the greatest percentage (69.6%) of eligible voters to the polls and for showing greatest increase (10.1%).

The foundation reported some 14,166,000 Americans over 21 years were ineligible to vote in last November's elections. Some 13,166,000 could not vote for such reasons as illiteracy, failure to pay poll tax and inability to meet residence requirements.

CIO Praised For Voter Drive

The National CIO was among 64 organizations cited last week by the American Heritage Foundation for "outstanding performance" in support of the Foundation's" 1952 Register and Vote Campaign.

Kefauver Warning—

Raid On Parks, Forests Seen If Oil Grab Bill Wins

THE CAMPAIGN to give federally-owned natural resources to powerful private interests by way of the states has been dragged out into the open. Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.) charged flatly that if Congress gives the states the offshore oil lands, they'll soon be clamoring for the national forests, public lands and parks and other natural resources in the interior states.

"This legislation is just a step toward a policy of giving away all of our natural resources," he told a Senate Interior and Insular Affairs Committee hearing on legislation to give the submerged lands of the continental shelf, with their $40 billion worth of oil, to the coastal states.

"If we give away this vast wealth which belongs to all the states, I can't see why the states would not claim the national parks."

KEFAUVER'S stand was supported by former Sec. of the Interior Chapman, who testified that "the greatest give-away program in the history of the world" will be touched off by the gift of the off-shore lands to the states."

"This is no idle fear," he declared. "For years, powerful pressure groups have been attempting to raid various parts of the public domain. They are now redoubling their efforts because they see in the inexperience of the new administration an opportunity to put over some of their give-away legislation."

Chapman proposed that a commission study nationally-held public resources so the people will know what is at stake if the Republican-controlled Congress decides to give them away.

ABOUT 693 million acres are involved in national forests and parks, wildlife refuges and public lands, he said. He estimated the value of the public domain at more than $1 trillion in continental U. S. and more than $550 million in Alaska.

Sen. Malone (R. Nev.) earlier told the committee the oil lands bill should be amended to give the states the mineral rights to federal land within their boundaries.

Former Sen. Burton K. Wheeler (D. Mont.), testifying against the oil give-away, said he had never seen as much "propaganda and misinformation" over a question as the oil interests and the coastal states have generated in the off-shore dispute.

A counter-attack against encroachment on the federal domain along other fronts has been started by the Emergency Committee On Natural Resources, known until recently as the Natural Resources Information Committee.

It made public letters signed by itself and a series of organizations—including the CIO—working in the fields of soil and resources conservation, wild life and labor, which had been sent to Pres. Eisenhower, Sec. of Agriculture Benson and Sec. of the Interior McKay.

Citing threats to dismember federal management of renewable natural resources, the letter to the President called for continuation of federal administration, under civil service, of the Forest Service, Fish and Wildlife Service and Soil Conservation Service.

The signers also expressed the conviction that the grazing lands, national forests, parks and monuments, and natural wildlife refuges "should remain in federal public ownership for the many benefits they bring to all the people."

Private Utilities Get Nod From McKay On Big Power Projects

THE PRIVATE POWER interests breathed easier last week when Sec. of the Interior McKay said power development should be based "on private enterprise working hand-in-hand with the government."

There should be no difference between private and public interests, he said at a National Press Club luncheon in Washington, in selling power generated at government-built dams. Publicly-owned distributing companies and cooperatives now have a preference. (See story by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) on Page 4.)

Polish Union Ban Protested

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has filed formal charges with the Intl. Labor Organization that the Soviet-controlled Polish government has killed off free trade unions in that country.

Unions have been made tools of the government, make no pretense of representing workers in collective bargaining, and exist principally to force them to reach or exceed their production quotas, the ICFTU charged.

Brownell In About-Face On Coastal Oil Lands

THE EISENHOWER Administration did a partial about face last week on the big money drive to give the coastal oil lands back to the states.

As hearings on the so-called "tidelands" bill wound up in the Senate and began before a House committee, Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell came up with this new proposition:

Allow the coastal states to take oil, natural gas or other mineral wealth from the submerged lands, but keep actual title to the lands in federal hands.

Brownell's proposition was in direct conflict with earlier testimony by Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay. (During the campaign last year, Pres. Eisenhower voiced at least three different views on the oil lands.)

THE PRESIDENT himself seemed to be in disagreement with his chief legal officer, too. He told a press conference that Brownell had the job of studying the law, but he personally felt the coastal states should have full rights to the off-shore lands within their historic boundaries.

McKay had told the Senate committee flatly that Texas, California, Louisiana and other coastal states should get title to the submerged lands.

In the House committee hearing, Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) challenged Brownell "did you get your signals crossed?" The Attorney General said his proposal would avert further legal disputes of the constitutionality of the oil give-away.

Brownell's proposal was in two parts: In the "marginal belt" from three to 10 miles out, he would give the states "only such authority" as they need to develop oil resources. They would not get title. Beyond those historic state boundaries, the federal government would keep "exclusive" jurisdiction.

Former Pres. Truman twice vetoed earlier oil-grab bills on the basis of Supreme Court decisions awarding the valuable oil lands to the federal government, not the states.

AS CONGRESSIONAL action neared, Dixiecrats, who had bolted the Democratic party because of Republican off-shore oil campaign promises, were irate at Brownell's sudden shift.

Earlier, two CIO unions joined National CIO in urging continued federal control of the lands and use of the revenue to improve the nation's schools.

Pres. Joseph Beirne for the Communications Workers and Washington Rep. John Edelman of the Textile Workers supported the Hill amendment and its "oil for the lamps of learning" proposal.

Councils Alerted On Oil Bills

CIO support for the fight to retain off-shore oil lands under federal ownership, with the income earmarked for aid to education, was being rallied last week by the CIO Legislative Dept.

Nathan E. Cowan, department director, urged all international unions, regional directors, CIO councils and local industrial unions immediately to wire and write senators and congressmen to oppose pending giveaway legislation and back the Hill "oil for the lamps of learning" amendment.

World Of Labor Mourns For Allan Haywood

ADDITIONAL MESSAGES mourning the death of Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, were received last week at CIO headquarters from leaders in labor and public life in the U. S. and throughout the world. Here is a selection of them:

Leon Jouhaux, a vice president of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Union and president of the French Force Ouvriere:

"I learned with great sorrow of the death of Allan Haywood. I bow before his memory and take part in your great loss."

Confederation of Mexican Workers, by Fidel Velasquez, secretary general:

"Confederation of Mexican Workers sends its condolences on the death of Allan S. Haywood."

American Arbitration Association, by J. Noble Braden, executive vice president:

"May I also express my own sense of loss inasmuch as I recall vividly the great help Mr. Haywood extended to the association, and to me personally, when we organized the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Tribunal."

Jewish Labor Commitee, by Adolph Held, chairman:

"Allan Haywood was a pioneer in building our labor movement and a brilliant organizer. In him devotion to the underdog and human compassion were matched with a deep hate for exploiters and oppressors. We and all Americans are poorer for his departure."

Italian Confederation of Labor Unions, by Guilio Pastore, secretary general:

"We wish to express our deepest condolences and our fraternal sympathy to you and all CIO family in behalf of CISL members and leaders.

Norwegian Federation of Labor, by Vice Pres. Parelius Mentsen:

"This is the second time in the course of a short period that a heavy loss has been inflicted upon your organization. The Norwegian Federation of Labor wants to convey the heartfelt condolences of the Norwegian workers."

Intl. Labor Organization by David A. Morse, director general:

"CIO has lost a formidable guardian of its interests. Haywood's courage, loyalty and good humor leave behind him a legacy of friendship in many countries."

Canadian Congress of Labor by Pres. A. R. Mosher and Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald:

"His life was devoted to the welfare of his fellow workers, and the Canadian Congress of Labor owes him an especial debt of gratitude for his assistance and encouragement in the early days of the congress, and for his continued cooperation with us. His loss will be deeply felt and widely regretted in both the U. S. and Canada."

British Trade Union Congress by Chairman Arthur Deakin:

"I regret to learn of the passing of friend Allan Haywood. Please convey my deepest sympathy to relatives and your organization."

ICFTU European Regional Organization by Walter Schevenels, regional secretary:

"I am deeply disturbed by the sad news of the death of our good friend, Allan Haywood, and wish to express sincere condolence to the family and to CIO."

Force Ouvriere by Robert Brothereau, secretary general:

"In the name of French workers organized in CGT-Force Ouvriere I express to you our profound sympathy over the loss of Allan Haywood, sorrowfully felt by all free trade unionists in France."

Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees & Other Transport Workers by H. A. Chappell, national president:

"The Canadian Brotherhool of Railway Employees and Other Transport Workers extend to the members of Brother Haywood's family and to the officers and members of the CIO our sincere and deepest sympathy."

New Zealand Federation of Labor by Sec.-Treas. Kenneth M. Baxter: "The New Zealand Federation of Labor extends deepest sympathy at the passing of Brother Haywood."

All Japan Seamen's Union: "We express our deepest sympathy at Mr. Haywood's sudden death."

Histadrut by Moshe Bitan, member of the executive board and American representative:

"I join in your grief at the passing of Allan Haywood. The free trade union has lost a valiant fighter for the cause of democracy."

National Committee for Labor Israel by Joseph Schlossberg, national chairman, and Isaac Hamlin, national secretary:

"The sudden death of CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan Haywood is mourned by all friends of organized labor coming so soon after the passing of Philip Murray. Its shock is felt most keenly by all to whom the cause of labor is dear."

Sir Archibald Gordon, labor attache of the British Embassy:

"I know that his loss will be mourned by many of my fellow countrymen who experienced often the fullness of his heart and loved and admired him for his selfless devotion to service for his fellowmen. I personally grieve the loss of another true and very dear friend."

'The Office Is Very Empty'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE FRONT OFFICE on the fourth floor of National CIO headquarters in Washington was terribly empty last week. No one sits behind the big mahogany desk facing the open door.

As you get off the elevator mornings, and from years of habit, glance casually in the front office, the unbelievable fact again smacks you in the face. The broad-shouldered, squat little figure of Allan Haywood is not there—and never will be again.

No more will you get a jocular grin, a wave of the arm, or if it's after nine, the sardonic greeting, "Good afternoon." For the great and overworked heart of Allan Haywood gave out. He would have been 65 next October.

The CIO's beloved executive vice-president and director of organization died with his boots on as he would have wished. Fittingly it happened at a CIO council meeting—where so many hours of his life had been spent.

For a long time after he'd been ordered and warned by doctors to take it easy, Haywood had gone stubbornly on with his heavy responsibilities and activities.

It will be hard for Allan Haywood's associates and host of friends to realize that he is gone. His energy and tremendous vitality seemed so indestructible.

Both union and employer negotiators will remember vividly the canny, stubborn yet always reasonable way he presided at collective bargaining sessions, trying to get the best he could for the workers he represented. He had a fine sense for the right moment to yield or to hang on bitterly waiting for a better break.

Those who knew him well will never forget those bright, shrewd eyes that searched their faces. They will miss the warm grasp of his hand, and the encouraging whack on the back he gave them when they were in low spirits.

And some will wish they could again hear him roar angrily at them as he did now and then when he was exasperated.

GE Profits Told As IUE Begins Talks

GENERAL ELECTRIC'S profits show it can well afford to give its employes substantial wage increases, Pres. James E. Carey of the CIO Electrical Workers said as negotiations opened last week.

Carey said the corporation's profits for 1952—based on reports of first three quarters—will average $2039 per employe, compared to $1600 profit per employe for other firms in the electrical machine industry.

Carey said these figures are before taxes, but the after taxes profits show the same high ratio. After taxes GE profits per employe will be more than $800 a year compared with $540 for the rest of the industry. This extra profit, he said, is equal to more than 13c an hour per employe.

GE PRES. Ralph Cordiner and other company spokesmen have predicted that this year will be even more profitable than last year, Carey added.

In addition to its proposals for a general wage increase, IUE negotiators asked:

- Maintenance of the worker's standard of living and his share in increased production.
- Removal of inequities and injustices in the in-plant wage structure.
- More adequate security for workers.
- An adequate profit-sharing plan.
- Stabilizing industrial relations against GE attacks on the union.

Negotiations were started under a wage reopening provision of the one-year GE contract, which expires Sept. 15. IUE-CIO also will exercise its right to reopen negotiations with Westing house Electric Corp. as provided by an Apr. 1 reopening clause.

IUE-CIO recently won improved pension and health insurance benefits for its 46,000 members at Westinghouse.

Wilson To Testify Against U. S. Suit

Defense Sec. Charles E. Wilson will be called in mid-April as a defense witness in Uncle Sam's civil anti-trust suit against E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., defense attorneys said last week.

Wilson formerly was president of General Motors Corp., a co-defendant with DuPont, U. S. Rubber and others in the government's suit. The announcement was issued as the government continued cross-examining Irenee DuPont on the relationships between the Dupont firm and GM.

Italy Labor Groups Plan Joint Action

THE TWO largest free trade union bodies in Italy formed a common front last week for a joint fight on communism.

The agreement was reached after months of consultation by the Italian Confederation of Trade Unions (CISL) and the Union of Italian Workers (UIL), both of which are affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Negotiations on a possible merger of the two bodies broke down last spring. Conversations were resumed after the CIO and AFL, in a joint statement, called on them "to work together in good faith on the basis of unity of action . . ."

The final agreement was reached under the auspices of Sir Vincent Tewson, ICFTU president. In it, they pledge themselves to follow a common policy, based on the democratic principles of the ICFTU, in all international political problems and especially in the fight against communism.

Both the leadership and membership of the CISL are, for the most part, Christian Democratic, although the trade union body has no formal connection with that party. The smaller UIL has a Socialist background and is politically connected with the Right Wing Socialists and the Republicans.

'Vicious' McCarran Curbs Condemned By Joe Curran

THE McCARRAN - Walter Act is an "ill-conceived and vicious law" as it applies to alien seamen, Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union told congressmen in a letter sent to all members of both houses.

"It has no place in a democracy, "and parallels in many ways the Nazi concept of superiority."

Curran, who is also chairman of the CIO Maritime Committee, urged Congress to correct as quickly as possible sections of the act which are causing hardship to and persecution of the men who operate the merchant marine services of friendly foreign nations.

THESE ARE the same men, he reminded the lawmakers who gave everything they had for the cause of democracy during World War II. The "inhuman and undemocratic" manner in which they are being treated, he claimed, has reached the stage where other nations were wondering just what kind of a friend the United States is and what kind of democracy it advocates.

"The procedure of treating the merchant seamen of our Allies as virtual criminals is not promoting friendship," he wrote.

"It certainly is not preventing Communists from continuing their activities as couriers and infiltrating the democratic countries.

"The Communists have no difficulty in practicing deceit and gaining their ends. In fact, they are encouraged by this type of witch-hunting and persecution visited upon seamen of friendly countries . . .

"In the interests of fair play, we urge you to take steps as rapidly as possible to correct this evil, before great damage is done to international good will and friendship."

PROTEST RALLY—CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey congratulates Sen. Morse (left), after Oregon Independent denounces Soviet anti-Semitism at New York rally sponsored by CIO Electrical Workers.

HOW ABOUT IT?—Pickets from CIO Packinghouse Workers and Iowa Farmers Union reminded Agriculture Sec. Benson of GOP campaign promises when Benson spoke in Des Moines. Benson refused to receive delegation with petitions signed by 20,000 for livestock parity program. Later Benson continued dairy price support at 90% of parity.

T-H Injunction Upheld In Steel Union's Test Case

THE U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York last week upheld the constitutionality of a Taft-Hartley injunction against CIO Steelworkers, three hours before the injunction was due to expire automatically.

The court ruled unanimously in favor of the government which had obtained an 80-day injunction—under the so-called national emergency section of T-H—against 1500 striking Steelworkers at Dunkirk, N. Y. The strike-bound plant was owned by American Locomotive Co.

Challenging the injunction, the union had contended the 80-day injunction was unconstitutional; that the strike wasn't a national emergency and that the entire membership of the union couldn't be enjoined.

On this last point, the court, in substance, held with the union. It agreed individual union members could not be enjoined from actions they might take, if the actions weren't taken in concert with the union.

The Court Decision

"The argument that Sections 206-210 of the (T-H) act are unconstitutional," the decision said in discussing that phase of the USA-CIO case, "is based on the assertion that they involve no violation of the law, at least until by granting an injunction the court makes unlawful what Congress did not and that the duties imposed on the court by those sections are, therefore, merely administrative ones in aid of the settlement of a labor dispute involving a strike or threatened strike . . .

"But although the jurisdiction to grant an injunction is (thus) limited and its issuance is by statute designed to make possible further efforts to settle the dispute without work stoppage, the function of the court is not administrative but judicial, just as is that of an appellate court when it reviews and enforces an order of the National Labor Relations Board.

"The court then acts in aid of the settlement of a labor dispute and so it does here, but in each instance it performs judicial functions.

"The instant act makes an actual, or threatened, strike or lockout of the kind described in Sec. 208 something which for at least a period may be prohibited. The prohibition of strikes or lockouts under given circumstances implies that they are, under such circumstances, an invasion of the rights of the public. Whether it is the duty of the court to grant an injunction depends upon findings of fact to be made by the court as the statute requires.

"The statute creates the right on the part of the public to be protected from the danger of such a strike or lockout. Whether there is an existing or threatened strike or lockout which, under the statute, is an invasion of the rights of the public presents the usual kind of case or controversy which is justiciable by a court."

Almost immediately after the court ruled, government moved to dissolve the injunction. Under Taft-Hartley, injunctions expire at the end of 80 days, no matter what the status of the dispute.

Union lawyers, who had attempted to get early action in the case, pointed out this 80-day rule meant no union could test the constitutionality of a Taft-Hartley injunction through the Supreme Court.

That court refuses to hear cases which are moot and the slow legal processes mean no case can get to the Supreme Court inside the 80-day limit.

At the same time, union lawyers observed, an illegal injunction could have been in effect for 79 days and 21 hours, and then be ruled illegal, but the strike would have been broken through an illegal action.

Meantime, the union and management reached agreement on the wage question and agreement was near in other disputed issues.

'Fox In Charge Of Chicken Coop'—

Cole's Appointment Protested For Anti-Housing Record

By MILTON PLUMB

ANOTHER MAN nominated by Pres. Eisenhower for a top federal post has become the center of controversy on Capitol Hill.

He is Albert M. Cole, former Kansas Republican Congressman recently named administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Defeated for re-election last November, Cole voted consistently against the national housing program during his eight years in Congress.

As leading liberal Senators and progressives protested against Cole's nomination, James G. Thimmes, chairman of the National CIO Housing Committee, called upon all CIO councils to oppose confirmation of the appointment.

"The ugly attacks made by Cole on federal housing policies are completely without merit or justification and indicate his utter irresponsibilty in these questions," Anthony W. Smith, CIO assistant director of councils, said in a letter supporting Thimmes' request.

"It would be absurd and harmful in the extreme to have this man installed as head of the administration he has done everything he could to destroy."

White House Adamant

Meanwhile, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) suggested that Eisenhower should withdraw Cole's nomination for the $17,500 top housing post. He said the selection is "like putting the fox in charge of the chicken coop."

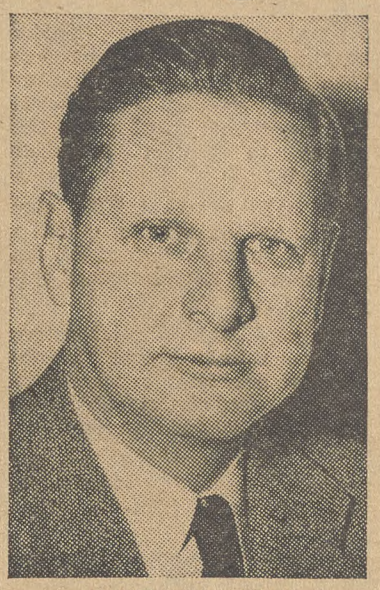
The White House, however, refused to discuss Cole's record.

Press Secy. James C. Hagerty was asked why Eisenhower named the Kansan for the job despite his "consistent record against public housing."

"I don't know that he has such a record," Hagerty said. He declined to comment further when a reporter insisted that the Congressional Record shows Cole opposed public housing.

Among the organizations opposing Cole's nomination were Americans for Democratic Action, the American Council on Human Rights, and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington NAACP office, said his organization is particularly concerned about whether the Eisenhower Administration intends to eliminate public housing, which has given substantial benefits to Negroes. He charged that Cole, in a 1949 House speech, inferred that public housing was "thought up in the Kremlin."



ALBERT M. COLE
How will housing fare?

Even Senate Majority Leader Taft conceded that Cole's record is anti-public housing. However, he also told reporters that Cole "has assured the President and me that he is not going to be opposed to public housing—that he will go along with whatever is worked out."

Testifying at a hearing on his appointment before the Senate Banking Committee, Cole did not attempt to hide his previous oppostition to housing legislation and said he had no "apology" for it.

He promised that he would administer the housing laws "fairly and honestly" if he is confirmed, but he added that he "definitely" has not changed his persona' opposition to public housing.

Changes Tune

Cole also pledged his support to a "vigorous housing program" with emphasis on aid to low income groups. Under questioning by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), he said he planned to make slum clearance "my number one project."

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) read portions of a speech Cole made against the Housing Act of 1949. He said Cole had attacked the provisions for slum clearance, research, farm housing and public housing.

Cole replied that he had then acted as a "minority member of Congress" and that things hadn't turned out as badly as he had indicated they might if the bill became law.

A check of The CIO News voting record fails to reveal even a single instance during Cole's service in Congress when he voted contrary to the wishes of the real estate lobby on key housing and rent control measures.

Big Cities Face Showdown On Keeping Rent Controls

WILD DISORDER last week broke up a rent control hearing in Philadelphia as property owners shook their fists at a member of the city's Rent Advisory Commission and bellowed to drown out his effort to tell the facts to the City Council.

Councilman Samuel Rose, chairman of the hearings, promptly adjourned the public meeting. He then proceeded to take testimony in executive session.

The Philadelphia demonstration came after a prediction by Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.) of the House Banking Committee that Congress will let rent controls die Apr. 30 in Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, Cleveland and 1500 other cities which have not been designated "critical" defense areas.

Wolcott's committee will begin hearings Mar. 9 on Pres. Eisenhower's request that rent controls be continued in "critical" housing areas. But under the definition of such areas Wolcott proposes to write into the law, rent officials say that probably no big city could qualify.

Joseph Kelley, newly-elected president of the Philadelphia CIO Council and president of Exide Battery Local 113 of the CIO Electrical Workers, testified at the hearings before the Philadelphia council Mar. 2. He asked the council to memorialize Congress to enact legislation continuing rent controls for two more years.

REFERRING to other communities where rent controls were abolished, Kelley said that "in all instances where rents were decontrolled, regardless of the statements and promises made to the contrary, rents skyrocketed." Kelley cited a 1951 housing survey by the Philadelphia City Planning Commission which found "predominantly substandard" conditions.

"Under these deplorable conditions, we cannot entertain a single thought of lessening the controls on rents," he added.

GOP 'Hatchet Job' On N. Y. Rent Law Protested By CIO

"A COMPLETE hatchet job on rent controls" is what the New York State CIO calls Republican moves to weaken the State's rent control law.

The Council urges extension of the present State rent law for two years.

Bills presented to the Legislature late last week would boost rents on houses 15% above those in effect on Mar. 1, 1943, and on commercial and business establishments 15% above 1947 State-fixed levels, and would decontrol all New York City store rents.

In the latest move to keep rents from zooming, Louis Hollander and Harold J. Garno, the Council's president and secretary-treasurer respectively, wrote all members of the Legislature. They said the GOP proposals "make it appear that some members of the State Legislature feel themselves under obligation to real estate interests for their support in the last campaign."

The Council warned that "the critical housing shortage" requires continuance of "controls over commercial rents in the City of New York as well as to residential housing throughout the State." They said a survey shows "landlords are more prosperous today than they have ever been."

'Economy' By Congress Curtails Work Of 2 Consumer Agencies

TWO FEDERAL agencies of direct concern to consumers are trying "to do more and more with less and less" because of congressional "economy" cuts in their operating funds.

The agencies are the Food and Drug Administration and the Federal Trade Commission.

The FDA tries to block sale of contaminated food and medicine; the FTC tries to police honesty in advertising, among many tasks.

Last week the FDA, in an annual report, said it has seized more than 18 million pounds of unfit food in the past year. The agency brought almost 2000 court cases to block sale of potentially dangerous foodstuffs and drugs.

FDA Commissioner Charles W. Crawford, speaking earlier in New York City, revealed the results of congressional-imposed "economy" cuts on efforts of the agency to protect consumer goods.

POINTING out that FDA now has only 216 inspectors and a reduced number of chemists, physicians and other trained employes, Crawford said:

"It would take our inspectors nine years to cover every establishment producing or warehousing the commodities subject to the Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act.

"For every lot that we see produced or sample and examine, there are more than 1000 that we can't cover," he reported.

The annual report of the trade commission—the agency under fire from big oil companies because of the oil cartel case—said:

"The commission resembles a city whose population has doubled and trade volume has tripled, yet is trying to operate on a slightly reduced police force and fire department . . . and thus finds maintenance of effective operations has become steadily more difficult."

In just one of FTC's 10 major fields of work—honesty in advertising—the report pointed out that advertising has grown from $200 million a year some 40 years ago to a 1951 cost of $6.5 billion.

Goodyear Aircraft Workers Sold In Hurry On CIO-CSC

A STRIKING example of CIO support of community services, particularly when fund raising is centralized in once-a-year drives for all health and welfare agencies, was demonstrated recently in Akron, O.

Last fall, workers in the big Goodyear Aircraft Local 856 of the CIO Auto Workers went on strike.

They were out from Sept. 20 to Nov. 25. During that period, and because of labor participation in the Akron United Foundation, assistance estimated at $35,000 was obtaining for 1400 strikers and their families.

Through the efforts of W. E. Fielder, CIO Community Services Committee representative with the United Foundation's Labor Participation Dept., the strikers received assistance from public and private agencies in the Akron area. And additional aid was given to UAW members in dealing with car financing, loans, mortgages and similar credit problems during the long strike.

With that kind of help, the Goodyear Aircraft workers were sold on the United Foundation. While they were out, the United Fund-Red Cross joint campaign had already been conducted in Akron. It went over its goal of $2 million.

Within three weeks after the Goodyear Aircraft workers were back on the job, and even before their first post-strike payday, they started their own United Fund-Red Cross appeal. In short order the production workers subscribed $22,500. And with the contributions of salaried employes, Goodyear Aircraft went over the top by $1500 on its quota.

Everything But Housemaid's Knee

The Federal Trade Commission has called the Philo Burt Mfg. Co. of Jamestown, N. Y., on the carpet, charging it with false advertising in its cure-all claims for "Philo Burt Appliances."

Among the various powers claimed for the devices, which the PTC says just isn't so, are to cure asthma, spinal tuberculosis, arthritis, spinal deformities, headaches, sleeplessness, muscular weakness and indigestion.

GOP Swings Tax Load On Consumers

MICHIGAN Republicans who have blandly watched the state's deficit climb for four years have suddenly deluged the Legislature with new tax schemes.

They broke down into four groups—all based on the idea of making workers and low-income groups generally foot the bills that have been piling up while the GOP-dominated Legislature has steadfastly refused to enact Gov. G. Mennen Williams' (D.) plan for a tax on corporation profits.

The first group was intended to head off a report of the Citizens' Advisory Tax Study Committee, which is dominated by Republicans and big business. Its many proposals ranged from a $35 million a year wholesale tax to 2c a pack on cigarets. Several personal and corporate income tax plans were included, yielding up to $100 million a year.

THE SECOND, on which House debate has started, calls for seizure of the $50 million veterans' trust fund and revamping of sales tax handling. It opens the way for an eventual higher sales tax rate—now 3%—and places State school aid on a month-to-month basis.

The other two are variations of the GOP tax study committee's plan. What it really wants is a general shifting of the tax burden to local taxpayers, with the slashing of state grants to local governmental units. This raiding would yield an estimated $34 million.

Oldsters Advised On Pension Suits

Claimants now suing for old age, widows or children benefits under the Federal Old Age and Survivors insurance program have been advised of a legal technicality resulting from the change in Administration.

Their cases must be amended to name Federal Security Administrator Oveta Culp Hobby as defendant, instead of former FSA Chief Oscar R. Ewing. Mrs. Hobby said such amended actions must be filed by June 21, added she "does not want a single pending case to be halted on technicalities because of the wording of the law."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

YOUR BUYING questions answered: "We wish to buy a new stove; could you give us some advice?"

—Mrs. S. W., Hatboro, Pa.

Answer: First, any electric range you buy ought to carry the "UL" (Underwriter Laboratories) seal. In buying a gas range look for the seals of approval of the American Gas Association. The seal with a blue star in the circle means the range meets the gas association's standards of construction, insulation and safety. Better quality ranges with extra convenience features have the letter "CP" (Certified Performance) in a circle.

Among basic features to compare to see which range offers best value (despite the name or price) are oven size, convenience of use and cleaning, and adequacy of insulation.

The overall size of ranges doesn't mean too much as a gauge of value. The real specification to compare is the size of the oven. You should make sure that the surfaces are porcelain enamel all over, including the oven and sides, which on some cheap stoves are merely baked-on enamel. This isn't always noticeable when stoves are lined up side by side in a store.

You can best judge yourself whether such features as top light, oven light, extra appliance outlets, etc., are worth the extra cost to you. A glass oven door has some value in enabling you to observe without opening the door, but is generally found on only the largest and costliest ranges.

The hidden value in a range is the insulation. An approved range generally will be fairy well insulated, but beware of those that have thin oven walls. Another sign of good construction is an oven door that closes very tightly.

Outboard: "Am going to buy an outboard motor and would like to know who manufactures Montgomery Ward's."—W. W., Hudson, Ohio.

Answer: Ward's outboards are manufactured by the Outboard Marine & Manufacturing Co. who also make the Evinrude and Johnson brands.

Living room furniture: "I am thinking about buying a living room suite. Could you tell which is the best—that suite that is foam rubber filled or the standard one?

Answer: Of the three most widely-used types of upholstery, the coil spring construction with cotton felt padding is neat and fairly durable, and costs the least. Foam-rubber upholstery is softer and more durable, but needs to be carefully constructed, else the covering material tends to wrinkle and also slip off the foam rubber slab. The covering should be attached securely to the foam rubber with a welt and preferably also button tufts. The third type of upholstery is down filling, which is both very expensive and requires much care to constantly fluff it up, although it's soft and luxurious. We wouldn't recommend it for a large family with children, or a busy woman.

Be careful about buying so-called "suites" of furniture. You often can find better value in individual sofas and chairs, and can buy only the pieces you really need. The sofa and chairs need not match as long as they harmonize in color and style. In fact, it's often the cheaper living room furniture that comes in matched suites.

Price-Fixing Law Killed

Georgia's price-boosting, price-fixing fair trade law has been tossed out by the state supreme court.

The court ruled the Georgia law, on the books since 1937, conflicted with then-existing provisions of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Because the federal law has been changed, the court decision opened the way for re-enactment of the Georgia law.

Mothers May Get Tax Break

A BILL to permit the nation's nine million working mothers to claim as an income tax deduction the money spent for care of their children while they are at work has been introduced by Rep. Roberts (D. Ala.).

The bill would permit a deduction up to $40 a week for all ordinary and reasonable expenses incurred in providing care for any children under 16 years of age who live at home. The deduction would apply only to mothers who have an income of less than $6000 a year, plus $500 for each child under 16.

Roberts pointed out that domestic help is a necessity for many mothers who are forced to work to supplement the family income or who are the sole support of their families.

"The law states that a business can take a deduction on its income tax for ordinary and necessary expenses of producing income," Roberts said. "This principle should apply to the individual wage earner as well as to business. The domestic help is necessary. It is not a luxury. This working mothers' bill is for child care while the mother is working in the shop, in the cotton mill, in the grocery store and in the office." (LPA)

Woman Heads CWA Local In Detroit

Women telephone workers are moving up in the leadership of the CIO Communications Workers. In Detroit, Mrs. Jennie M. Hills has been elected Local 4050 president. She also is secretary-treasurer of the Detroit CWA Council.

Organizationally Speaking

Here are representation election victories as reported to the CIO Organizational Dept.:

REG. DIR. FRANZ DANIEL reports that the CIO Electrical Workers won a representation election at Bassick-Sack, Winston-Salem, N. C., with the UE withdrawing the day before the voting. The vote was as follows: IUE 209, no union 3, challenged 3. IUE Field Rep. John Sullivan was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports four representation election victories for the CIO Steelworkers in the Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis., area; Cutler Wagner Co. (lime plant), Cutler Wagner Co. (salt plant), both in Duluth, and the Cutler-L. A. Liberty McDougall Corp. (lime plant) and Marine Fueling, Inc., of Superior. The margin of victory was 94% for the Steelworkers, against 6% for the AFL. USA Rep. Glenn Peterson handled this campaign.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports a representation election victory for the CIO Woodworkers at the Micheys Lumber Co., Warren, Ark., by the following vote: eligible 50, IWA-CIO 30, no union 15, void 3. Intl. Rep. Robert Taylor directed the drive.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that the CIO Utility Workers successfully resisted the raiding efforts of the AFL-IBEW in a consent election at the Mountain States Power Co., Casper, Wyo., by a vote of 92 to 43 with 1 for no union. CIO Natl. Rep. Walter Smethurst and the Denver, Colo., CIO regional office directed this campaign.

★

CIO FIELD REP. CHARLES BARRANCO reports a smashing victory for the CIO Communications Workers at the Haverhill and Lawrence, Mass., Western Electric Co. plants by the following vote: CWA-CIO 1349, IBEW-AFL 795, neither 76.

Act. Reg. Dir. Henry Henry reports that in a representation election at the H. J. Heinz Co., Holland, Mich., the workers favored the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union by a vote of 279 to 154 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Frank Carmichael reports two representation election victories among the workers of the Berkshire Fine Spinning Associates, Inc.: Fort Drummer Div., Brattleboro, Vt., eligible 381, CIO Textile Workers 233, AFL 109, no union 7; Adams and North Adams, Mass., plants, voting as one unit, eligible 2285, Textile Workers 1545, AFL 399, no union 27, void 6, challenged 10. The Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union won a representation election at the Union News Co., Boston, Mass., by a vote of 225 to 37 AFL.

Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE election victories: Locke Steel Chain Co. (Lawnmower Div.) Bridgeport, Conn., IUE-CIO 28, no union 14; Master Vibrator, Dayton, O., IUE-CIO 30, no union 18; Westinghouse Electric Supply Co., Los Angeles, Calif., IUE-CIO 34, AFL 4; General Electric Co., Bridgeville, Pa., IUE-CIO 60, no union 34; Dumont Laboratories, plants at Passaic, Paterson, East Paterson, Clifton and Allwood, N. J., IUE-CIO 2018, no union 885.

REG. DIR. SAM SPONSELLER reports that the CIO Paperworkers won a representation election at the Great Lakes Box Co., Cleveland, O., by the following vote: UPA-CIO 223, Longshoremen 47, neither 4. UPA Rep. John Gray, assisted by CIO Field Reps. C. C. Smith and Frank Deutsch, directed this drive.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports a representation election victory among workers of two plants of the Henry Clay and Bock Co., Trenton and New Brunswick, N. J. The vote was as follows: eligible 253, CIO 251, no union 0, void 2. CIO Rep. Jack Rosen was in charge, assisted by Mary Godrey and Mary Chrinko of LIU 1802 and Helen Gaylburd and Dorothy Gnandt from LIU 1003.

Reg. Dir. George DeNucci reports that in a representation election at the Timken Axle Co., Newark, O., the CIO Auto Workers defeated the AFL by a vote of 954 to 723. UAW Rep. Emerson Baringer conducted the campaign.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the John Deere Plow Works warehouse, Memphis, Tenn., the workers favored the UAW-CIO by a vote of 24 to 4 for no union. Intl. Reps. B. C. Deason and James Harden handled the situation.

Air Transport Pay Hiked

THE CIO Transport Workers last week won pay increases of $2.5 million a year for 5500 employes of the Pan American World Airways.

Mechanics received a 11c hourly increase, inspectors 12c, and port stewards, chauffeurs, handymen and porters 10 to 13c. In Puerto Rico, 150 TWU members got increases of 10c to 13c an hour, pay differentials between the mainland and the island were wiped out for skilled workers, and were cut for unskilled workers.

The pay of flight stewards and stewardesses was boosted $30 to $35 a month, and of pursers $30 to $40 a month.

Canal Zone Keeps Pay Bias

WAGE discrimination against local workers in the Panama Canal Zone will be continued, Gov. John S. Seybold has advised Local 900 of the CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee.

The union had petitioned the Governor to abolish a feudal-type wage structure under which local workers are paid only a fraction of rates for workers from the United States. Seybold not only refused a wage increase for the local workers, but declined to grant equal pay for equal work to the few among them who are highly skilled.

'Greatest Gains In 10 Years'

Kohler Anti-Union Stronghold Gives In To UAW On Strike Eve

THE CIO Auto Workers have defeated the Kohler Corp. of Kohler, Wis., which has conducted a running 20-year-battle against unions.

First contract between the union and the company was signed on Feb. 24 on the eve of a scheduled strike by the company's 3600 workers. It was ratified at a mass membership meeting.

UAW-CIO Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, who led the final negotiations for the union, said the new contract represented "the greatest gains made in a single set of negotiations by the UAW in the last 10 years."

Background to the new contract includes a 1934 attempt to organize Kohler in which two workers were killed. Wisconsin Gov. Walter Kohler is involved in the company ownership.

Following the abortive 1934 organizing campaign, an independent union was set up in the plant. In later years the independent union grew more militant and later voted, by a near 3-to-1 margin, to affiliate with the UAW.

Last June the UAW won a collective bargaining election and negotiations ran without results from Aug. 21 until the strike vote on Feb. 14. As the strike vote was taken, the company had deputized a reported 315 foremen and supervisors, stockpiled tons of food, mattresses and other commodities and built guard shacks on plant roofs overlooking the entire factory area.

AFTER the workers voted 93% in favor of a strike, the company capitulated to most of the union's demands.

Mazey said the agreement "marked the end of feudal rule of a family industrial empire over the lives of the workers and their families and community. We have brought industrial democracy to Kohler."

Settlement terms included an average 18c-an-hour increase, he said, with the increases ranging from 12 to 25c. Many inequities were wiped out and further bargaining on others was provided.

CWA Defeats IBEW For 10th Straight Win

THE CIO Communications Workers scored its tenth straight victory over the AFL Electrical Workers last week in a National Labor Relations Board representation election at plants of the Western Electric Co. in Haverhill and Lawrence, Mass.

More than 2200 of the 2400 eligible voters marked ballots, which tallied 1349 for the CWA-CIO, 795 for the IBEW and 76 for no union.

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CWA-CIO said the victory is one of a series that means "the beginning of the end for IBEW in the telephone industry." While the CIO affiliate was piling up its string of wins during the last two years, the AFL unit failed to take a single unit from the CWA.

"A FIGHTING liberal" for 30 years in Congress, Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) was honored on anniversary by House Republicans and Democrats alike.

"We have always believed that workers in an industry benefit most if they are all in a single international union," Beirne said.

"Ours is already the dominant union in the telephone industry. The IBEW is . . . in the electrical workers' field. We don't organize electrical workers. We don't intend to let the IBEW muscle in on us."

The CWA has represented workers at Western Electric's Haverhill plant for several years, and at the Lawrence plant since it was opened about a year ago.

THE VICTORY came as the union began its first round of negotiations with the Bell System at a meeting in Cleveland with Ohio Bell. Sixty-day strike notices, as required by the Taft-Hartley Act, were filed in the cases of Ohio Bell, New Jersey Bell, Bell Laboratories, Pacific Telephone & Telegraph, Michigan Bell and the Western Electric Co.

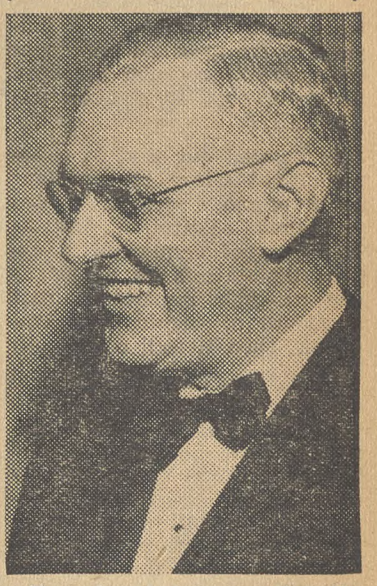
All are subsidiaries of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and employ a total of 81,195 CWA-CIO members. With other contracts opening up soon, the union will bargain for a grand total of 324,054 Bell System employes.

Union demands, couched in general terms, were formulated at the CWA-CIO convention last June. They include a "reasonable general wage increase," lower differentials, and a health and welfare plan including improved pensions and a company-financed hospital, medical and surgical program.

Work Week Falls To 41.1 Hours

The average factory work week dropped in mid-January by seven-tenths of an hour to 41.1 hours from the December level, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported last week.

Social Notes In Washington



For almost two months, the Republicans have been in charge in Washington, but —sh!—a Fair Dealer is still No. 4 in the society blue book.

He's John R. Steelman (above), who used to be chief assistant to former Pres. Truman and now is a special assistant to Pres. Eisenhower. Steelman's on the job temporarily.

When the Social List of Washington came out recently with a special supplement listing all the Republicans, it gave this rank:

Pres. Eisenhower, Sherman Adams, assistant, Maj. Gen. Walter B. Persons, special assistant, and Steelman.

4000 Gulf Shipyard Workers Out

THE CIO Shipbuilding Workers last week won one Gulf Coast strike while another involving 4000 members continued.

A one-day strike at the Todd-Johnson shipyards at New Orleans won a 13c across-the-board hourly increase and other improvements for 1000 workers.

Some 4000 IUMSWA members were out at Alabama Drydock & Shipbuilding Co. at Mobile, Ala. Both strikes began Mar. 2 over failure to renew contracts after several weeks of negotaitions.

The Mobile strike began after the firm had been "riding" the shop stewards for sometime.

Besides the wage increase the Todd-Johnson workers also won three paid holidays even though there may be no work on the day before or after the holiday, three weeks vacation instead of two after 15 years, boosting of the pay differential on the second shift from 5c to 6c and on the third shift from 5c to 12c.

Israel Aid Urged

By helping Histadrut—the Israel Federation of Labor—and Israel, America will help herself, R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, told a seminar at Rutgers Univ. on the role played by Histadrut in the development of the new nation in the Near East.

Taft-Hartley Hearings—

'Curb Intimidation By Bosses,' Rep. Howell Says

AN AMENDMENT to the Taft-Hartley Act to "halt employer intimidation of workers" by changing the language of the so-called "employer free speech" provision has been introduced by Rep. Howell (D. N.J.).

He pointed out that long before Taft-Hartley became law, the Supreme Court had ruled that the Constitution protects the rights of employers to express their views on unions so long as their remarks do not intimidate or coerce their employes. Then Howell added:

"BUT WHAT Taft-Hartley did was to provide employers with a cloak behind which they engaged in actual intimidation and threat. It is the purpose of my amendment to halt this intimidation and coercion, which is completely repugnant to all American standards of fair play and justice."

Howell's amendment would substitute for the Taft-Hartley language, a declaration of the constitutional principles which have been laid down by the Supreme Court, spelling out employers' rights to express their views "so long as their remarks do not tend in the context in which made, to coerce or intimidate their employes."

"If the majority party seeks to apply the principles of fairness and justice to Taft-Hartley, which Pres. Eisenhower has promised," Howell said, "it will support this amendment. For thus the employer's right of free speech will be carefully spelled out, but intimidation and coercion of workers will be a thing of the past."

Howell called the attention of Congress to specific aspects of employer intimidation that are "part of the unwholesome atmosphere which grew out of this so falsely named 'free speech' section of the labor-management relations law."

He said these included activities of "unauthorized" agents of employers, "citizens committees" which spring up when a union begins an organizing campaign, and "professional hate merchants" like the Ku Klux Klan and other vigilante groups.

"SPECIFICALLY," he said, "I refer to situations which arise with regularity, particularly in the South—to statements of a local business association official or to a newspaper column or editorial in a small-town newspaper where the editor from sheer force of habit, is apt to bow deeply to the big industrialist."

Howell added that while the so-called "citizens committee" might have no open tie to the company which the union is seeking to organize, "practical men must agree it would hardly exist in a one-company town if the company executives didn't wish it to exist."

"UNDER Taft-Hartley, actions of such as these are not evidence of unfair labor practice, unless the union is able to prove that the employer directly authorized these actions. This is, of course, an almost insurmountable obstacle—and Taft-Hartley apparently intended it to be," Howell pointed out.

He said that "no more misleading label has ever been applied to a legislative provision" than that calling the Taft-Hartley section encouraging employer intimidation and coercion one for "free speech."

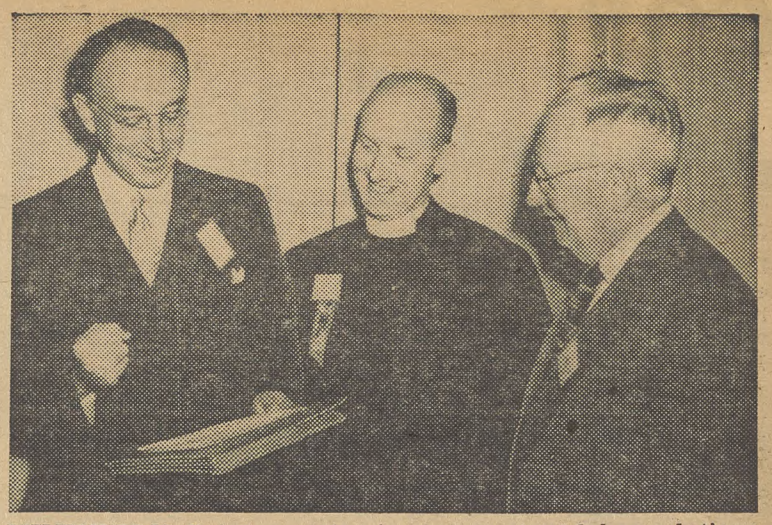
Denham Proposes Tougher T-H Law

Fire everybody in sight—and then pass a tougher Taft-Hartley Act.

That's Robert N. Denham's prescription for what to do about labor-management relations.

The former general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board—who now represents big business firms—testified before the House Labor Committee.

He proposed that the present NLRB be abolished, all its members and staff thereby fired, and a new board be set up.



MINIMUM U. S. intervention in management-labor relations was urged by David Cole (left), Federal Mediation Service director, at Univ. of Notre Dame institute. He's talking with Rev. Mark J. Fitzgerald, conference chairman, and J. N. Braden, American Arbitration Association's executive vice president.

Cole Urges Limited U. S. Role In Labor-Industry Relations

"THERE HAS been no strike in the last dozen years which truly threatened the national welfare."

That's what David L. Cole, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service told the recent labor-management relations conference at the Univ. of Notre Dame.

"We haven't given collective bargaining a chance to work in major disputes in recent years," said Cole, advocating a policy of curtailed government intervention in labor disputes.

Cole declared the frequency of critical strikes will be reduced if the parties to a labor dispute rely on collective bargaining rather than government intervention to solve their difficulties.

Government's role, he contended, should be that of a mediator, assisting, not compelling, the parties to bargain.

House Group Hears Reuther On Taft-Hartley Changes

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will testify this week before the House Labor Committee now holding hearings on Taft-Hartley amendments.

Reuther will unveil CIO's views on seven fundamentals changes in the controversial labor relations law.

Last week the committee heard AFL Pres. George Meany call for 10 major amendments in the law which he charged instigated and prolonged industrial disputes.

The National Association of Manufacturers urged an outright ban on industry-wide bargaining and a tougher Taft-Hartley in testimony before the House committee.

George W. Armstrong, Jr., president of Texas Steel Co. and NAM spokesman, opposed even minor liberalizing amendments introduced by Sen. Taft and in line with Pres. Eisenhower's campaign speeches.

He proposed outlawing of all forms of union security (to bring T-H in line with state "right to work" laws), bar any regional or industry bargaining (as proposed by Rep. Lucas), give employers full "captive audience" rights, weaken the National Labor Relations Board and increase state labor powers, and prohibit refusal to handle struck work.

Meantime, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) introduced amendments designed to end "excessive delay" in the handling of Labor Board cases.

'Close Draft Escape Hatch,' Report To President Urges

THE NATIONAL Manpower Council, on which the CIO is represented, has called on Pres. Eisenhower "to close the escape hatch" in the student deferment program through which college undergraduates become draft exempt by marrying and having children.

"This sort of loophole is wholly inconsistent with the principle that military service should be shared generally by all men of military age, except for those with severe handicaps," James D. Zellerbach, NMC chairman, reported.

Zellerbach said that the council has found "good reason for the complaints" about the student deferment system, which has been attacked as a means of "keeping rich boys and smart boys from being drafted."

"We found," he added, "that deferment—which was supposed to mean postponement of military service—actually was being converted into exemption from military service for many students. This comes about when young men originally deferred for their education get married and ultimately obtain additional deferment as fathers."

The NMC was created by Eisenhower, under a Ford Foundation grant, when he was president of Columbia Univ. Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers is a member.

"The aesthetic lessons for Miss LaRue in the art of the terpsichore is not to be construed, I'm afraid, as a deductible item for the general cultural advancement and enlightenment of society at large."

How To Rook Uncle Sam—

Time To Shed A Tear For Big Boys

AS YOU GROPE your way through the maze of income tax blanks which lead to Mar. 15, pause for a moment to mourn for "the talented executive—today's forgotten man."

He's the poor little rich boy, whose pay envelope is so stuffed that he's in the upper tax brackets. It's real tough to earn a million dollars a year that way, scores of tax experts say as they plug their pet gimmicks for making big salaries and paying tiny taxes.

Latest in the "how-to-rook-the-government-and-stay-out-of-the-federal-pen" series is "Executive Pay Plans," touted as 160 pages of inside dope no "talented executive" should be without.

No two-bit job, "Executive Pay Plans" sells for $12.50. But the tax "saving," as the experts call it, more than repays the investment. For the $12.50, the TE/TFM (that's talented executive/today's forgotten man) learns how to get his salary in bonuses, deferred compensation, stock options, pensions, profit sharing, insurance, company benefits, expense arrangements and lots of other gimmicks.

It could be called, "How to Get Your Cake and Keep Uncle Sam from Having a Crumb."

Meanwhile the Wall Street Journal reports the latest dodge to avoid paying taxes on bank deposit interests. Uncle Sam gets reports from banks of all interest paid totaling $600 or more. That's so tax agents can spot the chiselers.

Worried for fear Uncle Sam might get reports on interest payments of $100 or more, and thus nab lots more chiselers, big depositers are splitting deposits into a number of banks, the Wall Street Journal reports.

That way their interest will come just under the mark at which the banks have to report to the government.

Now take another aspirin and go back to figuring your income tax. And don't expect a book on how workers can duck tax payments.

CIO's T-H Proposals

Reuther Asks Sweeping Changes

—See Pages 3, 6 & 7

FLASH-GUN CAMERAS popped and television cameras whirred last week as CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther began a full-dress presentation of the CIO case for "substantial" amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act at hearings before the House Labor Committee. CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg is at his left. Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.), committee chairman, is at extreme right behind table. (Stories, another picture on Page 3.)

EXCLUSIVE—

Congress Paring Stalls Social Security Pay

By MILTON PLUMB

THE "TIME for a change" has arrived for the nation's millions of aged, widows, and orphans who get social security benefits.

Thanks to GOP "economy" operations in Congress, they're going to get it in the neck.

Payments won't come so soon.

It'll take a lot longer to qualify—the time jumping from 27 to 72 days.

And the government's backlog of unhandled social security claims will increase by 33.3%—from 143,000 now to 202,000 by June 30.

It's all a result of some of the strangest "economy" reasoning ever exhibited by Congress. The actual fact is that not a single penny of appropriated funds will be saved. And it all happened in the face of Pres. Eisenhower's repeated proposals to expand social security.

Blame for bringing about this serious delay, however, falls on the House Appropriations Committee under the chairmanship of Rep. Taber (R. N.Y.). The committee turned down a request from the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance for an increase of $4,360,000 in its authorization for salaries and administrative expenses.

No appropriation was involved, since OASI operating costs come out of its own special reserve fund made up of social security payments from workers and their employers. The fund has a substantial surplus.

Yet even Taber's aides acknowledged that the bureau has a problem. The Appropriations Committee recommended an increase of only $2 million in the OASI authorization, but pointed out that the 1952 social security amendments had "substantially increased" bureau's work.

Last September, for example, more than 4.5 million social security accounts had to be revised to the new scale of benefits enacted by Congress. In addition, 165,000 new claims, resulting largely from new eligibility standards, had to be processed.

Congress also added substantially to the bureau's clerical work by providing social security wage credits for military service.

Handling this bigger workload meant a bigger backlog. Where the time to process each claim was 27 days last July, it has already increased to 50 days now and will stretch out to 72 by June 30.

Since the House went along with its Appropriation Committee's refusal to give the agency the additional $2,360,000 authorization needed to keep up with its work, and the Senate concurred, the bureau faces a personnel crisis.

The result:

1. It will not be able to fill any of the 600 jobs that, through normal turnover, will become vacant between now and June 30.

2. It will have to lay off for part of the remainder of the fiscal year about 500 additional employes, thus making bigger the backlog of unhandled cases.

What makes the action so ironic is that the OASI program has an outstanding record of efficient administration.

The bureau's total administrative costs, including salaries, amount to only 2.25% of the total of social security contributions. Few commercial banking establishments could match that low overhead operating under government administrative requirements.

Standby Price Curbs Supported By Carey As 'Preparedness'

STANDBY inflation controls would be "a real contribution to American preparedness," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told Congress last week.

He supported "fair and equitable" standby economic stabilization measures in testimony before the Senate Banking Committee.

Such controls have been urged by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) since the Eisenhower Administration lifted wage controls and issued a series of sweeping decontrol orders which have removed virtually all price ceilings. The President has said that he is opposed to standby measures.

CAREY warned that the "loopholes" in the post-Korea controls must be avoided in any new standby measure.

He said that "nothing in the international picture has changed enough to lead us to believe that the Communist threat to our free institutions has abated."

"Tacks and turns there have been," he continued, "but the fundamental drive of the Communists to enslave the free world persists. So long as this active threat persists, our government must be armed with sufficient power to deal with any economic emergency that may arise out of the now cold, now hot war."

Carey recalled the sudden spurt in wholesale and raw material prices immediately after the Communist invasion of South Korea. He argued that if adequate standby authority had existed then, "immediate action could have been taken to curb the speculation, profiteering and inventory building that shot prices upward."

"The CIO does not favor controls for controls' sake," he explained, "but we view them as a necessity under the threat of sharp inflationary pressures."

He called for legislation geared to "the basic principle of equality of treatment and equality of sacrifice" and added:

"If this Congress is seriously considering passing a stand-by control bill, which includes the same kind of crippling price loopholes that plagued us in 1950, 1951 and 1952, then we suggest the subject be dropped post haste. The experience of the past two or three years demonstrates that either we have an effective and enforceable price and wage stabilization system, or better have none."

HE CALLED for "a well thought out, carefully drafted" law, which would be "fair and equitable" and which would "override partisan interests."

Such a measure, he suggested, could be drafted if the Defense Production Act of 1952 were revised so as to "eliminate some of the original defects as well as the special interest amendments that have riddled it during the past two years."

"Why wait for the fire to break out before you lay in the best possible fire-fighting equipment?" he asked the Congress, urging it give the President "the kind of fire-fighting equipment he may need so long as the emergency lasts."

Another Decontrol Order Issued

The government took another whack at price ceilings last week, removing controls from beer, coffee, all other consumer goods still under price restrictions, and thousands of industrial items.

Velde Retreats From Plan To Probe Parsons

REP. VELDE got caught last week in an ecclesiastical buzzsaw. The chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee said the group might investigate ministers, then beat a hasty retreat.

On a radio broadcast, the Illinois Republican said the investigation probably would be made next year, that it would cover what he called communism in the churches and Communist "infilitration" of the clergy.

Within a few hours after the broadcast, Velde was under fire from Republican and Democratic congressmen and from a number of ministers.

Vice Pres. Nixon, who reportedly is trying to "coordinate" the multiple anti-Communist investigations in the GOP 83rd Congress, visited the House and conferred with Speaker Martin.

VELDE'S.. fellow investigators, Sens. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and Jenner (Ind.), turned their backs on his plan to probe the parsons.

Then the un-American Activities Committee chief backtracked, claimed his straightforward radio announcement had been "misinterpreted." (The GOP Washington Star commented "there is not the slightest basis for this claim. It seems quite possible that Mr. Velde's plea of misinterpretation is a second-thought reaction to the chilly reception accorded his original remarks . . .")

—Herblock in Washington Post
"I Can't Stand It, I Tell You. It's Driving Me Batty."

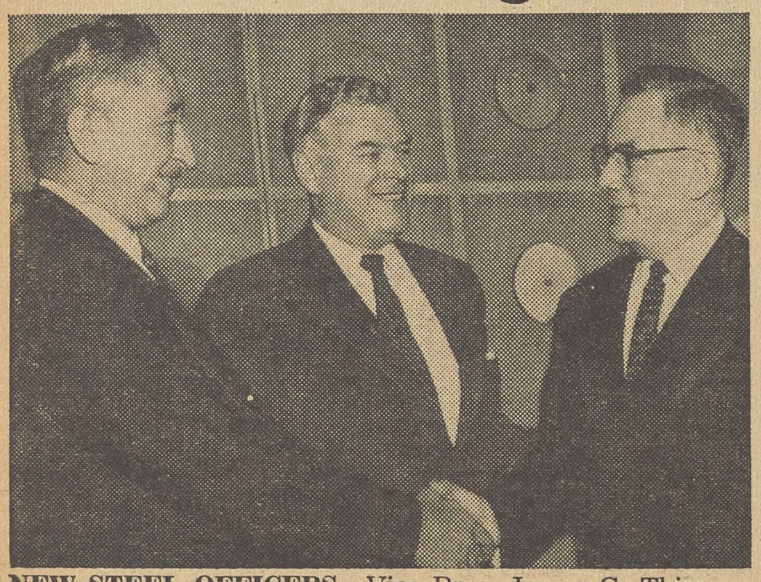
Velde's own minister, the Rev. Joseph H. Albrecht of the Pekin, Ill., Methodist Church, called such an inquiry "very dangerous to democracy. It seems to me this attack on freedom of religion and freedom of speech is a tragedy."

JUST the day before Velde's broadcast, Rev. C. S. Lowell of a Washington, D. C., Methodist church, had predicted a McCarthy - Jenner - Velde move against the churches.

In Congress, Rep. Kearney (R. N. Y.), second ranking member of the un-American Activities group, said he was "absolutely opposed" to Velde's plan.

Rep. Walter (D. Pa.), also a member of the committee, said he would demand a bar on any investigation unless a majority of the full committee has approved. And Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) introduced a resolution calling for Velde's ouster as committee chairman.

McDonald Pledges Steel Union Organizing Drive



NEW STEEL OFFICERS—Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes (left) congratulates Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel while Pres. David J. McDonald looks on as CIO Steelworkers install new officers at special executive board meeting.

DAVID J. McDONALD, secretary-treasurer of the CIO Steelworkers since its organization, became the union's second president last week.

Elected without opposition for the new full term beginning June 1, he was named to fill the interim vacancy created by the death of his friend and mentor, Philip Murray. Sworn in to succeed him as secretary-treasurer, for the interim period, was I. W. Abel, director of the union's Dist. 27 in Ohio, who likewise will take over for the full term on June 1. John Johns succeeded Abel on the same basis.

The ceremony took place at union headquarters in Pittsburgh before the international executive board and staff members. McDonald marked the occasion with an aggressive address promising a widespread organizing campaign which may go beyond U. S. boundries and, he declared, will make the union the largest in the CIO.

"I'm not talking about raiding," he said. "I'm talking about organizing the unorganized."

The USA-CIO plans to do more than challenge the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers among metal miners in the western U. S., McDonald said, and to push organizing in the new iron mines in Quebec and Labrador.

THE UNION is giving serious study, he continued, to big organizing drives in the bauxite (aluminum ore) and iron mines in Venezuela, Guatemala and Jamaica to "protect the standards of Steelworkers in the U. S. and Canada."

He warned the labor movement to expect no help from the Eisenhower Administration, but said that "doors have been opened . . . and if needs be, we can enter."

CIO Asks Sweeping T-H Changes

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO's CASE for "substantial" amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act was presented in detail to the House Labor Committee last week by Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

In a 15,000-word statement, supplemented by oral testimony, he also reiterated the CIO conviction that the act must "ultimately" be repealed.

"In a free society," he told the committee at an open hearing on T-H amendments, "there can be no substitute for good faith at the collective bargaining table or the voluntary acceptance of social responsibility by both labor and management.

"Taft-Hartley has discouraged good faith at the collective bargaining table and has substituted unwarranted government interferences in the bargaining processes.

T-H Unworkable

"The Taft-Hartley Act is unworkable and unfair. Industrial peace and economic stability will be attained through extension and acceptance of collective bargaining in American industry, and not through repressive legislation."

Although the CIO is convinced that the act eventually will be repealed, Reuther said, it is not "doctrinaire."

"We are realists," he said, "well acquainted with the political facts of life.

"Therefore . . . we are ready . . . to cooperate with any sincere effort so to amend the law as to bring it into line with its professed purposes to encourage collective bargaining and to protect the exercise by workers 'of full freedom of association' and 'self-organization.' "

Industrial peace will be fostered and the entire country must deal with truly fundamental issues.

"The most fundamental is that the underlying philosophy of the Taft-Hartley Act is hostile to unions and collective bargaining, and that its provisions are deliberately designed to frustrate them."

Reuther cited for the committee several specific sections of the act to buttress in detail his charge that it "is designed in sly and subtle ways to thwart the rights it purports to accord to workers and their unions." He continued:

Act Not Bona Fide

"The Taft-Hartley Act is not, as its prelude declares, a bona fide attempt to promote the nation's economic welfare and industrial peace by encouraging collective bargaining and protecting the rights of employes to join unions.

"If the Taft-Hartley Act did really seek these ends, even by means we might regard as mistaken, we would not say it should be dropped and a fresh start made.

"It is only because we believe its real purpose is to block unionization and hamper collective bargaining that we have said, and say once again, that it cannot serve even as a good point of departure for a sound labor relations law . . .

"The Taft-Hartley law has not destroyed the American labor movement. Our roots are sunk too deeply in the aspirations of people who work for a living for that.

"But if it has not destroyed the labor movement, it has seriously impaired the extension of the benefits of unionism to new areas.

"This is indeed one of the great ironies of the Taft-Hartley law; it has affected most the weaker unions, and the workers who need the benefits of organization the most.

"The established unions in the important basic industries—steel, autos, rubber, clothing—the workers, in short, whom CIO speaks for largely, have been able to hold their own and to make advances.

"There is good evidence, however, that the atmosphere engendered by Taft-Hartley has leveled off what had been previously been the rising curve of union membership."

Between the passage of the Wagner Act and of T-H, Reuther recalled, union membership responded "very sensitively" to the increase in employment—as more workers found jobs, more of them joined unions. But since T-H was enacted in 1947, he said, union membership has leveled off at "somewhere around 16 million" despite a 5.4 million increase in the number of non-agricultural workers.

Members Hold Firm

T-H has sought to "create the image of labor unions run by bloated union bosses fattening on the backs of powerless union members," he said, and to create incentives for division between union officers and members.

The effort has failed, he asserted, "because the union member knows better," and is demonstrated by overwhelming support of demands for union shop elections.

"I am prepared to offer a bit of gratuitous advice," he said. "The surest way to cement the unity of a labor organization is to provide for such tests as union shop elections and last offer ballots.

"In the face of what our members regard as an attack on their union, they tend to rally even more strongly to its support in time of crisis."

Reuther suggested the committee operate on the basis that unions are made up of people who have a concern for the national welfare, and will respond better to a sense of responsibility than to government-by-injunction under the Taft-Hartley Act.

No 'Sugar-coating'

However, amendments must be of a substantial nature if they are to restore fairness to labor - management relations, Reuther declared. He agreed that adoption of the CIO proposals would amount to repeal of the act.

"Mere sugar-coating won't do," he explained. "Justice and fairness in the law are what Pres. Eisenhower has promised to labor. Justice and fairness are all we ask. Justice and fairness, we hope, are what the Congress wants.

"Justice and fairness cannot be achieved by the limited amendments which have been proposed in some quarters . . .

"If real justice and fairness are to be achieved, amendments benefit if the law is so changed, he said. With the elimination of "undue" restrictions against unions, he continued, "responsible management and responsible labor" will move toward the common goal of insuring economic and social justice.

"SUGAR-COATING won't do," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the House Labor Committee in urging "substantial" amendments for overhauling the Taft-Hartley Act. CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg is at right.

Reuther Invites Lawmakers To See 'Democracy In Action'

"There is no more democratic and incorruptible institution in our modern life than the union."

That's what CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the House Labor Committee. Talking of union democracy and the repsonsiveness of elected officials to the will of union members, Reuther noted the UAW-CIO would shortly hold its convention in Atlantic City.

"I think," he said, "that the committee can take judicial notice of the fact that our delegates will not be inhibited in any way in exercising their full and complete democratic rights."

He invited the committee members to attend the convention and see "democracy in action." "I'm sure," he added, "that your presence will not inhibit the delegates any more than mine does."

FAIRNESS, justice and equity were set forth as the only sound base for national labor relations legislations by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in response to the barrage of questions fired at him last week by the House Labor Committee.

Queries about the effects of Taft-Hartley were asked by more than a score of congressmen. Like the flashbulbs of an equal number of photographers covering the hearing, they were popped in rapid succession—and from all directions—during the day-long session.

Some questions, particularly those of Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.) were apparently intended only to express the congressman's hostility to labor.

Most, however, reflected a sincere desire to realize Committee Chairman McConnell's (R. Pa.) announced objective of "getting at the truth" about Taft-Hartley.

'Negative Approach'

Rep. Perkins (D. Ky.), opened with a request that Reuther, president also of the CIO Auto Workers, explain that union's experiences in collective bargaining under the law. The CIO leader did so, pointing out that Taft-Hartley actually increased industrial strife by giving those opposed to labor added weapons at the bargaining table.

"Taft-Hartley has failed because it is essentially a negative approach to problems that require a positive solution," he summarized.

In response to questions from Reps. Lucas (D. Tex.)—and author of a NAM-endorsed anti-union bill—and Wainwright (R. N. Y.) Reuther said that in every country where there is a strong free labor movement communism is weak, but that in those countries where labor is weak communism is strongest. He named the Scandinavian countries and Britain and Austria as examples of the former and France and Italy illustrative of the latter.

'Their Fair Share'

Gwinn jumped in then to argue that unions stood for "compulsion that was affecting Europe's economy adversely.

"Isn't it true," he asked, "that the unions are supporting New Deal or socialist programs?"

Reuther replied that Gwinn was correct only if he called programs designed to insure that workers and their families get a "fair share" of the national income "socialism."

"The achievement of a full economy in peacetime is the most basic problem our free

Reuther Appears On 'Meet The Press'

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on "Meet the Press," a television press conference, on Sunday, Mar. 29.

The show, carried on the National Broadcasting Co.'s TV network, originates in Washington at 6:00 p.m. (EST).

Reuther will answer questions posed by a panel of top Washington newsmen.

He Learned It The Hard Way

Rep. Frelinghuysen (R. N. J.) called CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther a "philosopher, economist and, I might say, something of a politician" when he completed his Taft-Hartley testimony before the House Labor Committee.

Asked where he had been educated, Reuther replied that he had completed three years of college while working in Detroit and "the rest I got from being pushed around."

Where CIO Wants T-H Changed

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther urged that fundamental amendments to Taft-Hartley include:

1. Elimination of injunctions.
2. Elimination of undue government interference with collective bargaining.
3. Elimination of hampering restraints on union organization and activity.
4. Elimination of provisions designed to harass and weaken unions.
5. Simplification of the law and elimination of unnecessary delays.
6. End disruption of collective bargaining by artificial carving out of craft unions.
7. Elimination of sections permitting employer coercion and intimidation.

Ready For A Killing

Almost every year since World War II, the landlords and builders have tried to kill rent controls, and usually have weakened them.

This year they are moving in for the kill again, and counting on some Republican lawmakers to do the job.

Their intended victims are the millions of plain American families, cooped up in flats and apartments, unable to buy or to build—and faced with rent boosts which would amount to extortion if ceilings are removed.

The record is plain in those cities where rent ceilings have been killed. In Milwaukee, for example, the Office of Rent Stabilization has reported that rents climbed 42% in some three years.

And the economics of the national housing picture are plain, too. As CIO pointed out to a House committee last week, the U. S. has a housing shortage of three million units. That means a continuing pressure for housing space which —if ceilings are killed—will leave tenants at the landlords' mercy. And it gives urgency to letting your congressman know you want strong rent curbs continued.

That 'Terrible' Debt

What a whale of a difference a few Republican votes make—to paraphrase an old advertising slogan.

Last year, the national debt was terrible—so long as it could be blamed on Democrats.

This year, the conservative writers seem to be taking a different view of things. Thus, the magazine Business Week decides that the national debt is "not at the moment" any threat to our national prosperity.

In 1929, Business Week reminds us, it "took 8% of our total national income to carry our debts"; "it takes only about 5% of the income today." Why? Because of lower interest rates—and because Fair Deal policies have worked to boost the national income way up.

We're glad to read the Business Week article and be reassured.

Reminds us, as a matter of fact, of the stories of how the budget was going to be slashed and taxes cut to the bone.

New Faces; Same Policies?

Mr. Nikolai M. Shvernik has just been named chairman of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions of the Soviet Union.

Who elected him to that high post? Not the workers, nor their unions. Mr. Shvernik was appointed to the job by the government, or by the Communist Party, or by Georgi Malenkov—it's not clear from the Moscow reports.

Mr. Vasili Kuznetsov, who had held the post now given to Mr. Shvernik, became a deputy foreign minister. But his term didn't last long. Within the week, he was named Soviet ambassador to Communist China.

Having studied at Carnegie Tech in the 1930's, and having learned a few things about America from the CIO in the war-time period of cooperation, Mr. Kuznetsov at least has the advantage of knowing that America is not a land of "Wall Street imperialists."

But Mr. Shvernik, moving from government to the top job in the unions, and Mr. Kuznetsov, moving in the opposite direction, indicate clearly how the government and the Communist Party own and control the Soviet trade unions.

The New Stalinism

THE FREE WORLD is fighting the new Stalinism by doing exactly as the Communists want us to, according to Otto Leichter, American correspondent for several Swiss and Austrian publications.

His views appeared in an article in the March issue of The Progressive magazine that reached readers shortly before Josef Stalin's death. They now hold added interest as offering possible clues to Soviet Russia's future course under Georgi Malenkov.

Leichter claims the "historic new theories" recently proclaimed by Stalin "emphasize the divorce of Soviet philosophy from even the distorted Marxism hitherto advocated" by Communists.

The former Russian leader's aim, he says, apparently was the elimination of certain Marxian concepts which might embarrass and weaken Soviet claims. His alteration of Marxism was undertaken solely to promote the speedy increase of Soviet power and influence, the author holds.

"Behind the new theories," Leichter writes, "is the goal of forcing the West to exhaust its economic reserves in an armament race while the USSR attempts to appear as a peace-loving power.

Try To Stop Social Gains

"Stalin hopes to stop social progress in the democracies by requiring greater expenditures for guns than for butter. By straining the economic resources of such countries as England and France to the utmost, Russian policy attempts to make them more vulnerable to revolutionary developments in Iran, Egypt, Tunis and Morocco.

"A tougher attitude by the West toward colonies and underdeveloped nations, caused by economic difficulties at home, is exactly in line with the Soviet book. The more reactionary America can be made to seem, the more effective will the new Stalinism function for the Soviet Union.

"Many Americans, particularly those who are exploiting the country's natural anti-communism, have failed to understand this Stalin strategy.

"The new theories should help them appreciate that the long-run menace of the Kremlin does not lie in the field of direct military aggression, but far more in its capacity for mischief in exploiting social and economic weaknesses.

"Clearly, our driving need is to promote the social defenses of democracy and widen our democratic horizons by extending these improvements to the people of the less developed areas. This must be our counter-action to insure not only an avoidance of war, but the establishment of a better world.

"We have geared most of our effort to counter Soviet military aggression. We have been fighting present-day communism by doing exactly what they wanted us to do. An analysis of Stalin's new theories exposes the traps his policies have set—traps we have not succeeded in avoiding."

Leichter says that Stalin's new theories can be boiled down to the following:

"Capitalism and communism need not clash violently, for present-day communism 'does not pursue the purpose of overthrowing capitalism and the establishment of socialism.

Theories Analyzed

" 'In this respect the contemporary movement for peace is distinguished from the movement in the period of the First World War for the transformation of an imperialist war into a civil war, since this later movement went further and pursued socialist purposes. . . .'

"Stalin, thus, wants a clear line to be drawn between yesterday's Bolshevism and today's communism.

"Conflicts caused by unlimited competition among capitalist countries . . . remain inescapable, but only within the sphere of capitalism, according to Stalin. As long as there is imperialism—and all capitalist countries, and only they, are imperialist to Stalin—there will be wars."

Leichter says Stalin viewed world capitalism as undergoing "intensifying disintegration" because of the economic growth of nations which have come into the Soviet orbit. Capitalism is shrinking and communism expanding, he says the Soviet leader holds. Monopoly capitalism is "the latest and obviously the last" stage of capitalism, according to the new Stalinism.

"To sustain these foundations of the new Soviet philosophy," Leichter observes, "Stalin was forced to omit several of the more important teachings of the Marxian school in its Bolshevist version."

Stalin also had discarded the theory of the class struggle, which Lenin applied to international relations, Leichter says.

The world's late top Communist in addition had abandoned the Marxian theory that business cycles and depressions are crucial characteristics of capitalism, the writer asserts. To replace it, Leichter continues, Stalin had invented a theory of a "universal crisis."

By Public Affairs Institute

RECENTLY the House Ways and Means Committee approved H. R. 1, by Rep. Daniel Reed (R. N.Y.), a bill publicized as an 11% cut in individual income taxes.

What Would Reed's Tax Bill Do?

The bill is now "bottled up" because Pres. Eisenhower and his advisers say we cannot cut taxes until we cut government spending and balance the budget; they concede this is improbable this year. But passage of the bill is always possible.

H.R. 1 is not really a "tax cut." Shortly after the Korean war started Congress voted a temporary 11% income tax increase scheduled to end Dec. 31.

The Reed bill would bring the expiration date six months closer to June 30—the day the excess profits tax is scheduled to end. Reed is fearful of the political consequences of giving tax relief to the wealthiest businesses unless the burden of the smaller taxpayer is eased too.

Help For Business First

The congressman told a recent building industry conference that lowering taxes would raise Federal revenues by stimulating business and payrolls. "Businessmen . . . did a grand job for the country," Reed said. "I'm going to help them get tax reductions."

A basic means of stimulating business is to increase the purchasing power of the mass of lower and middle income families. Would the Reed bill do this?

Here are the savings which a couple with two dependent children would make under the bill based upon net income after the standard 10% deduction:

Year's Net Income	Present 1953 Tax	6 Months' Savings	Each Week's Savings
$3000	$133.20	$ 6.60	$ .35
4000	355.20	17.60	.68
5000	577.20	28.60	1.10
8000	1,281.60	64.00	2.46
This is what the higher income taxpayers will save:
$25,000	7,004.00	348.00	16.93
50,000	21,088.00	1,084.00	41.69
100,000	56,032.00	2,032.00	74.65
500,000	411,224.00	4,344.00	167.88

It's estimated that between 40 and 50% of U. S. taxpayers have taxable net incomes of $3000 or less a year. About 20% have incomes above $5000. Almost one-half of all taxpayers, with $3000 a year or less net taxable income, would receive not more than 35c a week tax relief under H.R. 1.

Taxpayers at the top of the gross income ladder, a very small group (less than ½ of 1%), earn over 168 times as much as the taxpayer at the lower 50%. Yet under the Reed bill they will get up to 670 times more tax relief than the bottom 50%.

So that in terms of the differences in their incomes, the Reed bill actually favors the richest taxpayers by a 4 to 1 ratio.

Who Needs Tax Aid?

Many believe that in planning tax reductions, first consideration should be given to maintaining minimum health and welfare standards for the family.

Based upon Labor Dept. estimates a minimum budget for a city worker's family of four, exclusive of federal and state income taxes, requires $3938 today.

Average weekly earnings for a factory worker with three dependents after taxes and deductions, amounted to $63.80 in 1952. His annual average earnings after taxes came to $3317. Thus this family got $620 less than a minimum health and decency budget requires.

It would appear that this is the first group which should be given tax relief. It is certainly not the group to discriminate against.

Illinois Hails Haywood

THE ILLINOIS Legislature's lower house has unanimously adopted a resolution mourning Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, as one of the State's "most distinguished sons."

The resolution traced Haywood's rise in the labor movement from his membership in the British Miners Federation.

He was hailed "as an ardent advocate of true Americanism" who "took an active part in ridding the labor movement of communism and communistic influence."

"Not only has the labor movement been deprived of one of its most able leaders," the resolution continued, "but the State of Illinois has lost one of its most distinguished sons."

The House then resolved to "express profound sorrow" at Haywood's death, and extended sympathy to his family.

The resolution was offered by Rep. Preihs (D.) of Pana, which is near Taylorsville, Haywood's home town.

The CIO Newspaper Guild's Intl. Executive Board at its quarterly meeting resolved that "it was tragically fitting that" Haywood "should have died as he lived—in serving labor and in preaching brotherhood."

World Of Labor—

Philippine Labor Seeks Gains In Stormy Campaign For President

(Last week Ramon Magsaysay, former defense secretary of the Philippines, withdrew from the Administration Liberal Party, joined the opposition Nacionalista Party and announced his candidacy for the presidency. The following report from a special correspondent outlines some of the labor issues in the Philippines.—The Editor.)

MANILA—Philippine labor is directly involved in the political crisis rapidly developing in the islands since the resignation of Defense Sec. Ramon Magsaysay.

Differences between Magsaysay and Pres. Elpidio Quirino over the government's campaign against the Communist-led Huks are given as the reason for Magsaysay's resignation. The differences, however, run much deeper.

Magsaysay is a vigorous, progressive man who acts and thinks as a democrat. He understands and sympathizes with the principles and objectives of free labor unions and of free collective bargaining.

The Quirino Administration, chiefly through the President himself, through Labor Sec. Jose Figueras and Pascual Espinosa, chairman of the House Labor Committee, has fought tooth and nail against the enactment of modern legislation that would give labor in the Philippines the rights of free organization and free collective bargaining.

Labor's Rights Curbed

The enactment of such legislation was agreed upon when the Philippine government, in signing the Quirino-Foster Agreement, accepted the recommendations of the Bell Mission sent to the islands by former Pres. Truman to survey the social and economic needs of the new republic. The Bell Mission, among many other recommendations, proposed new legislation to give labor freedom to organize and to bargain.

The Philippine Senate unanimously passed a bill carrying out the Bell Mission's mandate. It was subsequently tabled in the House on a technicality after a last-minute, frantic scramble by the Quirino Administration to prevent its passage.

At present labor here cannot organize freely because the secretary of labor, under powers given to him in Commonwealth Act 213, can refuse to register or can cancel the registration of any union and thus destroy its legal personality. This he can do and does as a simple administrative act without notifying the union, without preferring charges, without a hearing, and with no appeal possible.

The Quirino Administration, through Labor Sec. Figueras, has effectively controlled for purely political purposes the National Confederation of Trade Unions (NACTU). Even unions which abhor NACTU are intimidated into joining it under threat of cancellation of their permit by the labor secretary, who is honorary president of NACTU.

At present, labor cannot bargain freely because Commonwealth Act 103 empowers the Court of Industrial Relations to invoke anti-strike injunctions and compulsory arbitration in any and all labor disputes over which it has jurisdiction. Employers refuse to bargain since they can apply immediately to court, which is influenced strongly by employer interests, and thereby evade direct negotiations with unions.

Curb Arbitration

The labor bill which passed the Senate would completely repeal the labor secretary's powers over union registration. It also would limit injunctions and compulsory arbitration to "national interest" disputes. It would establish a code of unfair labor practices, machinery for employe representation elections and transform the Court of Industrial Relations into a body more like the U. S. National Labor Relations Board.

Labor in the Philippines is organized into heterogeneous, conglomerate unions and federations, but no national organizations. Most unions are company-controlled; others are government-controlled; others by a combination of these two.

Many licensed by the Labor Dept. as unions are in reality labor-boss gangs without any democratic procedures or collective bargaining functions. The boss collects, and in considerable part retains, wages in contravention of law.

Two organizations chiefly—the Philippine Association of Free Labor Unions, led by Cipriano Cid, and the Federation of Free Workers, whose president is Juan C. Tan—are in the forefront of the fight for a free labor movement. They are supported in the provinces by the Democratic Labor Association and the Free Visayan Workers. All these have been under strong government attack.

Reuther Tells—

How Free World Can Defeat Reds

DEATH of Soviet Dictator Josef Stalin doesn't change the fundamentals of the free world's fight against communism, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week.

Instead, he predicted, it gives the opportunity for "a psychological offensive against communism" that will build up and strengthen democracy and social betterment at home and abroad.

"I don't think the death of Stalin, or any handful of men, changes the situation," Reuther observed. "There is a revolution going on in the world and the Communists didn't start it."

Reuther, also president of the CIO Auto Workers, spoke at the annual fund-raising dinner of Roosevelt College, a liberal-labor supported school in Chicago.

"We must strip the Communists of the opportunity of exploiting poverty and injustice," he said.

"Adequate military strength to meet Communist aggression wherever it raises its ugly head is essential," Reuther conceded.

"But the contest between democracy and communism," he then emphasized, "must be won on the economic and social fronts in the field of human betterment.

"I am confident that the free world has the economic resources and the moral and spiritual strength to win the struggle."

The CIO president struck hard at all forms of "discrimination and second class citizenship" as weakening the U. S. throughout the world. He proposed:

- "Enactment of a federal fair employment practices law with enforcement provisions, anti-lynch and other basic civil rights legislation.
- "Repeal of the discriminatory and un-American McCarran Immigration Act, which has created antagonism, bitterness and distrust among our allies in Europe.
- "Aggressive steps must be taken to stop the growing campaign of fear, hatred and hysteria that under the guise of defending freedom in the world would strangle freedom in America.

"Civil rights may be a minority problem in America, but in the world struggle against Communist tyranny, it is a majority problem, for more than one-half of the people of the world have dark skin."

CIO Pres. Reuther's Taft-Hartley Testimony

'This Is The Road

"Sugar-coating won't do." That's what CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told the House Labor Committee last week in a full-dress presentation of CIO's case for "substantial" amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

Here are text-exerpts from some of the major sections of Reuther's lengthy statement:

Introduction

THE CIO OPPOSED this law when it was enacted, and we have opposed it ever since. We sincerely believe the best and most wholesome approach would be to wipe the slate clean and start anew.

The CIO is pledged to the ultimate repeal of Taft-Hartley. But there is nothing doctrinaire about the CIO's approach to this important subject. And we are realists, well acquainted with the political facts of life.

Therefore, we are ready even though we think it would be better to discard Taft-Hartley and enact a new statute, to cooperate with any sincere effort to so amend the law as to bring it into line with its professed purposes to encourage collective bargaining and to protect the exercise by workers "of full freedom of association" and "self-organization."

The entire country will benefit if the law is so changed. Industrial peace will be fostered. When undue restrictions against unions are eliminated, responsible management and responsible labor will move forward toward our common goal of insuring economic and social justice, which is the bulwark of our national prosperity and security.

'Justice, Fairness'

If amendments to Taft-Hartley are to achieve the goal of restoring equity to our labor-management relations, they must be of a substantial nature. Mere sugar-coating won't do.

Justice and fairness in the law are what Pres. Eisenhower has promised to labor. Justice and fairness are all we ask. Justice and fairness, we hope, are what the Congress wants.

Justice and fairness cannot be achieved by the limited amendments which have been proposed in some quarters, and which are designed to: restore to economic strikers their right to vote in Labor Board elections; extend the non-Communist affidavits to employers as well as union officers; and to liberalize the union security provisions for only a limited group of workers.

Hostile To Unions

The most fundamental issue is that the underlying philosophy of the Taft-Hartley Act is hostile to unions and collective bargaining, and that its provisions are deliberately designed to frustrate them.

Let me give you illustrations of this. One section orders the General Counsel to seek an injunction if he has reason to believe that unions are committing certain unfair labor practices.

It is significant that only the unfair labor practices of unions against employers merit this expedited treatment. The unfair labor practice of an employer against the union, however, can plow its way through the endless routine of Board procedure until the union is destroyed.

The unfair labor practice procedure was apparently not enough to deter unions from committing certain acts. The authors also felt it necessary to reinforce the unfair labor practice procedure with a provision for damage suits against these acts of unions.

And here is the significant point: no employer unfair labor practice is specified as a cause of action in a damage suit—only the unfair labor practice of unions.

AdministrationDelays Proposals On T-H

The Eisenhower Administration last week delayed its proposals to Congress for amending the Taft-Hartley Act.

Sen. Taft (O.), Republican Senate leader, after conferring at the White House with Pres. Eisenhower, Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin, and other congressional leaders, said the Administration will not make any recommendations until House and Senate hearings are completed.

Hearings before the House Labor Committee have been under way for several weeks, while the Senate Labor subcommittee, headed by GOP Leader Taft, voted late last week to begin T-H hearings on Mar. 24.

The subcommittee turned down, 4 to 3, a proposal by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) to delay hearings until the Eisenhower Administration is ready to submit its recommendations.

Taft predicted there could be agreement on about 15 amendments. Some are "substantial," he said, but refused to identify them. He suggested it "might be wise" to provide "more direct" means of controlling Communist-dominated unions, but wouldn't get specific.

The authors of this legislation were clearly ardent believers in a double standard.

Taft-Hartley strengthened the hand of the most anti-union employer groups, and gave to those who only grudgingly accept labor unions and who obeyed the Wagner Act with ill-concealed hostility, new hope of smashing unions.

The Taft-Hartley Act created an atmosphere which encouraged anti-union attitudes by employers—a result which, in and of itself, destroys the basis for sound labor relations.

The Taft-Hartley law has not destroyed the American labor movement. Our roots are sunk too deeply in the aspirations of people who work for a living, for that.

Labor Foes Gain

But, if Taft-Hartley has not destroyed the labor movement, it has seriously impaired the extension of the benefits of unionism to new areas. This is indeed one of the great ironies of the Taft-Hartley law; it has affected most the weaker unions, and the workers who need the benefits of organization the most.

The established unions in the important basic industries — steel, autos, rubber, clothing, the workers, in short, whom CIO speaks for largely—have been able to hold their own and to make advances.

There is good evidence, however, that the atmosphere engendered by Taft-Hartley has leveled off what had previously been the rising curve of union membership.

Between 1935, when workers were made free to join unions of their own choosing, and 1947, when Taft-Hartley was enacted, union membership responded very sensitively to the increase in employment. As employment rose, a constantly increasing proportion of workers joined unions.

The passage of Taft-Hartley, however, ushered in a darker age. Despite increasing employment in non-agricultural establishments—from 41.4 million in 1946 to 46.8 million in 1952—union membership has leveled off at somewhere around 16 million.

Now some will argue, particularly those who don't like unions, that all that this represents is "the new freedom" established by the Taft-Hartley law—the freedom not to join a union. The facts, however, do not offer corroboration of this dim view of union development.

Loyalty To Unions

On the contrary, they demonstrate conclusively that the loyalty of the union member to his union remains unimpaired. Why would our members in steel and autos and oil, for example, have stayed on the picket line for weeks if they did not have full confidence in and loyalty to their unions.

Take a look at the results of the union shop elections conducted under the Taft-Hartley law. You will recall that until this requirement was stricken from the law in 1951 a union could not ask for a union shop unless it first received a majority vote of all the eligible voters. Mind you, this was not the majority of all the people voting, but a majority of all those who could vote. Despite these obstacles, our unions were able to win more than 90% of these union shop elections.

This was a result quite contrary to the expectations of the authors of this legislation. They had seriously indulged themselves in the delusion that if only a secret ballot were held, the workers would repudiate their unions.

Time Of Crisis

The surest way to cement the unity of a labor organization is to provide for such tests as union shop elections and last offer ballots. In the face of what our members regard as an attack on their union, they tend to rally even more strongly to its support in time of crisis.

The proponents of Taft-Hartley have hailed this law as the new day, but of course it is not. I do not think that anybody can successfully support the conclusion that the relationship between management and labor has been improved, or that strikes have been reduced, or that new paths of labor management collaboration have been plowed as a result of the act.

On the contrary, I think that the main effect of Taft-Hartley has been to worsen labor management relations. It has worsened labor management relations because it has provided anti-union minded employers with a new arsenal of weapons with which to beat us over the head.

Injunctions

This goes to the very heart of the Taft-Hartley philosophy of labor-management relations—its reliance upon the labor injunction.

It seems very strange to me, gentlemen, that I should have to appear before you at this day and age to argue the immorality of the labor injunction. This issue was settled, we thought, when the Norris-LaGuardia Act was enacted during Pres. Hoover's Administration.

Pres. Eisenhower has expressed pride that the Norris-LaGuardia Act was adopted during a previous Republican Administration. We regard it to be a tragedy that a subsequent Republican Congress emasculated the act through the Taft-Hartley injunction provisions.

I wish to recall to the committee Pres. Eisenhower's observation that injunctions, and I am quoting him, "will not settle the underlying fundamental problems which cause a strike." With this statement I am in full and hearty agreement. Of course they won't. They never have. They never will.

The labor injunction is immoral and unfair. It is contrary to the American concept of government by due process of law. It makes for labor war rather than peace.

There are several varieties of labor injunctions in the Taft-Hartley law, but they have one thing in common. They encourage the issuance of a court order restraining union activities before all the evidence is in. These injunctions are issued on the flimsiest of allegations and with no examination of the interests of the parties involved.

These injunctions are far different from an order of a court enforcing a Labor Board decision, which is issued only after: 1. a thorough field investigation by a National Labor Relations Board examiner,

Business Takes A Walk On Ike's T-H Advi

THE EISENHOWER Administration's first attempt at joint labor-industry-public discussion of industrial relations has come a cropper—because of a boycott by business members.

The five industry representatives on the Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee walked out on the second day of its deliberations on possible Taft-Hartley Act amendments.

Their action was in line with the stand of the National Association of Manufacturers, which opposes all tripartite government boards.

The Labor Dept.'s Advisory Committee was named by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin a month ago after being suggested by Pres. Eisenhower. A continuing body, it was given as its first task discussion and recommendation on T-H amendments which the Administration may propose.

But the business representatives balked at any recommendations. They objected to any vote on specific T-H changes, beginning with the immediate question of allowing strikers to vote in union representation elections. (Even Sen. Taft favors that one.)

So the businessmen walked out on Pres. Eisenhower's committee—the formal announcement said talks were "recessed"—just as they had on the Wage Stabilization Board late last year.

Their action was condemned by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who with CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald was a committee member. Reuther's statement follows in large part:

"The CIO members of the Labor Dept. Advisory Committee went into the meetings with the hope that we could help formulate a series of recommendations to the Secretary of Labor and the President on amending the Taft-Hartley Act.

"We did not enter those meetings with the idea of participating in a debating society. Taft-Hartley is sufficiently complex that it can be debated forever. We did hope that constructive proposals might emerge.

"The only way an advisory committee, or any other committee, can function and make recommendations, is by the normal democratic process of discussion and formulation of recommendations.

w the record will show that in many the grounds which the General Counsel alleges as a basis for seeking the injunction and on which it is granted are later found to be invalid by the National Labor Relations Board.

Taft-Hartley injunctions are unfair because only the unions are adversely affected. For example, the mandatory injunction provision is mandatory only with respect to union unfair labor practices. There is no corresponding mandatory injunction against the unfair labor practices by employers.

'Immoral And Unfair'

The discretionary injunction presumably applies to both, but even so it has been used overwhelmingly against the unfair labor practices of unions.

In the emergency disputes injunction, which is the most unfair of all, the provision is so written that for the 80-day injunction period the government must, under the law, line up on the side of the employer against the union.

This has been the record of every national emergency injunction to date. No matter what the merits of the strike are, no matter what the previous history of bargaining shows, no matter what the issues are, if the President finds the existence of an emergency he directs the Attorney General to apply for an injunction restraining the strike. Thus, without investigation or hearing on the merits of the dispute, a court puts the indelible stamp of illegality on the strike for 80 days.

Stalls Settlement

It seems to me that this is gravely offensive to any standard of fair play.

Despite its seeming simplicity, the injunction does not contribute to a settlement. This is particularly emphasized in emergency dispute situations.

Look at the situation from the employer's viewpoint. What compulsion is the employer under to bargain during the term of injunction? The order may require him to do so.

Realistically, bargaining is only effective when the parties to the bargaining have sanctions to apply if an impasse is reached. For the employer the sanction is the lockout and his economic power to say no. For the union the sanction is the strike. But in the emergency dispute situation, the employer knows beforehand that for 80 days the union will not be able to strike.

If you appreciate the realities of bargaining then you can understand why the employer is content to sit quietly while the 80 day injunction relieves him of the necessity of bargaining. At the very least it may give him economic relief from a subsequent wage increase for the 80 day period.

Now it will be said that a situation may come about where a national emergency dispute will nevertheless take place resulting in a stoppage that will imperil in a substantial way the national health and safety.

National Welfare

The labor movement is, of course, deeply concerned with the health and safety of the nation. We believe that above every interest the safety of the entire country must come first. We believe, however, as we have already indicated, that the term national emergency has been too often abused.

As Pres. Eisenhower has said so well, there are worse things than a strike, and one of the things that is worse is the loss of freedom attendant upon unjustified governmental intervention in labor-management situations merely because the hue and cry is raised of a national emergency when none exists in fact.

After careful consideration we have concluded that the best way to cope with genuine national emergencies is to continue to place responsibility on the parties themselves to settle their dispute through collective bargaining without blue-printing any general solution or procedures to be taken by the government in the event collective bargaining fails.

This does not leave the nation remediless against the crisis which may result therefrom since, in the final analysis, Congress is always available and possesses the authority to act with a remedy tailor-made to the equities of the particular situation.

This solution possesses the overwhelming advantage that neither party to a dispute will be able to know in advance the form government intervention may take and thus to calculate that its own interests will be better served by government intervention than by negotiation.

Bargaining

Pres. Eisenhower has called for "the encouragement of collective bargaining" and the lifting of "the heavy hand of government intervention." We fully agree.

Union and management should be left free to negotiate the terms of collective bargaining agreements with a minimum of government regulation. This principle, with which all believers in a free economy will surely agree, is eroded by Taft-Hartley. Let me, by way of illustration, discuss two subjects of collective bargaining on which Taft-Hartley lays "the heavy hand of government intervention."

The first is union security. What does the Taft-Hartley Act do? First, it declares that only a certain type of union security contract, described in complicated detail, shall now be legal, and it prohibits any union security contract not conforming to these new specifications. Secondly, it provides that state laws more hostile to union security than Taft-Hartley shall override the Taft-Hartley provisions, but that state laws more favorable to union security shall yield to Taft-Hartley.

Shake It Up And Make It Tougher

The U. S. Chamber of Commerce wants the National Labor Relations Board stacked against unions, and the Taft-Hartley Act shaken up and made a little tougher.

Its views were given the House Labor Committee by Vice Pres. Powell C. Groner, who is president of the Kansas City Public Service Co.

He also wants to outlaw industrywide bargaining except where it is "not disruptive and harmful to the public interest" and both sides want it.

The American Mining Congress, representing ore firms, went beyond the C. of C. and NAM in its proposals; it wants to abolish the Labor Dept., too.

Strong Objections

These Taft-Hartley provisions are strongly objectionable because they unnecessarily inject the government into the collective bargaining process. The particular restrictions laid by Taft-Hartley on union security clauses are unfair, unwise and unworkable. The subordination of the federal statute to anti-union state legislation, but not to pro-union, violates both principles of fairness and the ordinary rule of supremacy of federal law. These provisions are both anti-union and unrealistic.

The Taft-Hartley Act specifies in great detail the welfare fund arrangements which may be entered into between unions and employers in collective bargaining agreements. It prescribes how these funds must be administered and what benefits may be covered. Any violation of the statutory restrictions is not only subject to injunction—a device of which Taft-Hartley's authors were especially enamored—but is a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of $10,000 and imprisonment for a year.

Now I submit that this is an extraordinary bit of government regimentation, coming as it does from self-proclaimed admirers of the free enterprise system.

Conclusion

We in the CIO are convinced that substantial amendment of Taft-Hartley to bring that law into line with the standards of justice and fairness which Pres. Eisenhower has said will mark his administration is essential at this session of Congress.

It is essential not only for our domestic prosperity, but for our security and dignity throughout the free world.

We will have proven to our friends and allies—and to our enemies as well—that in democratic America, free labor and free management can work together in a spirit of national unity for the good and welfare of all the people.

It puts on the employer members of the mittee the burden of explaining their usal to seek cooperation in a common proach to Taft-Hartley problems, which nd the nation so earnestly desire.

The CIO, however, still stands ready to perate with Pres. Eisenhower in his ted objective to achieve fairness and tice in our basic labor relations law."

GET the FACTS

FACTS are ammunition in the fight to win fundamental improvements to the Taft-Hartley Act in the present session of Congress.

And CIO has them . . . the first of a series of pamphlets which will be issued during coming weeks. They are:

1. "Sugar-Coating Won't Do," text of the CIO Executive Board's recent statement outlining the whys and wherefores of seven major T-H improvements needed to bring justice and fairness to labor-management legislation.

2. "Don't Pulverize Labor," a reprint of the recent House testimony of Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) exposing the NAM's "labor monopoly" war cries.

Send your orders now, for distribution to local union members and officers, CIO council delegates and the community.

The FDR Jr. reprint is available without charge. Prices for "Sugar-Coating Won't Do" are: 5c a copy, 50 copies for $1.50, 100 for $2.50, 500 for $10 and 1000 copies for $18. Send orders to CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

'Right To Work,' Tax Dodge Bills Fought In Legislatures

DEFENSIVE campaigns against self-styled "right to work" bills and the millionaire's amendment tax dodge are being waged by state CIO councils in legislative sessions now under way in a half-dozen states.

Parallel measures to improve state unemployment and workmen's compensation measures and to win enactment of fair employment practices and civil rights bills also are winning state CIO support.

Here's a survey of state legislative development, as reported by CIO councils and Labor Press Associated:

'Right To Work'

Through the Rocky Mountain and Pacific Coast states, CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods have joined to fight the "right to work" proposition.

This is the measure, authored by Cecil B. DeMille and pushed by the Chamber of Commerce and other business groups, which would legalize the open shop and outlaw all forms of union security.

It's so extreme that it's been condemned by the local Chamber of Commerce in Pueblo, Colo., a steel-making and railroad center.

In California, the "right to work" drive is pushed by GOP Assembly Leader Levering. The State CIO Council has just warned his "proposals are attempts to turn back the clock of economic and social progress to the days of sweat shop conditions and no job security."

One setback for the "right to work" forces came in Wyoming, where the proposal was defeated by a decisive vote. It carried the lower house of the Utah Legislature, but Senate passage was reported to be doubtful.

In Oregon, Oklahoma, Iowa and Indiana, unions are fighting similar bills.

Tax Dodge

Four legislatures in recent weeks have turned down the "millionaire's relief" tax dodge amendment, but the campaign is being pushed in New York.

This is the proposal to set a 25% limit on federal income taxes. Adoption would force crippling of federal government services and probably enactment of a U. S. sales tax.

CIO and AFL state councils in New York have alerted local unions against the tax "relief" plan introduced with little notice in Albany.

The Maryland State Senate recently voted down the plan, as did the Colorado, New Mexico and West Virginia Legislatures. And in Texas, a joint labor presentation against the bill was voiced in lower house hearings.

In Oregon, CIO and AFL are fighting proposals to destroy the initiative and referendum and open the way for a state sales tax.

Social Legislation

New Jersey CIO has called its annual legislative mobilization conference in Trenton for Mar. 30, in an effort to prod a "do nothing" Legislature into action on "pro-labor and pro-consumer bills which now are buried in committees."

The State CIO proposes increases in unemployment and disability benefits from $30 to $45 for single workers, increases in workmen's compensation to $50 for single workers and $70 for workers with large families, elimination of the waiting period and other curbs on such benefits, strengthening of the state rent control and anti-eviction law, adoption of a wage-hour law, and tightening of the anti-injunction act.

North Carolina CIO is partially backing Gov. Umstead's proposal for a minimum wage law. It would set a wage floor of 55c an hour (20c under the federal minimum). CIO wants several improvements in the measure, bringing it in line with existing federal law, and points out that in North Carolina "average weekly wages of $44.02 are the lowest in the nation."

CIO Opposes Garnishee Bill

Organized labor provided the only opposition to a wage garnishee bill before the North Carolina Legislature.

When Franz Daniel, CIO state director, asked rejection of the bill at a State Senate committee hearing, he was booed long and loudly by some 250 businessmen present.

"As long as guys like that are booing me," observed Daniel, "I'm doing all right."

Buffalo Council Elects Miller

The Greater Buffalo CIO Council has made its presidency a full-time, paid job and elevated James Miller to the post.

Miller, the Council's secretary-treasurer for the past eight years, was succeeded in that post by James Steel, of the CIO Steelworkers. Hugh Thompson, who also is CIO regional director, declined to run for re-election as Council president.

'Operation Legislature' Proves Effective In Ohio

"OPERATION Legislature" has begun in Ohio. The first "assault troops" of the Ohio CIO Council's legislative battle moved into Columbus.

Their target is decent, humane, liberal laws.

Faced with a Legislature which at best can be described as "conservative," the Ohio CIO is again following a program inaugurated in 1951 and designed to utilize the skills, enthusiasm and fighting mood of CIO members in that state.

Called "Legislative Action Weeks," the program brings legislative battles home to the grass roots of CIO.

For the next 10 weeks CIO members from the mills and shops will go to Columbus to take part in the epoch battle being waged in the State House.

The program has a two-fold objective. The first is educational. Each delegate, the Council feels, should be charged with the responsibility of spreading the legislative story to the members of his union and to the friends of CIO in his community.

THE SECOND object is legislative action, with each delegate responsible for acquainting state lawmakers with the views of CIO members who are their constituents.

The first group came from Steubenville, Martins Ferry, Zanesville, and Marietta.

Each Monday, delegates from CIO local unions and councils in a certain geographical area of the state will meet in Columbus.

They will hear staff members of the Ohio Council, headed by Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman, talk on the important details and behind-the-scene maneuvering on the most vital issues in the Legislature.

Then, they go to the State Capitol where the weekly legislative session is beginning and they meet representatives and senators from their districts. They also observe the Legislature in action and sample the atmosphere of the State House.

ON TUESDAY morning bright and early, they are back in the State House to attend legislative committee sessions, hear testimony for and against important bills, and confer with their home town legislators.

On Tuesday evening they dine together again—this time with their home town representatives and senators as their guests—and then attend committee hearings which often last until midnight.

Wednesday morning they spend in more conferences with legislators or at committee hearings and then re-assemble to discuss how to bring home to their own members the full story of what is going on in the Legislature.

Clayman says the amateur lobbyists are magnificent. They buttonhole their legislators in a dignified fashion, and then they plead their cause earnestly and fairly. He said:

"They know the issues and they talk the issues. Not one legislator has ever complained that our people use anything but logic."

CIO Endorses In L.A. Races

THE LOS ANGELES CIO Council has voted a series of endorsements for city and school board offices, headed by backing of Mayor Fletcher Bowron in his campaign for re-election.

More than 80 candidates were interviewed by the Council PAC interviewing committee, headed by Henry Santiestevan.

The Council endorsed 12 candidates for the 15-member City Council, including Edward Roybal and Ernest Debs, both veteran liberal members of that board.

'90% Of Employers Discriminate'

"OF COURSE, we never discriminate," employers have said a thousand times in fighting state, local and federal legislation to end outlaw employment bias.

That claim has just been checked and found wanting in Pennsylvania. A committee named by GOP Gov. John S. Fine has reported that 90% of the state's employers—nine out of 10 business firms, that is—engage in job discrimination.

The report covered some 1200 different types of firms with nearly a million workers.

On basis of the findings, Gov. Fine has urged the Legislature to enact a "sound and effective" fair employment practices law.

Along with discrimination against Negroes, the report found "significant evidence" of bias against Jews and other religious and nationality groups. And the bias increased from 52% in the case of semi-skilled workers to 92% in the cases of sales employes.

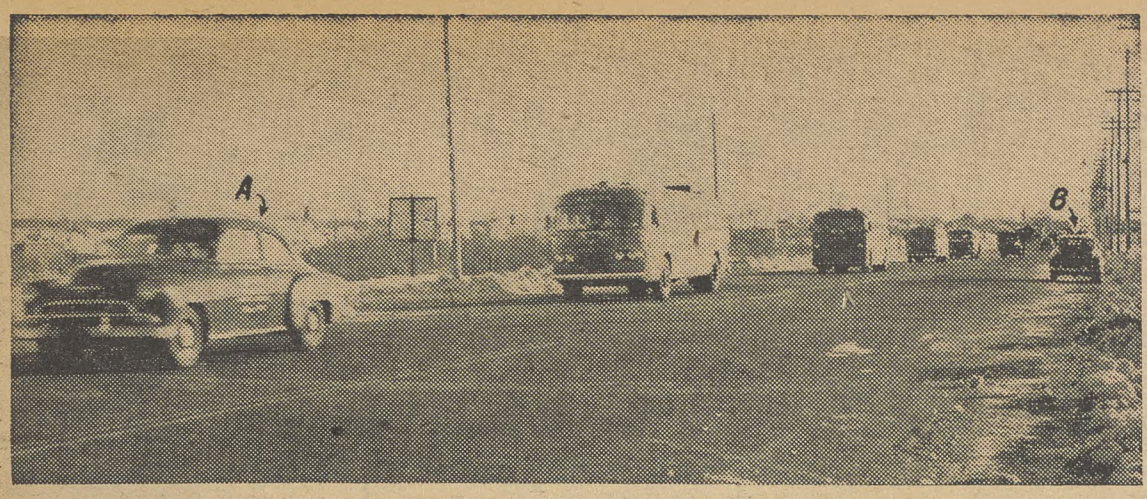
IN CALIFORNIA, the State CIO Council has joined with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and local and statewide labor and liberal groups in planning a state civil rights mobilization in Sacramento on Mar. 22-23.

A petition drive for an effective FEPC law is under way, with a goal of 500,000 signatures.

Along with backing a series of civil rights measures, the California CIO is fighting Sen. Tenney's (R.) so-called "rights of man" constitutional amendment. Like his "America First" proposal which failed last year, Tenney's new measure would legalize all forms of discrimination.

The Arizona Legislature has before it bills to establish a Commission on Civil Rights with statutory powers to eliminate discrimination in public places, and a Fair Employment Practices Commission, also with statutory authority. These proposals are sponsored by the Arizona Council for Civil Unity on which the CIO and AFL are represented.

New Jersey CIO has asked the state schools system to delete all references to race, color, nationality or religion from school records.



HERE COME THE SCABS.—Bus loads of Canadian Copper strikebreakers are hauled into Montreal East plant by armed private detectives (car A) and a city police car (B). CIO Oil Workers have been out for some eight months, faced repeated arrests.

CCL Raises Quebec Defense Fund

THE CANADIAN Congress of Labor, prompted by the brutal, fascist anti-union drive of Premier Maurice Duplessis of Quebec, has established a defense fund to protect the rights of workers in that province to bargain collectively.

The fund was set up by the CCL Executive Council at a meeting in Ottawa. The action was taken after the board heard reports of shootings, beatings and arrests of strikers in two walkouts by Duplessis-controlled police.

At the Canadian Copper Refineries, Ltd., Montreal East, the CIO-CCL Oil Workers have been out since July 14, 1952. Members have been beaten by police and private detectives, run down by buses carrying scabs, and generally harassed while the company—a subsidiary of the American-owned Phelps Dodge Corp.—violates provincial labor laws with impunity.

The other was at Louisville, where a textile workers local affiliated with the Canadian & Catholic Confederation of Labor recently went back to work after 11 bloody months on picket lines at the Associated Textile Co.

"Conditions which our own and other unions have faced in Quebec," said CCL Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald in announcing the fund, "make it obvious that workers in that province are facing extreme handicaps in their efforts to exercise what is recognized in the letter of Canadian law."

CIO Teamwork Pays Off For IUE At Winston-Salem

By ED LASHMAN

CIO SOLIDARITY paid off handsomely when CIO Electrical Workers won an overwhelming victory at the Winston-Salem, N. C., plant of the Bassick Co.

The vote at the Stewart-Warner subsidiary was IUE-CIO 209, no union 3.

The victory resulted from the teamwork of IUE-CIO and the CIO Communications Workers. The president of the CWA-CIO local at the Western Electric at Winston-Salem put IUE Field Rep. John R. Sullivan in contact with Pres. Milton Schwichtenberg of the Bassick local, then part of the United Electrical Workers employes.

After Schwichtenberg reported that the workers were unhappy with UE deals on grievances and wages, a meeting was held at which some 100 members voted to affiliate with IUE-CIO. A IUE-CIO charter was issued subsequently to the local.

IUE-CIO conducted a vigorous card-signing campaign, accompanied by wide distribution of leaflets and a series of plant gate meetings. The pay-off was that 200 out of 230 eligible had signed IUE-CIO cards by election day.

During the campaign, UE told the company that it would not protest firings of union members and the American Arbitration Association that there should be no arbitration of grievances filed by Sullivan.

Realizing that it was going to be snowed under, UE got off the ballot the day before the election. With this victory IUE-CIO wiped out the last UE local in the Carolinas.

Shipbuilders Hit Awards To Foreign Yards

THE CIO SHIPBUILDING Workers last week charged the Eisenhower Administration "is helping to drive private U. S. shipbuilders to the wall."

The union's executive council declared:

"Widespread contracting of U. S. vessels in foreign shipbuilding yards and the jamming of construction and repair work into government-operated installations is slashing employment and helping to drive private U. S. shipbuilders to the wall."

The council said the Administration's action "undermines United States labor through the tacit approval of the foreign shipbuilding policy of paying disastrous substandard wages and the maintenance of deplorable working conditions."

UAW Boosts Pensions In Skilled Jobs

CIO AUTO Workers have won important pension gains through a recent "voluntary reopening" of a five-year contract with Detroit's tool and dye industry.

Pensions were boosted from $100 to $135 monthly, including Social Security, under the amended contract between Local 155 and 157 and the Automotive Tool & Die Manufacturers Association.

The contract covers 10,000 workers in 71 Detroit shops, with pension rights maintained as workers shift from one contract plant to another.

The UAW-CIO Social Security Dept. considers the pension plan one of its best. Term of eligibility for retirement at 60 was cut from 25 years to a minimum of 10 years service. Retirement is non-compulsory. And a death benefit of $500 was added.

'U. S. Needs More Enterprise For Freedom'

WHAT the country needs is not more freedom for free enterprise, but more enterprise for freedom, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Philadelphia Bulletin's seventh annual forum last week.

Carey appeared with Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.) and Edward Dunning, vice president of N. W. Ayer & Son, advertising agency, in a panel discussion of "How Much Freedom for Free Eenterprise?"

"Free enterprise doesn't know what or how much additional 'freedom' it wants," he maintained. "All the facts of present-day American economic life," he asserted, "point inescapably to these conclusions:

"Free enterprise doesn't need more 'freedom.' If anything it has too much freedom. Big business and industry have far more freedom than the mass of American people.

"Free enterprise, represented by the National Association of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce, does not seek just more 'freedom' for its own affairs. It seeks more 'freedom' to limit the political and economic freedom of its employes and the people generally.

"Free enterprise . . . would like to monopolize the idea of free enterprise. However, organized labor has as much of a proprietary interest in free enterprise as big business. But big business, while demanding complete freedom to conduct its own affairs, refuses to accord the same right to trade unions.

"By its very nature, by its very composition and character, organized labor is dedicated to an increasingly broader economic and political democracy. That section of free enterprise represented by big business, the NAM and the C. of C. are intrinsically opposed to the broadening of economic and political democracy.

"Organized labor, spokesman for 16 million workers and their families, must continue to oppose, with all its heart, mind and soul, more 'freedom' for big business when that freedom is used to exploit the American people and the U. S. government."

CIO Backs Ike, Condemns Taft In Treaty Dispute

TAFT REPUBLICAN politics in foreign affairs were strongly condemned last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther in backing Pres. Eisenhower's proposed condemnation of Soviet violation of the wartime Yalta and Potsdam agreements.

Reuther charged the majority of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee with a "reckless display of partisan politics" which was "harmful to the establishment of a coherent and sensible American foreign policy."

The CIO statement was issued after the Senate group sharply amended a declaration on the Yalta and Potsdam agreements as proposed by Eisenhower and Sec. of State Dulles.

The Administration's measure would have condemned the Soviet Union's violation of several international agreements so as to subjugate free peoples.

THE SENATE committee—largely on the impetus of GOP Majority Leader Taft—stuck on a rider declaring Congress was expressing no opinion "as to the validity or the invalidity" of the Yalta-Potsdam pacts. The committee vote was 8-to-6 for approval.

With Stalin's death, action on the committee-amended resolution was stalled in the Senate. And there were reports Taft might come up with a new proposition.

Reuther called the Taft amendment "a belated effort to smear the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the record of Harry Truman." His statement follows in part:

"The resolution proposed by Pres. Eisenhower deserves the support of all of us. It puts the blame for the enslavement of Eastern European peoples into totalitarian dictatorships, squarely where it belongs: on the leadership of the Communist government of the USSR.

"THIS RESOLUTION should have been approved promptly and unanimously by the Senate. The Republican leadership of the Senate, however, in its endeavor to attack the previous Democratic Administrations, has made impossible the forthright adoption of this statement of America's abhorrence of the Soviet practice of flouting international agreements.

"Not only have Sens. Taft, Bridges and Knowland obstructed the laudable aims of Pres. Eisenhower and Sec. of State Dulles in this matter; they are also undermining the basis for a bi-partisan foreign policy. Such a policy is an obviously essential element in the struggle against Communist aggressive efforts to achieve world domination.

"The proposed amendment sponsored by Sen. Taft and his colleagues is nothing more than a belated effort to smear the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the record of Harry Truman.

"The CIO condemns this action as harmful to the establishment of a coherent and sensible American foreign policy. We urge adoption of the resolution as proposed by Pres. Eisenhower."

Czech Reds Battled In Factories

WHAT WAS described as an open revolt by Czech workers against their Russian-dominated government, first revealed by the official organ of the Czech Communist Party, was passed on recently to U. S. listeners by Ed Murrow, CBS news reporter.

The employes of 18 factories in one district, and of several plants in others, simultaneously refused to report on the job despite orders by local authorities, he recounted.

"The fact that 18 factories in a single district could act so concertedly," Murrow observed, "indicates a growing organization and strength of opposition against the Communist regime.

"The Czech government has re-activated the armed workers' militia in the factories. This is an admission that industrial rebellion is so threatening that the security police and the Czech military forces must be augmented by the armed workers' militia to cope with unrest in individual factories."

Builders Move In On Vet Groups In Fight On Low Interest Rates

AS A BATTLE to provide low-interest mortgages and better homes for veterans makes progress in Congress, the real estate and mortgage loan lobby has begun to move in on veterans' organizations to defeat the program.

Most recent point of attack was a so-called "fact-finding meeting" called by a special Housing Committee of the American Legion in Washington, D. C. The committee was appointed by Legion National Commander Lewis K. Gough after pressure from veterans led to the passage at the last Legion convention of a resolution "to explore the possibilities of improving GI Home Loan facilities."

Named to the committee were Chairman Thomas Moses, of Charleston, W. Va., Larry J. Fenlon, chairman of the Legion's National Economic Commission, Chicago, and Milo J. Warner, former Legion national commander, of Toledo, O.

WARNER for years has been registered as a lobbyist for the Prudential Life Insurance Co., part of the financial group pressuring for higher interest rates.

The meeting for "improving" the GI Loan program was addressed by six speakers. One was T. B. King, director of the loan guaranty service of the Veterans Administration, who opposed raising the rates. All of the others are prominently identified with the real estate and loan lobby which seeks higher interest payments.

They included Miles Colean, identified by the Legion as an "economic consultant"; Samuel E. Neel, of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America; M. K. M. Murphy, president of Boiling Spring Savings and Loan; Robert Morgan, vice president of Boston Five Cents Savings Bank, and James Rouse, president, Moss-Rouse Co.

The lobby whose representatives dominated the meeting has fought the government's FHA and GI programs of low-interest insured mortgages for years. It again has renewed its drive to raise interest rates on all mortgages.

SUCCESS or failure of their move will depend in large part on the fate of current bipartisan efforts in Congress to extend the direct loan provisions of the housing section of the GI Bill. Chairman Rogers (R. Mass.) introduced HR 27 for this purpose, and similar measures also have been sponsored by Reps. Teague (D. Tex.), and Elliott (D. Ala.).

Rep. Rains (D. Ala.), former chairman of the House Housing subcommittee, wants the program continued and would increase the amount available for such loans by $500 million. Additional funds are needed in the face of a threatened boycott of the program by the mortgage loan interests.

The direct loan provisions of the GI Act were enacted into law after the CIO National Housing Committee had drawn attention to an earlier lenders' boycott of the 4% loan program. They provide that when a veteran is unable to obtain such a loan for which he is eligible from a private lending institution, he may obtain it from a special fund set up by the government.

RAINS also has moved to insure honest construction of FHA and VA insured housing. He introduced a bill, in line with the recommendations made before his committee last year by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, requiring builders or sellers to put up a one-year guarantee on houses financed with FHA or VA insurance.

Hearings before Rains' committee last year uncovered many examples of shoddy construction. Rains pointed out that his proposal would work no hardship on honest builders, but would prevent unscrupulous operators from fleecing veterans and other members of the public on lifetime investments.

It's Cheaper, Henry Figures, To Pay Missus Not To Work

HENRY COOKE and his wife Helen of Chicago have decided she'd better quit her job, because they can't afford it. After he showed the figures, she agreed, according to his account in Work, a Catholic labor paper.

She makes $55 a week as a clerk-typist, but they figured out that after the extra expenses she was bringing in exactly $7.44 a week, or 19c an hour.

He makes $4264 a year, and on his income alone the income tax is $445 a year, but with his wife's $2860 added, the tax is $1014.75, an increase of $569.75.

Helen's cousin Jane gets $20 a week for minding their baby during the day time. That's $1040 a year. Helen's transportation is $100 a year. And lunches, coffee, cokes come to $350 a year. Extra clothes and cleaning come to $300 more.

Extra food bills, because Helen has no time to shop for bargains, come to $30, and extra medicine and doctor bills to $30 more. That and other items like deductions for social security come to $2472.91, or only $387.09 short of what Helen makes. And that's not including the perennial office collections for gifts, or what she may pick up in a department store on the way home. (LPA)

Ike Presents Plan To Boost FSA, Give It Cabinet Rank

TRANSFORMATION of the Federal Agency into a Cabinet-ranking Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare was formally proposed to Congress last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

The plan was advanced under the Reorganization Act and has been expected for some time. It will become automatically effective if it is not disapproved by a majority vote of the full membership of either House or Senate within 60 congressional working days. The same proposal was rejected when former Pres. Truman offered it.

Eisenhower advised Congress that the new head of the department, with the status of secretary, would be the present FSA administrator, Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby.

"The purpose of this plan," he wrote, "is to improve the administration of the vital health, education and social security functions now being carried on in the Federal Security Agency by giving them departmental rank."

The new department would have authority over the Public Health Service, Office of Education and Social Security Administration. It would have an under-secretary and two assistant secretaries.

The head of the Social Security Commission, now named by the FSA administrator, and the surgeon-general of the PHS and the commissioner of education, now nominated by the President and approved by the Senate, all would be subject to presidential appointment and Senate confirmation.

Economy Begins With The Women

Economy begins with the women for the new GOP Administration.

The Women's Bureau of the Labor Dept., has ended its monthly "Facts on Women Workers" publication, saying:

"In line with the economy program in government, the Bureau of the Budget has not renewed approval of the publication of this monthly newsletter."

The saving: perhaps $800 a year.

Food Reserve Plan Asked

A BILL to set up an international food reserve under the United Nations was introduced last week by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) with support of 21 other senators.

The program calls for storing wheat, cotton, dried milk and "other raw or unprocessed farm products" at various points around the world. The reserve could be drawn upon to aid nations stricken with famine.

A major effect, Murray said, would be to "stabilize the international market for agricultural products." He added that this, in turn, would "help reverse the present trend toward falling farm prices and farm incomes."

Murray said that the purpose would be 'to match up hungry and ill-clad people with a permanently and abundantly productive agriculture."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

LOIS LINDMAN, of Seattle, asks a question that's on the mind of millions of families: "Would you please print more on economy building, and a plan for a three-bedroom house? A home a worker can afford is very essential to the American family."

Hoopla

Two of the biggest current claims of toothpaste advertisers have been deflated by responsible medical authorities.

All the claims for the $100-million chlorophyll business are largely bunk, says Prof. A. W. Galston of the California Institute of Technology.

Chlorophyll in toothpaste, cigarets, etc., doesn't stop bad smells; it just deadens your sense of smell.

And the Journal of the American Dental Association reports that ammoniated toothpastes have no special value in reducing tooth decay.

Where to find an adequate home at a price a wage-earning family can afford is today's big consumer problem. Even after eight years of building since the end of World War II, housing is very tight.

Many of the families who moved into the millions of tiny houses put up in the past eight years are already seriously cramped for space as the second or third child is born and the children get older. But at the same time, there's a growing shortage of land suitable for building on the rims of the big cities. When land is scarce the builders tend to use what's available for more expensive houses — $15,000 and often much more.

The average industrial worker today earns $3750 a year. Even without considering the present extra big income tax bite on his wages, at that price he can afford to buy a house tagged at not much more than $7500. The U. S. Savings and Loan Association advises paying no more than 2½ times your yearly income for a house, some very conservative consumer economists say only 1½ times, so let's say two times is a safe compromise.

BUT THERE IS very little available at $7500 that can make a permanent home. Even though some of the shoddy construction found in many houses under $10,000 these days can be corrected, such basic faults as inadequate heating systems and insufficient space for a growing family are costly to remedy. Dr. C. E. A. Winslow, chairman of the housing hygiene committee of the American Public Health Association, has said that the best public housing today doesn't meet his committee's minimum standard of living space "for health and decency" by 25% nor the bulk of private housing, by half.

The committee recommends 750 square feet of living space for a family of two, 1000 square feet for three, 1150 for four and 1400 for five.

Another danger home-seekers must guard against in some of the big building projects is a lack of school and other community facilities. Dr. Luther Gulick, a New York educator and management expert, has warned that the low taxes which help attract young couples to buy a home in the suburbs may rise in 10 or 15 years as new facilities are needed.

THE LEAST expensive house per square foot of space that you could buy or build, would be a basementless, two-story house nearly square in shape and without protruding wings. Many families these days want the convenience of a house all on one floor, especially if they have small children. But a two-story house does provide the same space at less cost, and also doesn't need as large a lot.

(Next article: "The house that grows," and cost-cutting possibilities and risks in buying an older house for conversion.)

REG. DIR. LEE TUCKER reports that the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical workers won a representation election at the Buckeye Cottonseed Oil Co., Wilson, Ark., by the following vote; eligible 114, CIO 63, no union 47, void 2. The drive was directed by Intl. Reps. Dave Sisco and Wayne Stoner.

Two elections were won by the CIO Brewery Workers: Smith Rice Mill, Inc., and DeWitt Bonded Warehouse Co., DeWitt, Ark., eligible 83, CIO 40, no union 18, challenged 16; and the C & L Rice Mill, DeWitt, eligible 19, CIO 17, no union 2. Brewery Reps. Sam Brinkley and Charles Hewgley handled these campaigns.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election at the Dewey-Almy Plastic Co., Cedar Rapids, Ia., the workers favored the CIO Rubber Workers by the following vote: CIO 129, IAM 29, no union 1.

The CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Martin Foundry, Centerville, Ia., by a unanimous vote. Intl. Rep. Robert Johnston directed the drive.

Supreme Court Rules On Series Of Picketing, Child Labor Cases

THE SUPREME Court of the United States handed down a series of decisions on labor cases last week; some were good, some bad. Here are a few in summary:

SCABBING was upheld in a 6 to 3 decision supporting the discharge of Charles Waugh, member of the unaffiliated Newspaper & Mail Deliveries Union employed by the Rockaway News Supply Co., Valley Stream, N. Y.

He was fired when he refused to cross a legitimate picket line set up at the Nassau Daily Review-Star, Rockville Center, L. I., by the AFL Typographical Union. His discharge was upset by the National Labor Relations Board and upheld by the U. S. Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court, with which the CIO filed a friend of the court brief, held that a no-strike clause in the unaffiliated union's contract required Waugh to cross the picket line.

FREE SPEECH works both ways, the high court held in effect in a decision denying Bonwit Teller, Inc., New York, a review of a Circuit Court decision.

The lower court had held the firm committed an unfair labor practice when it refused to give the CIO Clothing Workers a chance to address store employes at a meeting after the company president, Roy Rudolph, had urged them to vote against the union in a bargaining election.

EXPLOITATION of child labor was made easier for chiseling employers in a ruling that claims for damages under the Walsh-Healy Act must be filed within two years. The decision enabled the Unexcelled Chemical Corp., Jersey City, N. J., to avoid paying $15,600 in liquidated damages for knowingly employing minors in violation of the law between 1942 and 1945.

"MAKE-WORK" provisions of union contracts that actually require employes to perform work were upheld in two 6 to 3 decisions dismissing employer claims they violate the Taft-Hartley Act.

In one, the court rejected efforts of the American Newspaper Publishers Association to have outlawed the traditional printing trades custom, practiced by the AFL Typographical Union, of setting material reaching a plant in mat or other prepared form. Justice Burton pointed out that the work is actually done, and that the employer does not pay for services not rendered.

Question Of Tax Assets

economy must solve," he said. "The labor movement is one of the mechanisms through which workers try to get their fair share. When both labor and farmers get their fair share of the national income, the problem of full employment will be solved."

Gwinn argued at some length that labor is "a monopoly." He sounded like the publications of the Committee for Constitutional Government, a big business lobby which has been promoting the claim that unions "stiffle" competition.

"If you don't think there's intense competition at the bargaining table," Reuther replied, "I wish you'd sit down with me some time at one of our negotiating sessions."

COMPLIMENTING CIO on the "very fine American thing you did" in handling the Communist problem, Rep. Kersten (R. Wis.) wanted to know Reuther's views on Taft-Hartley's non-Communist oath requirement.

"You can't defeat the Communist threat by paper work," the CIO head replied. He opposed the oath requirement in any form, explaining that it had helped Communists.

Former Committee Chairman Barden (D. N.C.) debated Reuther on his proposal that the Taft-Hartley injunction provisions be abolished and the principles of the Norris-LaGuardia Act restored. The CIO head contended that the injunction provisions are the "most fundamental" wrong of the act.

Reuther pointed out that, where Taft-Hartley requires mandatory injunctions against unions in cases of secondary boycotts, there is no such provision in cases of unfair labor practices by employers. The latter, he said, drag on for years.

He cited a case dating back to 1950 in Barden's district in which a one-legged Negro watchman had been badly beaten by management. The beating came after he had refused to take $100 offered him instead of the $700 the government had ruled he was entitled to in overtime pay. The NLRB, Reuther said, got around to upholding the CIO Woodworkers' unfair labor charge only the day before.

"This is not a fairy tale," he said. "It happened in the United States and in the State of North Carolina."

Barden called the incident a "perfectly horrible thing," but contended the man had redress.

Reuther pointed out that, even now, the NLRB decision may be contested in the courts. He estimated that would add about two more years to the time before settlement is reached.

CHAIRMAN McConnell (R. Pa.) told Reuther that he thought his proposal for wiping out the Taft-Hartley injunction and letting the President send disputes affecting national health and safety to Congress for action "has a lot of merit in it." He said, however, that injunctions might be necessary under some circumstances to prevent a work stoppage while Congress was acting.

In addition to presenting a statement on behalf of the CIO, Reuther filed a separate statement setting forth the experiences of the UAW under Taft-Hartley.

UFW Forms New Council In Midwest

ORGANIZING and bargaining strength of the CIO Furniture Workers has been increased by formation of a new Midwest Regional Council.

Formed at a recent convention in South Bend, Ind., the new UFW group represents 12,000 furniture and allied workers from 35 local unions.

Organization of the council came as the UFW announced 1953 bargaining goals of "substantial wage increases," extension of the union's insurance and pension program and a 35-hour week.

With the furniture industry anticipating a peak season, the Midwest locals called for an enlarged UFW organizing staff and intensified efforts to organize in the plain states.

THE COUNCIL also pledged full support to CIO and UFW organizing efforts in the many low-wage, non-union furniture shops in the South.

"The entire program," the council announced, "is expected to build the union and strengthen the power of all local unions in dealing with the companies in contract and wage negotiations."

The new UFW group was formally organized on a per capita-funded basis, so as to provide regional reserves for organizing and strike relief purposes.

Sam Sloan, of Chicago, was elected president and William Gilbert, also of Chicago, was named as Midwest regional director. Other vice presidents are James Jones, Cannelton, Ind., and Edward Wysockie of Cleveland, O. Al Hubbard, Grand Rapids, Mich., is secretary-treasurer.

TWUA Challenges GOP To Repudiate Pay Cuts

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers last week challenged the Eisenhower Administration "to repudiate any and all attempts by industry to cut wages."

TWUA's Executive Council issued this challenge as northern cotton-rayon mills and some major woolen and worsted mills were seeking lower wages and a reduction in other employment benefits.

The council pledged that the union would resist these efforts "to the utmost."

Southern New England cotton mills are busier than at any time since 1950 and their order backlogs are at the highest level in two years.

In the woolen and worsted industry, Botany Mills of Passaic, N. J., demanded a wage cut of more than 30c an hour for its 4000 workers. John Chupka, TWUA secretary-treasurer and director of the union's woolen and worsted division, said:

"The company's consistent record of lush earnings makes its demand unjustifiable from any standpoint. Botany has made an annual average profit of $500, after taxes, for every worker in the mill, over the last 10 years.

"Its percentage of profit on net worth has been as high as 48% before taxes and 29.7% after taxes. Yet we find this same company, after one year of low profits and one year of loss, demanding a wage cut of 20%."

Haywood Family Voices Thanks

The family of the late Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, has been unable to thank a number of unions and individuals who sent flowers and messages of condolence. The addresses were insufficient or the identifications improper.

The family takes this opportunity to thank the senders of these tokens of sympathy. Wherever it was possible, letters of appreciation were sent.

Long Alco Strike Ends

THE 20-WEEK strike of 8000 CIO Steelworkers at the American Locomotive Co. plants in Schenectady, Auburn and Dunkirk, N. Y., ended last week with a 16c wage boost, plus other benefits.

The walkout ended as 1300 office workers, members of the union, ratified a contract which won for them the same package pay increase gained earlier by production workers. The production workers at the first two plants had delayed their return to work until company-wide settlement was reached. (At Dunkirk, the strike had been halted by a Taft-Hartley injunction.)

Included in the new package was retroactive pay for time worked since the old contract expired Jan. 31, 1952; union security, liberalized holiday pay, three-week vacations after 15 years and other improvements.

More Tax Bonanza

The latest report of the Office of Defense Mobilization lists approval of 233 "tax bonanza" certificates totaling $334 million.

'Strengthen Rent Controls, Extend Them For 2 Years,' CIO Urges

THE CIO last week called on Congress to strengthen rent controls and keep them on the books for two more years.

Testifying before the House Banking Committee, Leo Goodman, director of the National CIO Housing Committee, said that government-enforced curtailments in construction during World War II and since Korea have brought about a national shortage of at least three million homes.

"IT IS this shortage which requires the continuation of the authority for federal rent controls," Goodman said.

"We are not in favor of controls for controls' sake. We do believe that the special problems created in the kind of period through which we are now living require that special consideration be given to the effects of mobilization on maintaining stabilization of rents until we have an adequate housing supply."

Goodman criticized present standards required before communities are eligible for "critical defense housing" area designation. He pointed out that most of the nation's key industrial centers like Detroit and Chicago cannot qualify, and that even Oak Ridge, Tenn., site of basic atomic energy development, is excluded.

Urging Congress to "have enough faith" in Pres. Eisenhower's ability to administer the law fairly, he told the committee that it should strengthen the President's authority to regulate rents under the act.

The President, he said, should have the power to impose rent controls on communities now free of them when they are affected by a "large volume of defense contracts."

Goodman urged that the President be given power to impose controls whenever the vacancy rate falls below 2% and to maintain them until vacancies rise to 7%.

Stronger rent controls were also asked by the AFL, which urged the committee to continue them 14 months.

Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.) has predicted that Congress won't extend rent controls except for "critical defense areas." He also indicated that he expects an even more restrictive definition of such areas to be written into the act.

Other witnesses included the U. S. Chamber of Commerce which demanded federal rent controls end Apr. 30 with "defense housing problems turned over to the states and local communities." They can handle any special problems created by defense installations, said the Chamber.

A parade of officials from the National Association of Real Estate Boards and big city landlord groups similarly demanded knifing of rent ceilings, claiming for example that it was "un-American discrimination."

BUT IF the ceilings end, Joseph B. Meegan of Chicago's Back of the Yards Council, warned, "I shudder to think of the evictions, the bitterness, the hatred . . . which will fill the streets of Chicago."

The fight to save rent controls also is building up in several big industrial states.

In New Jersey, State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman opposed a bill sponsored by Gov. Driscoll to amend the state's standby rent control law by placing responsibility for controls on municipal governments. He suggested five amendments "to correct its major defects and to continue rent control on a fair and equitable basis in this state."

"HUNDREDS of thousands of New Jersey tenants face substantial rent increase and possible eviction proceedings on and after Apr. 30," Holderman warned.

In neighboring New York, another Republican-controlled Legislature prepared to vote on a bill that would bring a flat 15% rent hike for hundreds of thousands of tenants. It also would decontrol all one- and two-family dwellings and thousands of apartments.

The New York City Council urged the Legislature to vote down the 15% increase proposal, or else let the city write its own rent control law. And CIO State and City Council officials continued protests in Albany against the GOP rent boost bill.

Senate Confirms Cole In Top Housing Post

ALBERT M. Cole, who built up one of the worst anti-public housing records in Congress before his Kansas Republican constituents deserted him for a Democrat, was confirmed by the Senate as head of the Housing & Home Finance Agency last week.

The action was taken by a vote of 64 to 18 as the CIO made public a letter from Pres. Walter P. Reuther to Pres. Eisenhower asking that his nomination be withdrawn "in the interest of the American people."

"Our objection to the appointment is based on the simple incontrovertible fact," Reuther wrote, "that Mr. Cole, throughout his congressional career, was a consistent opponent of public housing, the program he has been appointed to administer. . .

"Mr. Cole does not represent the middle way in housing. He does not represent the viewpoint of those men in both parties who in the Congress have sponsored and supported legislation for better housing."

REUTHER recalled that Cole voted against decent housing for low income families, twice in 1949, 1951 and 1952—a total of six times.

The Senate fight against his confirmation, which was opposed by advocates of public housing throughout the country, was led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

"I see in this appointment the beginning of a change," Humphrey told the Senate, "in the basic housing policy of the Congress and the nation, and I submit it is coming through the back door. I for one don't intend to be a party to repudiating the housing program by voting for his confirmation."

THE 18 Senators who voted against confirmation included 15 Democrats, two Republicans—Sens. Cooper and Tobey—and Sen. Morse, the lone Independent.

The Democrats were Sens. Anderson, Fulbright, Green, Hennings, Hill, Humphrey, Jackson, Johnson (Colo.), Kennedy, Lehman, Magnuson, Mansfield, Murray, Neely and Symington. Democratic Sens. Douglas and Kilgore were paired against.

Steelman Quits White House Post

Dr. John R. Steelman, a White House special assistant since 1946, resigned last week.

Steelman had served former Pres. Truman as a labor-management relations consultant, and had continued on the job temporarily under Pres. Eisenhower. The former White House aide will open a Washington office.

Social Notes In Washington

Pat Nixon is still wearing "a Republican cloth coat."

When Pres. Eisenhower delivered his State - of - the - Union message to Congress early last month, the Washington Evening Star on its society page reported that Mrs. Nixon "wore a brown fur coat over her suit." (In his campaign telecast last fall, Nixon had made a point that Pat didn't own a fur coat.)

The CIO News of Feb. 9 reproduced a photo of the Star story.

Last week The CIO News received from Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's personal secretary, a letter declaring that the Star story "was in error" and that "Mrs. Nixon does not have a fur coat."

House Votes Statehood For Hawaii

THE HOUSE voted last week to make Hawaii the 49th state, but turned down statehood for Alaska.

Vote on the measure was 274 to 138, but admission of the territory was made subject to future congressional approval of a Hawaiian state constitution.

The original bill would have authorized the President to approve the constitution without further congressional action. The amendment, sponsored by Rep. Saylor (R. Pa.), was passed by voice vote.

Also adopted was a Dixiecrat amendment sponsored by Rep. Rogers (D. Tex.) limiting Hawaii to one representative instead of the two to which it would be entitled.

EFFORTS by liberal Northern Democrats to have the bill sent back to the House Interior Committee in an effort to force consideration in one bill of statehood for both Hawaii and Alaska —as supported by CIO — were voted down 227 to 182.

Senate Majority Leader Taft predicted that the Senate will pass the Hawaii statehood bill by Apr. 1, but Dixiecrats and senators from other oil states have threatened to block action until the Senate passes the coastal oil lands grab bill.

NMU Extends Pay Boosts To Tankers

WAGE INCREASES and other benefits have been won by the CIO Maritime Union in key contracts in the tanker and collier branches of the industry within the last few weeks.

Pay boosts in the tanker field ranged from 5 to 15%, retroactive to Sept. 16, 1952, and were negotiated under wage reopenings in agreements with the Gulf Oil Corp. and the Texas Co. They are expected to set the pattern for bargaining with about 20 smaller operators.

Rates for able seamen were raised from $226.21 to $306.14 a month and for ordinary seamen from $232.92 to $246.43, with other ratings increased proportionately.

THE SETTLEMENT with the collier operators was negotiated in Boston. Rates for able seamen jumped from $266.21 to $306.14 and for ordinary seamen from $236.24 to $249.94.

Overtime rates were the same in both contracts, $1.48 an hour for those paid less than $298.49 a month and $1.87 above that amount. Travel allowances also were boosted, as were employes welfare and pension payments.

Both settlements were based on the earlier NMU agreement with Atlantic and Gulf dry cargo ship operators. The union is now framing demands for new contracts with operators of dry cargo vessels, tankers and Great Lakes ore boats to replace pacts which expire July 15.

GOP Chief Queried On $11,000 Deal

A SPECIAL committee of the Kansas Legislature last week began investigating the case of C. Wesley Roberts, Republican national chairman, and the $11,000.

Roberts received the $11,000 as commission on a $110,000 sale of a hospital building to the state —and the state already owned the property.

Alf M. Landon, the GOP presidential candidate way back in 1936, is reported to be up in arms over the deal, in view of the Republican hubbub over "honesty in government" in the last campaign.

Roberts, when he was state GOP chairman, is reported to have lobbied to get the state to buy an unused hospital building put up by the Ancient Order of United Workmen.

The building is on the Kansas State Tuberculosis Sanatorium grounds at Norton, Kans. It was erected in 1928 under an agreement that the building would become state property if no longer used by the private group, State Justice William A. Smith testified. He was attorney general at the time.

Roberts was not registered as a lobbyist but the $110,000 deal and the $11,000 commission went through.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

Developments last week:

The House continued Taft-Hartley hearings, with CIO Pres. Walter Reuther urging "substantial" amendments.

CIO urged a House committee to strengthen rent controls and extend them for two years.

The House voted statehood for Hawaii, denied it for Alaska.

CIO supported standby inflation controls in Senate hearing.

What to do:

Write your congressman and House Labor Committee members, supporting CIO recommendations on Taft-Hartley.

Write your congressman urging extension of strong federal rent controls.

Address lawmakers at House or Senate Office Buildings, Washington 25, D. C.

A NEW WORLD, like that opened up in this country by Tennessee Valley Authority, may be in store for Western Europe now that a six-nation Schuman Plan Coal and Steel Community is functioning. This German steel worker, one of 10,000 in Rheinhausen, is hopeful of a better living standard. But his union, and other unions too, want more worker representation in plan. AMA Gets 'Veto' Rule In Ike's Plan For Health, Welfare Dept.

By MILTON PLUMB

THE EISENHOWER Administration told the American Medical Association more about its plan for reorganizing the Federal Security Agency than it told the Joint Committee of Congress responsible for enacting it into law.

This was brought out last week by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) as he questioned AMA witnesses about the meeting of the association's House of Delegates Mar. 14. At that session, the AMA dramatically reversed its long-standing opposition and approved the proposal.

The House last week approved the reorganization plan by a vote of 291 to 85. The Senate was expected to approve it shortly.

The plan, which will turn FSA into a Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, is practically identical to the reorganization which former Pres. Truman vainly tried to bring about in 1949 and 1950. Congress then turned it down, at AMA's urging.

Eisenhower's plan, however, has one important change. It creates a new post of "special assistant to the secretary for health and medical affairs" to "advise" on all legislation and administrative matters concerning medicine.

Opponents charge that this is a "sop" for AMA support.

The plan requires the person appointed to the new job to be "a recognized leader in the medical field with wide, non-governmental experience." The Eisenhower Administration is expected to take this to mean someone either named by, or acceptable to, the AMA.

This would give the medical lobby a censor in FSA, who would pass on what studies are made in the fields of national health and related fields and in general determine the government's policies.

When Budget Dir. Joseph M. Dodge and FSA Administrator Oveta Culp Hobby testified last week they were asked at length about the duties of the new special assistant for health and medicine.

They replied that the job would be merely "advisory"—as it is, in fact, defined in the President's text.

WHEN AMA representatives testified later, however, Humphrey brought out that a description of the new post had been handed to AMA delegates at the Mar. 14 meeting. Under further questioning, the AMA produced a copy of the full-page job description which spelled out duties in detail.

Members of the committee hadn't seen the description, nor had they been told by Dodge or Mrs. Hobby anything like its details about the new job's responsibilities.

It is "remarkable," Humphrey declared, that the AMA should have information not made available to the congressmen responsible for enacting the reorganization plan into law.

The AMA spokesmen said they didn't know who had prepared the description but admitted that a description of the job had been discussed at a prior meeting with members of the President's Advisory Committee on Government Organization. Mrs. Hobby, they said, also had been present.

FOR MORE than 30 years the AMA had demanded a separate Dept. of Health and only last December it again went on record against the kind of plan Eisenhower later proposed.

But it took the House of Delegates less than an hour to whoop almost unanimous approval after Dr. Louis H. Bauer, AMA president, described the new "special assistant" as if he would be boss of all medical affairs in all branches of government.

Before voting, the delegates also listened to assurances from both Eisenhower and Sen. Taft (R. O.) of Administration "cooperation" with "free enterprise."

And Taft admitted that one of the main purposes of the reorganization is to get rid of FSA policy-makers now protected by civil service. He said it would enable the Administration to clean out "entrenched bureaucrats."

There was no talk about the nation's health needs, no mention of what should be done about the millions who now cannot get medical care.

A Question Of Political Prayers

When former Pres. Truman first proposed to reorganize the Federal Security Agency in 1950, Republicans called it "the answer to a bureaucrat's prayer."

When that was recalled at last week's House hearing, GOP lawmakers said the new GOP Administration changes things.

"You mean now," commented Rep. Lantaff (D. Fla.), "that this is the answer to the Republicans' prayers."

Oil Give Away Bill Okehed By House Unit

THE "TIDELANDS" oil give away bill was approved by a House Judiciary subcommittee last week and turned over to the full committee for further action. The proposed measure would give coastal states title to the area between their coast lines and a point three miles out at sea or to their historic boundaries when they entered the union, whichever is further.

The "historic boundaries" were not identified. However, in the cases of Texas and the west coast of Florida, these are regarded as three leagues, the equivalent of about 10.5 miles.

Louisiana's boundary has been in dispute. It will be up to that State to demonstrate that its historic boundary extends beyond the three-mile limit, according to subcommittee aides.

Beyond these limits, the federal government would retain ownership and control of the outer continental shelf, including control of the development of natural resources. Several states, including Texas and Louisiana, had asked for police and taxing powers in this area.

The bill provides that if the Supreme Court later holds the government cannot give away the lands to the states adjoining them, the right to develop and lease them will be given the states.

THE PROPOSED bill is substantially along the lines recommended by Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay. It rejects the view taken by Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell, who suggested that Congress give the states the right to develop the disputed lands, but not the lands themselves.

The proposed oil grab measure —if passed—would fulfill one of Pres. Eisenhower's campaign promises. It faces certain court action and undoubtedly will reach the Supreme Court, which has three times held that the federal government has the "paramount" interest in the lands Congress is preparing to give away.

The Assembly of the Rhode Island Legislature has authorized a court test. The action was taken at the instance of Gov. Dennis J. Roberts and Sen. Green (D.).

"THESE resources belong to all the people of the U. S., including the people of our State of Rhode Island," Green said.

"They are of vital importance to the whole nation. It is proposed to give them away without compensation, and if the proposal succeeds, three states will receive vast benefits and profits at the expense of the people of the other 45 states . . .

"The people of our State and the people of our nation ought not to be silent in the face of this attempt to strip the nation of its oil, gas, and other mineral resources in the sea for the benefit of the people of three states."

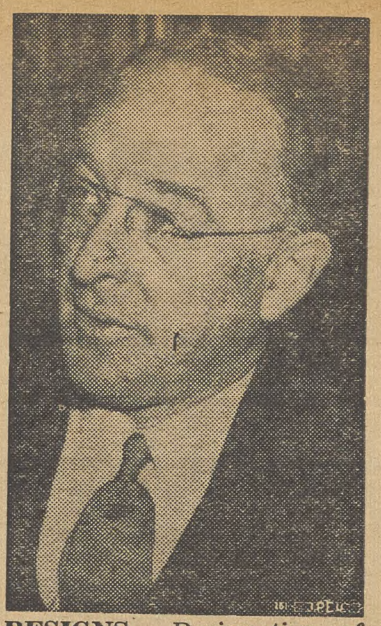
CIO Board Sets Meeting To Act On Vacant Post

A meeting of the CIO Executive Board to consider electing a successor to the late Allan S. Haywood as Executive Vice President has been called for Monday, Apr. 6, Pres. Walter R. Reuther has announced.

The session will begin at 2:30 p.m. It will follow a luncheon meeting of the CIO Executive Committee.

That evening, the CIO Unity Committee will meet for discussion. The next day, on Apr. 7, the Unity Committee will open talks with an AFL committee in Washington.

The executive vice-president's post has been vacant since the death of Allan Haywood on Feb. 21. The unity talks, scheduled for late February, were postponed out of respect to the late CIO leader.



RESIGNS — Resignation of David L. Cole as head of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service was announced last week. Cole will stay on the job until Pres. Eisenhower names a successor.

REA Chief Gets GOP Heave-Ho

THE REPUBLICANS last week scored twice against Fair Deal policies for conservation of public lands and cheap electricity for the nation's farmers.

First, Claude R. Wickard was forced by Administration pressure to resign as head of the Rural Electrification Administration. And then Marion Clawsen, director of the Bureau of Land Management, was simply ousted from his job although his civil service tenure was supposedly protected as a government career employe.

Both actions followed a White House statement that the President intends to remove the jobs of "several hundred" key government workers from Civil Service safeguards. Sen. Taft (R. O.) said that the reason is that the GOP wants to stamp out all traces of New Deal and Fair Deal thinking.

Wickard's forced resignation immediately touched off a storm in Congress, which in creating the REA had specifically written into the law a provision that the administrator's term was to be 10 years.

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) charged that the firing of Wickard violated both "the spirit and intent" of the REA Act. He quoted statements by Republican members during the debate in 1936 which hailed the provision keeping politics out of the agency.

REP. POAGE (D. Tex.) declared that "if this action by the Administration stands up, then Congress can't create a non-partisan agency."

Wickard's term was not due to expire until June 30, 1955, but he resigned after he was asked to quit and told that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell said he could be forced out.

Public power facilities and the nation's lands have long been coveted by private power, cattle, lumber and other interests. Lobbying to get them transferred to private ownership has greatly increased since the Republicans returned to power.

IUE Calls GE Offer Worthless

THE CIO Electrical Workers last week rejected a pay increase offer by General Electric because "it would be worth at most only one-quarter of 1c an hour."

The proposal was GE's answer to IUE's demands for a substantial general wage increase and other higher pay adjustments made three weeks ago under a wage reopener clause. IUE represents 70,000 GE employes.

IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, and John Callahan, chairman of the union's GE conference board, attacked the firm's offer. They said the proposal was a "brainstorm so confusing as to be almost incomprehensible" and would be worth "at most only one-quarter of 1c an hour."

MEANWHILE, IUE prepared for pay negotiations with Westinghouse Electric Corp. by citing the firm's profits for 1952. Net profits rose by 6% from $64,578,000 in 1951 to $68,581,000 last year.

And IUE will remind the firm of that, when the union asks for a general wage increase during the contract's 30-day reopener period which begins Apr. 1.

That decision was made by the union's Westinghouse Conference Board during a recent Washington meeting.

The contract also provides that if no agreement is reached by Apr. 30, IUE has the right to strike.

Some of the many reasons why a wage and salary increase is warranted were noted in a report to the board by Carey.

ALTHOUGH the productivity of Westinghouse production workers increased by 132% in the last 12 years, his earnings increased by only 116%. This leaves a gap of 16% of 1940 wages not paid for, or 14.2c an hour.

Including both salaried and production workers, production per employe increased by 150% and wages and salaries by 127%. This left a deficit of 23% of 1940 wages and salaries, or 24c an hour.

Burns Confirmed As Adviser

The Senate last week confirmed the nomination of Arthur Frank Burns, Columbia Univ. economics professor, as a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers.

Reuther Appears On 'Meet The Press'

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on "Meet the Press," a television press conference, on Sunday, Mar. 29.

The show, carried on the National Broadcasting Co.'s TV network, originates in Washington at 6:00 p.m. (EST).

Reuther will answer questions posed by a panel of top Washington newsmen.

What's That On Cabinet?

Business and politics don't mix, proclaimed Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the board and former president of General Motors, last week.

Testifying in the government's anti-trust case against DuPont, which owns a big chunk of GM, Sloan was asked about the ouster of John J. Raskob as GM finance chairman after Raskob became Democratic national chairman in 1928.

Sloan agreed he forced the ousting, claiming "a corporation should not permit itself to get into politics."

The GM executive was not questioned about the 1953 Washington scene, which finds Charles E. Wilson, past GM president, serving as Secretary of Defense, former GM dealer Arthur Summerfield as Postmaster General, and former GM dealer Douglas McKay as Secretary of Interior.

'T-H Disruptive In Ship Industry,' Curran Warns House Committee

THE TAFT-HARTLEY Act, by operating to destroy the union hiring halls, has "proven to be disruptive to labor relations in the maritime industry," Pres. Joseph N. Curran of the CIO Maritime Union told the House Labor Committee last week.

Curran testified at the committee's hearings on proposed amendments to the act, and spoke both as NMU president and as chairman of the National CIO Maritime Committee. In addition, he is a National CIO vice president.

The experience of the NMU under T-H is an "illuminating example" of the act's "unrealistic approach," he told the committee.

Hiring Halls Lauded

"The union hiring hall is the most important single labor relations device ever to be developed in the maritime industry," he explained.

"Specifically, Taft-Hartley would prevent preferential employment and rotary shipping. Without preferential employment union security cannot exist. To eliminate rotary hiring is to return seamen to the scandalous and horrible conditions of the East Coast longshore shape-up and more."

Curran explained to the committee how the union hiring hall operates. Before it was instituted, he recalled, seamen were subjected to "the most archaic and outragous hiring practices ever to exist."

"Merchant seamen," he warned, "will not willingly permit a return to the indignities, discomforts and abuses they suffered prior to the establishment of the union hiring hall."

The CIO vice president pointed out to the committee that because of the nature of the maritime industry, stability of employment does not exist. Therefore, he went on, union participation in the hiring process is indispensable if the union is to survive.

"No comparison can be drawn between the union security problem of a union representing factory workers and a maritime union's need for a hiring hall," he said.

"The first is essentially a device to protect the status of the organization and thereby to enable it more effectively to promote the welfare of its members.

"The maritime hiring hall, on the other hand, exists primarily to protect seamen against discrimination—not only for union activity, but for race, creed and color as well. It is also the only tested means of protecting seamen against employment practices which in the past were notorious."

The hiring hall is the "heart" of maritime labor organization and the "link between the union and the men on the ships," he said. When it is destroyed, he went on, the men are dispersed and "lose effective force."

Its outlawing, Curran declared, would have two results.

"The seaman would no longer be free to contract for the sale of his services," he explained. "He would no longer, through his bargaining agent, be protected by being hired in honest rotation from lists maintained by his union. . . .

Seamen Would Lose

"The second result would be that the seaman would lose all of the services of his union. Although the right to organize and to bargain collectively are basic rights, constitutionally protected, he could not even discuss the question of hiring.

"An area of bargaining, essential to him, would be removed forcibly from his reach. Without this right the discussion of wages, hours and working conditions becomes academic. At the very base of the employer-employe relationship, he would be cut off from the assistance of his union."

JOSEPH CURRAN

He urged Congress to legalize the union hiring hall in the industry and also to eliminate the T-H injunction clause. The result, he said, would be "stable labor-management relations in a vital national defense industry."

State Picketing Curbs Upheld By High Court

SWEEPING APPROVAL of anti-picketing injunctions in so-called state "right to work" laws was given by the U. S. Supreme Court last week. The decision was another in the growing log of cases whittling at the picket line as a form of free speech.

The decision came in a 7-2 ruling upholding the ban on peaceful picketing in the Virginia law. That law—like many sanctioned by Taft-Hartley—prohibits all forms of union security, and holds that it is against public policy to deny work on the basis of union membership or non-membership.

JUSTICE BURTON wrote the majority decision. The dissenters were Justice Black, who made no comment, and Justice Douglas, who wrote an opinion based on his view of the law as a limitation on free speech.

The case involved a Richmond local of the AFL Plumbers Union which picketed—with either one man or two—a school building project on which a non-union firm had obtained the plumbing sub-contract.

The picket signs carried only the notice, "This is not a union job." Union members refused to work and construction was halted. The general contractor went to court, obtained an injunction and $190 in damages, and the picketing halted when the court issued its order.

"If this union used the coercive power of picketing," said Douglas in his dissent, "to force the contractor to discharge the non-union men who were employed on the job, Virginia could issue the injunction. For it is within the police power of the state to keep opportunities for work open to both non-union and union men.

"But if the union did no more than advertise to union men and union sympathizers that non-union men were employed on the job, the picketing would be privileged.

"Picketing is a form of free speech — the working man's method of giving publicity to the facts of industrial life. As such it is entitled to constitutional protection."

Burton, in the majority opinion, maintained that the purpose of the picketing was "more than the mere publication of the fact that the job was not 100% union."

"Their picketing was done in such a manner and at such a place," he continued, "that coupled with established union policies and traditions, it caused the union men to stop work and thus slow the project to a general standstill."

The effect of the picketing, he added, confirmed its purpose as found by the trial court.

The Plumbers Union was headed nationally by Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin until he resigned to join the Cabinet.

Barden Hints Violence For NLRB Aides

REP. BARDEN (D. N. C.), former chairman of the House Labor Committee and self-appointed apostle of the "judicial approach" in labor relations, isn't quite so judicial when the National Labor Relations Board steps on the toes of employers in his district.

In fact, he threatened board agents with violence during his questioning of NLRB General Counsel George N. Bott, a study of the record of Labor Committee hearings on Taft-Hartley Act amendments shows.

Barden, during questioning of Bott, berated NLRB field examiners and trial examiners for a long list of alleged sins. Then, the record shows, the lawmakers added:

"If you do not begin to send a different type of folks down in my section of the country, you are going to show up some morning missing two or three of them. That is exactly what is going to happen."

CIO Wins First Vote At Big New Atom Plant

THE CIO last week defeated the AFL by a 40-to-1 majority in the first election at the Savannah River atomic energy plant near Aiken, S. C. The vote was among the protective firemen at the huge installation, which the DuPont Co. is building and will operate for the Atomic Energy Commission.

The vote was: CIO Chemical Workers 157, AFL 4, no union 51.

The firemen chose the UGC&CWA by the overwhelming margin in the face of an intense campaign of intimidation conducted by the company against the CIO organizers and the employes.

JOSEPH DONOVAN, South Carolina CIO assistant director, who was in charge of the drive and three other organizers were arrested by DuPont Co. police about a month ago while distributing leaflets outside the plant.

This led CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey to file official protests with Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell and Chairman Gordon Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The firemen themselves were threatened by the company with being placed on a blacklist if they voted for the CIO union. A letter to the firemen asked:

"WILL OTHER employers look with favor toward applicants (for jobs) who have shown they prefer to deal with their employer through such an outside organization?"

CIO organizers said that many supervisors—who followed the company line of favoring the AFL — warned the firemen against voting for the "wrong union," meaning the UGC&CWA-CIO.

The CIO is conducting a campaign among the some 1400 operation workers in the section of the plant that is completed.

Donovan was sentenced to $50 fine or 30 days in jail, but Ben Sigal, attorney assigned to the case by Carey, appealed the decision. The disposition of the cases against the three other organizers was postponed pending the election.

CAREY'S protests brought a reply from Warren Olney, assistant attorney general in charge of the criminal division of the Justice Dept., who said he would investigate the arrests.

Sigal said he discussed the arrests with Dean who "explicitly recognized that AEC does have the ultimate responsibility to insure recognition of the rights of the employes to organize, which includes the right to distribute leaflets."

'T-H Blocks Real Bargaining'

"GENUINE collective bargaining, under the Taft-Hartley monstrosity, is rendered impossible in many situations. The days of union-busting are with us again and labor is once more on the defensive."

That was CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey's answer to the question: "Is Taft-Hartley Fundamentally Sound?" posed at a Columbia Univ. forum recently.

Carey called Taft-Hartley the "law nobody knows," pointing out that in the present full-dress, congressional review of the law, Taft-Hartley language and meaning are still being hotly debated, even among congressmen who voted for it in 1947.

Taft-Hartley, he said, was a victory for reaction, which "has succeeded in forcing the tide backward." Big business and industry, Carey added, "are determined to wipe out all the gains made by labor during the past 20 years."

He offered as "flagrant proof," big business proposed amendments to Taft-Hartley which would outlaw company-wide and industry-wide bargaining.

The Mediation Service

There's some ugly business going on at the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, attempts to turn this respected and worthwhile agency into a happy hunting ground for GOP political hacks.

Some of the facts of the situation came out last week with the announcement that Pres. Eisenhower has accepted the resignation of David Cole as the agency's director.

The facts are that he was fired. A registered Republican from New Jersey, with a long and successful experience in settling labor disputes, Cole nevertheless was unacceptable to that State's Sen. Smith.

And there have been some nasty rumors around Washington that, with Cole's departure, jobs in the Mediation Service will depend as much on having the "right" political connections as on understanding of labor-management relations.

Pres. Eisenhower, in accepting the Cole resignation, seemed to take note of the rumors—for he emphasized the need for skill and impartiality on the part of federal mediators which had been the practice under Cole and his predecessor, Cyrus Ching.

The White House patronage advisers will do well to take the President's words at face value. Any political shenanigans with the Mediation Service will have only one effect—utterly to destroy its usefulness as an agency for avoiding strikes or for helping to settle them.

'Crusade' In Action

The Republican crusade in Washington, which has gotten off to a notably slow start, seems to be moving a trifle faster.

Thus, the House has already approved—and the Senate will do so soon—a plan to give Cabinet status to the Federal Security Agency. Of course, Pres. Truman had advocated just such a change during both 1949 and 1950.

The Republicans undoubtedly will deny that there was any politics in the fact that the Republicans in the House voted against establishing a Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare in '49 and '50, but voted for it in 1953.

In the earlier years, the GOP congressmen said they viewed with alarm any such "dangerous trend toward the welfare state." Presumably, a new gimmick—to give the American Medical Association a powerful post within the new cabinet agency—will now strongly limit its "welfare" possibilities.

Politics in the "crusade in Washington"? Heaven forbid, the Republicans will try to say righteously.

As for us, we're pleased that Federal Security gains new prestige, and we're pleased that the Republicans have come around to accepting proposals long since endorsed by the CIO and long criticized by the Republicans themselves.

Mess In Kansas

The chairman of the Republican National Committee is accused of getting an $11,000 fee for persuading the Republican-controlled Kansas Legislature to "buy" for $110,000 a hospital used by an insurance company—even though, in a few years the State, under terms of the original agreement, would have got the hospital for nothing.

Looks as though the Republicans, before they can "clean up the mess in Washington" will first have to "clean up the mess in Kansas."

Look Who's In Charge

In Other Words—

A Code For Investigators

Proposals for a "fair conduct code" for congressional investigators are pending in Congress. Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), author of two of the resolutions, discussed them recently in the New Republic magazine.

By ESTES KEFAUVER

RECENTLY I introduced two resolutions in the Senate: one provides for rules of procedure in congressional investigations, the other for rules of procedure for derogatory remarks made in debate by a member of Congress.

I took this step because I am convinced that in our struggle against communism we are in danger of losing many of our most cherished liberties. Unless we curb those who have lost touch with the meaning and value of our traditions and have adopted tactics and attitudes frighteningly similar to those which mark the totalitarian mind in all its guises, we will lose them.

Since Congress constantly needs factual, well-balanced information in many different fields to enable it to act wisely in the public interest, congressional investigations are one of the most important of the legislative processes. But such investigations should never be allowed to become instruments for abridging the constitutional rights of citizens.

Equally important, fear of censure before a congressional committee must never become a weapon for enforcing conformity to prevailing ideas.

Trials Without Justice

Specifically, the criticisms of the conduct of congressional committees have centered around these points:

They frequently assume the aspects of a trial of an individual without the safeguards of regular court proceedings. Legislators appear in the role of judges and combine the functions of prosecuting and judging, which should be separate.

The witnesses may be exposed to such penalties as loss of their jobs, character assassination, or injury to their reputations, as a result of the attendant publicity. Appearances before investigating committees are not subject to procedures laid down by Congress. The legal rights of individuals guaranteed by the Bill of Rights are abridged by congressional investigations.

There have been several attempts, beginning in the 79th Congress, to prescribe procedures of investigating committees and to protect the rights of witnesses. Some committees have voluntarily adopted self-imposed rules to guide their conduct. While a step in the right direction, (these) are not the final answer.

A code of fair conduct—adopted by the House and the Senate as part of their standing rules—would avoid confusion and promote uniformity. It would give Congress and the country a yardstick by which to test the performance of every investigation.

I think the code embodied in my resolution is workable. Briefly, this is what it provides:

That a person or organization shall be notified of the nature of the charges against him, of the matters to be inquired into, and of the derogatory material to be presented.

That he be given an opportunity to present evidence in his own behalf. That he be permitted counsel, who shall be entitled to question him within the appropriate limits in order to bring out all pertinent facts.

Right To Self-Defense

That he be permitted to file a limited number of (questions) to be answered by witnesses who have testified to derogatory materials. That he be permitted to file at the conclusion of the evidence a rebuttal statement.

Now let us consider the related problem as it applies to the floor of the Senate. Our Constitution grants constitutional immunity for any speech or debate made in either house. There is a sound basis for this guarantee—it recognizes that free legislative debate is the very bedrock of freedom.

My second resolution seeks to preserve that freedom of debate but it seeks also to give an individual the opportunity to defend himself. It seems to me that this is a fundamental concept—the concept of self-defense.

The resolution provides that insofar as practicable a member of Congress who intends to name an individual or an organization in a derogatory manner shall first notify that individual or organization of the nature of the charges to be made. The person or organization concerned may then file with the House or the Senate a sworn statement, if he so desires, giving his side of the story—and this statement shall be read on the floor and published in the Congressional Record, along with the charges.

NOW THAT CONTROLS on prices, wages and materials are being removed, many are wondering what will happen to the cost of living.

Living Costs And Standby Controls

Most economists believe that prices, generally, will not rise this year. In fact, some feel that there could be a slight dip.

Many wholesale prices have already dropped, but aside from select meats the housewife is finding little indication of it in the grocery stores. Clothing prices are lower, however.

On the other hand, rents will go up since rent controls will die in all but defense areas by Apr. 30 unless Congress extends the law. Gas and electricity prices are also due to increase. Costs of professional services are on the rise.

With the economic forces now at work, there is far greater danger of deflation than inflation. Still, this does not mean that there is no chance of inflation and rising prices. Intensifying the cold war or enlarging the shooting war could bring these about.

The Lesson Of Korea

To meet this possible danger the Senate Banking and Currency Committee is holding hearings on whether to establish economic controls on a stand-by basis. They have before them the experience of the first six months after the outbreak of the Korean War in June, 1950. Inflation then cost consumers over $17 billions, shot consumers' prices up over 8% before any adequate controls could be legislated.

Wage controls are another problem. Wages are always under the "control" of the employer. The offsetting force in our free society is the pressure of individual and collective bargaining.

Historically, widespread movements to raise wages have started because price rises have increased the cost of living of workers which their pay envelopes won't meet. If prices are kept down, voluntarily or through use of controls, such wage pressures are lessened.

Part of the objection to wage control is the administrative red tape in which it becomes wrapped. Not long before controls were discontinued recently, the backlog of wage cases requiring government sanction had reached 20,000. These had already been agreed to by both management and labor.

There are many cost items in the final price of a product. Labor often accounts for less than half, sometimes more.

At work all the time is technology to decrease unit cost. It shows up in the higher productivity of the working force. This allows for lower prices and wage increases. It raises always the question as to whether the workers are receiving their fair share of their greater productivity. If they don't, who buys the product of industry?

Contrary to the common belief, wage increases in the postwar period have actually lagged behind such productivity increases.

Record Of Productivity

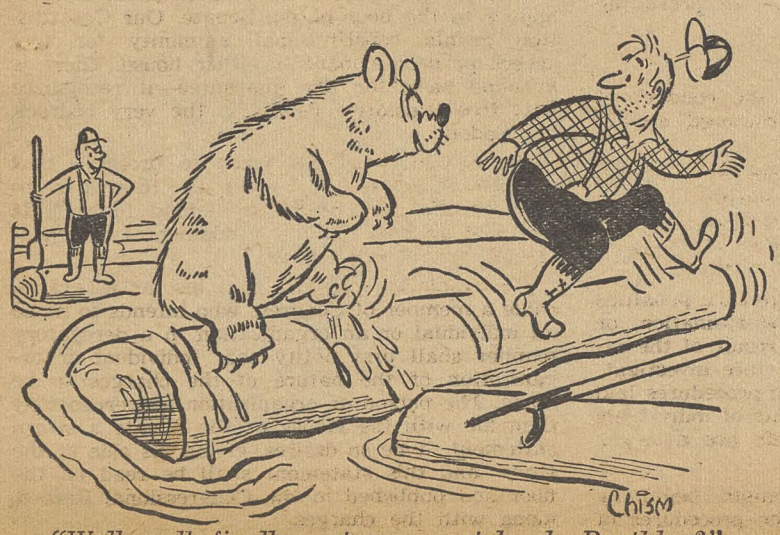
Estimates by former Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers show that from 1946 to 1952, for the economy as a whole, productivity rose 17.6%. In manufacturing alone it was even higher. Yet, real hourly wages, including overtime, rose only 12.9%.

Against this background, wage control arbitrarily imposed may limit desirable non-inflationary wage increases.

The third form of stand-by control being considered is on materials or production.

Logically, if an emergency arises, it will be necessary to allot materials and control production within the defense and economic needs of the entire nation. If stand-by powers are on the books, this can be done with a minimum of delay.

Delegating extensive powers to the federal government over the lives and welfare of the people is feared by many. The issue which the Senate committee must decide now is which powers are necessary for government to have ready to go in case of an emergency.



"Well, well, finally met your match, eh, Benthley?"

Nathan Says—

'TVA Belongs Not Just To U. S.— It's World Asset For Democracy'

By ROBERT R. NATHAN

(CIO Commentator on ABC Network)

IN MY MANY TRAVELS to the Far East, the Middle East and other parts of the globe, the most popular subject about the United States and the one which brought a gleam of hope and enthusiasm to leaders abroad, was the TVA.

Almost every country which has any hydroelectric possibilities is anxious to have a TVA of its own. Many countries have already started projects and some have completed projects patterned after the TVA. The TVA is not just a national asset built for the people in the United States. It is a world asset for democracy and freedom.

In just a few weeks, on May 18, six million Americans who live in the water shed of the Tennessee Valley, or are served by power from TVA, will celebrate the twentieth anniversary of TVA.

All kinds of organizations of citizens in that area, including Chambers of Commerce and public power associations and farm, industrial and labor groups, are cooperating in preparing for this important occasion. The celebration will give the people of this important area an opportunity to tell of the remarkable accomplishments of TVA within a short period of two decades to their fellow citizens throughout the country and to free people throughout the world.

Living Standards Gain

During the past 20 years the physical face of the Tennessee Valley region has been changed. Most important, the living standards and the health and recreation and opportunities and security of six million Americans have been greatly improved.

No longer are the cities and the farms and the factories in the Tennessee Valley subjected to recurring and devastating floods. No longer can that area be characterized as one of the backward regions of the U. S.

Instead, the cities and the farms and the factories in the Tennessee Valley have a fresh and prosperous look. Agriculture is more productive. New cities have sprung up. New industries have developed. Employment opportunities have improved. Wages and profits are higher. And above all, the TVA has contributed both to the economic well-being and to the military security of the entire U. S.

TVA power built the first atomic bomb. It was the power from TVA which made possible the miraculous developments at Oak Ridge. The chemical and aluminum and munitions plants in the TVA region were important suppliers of many of the most critical materials needed to win World War II. The TVA is now a vital factor in building our military might under the present mobilization effort.

What has been accomplished by TVA should be a source of pride to every American. Yet, the opportunities ahead are even greater than the accomplishments of the past. More power is needed in that region. In the past 20 years power consumption in the TVA area has increased more than fifteenfold. Additional facilities are now being built which will permit the TVA power plants to produce two and one-half times as much in 1956 as is now available. Even more is needed.

Unfortunately, some groups and individuals would prevent the further expansion of TVA and would deny the country the added benefits which would come from similar TVAs elsewhere.

All Industry Benefits

Not long ago an American industrialist (Charles E. Wilson, once of GE), suggested that the Government divest itself of all of its economic assets. Sen. Welker (R. Ida.) said specifically on a television program that he favored selling the TVA to private interests. Later, Sen. Welker wasn't so sure that such a stand was politically sound and he reversed his position.

The private power companies play an important role in the development of our country and they should continue to have the fullest opportunity to develop power production and distribution. But they are doing everything in their power to prevent the huge coordinated development of our power resources that requires government participation.

They even want to destroy that progress which has already been made. Their shortsighted point of view is not consistent with free enterprise and expansion and growth. All private industry has benefited from the TVA and will benefit further from the expansion of TVA and similar projects.

The development and use of our natural resources will face severe tests under the new Administration. Either we are going to move ahead and build a stronger America for the benefit of all Americans or we will suffer from floods and soil erosion and slower progress.

On the twentieth anniversary of TVA, Americans everywhere should take pride in its great accomplishments, support its further growth, and determine to apply its principles elsewhere for the benefit of all Americans.

'Haywood Never Lost Humility'

THE SUDDEN death of Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, was mourned by the Executive Board of the CIO Steelworkers at its recent meeting in Pittsburgh.

In a resolution, the board described his passing as a "tragic blow" to the CIO and all organized labor, and "an especially tragic event for all Steelworkers," as he was a "revered and cherished" member of that union. The resolution continued in part:

The career of Allan Haywood measured up to the highest traditions of the labor movement. He was a pioneer in building our labor movement and he dedicated his life to improving the lot of his fellow workmen. From his earliest days as a local union official to his last days as executive vice president of the CIO, he was motivated by an indomitable drive and will to organize the unorganized.

All Are In This Debt

There is scarcely a CIO union in existence today which did not profit from the direction, counsel, aid and cooperation which Allan Haywood extended. The Steelworkers union is particularly indebted to him because he played a vital role in launching the Steel Workers Organizing Committee on the road to success.

In recent years, he turned his vast talents in the direction of constructing a free world labor movement which is so essential in the struggle against Communist aggression and against poverty, hunger and disease which prevail on a large part of the globe. To this end he was one of the guiding spirits of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

While he achieved positions of great stature and eminence in the labor movement, Allan Haywood never lost his humility. His warmth, sincerity and friendship were unbounded. He was ever devoted to the down-trodden and the underdog. He was always ready with compassion and jocular wit to tide workers over tense situations. He saved his biting scorn and his loud protests for those who sought to profit from exploiting and subjugating workers.

Allan Haywood truly gave his life to the labor movement. His own personal welfare never entered his mind. He was always available when called upon, and volunteered his services when not called upon, wherever there was a strike or crisis involving his fellow unionists. No meeting was too small or inconsequential or too far away for him. If workers needed him, Allan Haywood responded to inspire them. It was in keeping with his majestic character and personality that he died "in the line of duty."

Just as Allan Haywood worked to help build our union and many other unions, he would desire no more from us than to have us continue the great work of organizing the unorganized which he was instrumental in charting and accomplishing. We could raise no greater monument to the memory of this great and happy warrior than to rededicate ourselves to his ideal of organizing the unorganized and to redouble our efforts to bring more and more steelworkers within our union.

Steelworkers throughout the land mourn the passing of Allan Haywood. This Executive Board, on behalf of the million and a quarter members whom Allan Haywood loved so well and who likewise loved him, extends deep sympathy and heartfelt condolences to his beloved widow, Mrs. Kate Haywood, and to the other members of his family.

'Trade, Not Aid'?

Tariff Cuts Are Tough Issue For U.S. Labor

"TRADE, not aid" is a tricky slogan that's popular in Washington these days, as the question of Republican policy decisions on tariffs and reciprocal trade comes to the fore.

Henry Ford II, the auto manufacturer who wants to end all levies on imported cars now and eliminate all tariffs gradually, conferred recently with Pres. Eisenhower. He said the President called his proposal "an interesting idea."

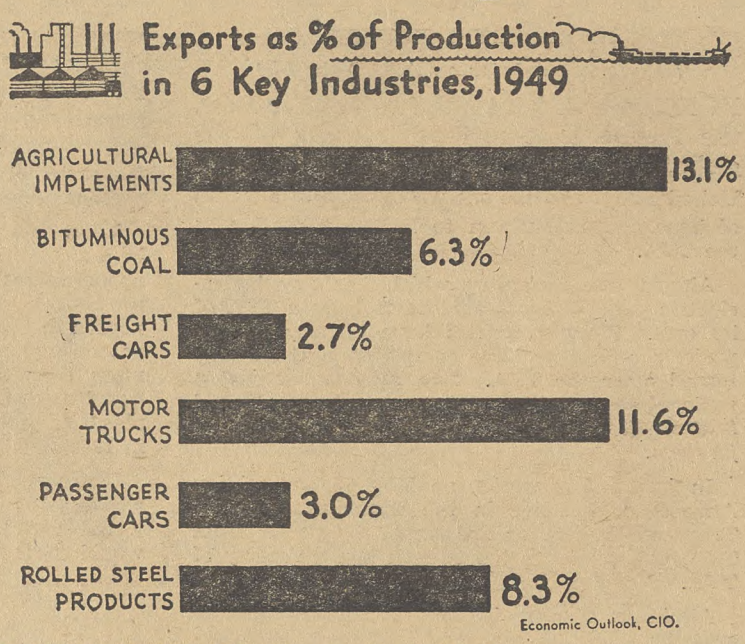
A thorough overhauling of U. S. tariff policies was recommended recently by the Mutual Security Agency's public advisory board, of which CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey is a member.

And the GOP's congressional leaders, Sen. Taft and Speaker Martin, recently met at the White House and agreed on "getting going" on legislation to extend the reciprocal trade program—pioneered by the New Deal and backed by the CIO—and simplifying the red tape in U. S. customs regulations.

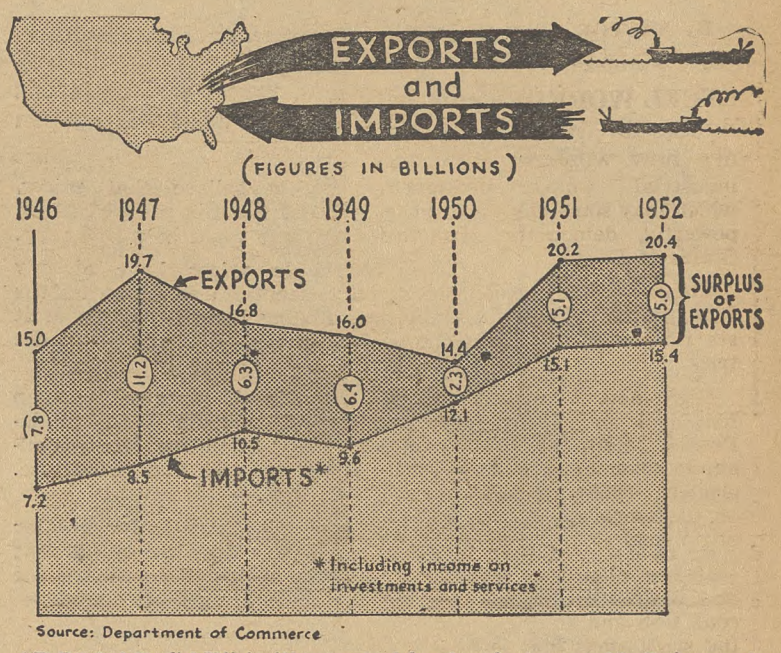
THUS the Republican party—traditionally the advocate of ever higher tariffs—is finding foreign trade an important issue requiring early action as it returns to Washington.

Some of the background of the trade and tariff problem and its importance to labor are examined by the current issue of the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Bigger imports by the U. S. and development of additional world markets are called essential by the Outlook.



IMPORTANCE of foreign trade to U. S. workers in several basic industries is illustrated by this chart showing volume of farm equipment, trucks, cars and rolled steel products shipped to overseas markets.



"DOLLAR GAP" is illustrated by lag between U. S. imports and what we sell abroad. Imports have climbed in the last two years, due largely to defense materials purchases, but the "dollar gap" continues just as big.

At the same time, it says the government must protect U. S. workers who may be forced out of jobs by increased imports, and also must safeguard them against the results of exploited labor forces in other nations.

To take care of such displaced workers, the Outlook maintains, the U. S. government must grant them immediate aid. They must be given supplemental income during the transition period, along with retraining and relocation where jobs are available, and communities must be helped to induce new industry to move in.

The Outlook recounts the necessity of foreign trade if the U. S. is to obtain raw materials for her factories and to sell their finished products. Curtailed imports of raw materials, it points out, would force many basic industries to close or curtail operations, as well as upset the economies of the selling nations. Fewer exports would mean unemployment.

THE U. S., the Outlook continues, cannot go on forever maintaining its export surplus. This plight can normally be met in three ways—by our continuing the economic and military aid of the past few years, by other nations cutting their purchases from us, or by an increase in U. S. imports, it said.

"During recent years," it continued, "the U. S. has, as a result of the reciprocal trade program of the Roosevelt and Truman Administrations, been reducing American import duties and tariffs to increase American imports.

"Obviously, more can and should be done in this area.

"While the U. S. should continue its favorable attitude toward reciprocal trade, the countries throughout the world must look to other sources for additional aid in solving their very difficult international trade problems."

The new markets must be found in both Europe and the underdeveloped nations, it says.

The Outlook warned that the slogan "trade, not aid" is "dangerous."

"If not implemented on both sides," it claims, "it plays into the hands of the Communist world that has already picked up the slogan as their basis of solving the problem. They know that as far as the American Congress and Government are concerned chances are for greater curtailment of aid rather than for improvement of trade relations."

Taft-Hartley In Action—

Big Cleveland Bank Uses All The Dodges To Stall NLRB Order

NEW EVIDENCE of the red tape and legalistic delays built into Taft-Hartley came last week as the Cleveland Trust Co. took new steps to buck a National Labor Relations Board order.

That order—important for all white collar unions—followed a decision in which the board found the bank guilty of engaging in unfair labor practices during an organizing campaign among clerical employes by the CIO Financial Employes Guild, LIU 1757.

THE CASE dates back to the NLRB election, which the CIO lost, on May 23, 1951. It was not until more than 21 months later that the decision finding the bank guilty was forthcoming. Now it is taking the fight to the U. S. Circuit Court, thus delaying justice for at least another 18 months.

The bank had been ordered to cease all unfair practices against its white-collar workers. The board had ticked off the practices as follows:

1. Granting wage and vacation increases in an attempt to halt union activity.

2. Assisting anti-union groups formed by employes who dined with top management and had management financing for anti-union propaganda.

3. Threatening employes for soliciting or voting for a union.

4. Interfering with, restraining or coercing employes in any other manner in the exercise of their rights to form and join a labor union.

The NLRB order rejected the union's charge that one employe was fired for union activity. The board ruled his discharge resulted from accumulated violations of bank policy and not from his efforts to organize.

Evidence in the case showed that Cleveland Trust, the largest Ohio bank and 17th largest commercial bank in the nation, had used all avenues of anti-union activity to defeat LIU 1757.

It had granted two wage increases during the brief organizing period, and increased vacations in attempts to influence employes. The board report showed the vacation increases followed similar action in competing banks by 22 to 27 months and were granted only after the union began organizing.

HEARINGS records also showed the company spent nearly $500 to print and distribute the anti-union letters, instigated by straw bosses.

At the same time, other supervisors were threatening employes who had joined the union with being "in the dog house" with company brass. They told one worker she was "digging her own grave."

Company officials had suggested the letters be changed somewhat and used bank funds for printing and mailing them. The board said:

"We regard the subsidization of such activity to be an unwarranted intrusion upon the right of employes freely to choose their own collective bargaining representative."

Taft's First Edition Now At Cut-Rate

Non-political book news from Washington: Personally autographed copies of Sen. Taft's 1951 book, "A Foreign Policy for America," which orginally sold at $2 a copy, are now on sale in Washington drug stores for 25c each.

Kick 'Em, Toss 'Em Out— And Land Before NLRB

A WASHINGTON, N. C., employer learned last week that he couldn't get by with brutally beating a crippled worker.

The National Labor Relations Board told the employer, Thompson D. Litchfield, a husky former athlete and secretary-treasurer of the Moss Planing Mill, that the firm must reinstate the crippled worker, Lee A. Wynne, and another employe also mistreated and fired. Both are members of the CIO Woodworkers.

Wynne suffered a particularly brutal assault at the hands—or rather feet—of Litchfield, former amateur athlete who was armed with a pistol.

Wynne had asked the union's help in processing a claim under the Wage-Hour Act. The Wage-Hour Div. investigated and found about $700 was due him. Litchfield tried to induce him to compromise for $125, blaming "this damned union" for the claim, and gave Wynne until the following day to think it over.

In the boiler room the next morning, as Wynne was bent over to adjust a valve, Litchfield kicked him in the groin, according to the trial examiner's report. Then the firm official stood over the agonized worker with gun in hand and he demanded that he sign a paper he waved in the other hand.

Wynne remained in a hospital for a week, during which Litchfield sent word he was discharged, and then had several months of out-patient treatment. He had not fully recovered when the trial examiner wrote his report a year later.

The other union member, Roy E. Fulcher, an ordained minister, was a shop steward. Litchfield threw him bodily out of his office after he had enlisted the union's help in obtaining compensation for a work injury.

Litchfield later cut his hours, changed his job, and then discharged him.

THE NLRB ordered the firm to reinstate Wynne and Fulcher with all rights and back pay, and reserved the right to modify its order if required by a future change in Wynne's physical condition.

It also directed the company to post notices that it will not discriminate against IWA members, or interfere with the right of any employe to engage in union activity. In addition the firm was required to post the following notice:

"We will not assault or otherwise injure our employes, or refuse to endorse their applications for unemployment insurance, or threaten not to employ them, because of their union or concerted action."

Experiment Like TVA—

Schuman Plan Gives Hope To Europe's Labor

By VICTOR G. REUTHER

CIO European Representative

STEEL WORKERS and coal miners in Western Europe are now working under an industrial super-government which may some day grow into a powerful, democratic United States of Europe.

The project is the Schuman Plan, now going into operation in six iron and coal mining countries.

Right now it affects 1.75 million coal and iron workers in France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, Luxemburg and the Netherlands. They produce a sixth of the world's coal and a fifth of its steel.

If the plan succeeds, miners and basic steel workers in the coal, iron and steel industries of the six nations may witness the transformation in their lives that the people who benefited from the Tennessee Valley Authority in the United States witnessed during their lifetimes.

Coal miners near Douai, France, hope for much from the Schuman Plan . . . So do German steel workers.

Model Conditions

Under the Schuman Plan, provision for a new super-government has been created in Western Europe, with a Parliament, a High Authority and a Supreme Court. All are under a Council of Ministers made up of one representative from each participating government.

It could establish model working conditions for the round two million workers in its industries. Its control over basic coal and steel lays the foundation for a powerful, democratic Europe with a modern standard of living.

The new "government," called the European Coal and Steel Community, has the right to levy taxes and to slap fines on violators of basic economic laws.

It can raise revenue by a tax on each ton of coal or iron produced in the six countries. Revenue for the first year will come to about $30 million. By 1954, it will be more than $50 million.

A Big Hitch

If the basic policies adopted by the Schuman Plan are the right ones, union analysts in Europe and the U. S. say, its operations could mean a spectacular rise in the standard of living of everyone in the six countries.

Equally important, they could immensely strengthen the free nations of the world against the threat of totalitarian Stalinist invasion.

The hitch, says the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions, an international organization made up chiefly of Catholic unions, is that the goals can only be achieved through the "actual participation of workers' representatives in all the directing operations of the Schuman Plan agency . . ."

This kind of worker representation "would be the best guarantee against the abuses of old-fashioned free enterprise laissez faire economics," it adds.

Finet In Top Post

Workers are represented in the Schuman Plan agency, but not to the degree or in the manner that the free unions of Europe were led to expect.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the worldwide federation of free trade unions to which both CIO and AFL belong, has protested that the Trade Union Section of the Consultative Committee to the Schuman Plan agency was selected by disregarding specific recommendations of the unions concerned.

In general, the ICFTU has pointed out that the Schuman Plan top administration is heavily overweighted with representatives of coal and steel companies and firms that use steel and coal. On the other hand, only two union representatives are in top posts.

Paul Finet, former head of the Labor Federation of Belgium and former president of the ICFTU, is one of the nine-man top governing committee, the High Authority.

Another worker, P. J. S. Serrarens, member of the Netherlands Christian Union, is a member of the seven-man high court.

This representation, European unionists declare, is not enough.

French and German unions alike have told CIO representatives that they want more worker representation to insure against the hazards the agency must skirt to be successful.

European unions emphasize that the only way to make sure the old, discredited cartels do not take over again, and that unemployment and wage-cutting do not result, is to put labor people on boards and control commissions where they can counter monopoly tactics and insist on intelligent social practices.

The Schuman Plan was originally proposed by Robert Schuman, then foreign minister of France. Its chief objective is the establishment of one market for coal and iron in the six countries taking part in the program.

The plan already provides for the free movement of workers across national boundaries from one mine or mill operating under the program to other mines and mills.

Schuman Plan authorities have pledged that a decent minimum wage will be established in the area where it operates, and that the threat to high standard of living countries by low standard nations will be eliminated by levelling all standards of living upward.

As the plan hits high gear, inefficient, low-wage, high-cost mines and mills will be closed. Production will be concentrated in efficient, high-wage installations.

Blueprint Goals

Money is to be provided for new equipment through the plan. Long-range research programs are intended to produce improved methods and materials.

The Schuman Plan in the blue-print stage provides for the following:

- Complete freedom of movement for workers in the six-country coal, iron and steel community.
- A single, six-country social security system for the workers providing for pensions, unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation.
- Protection against unemployment; retraining for workers in cases where operations are closed out.
- Financial aid to workers who have to move from one community to another.

When that is accomplished, the Schuman Plan will really achieve its goals and perhaps turn out to be the first step toward a free and democratic United States of Europe.

German Unionist Pins Down 'Angels' Of Nazi Revival

THE GERMAN labor movement, which helped expose the neo-Nazi conspiracy in West Germany recently broken up by the British, has now identified some of the financial angels behind the plot.

They include a lot of people, once close to Hitler and his top aides, who now—or still—have close connections with the reactionary German coal and steel barons, according to Victor G. Reuther, CIO representative in Europe.

They were identified in an article by Editor Kuno Brandel of Metall, organ of the Metal Workers Union of the German Federation of Labor (DGB).

Among them were Otto Skorzeny, Hitler's personal goon, who was assigned to kidnap Italian Dictator Mussolini late in the war; Dr. Werner Nauman, who formerly worked closely with Nazi Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels; and Paul Zimmerman, a top hand in the steel industry's Consultative Agency for the Use of Steel.

NAUMAN used his export-import business as a cover to keep in touch with Skorzeny's aging army of strong-arm men in Spain and Argentine, according to Brandel, and also helped finance the conspiracy by black market selling of steel to the Russians.

"The expose," Reuther observed, "demonstrates that the demand by the German unions for democratic control of German big industry is a crucial aspect of the fight against any Nazi revival."

The Bohlen Case

McCarthy Loses In Challenge To Ike

JOE McCARTHY was defeated last week in his first direct challenge to Pres. Eisenhower since the Republicans took over in Washington. It came when the Senate Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved Eisenhower's nomination of Charles E. Bohlen as U. S. Ambassador to Russia.

Code urged by Sen. Kefauver for investigations; see Page 4.

The Wisconsin Republican, in company with Sens. Bridges (R. N.H.), Ferguson (R. Mich.), and McCarran (D. Nev.) had tried to block the nomination, with his usual doubts and hints about "loyalty" and "security."

But the fight actually was another phase of the conflict within GOP ranks between isolationists and supporters of the Administration's foreign policies.

As Sen. Mansfield (D. Mont.) pointed out, "some Republicans are using the Bohlen appointment to re-open the fight on Pres. Eisenhower's anti-enslavement resolution" on Soviet violations of the Yalta and Potsdam World War II treaties. (Bohlen, a career diplomat for 20 years, had served as the late Pres. Roosevelt's interpreter at Yalta.)

"REPUBLICANS should realize," Mansfield said, "that Bohlen has been nominated for high office by their own Administration. It will be unfortunate indeed if we disqualify every diplomat who has held office over the past 20 years from high office."

That didn't stop McCarthy from demanding that Eisenhower withdraw Bohlen's nomination, proclaiming that "certainly any good American wouldn't want to represent the U. S. abroad with so much of the Republican leadership against him." The President replied Bohlen was a very fine appointment.

Unlike the cases in which the State Dept. bowed to McCarthy's recent blasts against the Voice of America, Sec. of State John Foster Dulles gave Bohlen full support in a final, closed committee session. And in the committee vote, even Ferguson—who had his eye on the 1954 election—went along on approval.

Full Senate action on confirmation was scheduled for early this week. McCarthy planned another blast at Bohlen, but he had already conceded defeat in advance.

From Eisenhower came his first recent critical comments on the congressional anti-Communist investigations.

He told a news conference flatly that he can see no possible good in a congressional investigation of possible communism in churches.

Such an inquiry of clergymen was advocated recently by Rep. Velde (R. Ill.), chairman of the House un-American Activities Committee. Velde modified his stand under criticism.

In the house, Rep. Jackson (R. Calif.), a fellow committee member, came to Velde's defense in a long address in which he charged critics of the committee with following the Comunist "line."

And Velde himself demanded a House vote on a resolution by Rep. Roosevelt (D. N. Y.) calling for his ouster as committee chairman.

Velde's criticism of ministers drew fire from CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, speaking at a Catholic forum in Harrisburg, Pa. Citing declarations of Roman Catholic bishops in favor of living wages and on social issues, Carey said:

"THERE ARE those who want to see religion confined in its own narrow and circumscribed compartment. If that be true, then we must strip from all religion its missions of material mercy and concrete charity. But, in these days, if we perform the corporal works of mercy, we run the risk of being investigated as Communist sympathizers."

The Central Conference of American Rabbis vigorously condemned the "undemocratic methods" used in congressional "witch hunts and spurious investigations."

And Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam — a particular target of Rep. Jackson's charges of "aid and comfort to the Communist front"—fired back:

"Congressman Jackson should know that there is no congressional immunity from the Biblical injunction, 'Thou shalt not bear false witness'."

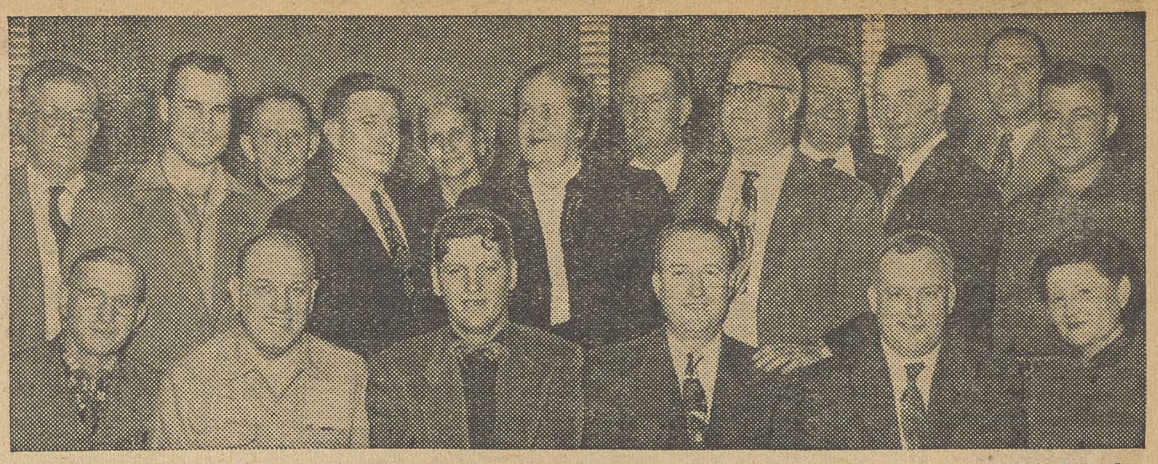
Employer Foe Of ILO Turns Drive To His Profit

IF Charles P. McCormick, president of McCormick & Co., a Baltimore, Md., spice firm, has any sense of shame, his face should be redder than the Russian flag.

McCormick formerly was employer delegate from the U. S. to the Intl. Labor Organization, and was a prime mover in stirring up the current attacks on that body by the NAM-Chamber of Commerce front.

Now comes the Baltimore Sun with a story that his firm not only increased net profits last year by about 13% over 1951, but that it devoted "substantial funds" for foreign market development. The foreign contracts, the newspaper observed, "were the result of inquiries stimulated by the president" during his ILO work.



NEW OFFICERS of Oklahoma State CIO Council were photographed recently. Seated center are Sec.-Treas. Len Yarborough and Pres. A. W. Mitchell, both of the Oil Workers. Thirteen internationals belong to the council.

World Of Labor—

ILO Unit Probes Czech Curbs On Unions; Franco Jailings Rapped

THE COMMITTEE on Freedom of Association of the Intl. Labor Organization voted to push charges of violation of trade union rights by the Communist Czechoslovakian government at its recent meeting in ILO headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland.

The committee, which institutes action on such charges—in this case filed by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions—reported that the Czech government apparently "deliberately refrained" from replying to its queries. It recommended further examination by the ILO Governing Body.

That body, a day later, unanimously agreed to ask Czech authorities to agree that the complaint be referred to the ILO Fact-Finding and Conciliation Commission on Freedom of Association.

The Committee on Freedom of Association recommended no action on charges against Spain because that country is not a member of the ILO or the United Nations. It noted that Venezuela has ended some restrictions on unions, recommended that additional steps be taken, and that jailed union leaders be freed.

Sweden Increases Pensions By 35%

Old age pensions in Sweden, which are paid to all citizens who have reached the age of 76, will be increased by 35% effective May 1, according to a unanimous decision by Parliament.

The boost will improve the living standards of about 820,000 pensioners and raise payments to 75% above the 1946 figure, about the same as the increase in real purchasing power industrial workers have won since then. Part of the cost will come from general revenues, the remainder from an increase in the pension contribution paid by each citizen.

It recommended that 17 charges, including one against the United States in respect to the Panama Canal Zone, be dismissed, and made suggestions to governments in eight other cases.

Spain

The ICFTU charged the Franco government of Spain with instituting a new "wave of repressions" within the last few weeks against workers associated with the outlawed Spanish General Workers Union.

The world labor body charged that Tomas Centeno, once an active unionist, died "as a result of maltreatment in the cells of the security police or Madrid." It accused police in several Spanish cities of jailing active union members who committed no crimes, and served notice it will fight the admission of Spain to the UN.

Austria

Eight Austrian union officials are in the United States to learn how American unions operate and also to find out how they have beaten back threats of Communist domination.

The team came to this country under sponsorship of the Mutual Security Agency's productivity and technical assistance program and will divide its time between New York, Chicago, Detroit and Washington.

During its orientation week at Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N.Y., it was addressed on union procedures by Executive Vice Pres. Ralph Novak of the CIO Newspaper Guild and Martin Dunne of the CIO Auto Workers.

UWUA Gains $10 Million At Con. Ed.

WAGE INCREASES and other benefits estimated to be worth $10 million a year have been won by the CIO Utility Workers for more than 26,000 employes of the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York.

An 8c hourly across-the-board increase retroactive to Jan. 4 was gained. Other improvements in the contract included better wage progression, a $3 million contribution to a trust fund to finance the pension plan, and pensions for widows of employes who qualify under a length of service provision.

The job security and the grievance machinery provision of the contract also were strengthened.

UWUA-CIO also recently won wage improvements and other benefits for employes of Dayton (O.) Power and Light Co., the Long Beach area power plants of the Southern California Edison Co., the California Water Service Co. and the San Jose, Calif., Water Works.

3 Big Uns Are Getting By, New Profit Reports Show

THREE of the nation's largest corporations, General Motors, DuPont and General Electric, last week reported 1952 net profits had outstripped the previous year.

GM became the nation's biggest money maker with net profits of $558 million as against $506 million in 1951. Sales hit $7.5 billion, largest in the company's 44-year history.

DuPont, which owns a big block of General Motors, had net profits of $235 million, up $15 million from the previous year. DuPont's profits included $80 million in dividends on GM stock.

GE, which has been hemming and hawing over CIO Electrical Workers' wage proposals, admitted its 1952 sales were the biggest in history and its net earnings almost at a peak. GE profits last year were $151 million compared to $138 million in 1951.

U. S. Steel mourned the fact that its 1952 net income was cut sharply by the CIO Steelworkers strike, but said nothing about causing it. The take was $143 million compared to $184 million in 1951. This means $4.54 a share of common stock last year, $6.10 the year before.

The Aluminum Co. of America had record post-war sales and other revenues of $584 million, 8% above 1951, while net earnings of $43 million were 11% more than the $39 million of the year before. The income was equal to $8.38 a share of common stock last year, compared to $7.53 in 1951.

THE AMERICAN Enka Corp. did something last year that few other textile firms were able to do: it increased its net earnings over 1951. Thanks to heavy demand for tire yarns, the net stood at $6 million, or $5.42 a share, compared to $5.6 million, or $5.01 a share, the year before.

Radio Corp. of America set a record for sales in 1952 and increased its profits, although its federal income taxes climbed. Net profits went from $31.1 million in 1951 to $32.3 million in the last year.

Dewey Turns On The Heat As Bills To Gag PAC Revived

THE DEWEY Republican Administration in New York State was embarked last week on a three-way campaign to raise rents, boost taxes and silence any union that wanted to protest about it.

With the Legislature near the windup of its session, there were these developments under what CIO called "Operation Big Business."

- The Dewey-proposed bill to boost all residential rents up to 15%, sailed through the State Senate and Assembly despite the strong protests voiced by CIO and tenant groups from throughout the State.
- The Dewey Administration proposed authorization for New York City to impose a 0.5% payroll tax on all wages and salaries.
- And the Dewey Administration reintroduced, and won Senate committee approval, for three bills virtually outlawing labor political action.

THE MEASURES are patterned after the Travia-Erwin bills which were defeated last year, thanks to a strong campaign led by the State CIO Council against what is called "an effort to put workers into a political concentration camp."

The measure would make PAC fund-raising or political campaign contributions virtually illegal.

Pres. Louis Hollander of the State CIO Council hit the three-way Dewey drive as an effort "to impose a one-party system in our State."

"As far as the CIO is concerned," he said, "if these bills are enacted they will be ignored. We will form special organizations so that our members can continue to make their contributions to labor's fight against the one-party system and reaction."

The CIO leader commented, "the Republicans have apparently interpreted the last election as a mandate for a raid on the pockets of wage-earners for the benefit of corporate interests."

Pres. Michael J. Quill of the New York CIO Council and of the CIO Transport Workers urged Gov. Dewey to hold public hearings before signing the 15% rent boost bill.

Court Upholds California Strike Curb

CALIFORNIA'S sweeping legal ban on so-called jurisdictional strikes is constitutional, the State Supreme Court has ruled.

The law allows employers to seek injunctions when (1.) more than one union claims to represent striking workers or (2.) a plant under contract is picketed by another union.

While the court was unanimous in upholding the law, Justice Jesse W. Carter pointed out how it can be used to destroy unions.

"An employer could use the act to break a strike by provoking a dispute with the union with which he has a contract," Carter said.

"He could call in another union, sign a contract with it, and then obtain an injunction to prevent his original union from taking any action against him."

THE COURT split 4 to 2 on application of the law in a 1951 case involving the CIO Marine Engineers.

During the MEBA strike against Isthmian Steamship Co., the employer signed a backdoor deal with an affiliate of the AFL Sailors Union and then sought an injunction to force removal of CIO pickets.

Two MEBA pickets were cited for contempt. The State court returned their case to a local court, where they face possible fines.

What's Value Of Councils? $175 Per CIOer In S. F. Case

WHAT'S THE "bread-and butter" value of the work of local CIO councils to CIO union members? The answer is "plenty," judging from the experience of the San Francisco CIO Council.

Since the Bay City Council was reorganized in mid-1951, it has joined in two successful campaigns to save federal rent controls locally. (San Francisco is the only big city in the West with rent lids.) And it helped block a boost in the city sales tax.

"The continuance of rent controls," Council Sec.-Treas. Frank E. White reported, "can be safely estimated to have saved CIO members who are tenants approximately 50% on their rents. A safe dollar figure would be $150 year saving for our members who are tenants."

Together with a $25 saving from blocking the city sales-tax boost, White estimated the Council had saved individual CIO members $175 a year or "many hundred fold" the 60c per year per capita paid by Council affiliates.

Beirne Reaffirms CIO Aid To Health, Welfare Groups

SUPPORT by CIO of health, welfare and relief organizations was reaffirmed by Joseph A. Beirne, new chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, at a CIO-CSC luncheon in New York City.

Ralph Blanchard, executive director of Community Chests and Councils of America, and Paul Comly French, executive director of CARE, welcomed Beirne and pledged their continued cooperation with CIO-CSC on behalf of national health and welfare agencies and overseas relief groups respectively.

Beirne pledged that CIO-CSC would continue to cooperate with these agencies.

"Voluntary agencies of America," he said, "are the heart and soul of our democracy, but it must be understood that the basic health and welfare needs of the American people can be met only by the full assumption of governmental responsibility."

He called for a united effort of both public and private agencies in meeting the health and the welfare needs of people in the U. S. and abroad.

CIO-CSC National Dir. Leo Perlis was the toastmaster. CIO leaders present included Harry Boyer, John Brophy, Louis Hollander, Jacob S. Potofsky, Ted F. Silvey, Sol Stetin and M. Hedley Stone. Brophy and Silvey are treasurer and secretary respectively of the CSC.

ORGANIZATIONS represented included Group Health, Mental Health Association, American Council for the Community, Intl. Social Service, Girl Scouts of America, Child Welfare League, Greater New York Fund, National Budget Committee, United Community Defense Services, United Nations Intl. Children's Emergency Fund, Boys Clubs of America, United Defense Fund, Social Hygiene Association, Tuberculosis Association and Civil Defense Administration.

Broun Award Goes West For Land Fraud Expose

THE 1952 Heywood Broun Award of the CIO Newspaper Guild went to Wallace Turner of the Portland Oregonian.

The $500 prize and a citation—honoring the ANG's first president—were given to Turner for stories exposing fraud in the purchase of timberlands in Oregon and Washington from Indians.

AS A RESULT of his work, a federal grand jury indicted three men and two employes in the Indian Bureau office in Portland, Ore., were dismissed.

A federal court set aside original sales and ordered new sales. It is expected the Indians will receive more than $400,000 over the first sale price.

Given special praise by the judges were stories by Burke Davis, Greensboro, N. C., Daily News; Leo Katcher, Ted Poston, and Murray Kempton, New York Post; Dan Noonan and Leslie Hanscom, Brooklyn Eagle; James R. Phelan, Long Beach, Calif., Independent; Vic Reinemer, Charlotte, N. C., News; Thomas Sancton, New Orleans Item, and Leo Sonderegger, Minneapolis Star.

Judges were Carroll Binder, of the Minneapolis Tribune, Kenneth G. Crawford, of Newsweek magazine, and Jacob Scher, associate professor of journalism, Northwestern Univ. Wade Franklin of the Chicago Sun-Times was chairman of the Guild's committee.

IUE Aide Enters Newark Election

James T. Callahan, treasurer of Dist. 4 of the CIO Electrical Workers, is seeking election to the Newark, N. J., City Council as a reform candidate.

Petitions are being circulated to have his name and those of four other council candidates of the Charter Commission forces placed on the ballot in the May election.

The Charter Commission group — whose official name is the Newark Citizens' Committee on Municipal Government—has obtained sufficient signatures to have placed on the ballot a referendum demanding a thorough study of local government.

Minnesota CIO Asks Tax Reform Program

A MAJOR revamping of tax policy that has withstood onslaughts of business groups has been proposed by the Minnesota CIO Council as the answer to the State's financial problems.

The program, result of about four years of study, is based on ability to pay, according to Robert L. Gannon, director of the Council's Dept. of Research and Legislation, and should yield the State an additional $40.8 million in revenue every two years.

It has been adopted almost completely by the liberal blocs in the two branches of the State Legislature.

The detailed program was offered formally to State Rep. Warren Moore, chairman of a House revenue-raising subcommittee. It is an alternative to Gov. C. Elmer Anderson's plan to balance his $165 million budget by boosting taxes on iron ore and beer, and robbing the income tax school fund of a badly needed $5 million.

The CIO plan includes biannual tax decreases totalling $24.5 million and increases adding up to $65.4, making the net boost $40.8 million.

It would increase individual income tax exemptions so that the head of a family of four earning $4000 or less would pay nothing; cut in half special sales taxes on cigarets, spirits and beer, and repeal personal property taxes on household goods and farm-held grain.

On the increase side it would create six new levies. They would include a graduated chain store tax, a levy on pulpwood per cord by the manufacturer, a barge and pipelines fuel tax, and a monies and credits tax, estimated to yield a total of $41.4 million per biennium; and a mineral reservation tax and a real estate levy on commercial earning properties of churches and schools for which no estimates of yield were made.

IN ADDITION, it would boost the iron ore occupation tax and royalty from 12 to 17% to obtain $15.5 million in increased revenue; place property now taxed on a gross earnings basis on an ad valorem basis, so it would pay like other property, to yield an additional $16 million, and prohibit deduction of federal income tax payments from the state tax, thus raising an additional $10 million per biennium.

The CIO also proposed to repeal the limitation on per capita and mill rate taxes.

The proposed fuels tax would fall on oil, gasoline and gas. Abolition of the gross earnings tax and its replacement by an ad valorem tax would hit railroads, which now pay, in lieu of other levies, 5% of gross earnings.

'19th Century Practices'—

N. Y. Farm Interests Try To Open Door For Migrant Child Labor

NEW ATTEMPTS to smash child labor protection legislation in New York state were stalled last week as labor, civic, religious and social welfare organizations united in protest.

Introduced by Assemblyman Wadlin (R.), father of the state anti-strike bill for public utilities, the measure would lift all age and hour regulations on children harvesting small fruits and vegetables during school vacations.

It was introduced just as the U. S. Dept. of Labor was reporting more than 5000 violations on child labor laws on farms during 1952. Full reports showed 5414 children under 16 working during school hours on 2218 farms in 42 states.

The New York attempt was accompanied by Wadlin's idyllic picture of back-breaking "stoop" work on farms. He believes "our boys and girls should be thought of as little men and women" and called harvesting of fruits and berries "light, healthful, outdoor, character-building work."

NAACP officials branded the bill "an act of legislative racial discrimination," saying Negro migratory farm workers would be hardest hit.

They charged the measure "relates to Negroes as a group and the proposal to exclude those children from the protection of the New York State Child Labor Law would constitute an act of legislative racial discrimination."

Sen. Hatfield (R.), co-author of the bill, admitted he didn't know the measure could presumably mean children could work 24 hours a day. Wadlin was defending the measure as justified because survival of certain fruit crops rested on the right of farmers to use children in the field.

Opponents contended that if survival of an entire fruit industry depended on exploitation of defenseless children, then the industry has no right to survive.

Sol Markoff, associate general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, reporting a surge of opposition to the Wadlin bill, called it "a return to 19th century practices."

FPC Wants Power Users To Get Tax Bonanza Benefits

A CUT—just the least, tiny bit of a cut—for the hard-pressed taxpayer out of the $24 billion "tax bonanza" which industry is collecting as a fee for joining in defense production loomed as a remote shadow of a possibility last week.

The Federal Power Commission opened hearings to determine if it should order utilities to pass on to their consumers millions of dollars in fast tax-write off benefits in the form of lower rates.

The hearings got under way as three members of Congress from Washington State joined to ask FPC to make private gas and electric companies in their home State cough up their lush fast amortization benefits by ordering lower rates to consumers. The plan was made by Sens. Magnuson and Jackson and Rep. Magnuson, all Democrats.

THE UTILITY representatives groaned loudly when Francis Walsh, FPC staff member, declared at the hearing that they should claim "only actual taxes paid" in determining just and reasonable rates. Congress meant for the utilities to get their share of the good, rich gravy just like other industries, they declared.

The "benefits" of the rapid tax writeoff belong to industry and not the public, A.J.G. Priest, Univ. of Virginia law professor representing six utility firms, told the FPC. If the FPC doesn't let the utilities get theirs, he declared, it would amount to "discrimination."

Walsh disclosed that some utilities are getting even more than what they regard as theirs. In several states, he said, utility commissions require that tax benefits be charged as expenses. The result is that consumers pay for them not once but twice.

"You're my Union business agent, Sam—Can't you dicker with her?"

U. S. Allowances Proposed For Large Families

A NEW approach to helping American families with growing children was offered by Rev. Francis J. Corley, S.J., of St. Louis Univ., at a meeting of the National Catholic Family Life Conference last week in Philadelphia, Pa.

Father Corley, who is editor of the monthly magazine Social Order, proposed a federal program of supplementary incomes for low-wage families.

Calling his program "tentative," Father Corley advocated a system of payments of $12 monthly for the third child in each family, $10 for the fourth, and $8 for all thereafter. Many other countries have family allowance systems. Among them are Canada, Great Britain, Ireland, Belgium, France and Australia.

Easter Seal Drive Backed

CIO SUPPORT was announced last week for the annual Easter Seal drive to aid crippled children.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treasurer James B. Carey are backing the appeal, which continues until Apr. 5.

The drive is sponsored by the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, of which Carey is a trustee.

The CIO Brewery Workers and Transport Workers are among affiliates which have given assistance to the society.

Final Price Curbs Lifted; Index Climbs

POST KOREAN price controls drifted into history last week as the public began to dig for the additional $3 billion a year it will need to pay for the gesture toward rugged individualism.

The last batch of controls, on steel and other industrial items, was removed on Mar. 17 as the seventh and final step in the plan to get rid of ceilings by Apr. 30. All consumer items have been unfrozen earlier.

THE DUN & Bradstreet wholesale food price index, in the first week after the lifting of controls on consumer items, jumped 14c. It was the sharpest gain since the week following outbreak of hostilities in Korea.

Price Stabilizer Joseph H. Freehill reiterated his prior forecast that the $3 billion boost in the cost of living would be the price of a free market. Consumers will pay $1 billion directly in price boosts on things they buy, he explained. The remainder will go for higher business and defense costs—which the consumer also pays in the end.

School Aid Needs Climb

CONGRESS was told last week that schools must get federal assistance if children "are to have the advantages even of the basic education which Americans have traditionally considered their birthright."

The report of the U. S. Office of Education, for the fiscal year ending last June 30, said the shortage of teachers and schools will get worse instead of better in the next few years. Many committees simply don't have enough money to build enough schools for the increasing school population.

During the year permits were issued and controlled materials were alloted for $1889 million worth of school construction. But, the report added, $10 billion would be needed to provide adequate schools and other auxiliary buildings for the children enrolled last fall.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THE TREND to larger families is already making many of the small postwar homes inadequate for satisfactory living. This trend plus the growing scarcity of serviced land around the large cities and the inexorably high prices of homes is causing a new housing squeeze on moderate-income families.

The fact is, the number of families having a second child is 91% greater now than in 1940, and the number having a third child has boomed 86%. The way people got along in the depression years of low pay and wavering employment was to have fewer children. Now they want to get back to normal living and larger families.

The so-called ranch-type houses that many families like because of their convenience cost more than two-story houses. They also require larger plots. Housing experts say you shouldn't have less than 65 feet of width for even a minimum-size ranch house, and 75 feet is little enough for this sprawling design.

One compromise is the split-level house. It provides an additional room over the garage at relatively little cost, and yet has much of the convenience of a ranch house.

A split-level house should cost less than a ranch house with the same amount of cubic-foot space. But compare offerings carefully because some builders are using this new design as a selling feature to help them get a higher price than a split-level house actually warrants.

The House That Grows

A house designed especially for later expansion is one of the few practical solutions available to moderate-income families. Such a house should be laid out on its lot so there's space to add rooms and has such features as windows installed in spaces framed for future doors. Or it has an attic high enough to be usable for additional rooms, heat risers into the attic and plumbing roughed in so additional fixtures can be hooked on later.

If you buy a truly expansible house, it's easier these days to put the finishing touches on yourself, by virtue of such developments as better-quality dry-wall construction for building attic rooms; prefabricated flooring or underlayment for tile floors; pre-assembled bathroom fixtures like stall showers; roller painting and one-coat paints; plastic or metal tiles for bathrooms or modern waterproof enamel paints.

There are some reports that price tags on older houses are edging down a bit. An older house may be a solution for a growing family if not too much remodeling is required. One authority has estimated that if you completely remodeled an older house the cost would be 125% of the cost of building an entirely new house.

Buying An Older House

Here a list of very important points to check in buying an older house:

Insulation: Many houses built before World War II are not insulated. That is, there may be some insulation in the attic but not in the sidewalls. You can do a "cap" job yourself easily enough; that is insulate the ceiling and walls of the attic. But if the side walls have to be opened up to blow in insulation, this is a professional job that will cost $100-$250, depending on size and needs of the house.

Heating Plant: This can be a real problem. It would not be too costly to replace old-fashioned radiators with modern efficient convectors. But a furnace more than ten years old is highly suspect.

Basement: The cellar can tell you a lot about the condition of a house. The floor should be troweled smooth and hard, with no cracks. The foundation should be true and plumb—again, no cracks. There should be no signs of dampness from leakage or condensation.

There are more points to check in an older house and the neighborhood too (is it on the way down?). You may be able to get a comparative buy this way but it will need extremely careful inspection.

Sparkman Urges Extension Of Social Security Benefits

A BILL to extend social security coverage to approximately 2½ million state, county and city employes has been introduced by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.).

Sparkman said that school teachers would be covered under his bill but that policemen and firemen are not included since these two groups preferred to remain under their retirement systems.

Other principal groups not now covered by social security include farmers and professional people such as doctors and lawyers. Several bills have been introduced to extend coverage to about 12 million more persons in these categories.

One other pending revision would remove the present $75 a month limit on outside earnings by persons receiving social security benefits. Some 25 bills repealing this provision are pending.

Rep. Clement J. Zablocki (D. Wis.) has introduced a bill calling for payment of disability benefits to a disabled worker until he reaches 65 and becomes eligible for retirement pay; payment of benefits to wives and minor children of disabled workers, and lowering of retirement age for women from 65 to 60 for payment of benefits.

Organizationally Speaking

Here are representation election victories as reported by the CIO Organization Dept.:

PRES. ELWOOD SWISHER of the CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Savannah River Atomic Energy Plant near Aiken, S. C., the protective firemen favored the CIO union by a vote of 157 to 4 for the AFL and 51 for no union.

Pres. Russell Taylor, of the CIO Shoe Workers, reports that in a representation election at the Brown Shoe Co., Union, Mo., the Shoe Workers won by a vote of 123 to 72 for no union. The campaign was under direction of USWA Dir. Dave Wilson, assisted by Intl. Rep. Ewald Holtgriewe.

Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that in a representation election at the National Carbide Co., Calvert City, Ky., the workers favored the Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers by the following vote: UGCCW-CIO 89, AFL 6, no union 28. Intl. Rep. Thomas Fee and CIO Reps. Carl Beck and Robert Christofferson handled the campaign.

SEC.-TREAS. AL HARTNETT, IUE-CIO, reports the following election victories: Bassick-Sack Co., Winston-Salem, N. C., IUE-CIO 209, no union 3, UE withdrew; Atlas Metal Stamping Co., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE-CIO 134, UE 111, no union 4, void 1; Metal Products Co., Memphis, Tenn., IUE-CIO 73, no union 22.

The CIO Textile Workers Union retained bargaining rights for about 6000 workers in four cotton mills in New Bedford, Mass., defeating the AFL United Textile Workers in a representation election. The tally showed 3651 voted for the CIO union, 664 AFL, 192 no union.

Gas, Coke Warns Of Move To Grab Atomic Power

THE CIO Chemical Workers have urged Pres. Eisenhower to oppose predicted moves of private industry to grab U.S.-owned atomic installations.

"Because atomic energy can change our entire way of life, it is unthinkable to permit private concerns to exploit this miraculous source of fuel, power and energy," UGC&CWA Pres. Elwood D. Swisher wrote Eisenhower.

Swisher said "it is our prayer that you will see fit to assure the public at an early date that your administration will not permit control of atomic energy to slip out of public control into the hands of private interests which could easily create a gargantuan monopoly."

The letter also pointed out that the union is opposed to giving the offshore oil lands to the states.

Accompanying the letter was UGC&CWA's Executive Board statement on atomic energy.

The statement recalled that "the man who operated a livery stable was not able to do much to prevent the development and the use of the automobile, but the financiers and industrialists have the know-how to keep atomic energy from sabotaging the industrial empires they have built up so aggressively."

It said financiers and industrialists "cast covetous eyes at atomic energy as a source of even greater wealth and industrial power if they could get control of this marvelous source of power and energy."

CIO Case Issued On School Discrimination

The CIO's friend of the court brief, filed in the pending Supreme Court test of segregated public schools, is available in a 12-page pamphlet for general distribution.

The pamphlet, "Enforced Segregation Denies Equal Protection of the Laws," contains the full text of the brief as submitted to the Supreme Court.

Copies of the pamphlet can be ordered in small quantities at 5c each from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

NegroCollege Fund Backed

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther has urged CIO unions and councils to contribute to the United Negro College Fund—America's first "educational community chest."

The fund is composed of 31 private, accredited Negro colleges, all except one being located in the South. Each year they provide educational opportunities for 22,000 Negro youth, "many of whom would be unable otherwise to receive higher education," Reuther noted.

Urging CIO contributions, Reuther said it was "important that the CIO give encouragement and support" to the current appeal for approximately $1.5 million.

N. J. CIO Helps Stop Bias On Auto Insurance

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council last week won a victory in its two-year battle against discrimination in auto insurance.

The State ordered 13 insurance companies to eliminate reference to race and color in their application or accident report forms.

The insurance inquiry was touched off two years ago by Arthur Chapin, the State CIO civil rights director, who charged that certain companies were either refusing to sell insurance to Negro car owners, or were arbitrarily assigning them higher rates.

TWUA Beats AFL In 4 Mills, Protests Stall On Wage Order

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers overwhelmingly defeated the AFL textile union in a National Labor Relations Board election at New Bedford, Mass., retaining bargaining rights for some 6000 workers in four cotton mills.

The tally showed 3651 voted for TWUA-CIO, 664 for the AFL, and 192 for "no union." TWUA's contract with the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers Association had been extended to Apr. 1, pending the results of the poll.

The victory came as TWUA's Pres. Emil Rieve protested Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin's decision to stay the application of a $1.20 an hour minimum wage for woolen and worsted mills holding government contracts.

Rieve said that in reaching this decision Durkin was "badly misled" by the AFL textile union and "unduly influenced" by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

HE SAID that Durkin's proposal to hold new hearings under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act would penalize woolen and worsted workers covered by it.

Rieve charged the AFL union in seeking a $1.30 an hour minimum was engaged in a "grandstand play" with no hope of making its demands stick.

"The net effect of the AFL union's tactics will be to preserve the present inadequate $1.05 minimum and push the $1.20 figure beyond the reach of woolen and worsted workers," Rieve said.

"Once again we find this nuisance union, which represents only a handful of woolen and worsted workers, playing the employers' game."

Former Sec. of Labor Maurice Tobin had recommended the $1.20 minimum on the application last year of the TWUA, which represents more than 60,000 woolen and worsted workers. Rieve pointed out the AFL union holds bargaining rights for less than 10,000 workers in the industry.

The CIO union had asked for $1.265 minimum, a cost-of-living escalator clause and certain fringe benefits. The AFL organization had joined in the request.

Most of the 105 companies which joined the association's petition already pay higher wages than the $1.20 minimum, Rieve said.

"This is a concerted effort to aid the mills paying sub-standard wages and the woolen and worsted employers who are seeking wage cuts," he added. "We urge the government not to be a party to any move for wage cutting."

Union Label Pushed By Amalgamated

"DOLLAR for dollar, in whatever price range," a union-label man's or boy's garment is a better buy will be the slogan of the CIO Clothing Workers' union-label week in 16 cities and states.

The campaign was kicked off last week when Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan issued a statewide proclamation at a statewide rally at Lansing, the state capital.

Connecticut's observance will begin Mar. 23 with the mayors of New Haven, Hartford, Waterbury and Bridgeport giving a joint luncheon. More than 600 guests are expected at a dinner Apr. 11 at the Statler Hotel, Boston, which marks the opening of the drive in Massachusetts.

During the next three months observances also are planned at Scranton, Pa.; Fredericksburg and Norfolk, Va.; Hagerstown, Salisbury and Cambridge, Md.; Toledo, and Steubenville, O., Milwaukee, Wis., and Kansas City.

UAW Joins IAM In Strike At GE Jet Engine Plant

SOME 5600 workers were on strike last week at General Electric's jet engine plant near Cincinnati, O.

They are members of the CIO Auto Workers and the AFL Machinists. The UAW represents production workers; the Machinists represent toolmakers and maintenance men.

Despite the press claims that the strike would cripple production of 86-F Sabre jets, GE admitted there was no cause for alarm.

"Present jet production at Evendale is in no sense vital to our military security," GE said in an employe bulletin. "There are stocks ahead. Our schedule has even been cut back several times.

"In addition, we have been instrumental in providing designs and know-how to other plants now able to meet all foreseeable requirements."

Some 1100 Machinists walked out Mar. 14 after negotiations for a new contract broke down. And 4500 UAW members struck two days later when their contract expired without a satisfactory agreement to replace it. In the interval, they had been respecting the AFL picket line.

THE UAW is seeking a wage increase of around 15c, while GE offers a 6c-to-8c hourly increase. The union also asks paid holidays, continuance of seniority during prolonged absence due to injury or sickness, some form of union security, arbitration and automatic pay progression.

"In the light of the production of this plant," said UAW Regional Dir. Ray Ross, "we are willing to give continued consideration to any honest and realistic suggestion to arbitrate this dispute in the interest of resuming production. We will not, however, submit to unconditional surrender."

GET the FACTS ...on Taft-Hartley

FACTS are ammunition in the fight to win fundamental improvements to the Taft-Hartley Act in the present session of Congress.

And CIO has them . . . the first of a series of pamphlets which will be issued during the coming weeks. They are:

1. "Sugar-Coating Won't Do," text of the CIO Executive Board's recent statement outlining the whys and wherefores of seven major T-H improvements needed to bring justice and fairness to labor-management legislation.

2. "Don't Pulverize Labor," a reprint of the recent House testimony of Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) exposing the NAM's "labor monopoly" war cries.

Send your orders now, for distribution to local union members and officers, CIO council delegates and the community.

The FDR Jr. reprint is available without charge. Prices for "Sugar-Coating Won't Do" are 5c a copy, 50 copies for $1.50, 100 for $2.50, 500 for $10 and 1000 copies for $18.

Suggestions To Ike—

CIO Proposes 'Practical' Steps To End Capital Bias

THE CIO last week suggested to Pres. Eisenhower nine "practical methods" for carrying out his repeated campaign promises to end "every vestige" of discrimination in the nation's capitol.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, in a letter to the President, recalled the pledges, which he said "encouraged" many.

"Now that the tumult of the campaign is over and the transition of power has been effected," Carey wrote, "we face the practical methods of realizing this goal."

IN HIS dual capacity as CIO secretary-treasurer and chairman of the CIO Civil Rights Committee, Carey suggested the President's "chief weapon" was his "ability to make your wishes known to your appointees with the concurrent power to remove them if necessary."

This, he added, was particularly true of the District Commissioners "who have broad powers to act directly in this field as well as broad indirect powers through their subordinate associates and appointees to special boards."

STANDBY anti-inflation controls were urged in event of new emergency by CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey to Senate committee.

"There are many administrative reforms that the commissioners can institute," the CIO official said.

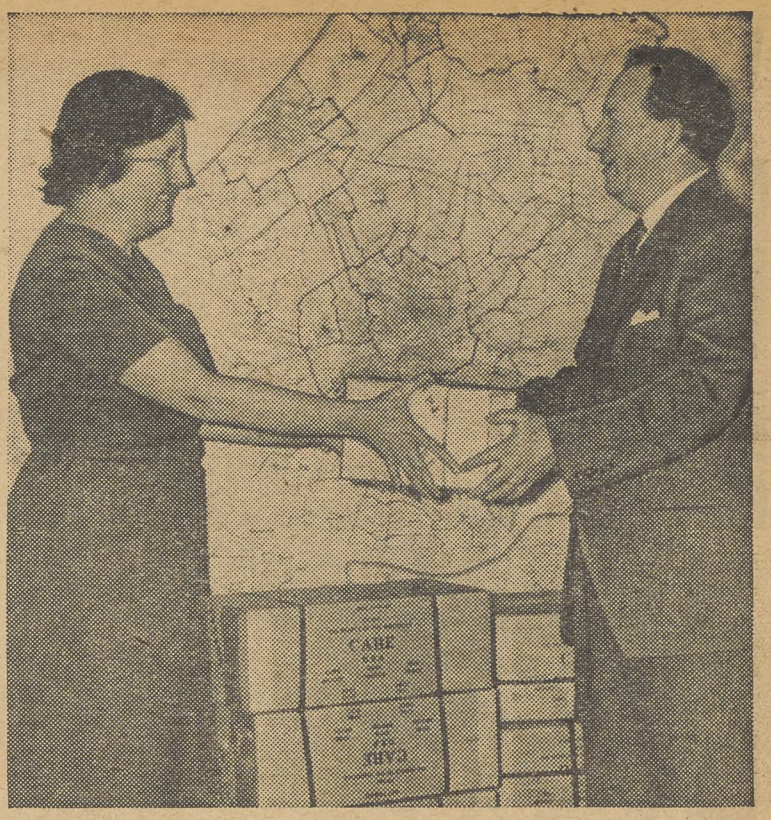
Most important, he contended, "would be the issuance of a directive forbidding segregation and discrimination in public employment and the use of the public facilities in the District of Columbia."

Carey listed a nine-point program of possible reforms which included:

- Establishment of a Fair Employment Board for District employes.
- Immediate integration of Negro and white fire companies.
- Immediate steps leading toward full integration of the school system.
- Announcement of a clear-cut non-segregation policy in new housing projects.
- Steps to end discriminatory hiring policies of Capital Transit Co. and Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.
- Ending of segregation and discrimination in public welfare institutions.
- Setting up non-discriminatory policies at the federal Columbia Institute for the Deaf.
- Steps to immediately integrate all playground facilities.
- Similar action to eliminate segregation in the District's penal institutions.

CAREY urged immediate presidential action should be taken to end discriminatory policy in the District's hotels, theatres and restaurants which "daily mirrors the contradiction in our democracy to the rest of the world" and which is "constantly embarrassing."

He predicted that a personal plea from Eisenhower to officials of the hotel, theater and restaurant industry, "recommending a policy of serving everyone, without regard to race or color, would carry great weight."



CIO AIDS FLOOD VICTIMS—Packages of CARE blankets, purchased through gifts of CIO members and unions, are received by H. Oosterhuis and Mrs. C. A. Ruyter-de Zeeuw at flood relief center in Holland. Office of Victor Reuther, CIO European representative, aided in distribution. Flood relief donations may be sent to CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, or to CARE, 20 Broad St., in New York City.

'UAW Stronger Than Ever,' Delegates Told

THE CIO Auto Workers is stronger than at any time in its history, Pres. Walter P. Reuther has advised the membership in a report he has submitted in anticipation of the union's 14th constitutional convention in Atlantic City this week.

"We are stronger in terms of membership, of benefits won through collective bargaining, of solidarity in our ranks and in terms of the potential contribution we can make to the progress and welfare of the whole nation," reported Reuther, who also is CIO president.

"THE UAW-CIO has advanced to its present strength and prestige because it has been dedicated to the proposition that we can make progress only as the community makes progress.

"We have refused to operate as a selfish, narrow, economic pressure group, but we have, instead, advocated and worked for policies and programs and goals that would advance the welfare of the whole people, knowing that our welfare is inevitably tied to that of our fellow Americans and to freedom-loving people everywhere.

"Communist tyranny still threatens the peace of the world and the democratic way of life. While we support America's efforts to build adequate military strength to resist Communist aggression, we must at the same time give leadership to the mobilization of the spiritual forces of the free people of the world to work and fight for peace.

"WE MUST counteract Communist propaganda by giving positive leadership to the fight against poverty, hunger and injustice, the sources of Communist power."

Reuther conservatively estimated active union membership in 1220 locals at 1.4 million, with more than 1.3 million paying dues in December.

In the 23 months since the last UAW-CIO convention, he continued, the union has won bargaining rights in 620 plants and units with 140,000 employes at present and an additional 66,000 in sight in the near future.

A good portion of the report concerned the guaranteed annual wage, upon which a study was begun on instructions from the 1951 convention.

THE UNION will win it, Reuther predicted, in the next major negotiations. He warned the industry that it must "avoid the unfortunate consequences which would flow from management delusions about the seriousness with which workers want the guaranteed annual wage or the length of time they are willing to wait for it."

The report noted the clean-up of Communist influence in Ford Local 600, which was undertaken last year by the international executive board, and the sharp improvement in handling grievances since certain individuals were removed from office.

The board has recommended to the convention constitutional changes further to protect the union and its members against subversive elements trying to destroy it.

150,000 Women In UAW Ranks

The CIO Auto Workers now has 150,000 women among its members, an increase of 50% since the 1951 convention, Pres. Walter P. Reuther reported to the membership.

Rubber Union Sets Drive For 'Substantial' Pay Gains

THE CIO Rubber Workers have drawn up their "economic policy program" for 1953 which includes demands for a "substantial" general wage increase, and improved pension, insurance, hospitalization, and severance pay plans. The program is designed for some 200,000 URW-CIO members.

Most of URW contracts can be reopened on 30-day notice to discuss wages.

Pension and insurance agreements are governed by a five-year pact and can be reopened only with the consent of the rubber companies.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said: "In view of radical changes that have taken place since 1950, the companies have a moral obligation to take a fresh look at these agreements."

THE PROGRAM, adopted at a policy committee meeting in Cleveland, also calls for:

- Correcting intra-plant inequities.
- Special adjustments for maintenance employes.
- Correcting area and intra-plant inequities.
- Improving fringe benefits, such as vacations and shift differentials. Recent agreements with Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and General Tire & Rubber Co. reduced the requirement for a two-week vacation from five to three years of service.
- Conducting a union study on the guaranteed annual wage.
- Continuing the drive for the full union shop, which now prevails in 90% of the industry under contract.
- Adequate wage reopening provisions including the right to end the contract when the wage question is not settled.

Goodyear was the first of the Big Four rubber companies to sign an agreement with URW, but wages were not covered. A smaller company, General Tire, recently signed a contract essentially the same as the Goodyear pact. Negotiations are continuing in New York City with another of the Big Four, U. S. Rubber Co.

Help Urged In Shoe Strike

The Michigan CIO Council has issued a second appeal to all affiliates for financial support of the CIO Shoe Workers at Rockford, Mich., who have been on strike more than six months.

The strike at the Wolverine Shoe & Tanning Corp. followed the firm's refusal to bargain after the union won the right to represent the employes in Labor Board election. The workers walked out on Sept. 13, 1952, when 13 of the local union's top leadership were fired.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

Developments last week:

The House approved Pres. Eisenhower's plan to expand the Federal Security Agency into a Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (Page 2).

The House Labor Committee continued Taft-Hartley hearings, with CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Curran warning on the "disruption" T-H has caused in the maritime industry (Page 3).

The President reaffirmed his stand against immediate tax cuts until a balanced budget is "in sight."

What to do:

Write your congressman and House Labor Committee members, supporting CIO recommendations on Taft-Hartley.

Write your congressman urging extension of strong federal rent controls.

Address lawmakers at House or Senate Office Buildings, Washington 25, D. C.

CIO Unions Tell Case Against Taft-Hartley

What's Happened To Report On Joe's Dough?

WHAT'S HAPPENED to the report on Joe McCarthy's finances? That's one of the big mysteries in Washington, some three months after announcement of the Senate Elections Subcommittee report revealing the financial manipulations of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.).

No one wants to talk about it.

And from the halls of Congress to the offices of the Justice Dept. and the Bureau of Internal Revenue there seems to be an even greater reluctance about DOING anything to follow it up.

Almost three months ago, when Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) then committee chairman, sent copies of the report to both of these agencies for "appropriate action." His office says that their receipt was acknowledged.

But there the matter seems to have ended. As far as the Senate itself is concerned, it's—at this moment—deader than a dodo. Republican control seems to insure keeping it that way.

Meanwhile, the clock is ticking on, drawing McCarthy ever nearer to complete immunity from prosecution.

Lawyers point out that the statute of limitations on some of the more important charges runs out in September—less than six months away. Once that time is past, the government won't be able to file suit against McCarthy on these grounds even if it wants to do so.

A 15,000-word reprint of the essentials of the Senate committee report on Joe McCarthy's finances has been published by the New Republic magazine. Prices are 10c a copy, $6 a hundred for orders from 100 to 1000 copies, and $50 per thousand for orders from 1000 to 5000. Orders may be sent to the New Republic, 1416 F St., Washington 4, D. C.

Both the Justice Dept. and Internal Revenue Bureau have a nip and tuck race ahead if they are to beat this deadline. Government attorneys say that the preparation of cases for trial usually takes at least a year.

So far, there's no indication that the preparation of a case against McCarthy has even been started.

Queried by The CIO News, all that Justice spokesmen would say is that the case is "under study." Treasury agents replied with another stock phrase: "It's getting proper attention."

But spokesmen at both agencies also acknowledged that all these answers really mean is that they "can't discuss" the matter. An order has gone out to that effect, one said.

The case of Joe McCarthy, admittedly, is an unpleasant political hot potato for the Republican Administration to handle, particularly since the President apparently has decided against taking a firm stand against the Wisconsin Senator.

That's why, as time goes on—and the September deadline for beating the statute of limitations gets closer—the odds keep getting higher that the Administration really doesn't intend to do anything about the committee's revelations that McCarthy diverted to his own use moneys contributed to him for other purposes.

Meanwhile, copies of the report strangely have gone out of print, conveniently keeping the public from reading it.

On a NBC television program last week, Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) pointed out that the report "lies in a Senate pigeonhole and you con't get a copy to save your soul."

"If McCarthy is a man he would have demanded an open investigation," Tobey said, "We in the Senate ought to be above reproach."

McCarthy Tangles With Taft Over Bohlen

THE FEUD of Joe McCarthy against John Foster Dulles, the State Dept., Pres. Eisenhower—and incidentally Charles Bohlen—roared to a climax in the Senate late last week after days of angry and acrimonious debate.

Through three days of Senate wrangling, Sens. McCarthy (R. Wis.), Bridges (R. N.H.) and McCarran (D. Nev.) fought to defeat the President's nomination of Bohlen as U. S. Ambassador to Russia.

A Senate vote on confirmation was scheduled at weekend, and press dispatches reported the McCarthyites would gather at best a dozen's vote in opposition.

Republicans quarreled with Republicans in the squabble, with the McCarthyites ranged against GOP Senate Leaders Taft and Knowland.

FOR DAYS McCarthy and McCarran aired vague and unspecified hints, charging Bohlen —a career diplomat since the Hoover Administration—was a bad security risk. Later, McCarthy reversed himself, claimed he had never raised such a charge.

The Congressional Record quoted McCarthy as saying Bohlen "had been turned down on security grounds, and I have every reason to know that it is true." McCarthy also told reporters security risk was "too weak a word."

For Sec. of State Dulles, the Bohlen affair was an "acid test" of orderly government. He called the diplomat "a good security and loyalty risk" and Pres. Eisenhower once again backed him up as the best qualified man for the job.

SO, TOO, did Sen. Taft (R. O.) and Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.). They canvassed a summary of FBI files on Bohlen, with Taft reporting he found "no evidence . . reflecting on Mr. Bohlen as a security risk." And Sparkman said "there is nothing there that any reasonable person would say even raises a suspicion . . . "

McCarthy, directly challenging the Administration, teed off on Dulles, charging him with "a grave an inexcusable mistake" in the nomination of Bohlen.

"Maybe we're losing our touch."

And Bridges—always close to the China Lobby—said Bohlen's appointment was "an affront" to Chiang Kai-shek.

The more serious implications of the McCarthyite vendetta were raised by other lawmakers. Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.), for example, said:

"We have on trial a Republican Secretary of State and, by implication, the Republican President of the United States.

"I would just like to suggest to the junior Senator from Wisconsin that he give this Administration a chance and put the responsibility on them."

SEN. LEHMAN (D. N. Y.) said "I think it is about time the American people put a stop to these ungrounded, these unfair, these vicious attacks on men and women . . . who are trying to serve their country."

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said the McCarthyites "are playing into the hands of the Communists."

And Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.) suggested "it's about time the name of that popular song, 'I'm Always Chasing Rainbows,' be changed to 'I'm Always Chasing Rumors.' That would apply to the Senate today."

(See editorial and cartoon, p. 4.)

Ike's Order Hits Bias In Army Schools

SEGREGATION of races in schools on army posts operated entirely with federal funds will end this term under an order issued last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

Only one school—that at Fort Benning, Ga., will be affected by the order, but the White House also disclosed that army commanders have been ordered to study ways of ending segregation in other schools at army installations.

Most of the schools on Army posts are operated by the states partly with funds contributed by the Federal Security Administration to the local government. The President sent a memorandum to Sec. of Defense Charles E. Wilson saying that if segregation isn't ended in these schools on federally-owned property "other arrangements . . . will be considered."

ONLY SIX schools on army posts are operated entirely with federal funds. Segregation previously practiced at these posts other than Fort Benning was abolished by the Truman Administration, largely through the efforts of former Asst. Defense Sec. Anna Rosenberg.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, with the help of Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Lehman (D. N. Y.), Ives (R. N. Y.), Hendrickson (R. N.J.), and Morse (Ind. Ore), has led the fight for integrated army schools.

2 Committees Okeh Oil Give-Away Bills

HOUSE AND SENATE committees last week okehed bills to give away the multi-billion dollar costal oil lands, while three congressional liberals called the drive for the tidelands "an opening gun for a gold rush on the federal treasury."

As the full House Judiciary Committee okehed an oil lands bill, Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.) warned "this is only the beginning of a general raid on federal lands."

"If this goes through," Celler predicted, "grazing lands and forest preserves will be next. Captain Kidd will be pale in comparison."

TRANSFER of the nation's coastal oil reserves to a few oil firms in a few states, said Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) would open the door to efforts of private interests to "strip the nation of its public domain."

The same warning was sounded by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in a radio address condemning the attempt to grab the oil lands, worth—according to varying estimates—from $40 to $250 billions.

"The oil bill," said Douglas, "is only one of several current attempts to get the government to give away its valuable resources. And if the coastal states get the oil, the Western states will be asking for our public lands.

"It could lead to a tragic waste of our remaining national resources."

DOUGLAS again backed the Hill "oil for the lamps of learning" amendment, which would channel revenue from the oil lands to the schools. Support for this amendment has been voted by the Colorado State Senate, on initiative of the State CIO Council. The vote was 18 to 17.

Both House and Senate committees approved bills giving the states title to the shore area to their historic boundries.

Reminder Of Teapot Dome—

The CIO Legislative Dept. last week urged Congress to reject the "give-away" tidelands oil bill as "the first step in the impeding raid on all natural resources."

Dept. Dir. Nathan E. Cowan said in a letter to each congressman that "this whole maneuver reminds us far too strongly of the way in which the natural resources of this country were squandered during the last century.

"It reminds us much too clearly also of the Teapot Dome scandals of more recent and unpleasant memory."

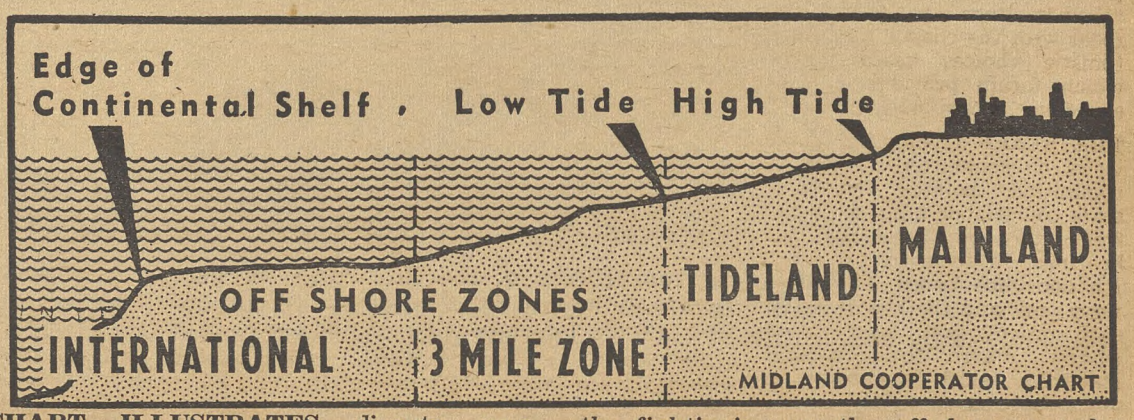

CHART ILLUSTRATES dispute over coastal oil lands grab. There's no question that states have title to tidelands proper; the fighting's over the off-shore zone beyond. If oil bill wins, other public resources are periled. (Co-op News Service Chart.)

CIO Unions Tell Case Against Taft-Hartley

THE INDUSTRY-by-industry story of how the Taft-Hartley Act operates to prevent real collective bargaining, destroy unions and encourage anti-labor employers was unfolded last week before the House Labor Committee.

The facts on Taft-Hartley came from international officers and representatives of several CIO unions. They testified in support of CIO's previously-detailed case for "substantial" amendments to the law.

"Realistic, equitable consideration" of fundamental T-H changes was urged by Joseph A. Beirne, president of the 300,000-member CIO Communications Workers.

Beirne, also a CIO vice president, agreed fully with CIO proposals for amendments to end "harassment" of unions and bring about "equal treatment" of labor and management under the nation's labor-management relations law.

THE TELEPHONE workers president also warned against proposals—such as those advocated by Sen. Taft (R. O.)—to add new curbs on unions while agreeing to a few minor relaxations in the more obvious anti-labor sections of the present law.

"We are wary," said Beirne, "of the 'Trojan Horse' approach to amendments to the act whereby an assortment of innocuous changes are tied up in a 'package deal' with other amendments which would contribute to added burdens on labor."

Beirne made these proposals:

- Elimination of the T-H non-Communist affidavits (which apply only to unions) and filing of compliance forms with the National Labor Relations Board.
- Rejection of proposals—by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and National Association of Manufacturers—to curb or flatly outlaw industry-wide, system-wide or multi-employer bargaining.
- Elimination of 80-day anti-strike injunctions and provide for congressional action in real national emergencies.
- Lengthening the present six-month statute of limitations of filing of NLRB unfair labor practice charges.
- Ending employer abuses of the so-called "free-speech" provisions of T-H.

THE CWA president struck hard at the NAM proposals to "atomize" unions.

"Coming to us in the guise of anti-monopoly," he said, "in all instances it is a program to hamstring unions.

"Any amendments to the T-H Act to prohibit industry-wide or system-wide bargaining would subvert the avowed principles of the proponents of T-H that the act was intended to give equality of treatment to both labor and management."

Beirne also pointed out that

JOSEPH A. BEIRNE

the non-Communist oath has "served no useful purpose" and "has effected no clean-out of those with Communist leanings." Rather, he said, it has given them "official status alongside responsible, patriotic Americans."

WHILE answering questions by Labor Committee members, Beirne mentioned that the Taft-Hartley Act had been "conceived in shame." This statement—made hundreds of times before—appeared to arouse Rep. Carrol Kearns (R. Pa.), a member of the 80th Congress who had voted for T-H.

Spluttering angrily, he left the hearing. (Later that day he got in a row with a Washington cab driver — over traffic, not Taft-Hartley.)

The afternoon session of the hearing, with Beirne on the stand, was called off at once. Next morning, the committee went into executive session to consider what some members of the Committee appeared to consider an "insult" to the Congress. Beirne withdrew his statement but not opinion of T-H.

SIMILAR condemnation of the T-H oath section and other anti-union provisions was voiced by G. L. Patterson, general counsel of the CIO Rubber Workers.

Patterson said the 180,000-member URW "takes pride in the fact that it has established a harmonious and workable relationship with the employers whose employes it represents. The record of stabilized relationships in the rubber industry since the end of World War II is the best evidence of the effort which this organization has made . . ."

Along with opposing the ineffective T-H oath requirements, Patterson emphasized that employer intimidation has increased because of the law's so-called employer "free speech" provisions.

Patterson objected to Sen. Taft's proposal to broaden this section, saying workers "should be permitted to express their choice (for a union) by secret ballot without the inevitable influence upon their thinking which flows from prejudiced statements of their employer."

OTHER T-H provisions condemned by the Rubber Workers representative were: Giving anti-union state laws priority over national labor-management relations legislation, provisions to rescind union shop agreements during the term of a contract, permission to carve craft unions out of existing industrial bargaining unions, and the possibility of unfair damage suits against unions under the union "agency" section of the law.

At an earlier House committee hearing, the CIO Newspaper Guild struck at two sections of the law. Irving Leuchter, ANG general counsel, said restraints placed by T-H on the Labor Board serve to slow down and defeat union organizing campaigns. He urged restoration of NLRB powers to hold representation elections in advance of hearings.

THE GUILD also asked narrowing of T-H's wide-open definition of "supervisor," citing cases in which newspaper publishers have claimed that 40% of their employes within Guild jurisdiction were straw-bosses. The NLRB, Leuchter said, in one case excluded some 30% of a newspaper editorial force as supervisor.

Additionally, the CIO Shipbuilding Workers presented a lengthy brief to the House Labor Committee.

State 'Injunction Mills' Hit In Senate Staff Report

CHARGES that state courts frequently issued labor injunctions before all the evidence was in, were contained in a staff report last week of the Senate Subcommittee on Labor-Management relations in the 82nd Congress.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), chairman of the subcommittee in the last Congress, said the study raised two important questions:

1. "The Congress has established a wholesale scheme of statutory regulations of labor-management relations. It has prescribed many standards, rejected others. Are we now confronted with a situation in which the legislative design is being negated by piecemeal state court decisions?"

2. "What is the proper role of state government in labor relations?"

On the second point, Humphrey said the states should not "provide either labor or management with the chance for opportunistic choices based upon which forum provides a more expedient determination."

THE STAFF report, for whose views no committee member is committed, pointed out that state court labor injunctions too frequently are issued without hearings. In some instances injunctions are issued on allegations only and the report noted such orders have been issued without regard to procedural standards which are basic in other court cases.

At the same time, the report noted, these injunctions too frequently encroach upon activities either protected by federal law or where the Congress has decided no regulation was necessary.

Three suggested remedies were offered by the sub-committee staff:

- Congressional rules under which state courts must operate in labor disputes involving interstate commerce.
- Prohibition of state court actions in labor disputes in interstate commerce.
- Self-restraint on the part of state courts.

The report called the last suggestion "the most promising cure for the improper use of labor injunctions."

John Riffe Is In Line For High CIO Post

John V. Riffe, CIO Southern Organizing Committee director, is in line for election as CIO executive vice president succeeding the late Allan S. Haywood.

This was revealed last week by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the Auto Workers' convention in Atlantic City.

Riffe is a member of the Steelworkers and a veteran CIO organizer. Reuther voiced thanks to USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald for making Riffe "available" for the high CIO post.

Election of an executive vice president and other important matters are scheduled to come before the CIO Executive Board meeting to be held Apr. 6 in Washington.

Senate Labor Unit To Hear CIO Leaders

THE SCOPE of Congressional Taft-Hartley hearings was widened last week, as the Senate Labor Committee began full-dress hearings.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was scheduled to testify on Mar. 30, and was expected to emphasize the inadequacy of the few amendements which Sen. Taft (R. O.) has proposed.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, also was to testify.

As the Senate hearings began, Taft and Sen. Smith (R. N.J.), committee chairman, emphasized the possibility of T-H amendments aimed at Communist-controlled unions.

Taft said the committee also will consider changing Taft-Hartley in these fields: (1) removal of the ban on strikers voting in plant elections, (2) national emergency strikes, (3) injunctions, (4) union security, (5) secondary boycotts, (6) welfare funds and (7) operations of the National Labor Relations Board.

THE SENATE group heard representatives of both the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the American Farm Bureau Federation argue—as they had earlier in the House—that all forms of union security be outlawed and that multi-employer bargaining be curbed.

P. C. Groner, a U. S. Chamber vice president, also urged "reassertion of the right of the employer to lockout . . ."

When he defended anti-strike injunctions but opposed seizure of struck firms, Groner provoked a skirmish between Taft and Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.).

Ives pointed out injunctions are anti-labor because "by implication labor is presumed to be responsible" for a collective bargaining deadlock. This brought Taft rushing in with strenuous denials.

CIO Sets T-H Study As 'Major Order Of Business'

CIO last week began a grass-roots educational program dealing with the status of Taft-Hartley in the present congressional session.

In a letter to all presidents of CIO international unions, CIO regional directors, industrial union councils and local industrial unions, CIO Legislative Dir. Nathan E. Cowan:

- Reported on the status of hearings in both the House and Senate.
- Summarized the seven fundamental changes which CIO has called for in the Taft-Hartley Act.
- Outlined a program for increasing public knowledge of Taft-Hartley and the need for substantial amendments to make the law operate with justice and fairness as Pres. Eisenhower has promised.

Cowan called the campaign for substantial amendment of Taft-Hartley "a major order of business during the next several weeks" and urged an immediate start on the educational program. (See Page 11 for CIO publications on T-H.)

'Long, Complicated, Tricky' —Teen-Agers T-H Verdict

TAFT-HARTLEY needs amendment. That was the unanimous opinion of a panel of six New York high school students, who discussed Taft-Hartley last week on the televised New York Times Youth Forum.

Appearing as guest panelist on the DuMont network was the Times national labor correspondent, A. H. Raskin, who expressed amazement at the students' understanding of the law and familiarity with its provisions. He said they knew more about Taft-Hartley than did many adults.

In the opinion of most of the six students, Taft-Hartley's stortcomings outweighed its benefits. Much of their fire was directed against the 80-day injunction in so-called national emergency disputes. They interpreted it as giving employers an unfair advantage over the unions.

Here is a summary of their opinions:

Edward Friedman, 17, of Bayonne, N. J., felt the law should be scrapped. He called it "a punitive law, directed against labor, written in a spirit of animosity."

Phyllis Levitt, 16, of Long Island City, felt Taft-Hartley should be repealed and a new law passed because the present act was "long, complicated and tricky."

May Markey, 17, of Yonkers, said Taft-Hartley was "balanced too far in favor of management."

Fernando Texidor, Jr., of New York City, declared the law had some good points but had served as an obstruction to labor-management bargaining.

Coming Home To Roost

In the Senate last week, it was just like the old days—the days when Harry Truman and Dean Acheson were regarded as sitting ducks by Sens. Joe McCarthy, Styles Bridges, and Pat McCarran.

Joe, Styles and Pat were up to their same old monkey business, this time with a big difference—the real target of their abuse was not Charles Bohlen but the man who nominated him, Pres. Eisenhower, and his State Dept. chief, John Foster Dulles.

It was a new and revealing performance to see such Republican leaders as Sens. Taft, Knowland and Wiley stand up to the torrents of abuse, innuendo and unsupported charges which McCarthy directed against Bohlen as he has against so many Americans.

It was good to see the President and Sec. Dulles stand firm against the McCarthyites in what Dulles correctly called an "acid test" of orderly government.

Apparently the responsibilties of government have brought some changes—changes, for example, in the Eisenhower who campaign with McCarthy across Wisconsin and who said he endorsed McCarthy's ends if not all his means.

There have been some changes, too, in Taft, the Senate Majority leader, from the Taft who was formerly the Senate Minority Leader. It was just three years ago, for instance, that Taft was advising McCarthy that "if one case doesn't work, bring up another."

McCarthy has taken Taft's 1950 advice in attacking Bohlen. The GOP leaders, who tolerated McCarthyism as a tool against Democrats, are now learning—the hard way—that McCarthyism is non-partisan in its attacks on decency and democracy.

The Republican leaders should have known that three years and more ago. In doing business in the past with Low-Joe, they are now reaping the whirlwind.

Unity And Teamwork

The convention of the United Automobile Workers last week was an indication of the unity and growth which have been increasingly evident in the CIO's largest union.

A mammoth convention—it brought together about 3000 delegates—it moved through a heavy agenda in workmanlike fashion. The UAW-CIO has rededicated itself to the democratic cause; it has strengthened its internal protection against totalitarians; and it has pointed to new economic gains for the workers it represents.

Under Pres. Reuther's leadership, the UAW will strive to win guaranteed annual wages for the auto workers. It is a most worthwhile goal—and in spelling out its objectives two years before negotiations get started, the UAW has in effect challenged the employers to join in the search for the best way of producing the security which American workers so strongly desire.

The Steelworkers are moving in the same direction. Pres. McDonald's talk to the auto workers emphasized the spirit of unity between these two great organizations.

The Auto Workers have written some militant and constructive history during these past 17 years. The 1953 convention proves clearly that the UAW will write some new chapters in the months and years ahead.

In Other Words—

The Word Versus The Deed

The implications of "fanatical" psychological warfare abroad are incompatible with civil liberties at home, writes Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., political historian, in this article digested from The Reporter magazine.

By ARTHUR SCHLESINGER, Jr.

SINCE Jan. 20, "psychological warfare" has enjoyed a considerable boom in Washington. In formal statements and off-the-record conferences, Administration officials have announced the start of a "psychological offensive" that will recapture the initiative in the cold war, reverse the international guessing game, give Peking the jitters, confuse the Kremlin, and keep the Communists "off balance" in the world war of wills.

Instead of "containment," we are now to carry the psychological war to the enemy, denounce international agreements, step up assaults by leaflets and by short-wave radio, and affirm "liberation" as the explicit objective of our policy. In all this, phychological warfare techniques are to play the key role.

Political warfare cannot, of course, be counted a bold new idea on this continent. From Tom Paine and Sam Adams through Wilson and Roosevelt to Harry Truman, the U. S. has practiced political warfare.

Our Side Of The Cold War

In the last five years, our government has conducted political warfare skillfully and effectively. But the Truman Administration stuck pretty much to the traditional weapons of political warfare: the policy statement (Truman Doctrine), the military undertaking (Berlin airlift, commitment of American troops to Europe), the politico-economic program (Marshall Plan), the diplomatic maneuver (aid to Tito, the North Atlantic Pact). It did not rely particularly on the more specialized weapons of psychological warfare.

But a number of Republican congressman saw in psychological warfare a means of bypassing the State Dept. Others feared the economic consequences of heavy military spending and saw in psychological warfare a cut-rate substitute for the expensive policy of building strength in the free world.

The Eisenhower Administration's present infatuation with psychological warfare emerged out of this background. John Foster Dulles, determined as Secretary of State to turn the tide of the ideological war in 1953 (even though his brother Allen had declared that the tide had turned in 1951), has lost no opportunity since the election to emphasize his intention of mounting an offensive of ideas.

In the hands of a democratic state, psychological warfare is a weapon with grave and important limitations. When Sec. Dulles said that we could accomplish what the Soviet Union could accomplish, he omitted the most important factor—that the Soviet Union, like Nazi Germany, is a totalitarian state, while the U. S. is (and one trusts will remain) a free society.

The Age Of Fanaticism?

A totalitarian state can use psychological warfare like a sword, unified in concept, ruthless and flashing in execution. There are solid reasons for believing that this can never be the case in a free society.

What are the requirements for making psychological warfare a really effective weapon? C. D. Jackson stated them with candor a couple of years back: "The ingredient that is going to make us win is fanaticism." Not only must we be fanatics ourselves but "we have got to instill fanaticism for our cause in a lot of doubtful friends and even more doubtful on-the-fencers." The next essential ingredient was "flexibility and maneuverability." The other three were "money, no holds barred and no questions asked."

Free men just aren't fanatics, as Communists and Nazis are; and if they do become fanatics, freedom shrinks from them. The project of instilling fanaticism "for our cause" in our allies is possible only by converting allies into satellites and instilling fanaticism through fear.

Psychological warfare cannot be a striking weapon of the first importance for a democracy. It is an auxiliary weapon. In the terms the new Administration is offering to the American people, it is an illusion and a dangerous illusion.

Armed might and diplomatic patience and skill are vastly more important; and more important, too, is the nature of the life we live and the society we build here in the U. S. The only durable propaganda is actuality. We cannot hope to win the free peoples of the world and roll back the Communists by slight-of-hand, love potions, and voodoo.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

EVERYONE has been hit hard by taxes. No group, however, has been hit as hard as the average and low income families.

On the floor of the Senate recently, Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) explained what has happened as a result of federal, state and local government tax increases:

The Tax Load On Low-Wage Families

"In the name of adequacy (of tax receipts) our tax base has been broadened to take in families at the expense of their living standards. At the same time, resort to the most progressive taxes, excises and sales taxes has been widespread."

This has been the trend since 1939. Before 1939 the tradition was deeply rooted in America that an income below minimum living standards could not be taxed.

This principle of taxation goes back as far as the Civil War. Then the individual exemption was $600—the same as today. In 1866, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue wrote:

"It was, of course, the purpose of the law to exempt so much of one's income as was demanded by his actual necessities."

Exemptions Are Slashed

The first permanent federal income tax legislation was passed in 1913. The exemption for single persons was $3000, compared to $600 today. It was $4000 for a married couple, $1200 today. There were no provisions for dependents in 1913.

The basis for the high 1913 exemption was explained to the Senate that year by Sen. Williams (D. Miss.): "The House framed its bill upon the theory that $4000 was a reasonable amount, in its opinion, for an American family to live upon, with a proper standard of living, and that a sum below that ought not be taxed."

This principle was followed up to 1939. That year single exemptions were $1000; married couples, $2500; and a 4-person family, $3300. These exemptions did protect minimum living standards. Today, however, with the cost of living 92% higher than 1939, exemptions are lower.

If a single person were to receive the same tax-exempt purchasing power today as he did in 1939 he would have an exemption of $1920 instead of $600; a married couple $4800 instead of $1200. A full table of comparisons follows:

Size of family	1939 exemptions	Actual 1952 exemptions	Value of 1939 exemptions in 1952 dollars
Single	$1000	$ 600	$1920
Married couple	2500	1200	4800
4-person family	3300	2400	6349

In October, 1951, the U. S. Labor Dept. investigated the cost of goods and services needed by a four-person city worker family and "considered necessary to provide for health, efficiency, the nurture of children and participation in social and community activites."

Limit On Family Lives

Using their findings and adjusting for the increased consumer prices in 1952, the Public Affairs Institute estimated that the average annual cost of this "modest but adequate" budget in the city areas today is $3779.

The current exemption for this family is $2400. Thus, $1379 or over one-third of the income absolutely needed to maintain a minimum standard is being taxed.

The need for high revenues for the Federal Government today, particularly for defense, is great. The question we must face is whether we can afford, as a nation, to dip into these minimum budgets either from a human or an economic point of view.

'On What Meat Has Caesar Fed?'

A PROPOSAL that the colleges investigate the chief congressional investigator, Sen. Joe McCarthy, has been advanced by Dr. George N. Shuster.

Shuster, president of Hunter College in New York City and a distinguished Catholic layman, addressed a Washington conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House. He said in part:

"No doubt the time has come to ask on what meat this our Caesar has fed, and to review his activities with the utmost objectivity, calm and chilly resolution, so that an authoritiative report can be made to the people.

"I fancy that the day on which the Senator is summoned before the bar of American history and social science will not be the least revealing of his career."

Another protest against McCarthyism has come from Father Leon Sullivan, formerly a Catholic missionary to China who was jailed by the Chinese Communists. In a letter to Commonweal magazine, he said:

"I would rather return to my Chinese Communist prison cell than avail myself of Sen. McCarthy's 'protection.' He is as great, if not a greater, threat to American freedom than the military might of the Kremlin, and I do not underestimate either the Kremlin's might or its cleverness.

"If you must betray democracy in order to save it, why bother?"

'Wrong-Doers In Government'—

GOP Chairman's 10% Kansas Deal Makes Headache At White House

"From the beginning we will bring into government men and women to whom low public morals are unthinkable. Thus, we will not only drive wrong-doers and their cronies out of government. We will make sure that they do not get into government in the first place."

That was Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower talking in St. Louis, Mo., last Sept. 20. It was only one of his many campaign speeches on "corruption in government."

One of his first political appointees was C. Wesley Roberts of Kansas to be chairman of the Republican National Committee, the man in charge of GOP patronage and finding men and women "to whom low public morals are unthinkable" to fill government jobs.

Last week Roberts was under severe attack from the Republicans who knew him best: members of the GOP Kansas gang.

He was charged with having been a "10 percenter" who made $11,000 selling the state of Kansas a hospital building which it already owned. To compound the corruption charge, Roberts was accused of having been a lobbyist who violated the Kansas law by not registering as such.

Simmering For Weeks

The story, which had been simmering for weeks without benefit of newspaper coverage outside of Kansas, is as follows:

In 1951, the state of Kansas purchased a hospital building on state grounds from the Ancient Order of United Workmen, a fraternal insurance company. It paid $110,00 for the building, out of which Roberts—then between terms as GOP state and national chairman—received $11,000 as a "fee" for public relations services.

On the surface, that transaction seemed routine. But investigation, sparked by the Kansas City Star, pointed up the following items:

- The state of Kansas already owned the building. Under the original contract between the fraternal organization and the state, Kansas was to have clear title should the fraternal organization ever give up its interest.
- The hospital never paid taxes to the state and would have paid taxes if the building had belonged to the AOUW.
- Roberts had never registered as a lobbyist despite Kansas laws establishing fines up to $5000 and jail sentences of a year, or both, for lobbying without registering. Kansas statutes describe lobbyists as persons "employed, appointed or retained" by anyone "having any interest" in a measure before the legislature, who "shall attempt at any time to influence in any manner" a legislator's action.

C. WESLEY ROBERTS
The 5 percenters become 10 percenters.

- Kansas law also prohibits payment of "contingency fees"—that is, fees to be paid only if desired legislation passes. Roberts' statement was peculiarly worded. He said his fee was set at $10,000 plus the retaining fee ($1000) if he (the AOUW head) decided to go ahead with the proposition after I checked all the factors."
- AOUW books showed the building valued at $17,500.
- The fraternal organization had tried in vain to sell the building to the state for 10 years, and made the sale shortly after retaining Roberts.

Pres. Eisenhower said last week that he had not known Roberts long but has great admiration for him. The President declared he has great faith in the Kansas Legislature and courts, and would not make up his mind until the facts are in. He added if a man were found guilty of anything that unfits him for office, he would not defend him.

Meanwhile, demands grew that Roberts be fired from his $32,500-a-year job as Eisenhower's top patronage dispenser. Lieut-Gov. Fred Hall of Kansas said, "If selling influence and collecting 5% is bad in Washington, it is equally bad in Topeka."

Newspapers, who gave the Roberts story the silent treatment for several weeks while GOP whitewashers attempted to kill it, finally began playing the story as the Kansas Legislature began a probe and the state filed civil actions to recover its $110,000.

Democratic National Chairman Stephen Mitchell took wry note of the small newspaper coverage given Roberts' case, observing:

"I wonder what would have been the newspapers' attitude if I had been in that position."

Tribute To Lehman—

The Man Who Never Retreated

Tribute to Herbert Lehman for never retreating before McCarthyism was voiced by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey last week. Addressing a dinner honoring the New York Senator and former Governor, Carey said in part:

WE HONOR ONE of the truly great statesmen of the contemporary world, a man who will mark his 75th birthday in just eight days.

It is hard to realize, as we watch Sen. Lehman swing into each new battle with vigor and determination and sometimes, I think, with glee that, as we measure time, he has passed the age of the gladiator.

For since 1928, his devotion to public service has paralleled the whole development of government consciousness of its duty to promote the general welfare.

Price Tags vs. Real Values

He has helped to build the great programs of social welfare that have brought security and human dignity to millions who previously knew them not.

And his is today the voice of righteous anger and sober determination that warns those who look only at the price tag and never at the value of these great gains. "Tamper not with these living monuments to a government created in the image of justice and decency and brotherhood," he constantly warns those who now have power that was denied them for 20 historic years.

Today we need his voice, his strength, his tough moral fibre as we have never needed it before.

For today there are all too few men of courage and ability willing to take to the barricades to defend that which men gave their lives to secure. There are too many who accept as their watchword, "Discretion is the better part of valor."

They fear to enter the arena with a McCarthy or a McCarran for to do that is to risk being smeared.

Well, to his eternal credit, Herbert Lehman comes from a different school. He has slugged it out with the smear-mongers, not just once but often. He has had the courage to stand up when others have cringed from the battle.

Time To Fight Back

And to my mind, one of the most ominous and sinister developments of this present-day attack on freedom of thought, is the fact that so many good persons are unwilling to dirty their hands to protect democracy.

They deplore McCarthyism. They hate it. They despise those men of low principles—or no principles—to whom no advice is too low if it brings publicity and political advancement.

But they won't fight back. They have seen too many others smeared for daring to profess a belief in the traditional American freedoms.

Thank God Sen. Lehman isn't among them. Thank God he is willing to risk the smear and the mud for principle's sake. Thank God for a man who is unwilling, in the battle against the police state of Joe Stalin, to turn this land into the police state of Joe McCarthy.

CIO's Biggest Union Sets Goals F

Aggressive Program For Annual Wage, Contract Gains, T-H Revision, PAC Expansion Voted

By GERVASE N. LOVE

DEMOCRACY at its finest went on display before the world last week when the CIO's largest union, the United Auto Workers, held its 14th constitutional convention in the cavernous Municipal Auditorium at Atlantic City, N. J.

In an action-packed week of uninhibited and far-ranging discussion, some 3000 delegates hammered out an aggressive program to guide the union in the two years before the next convention.

They voted to plow new collective bargaining ground by making the guaranteed annual wage the union's next major goal in its negotiations with the basic automobile industry, thus taking a long-standing dream of organized labor a big step toward reality.

They heartily endorsed organic unity between the CIO and AFL on a basis that will protect the structure of CIO industrial unions, thundered a call for a more vigorous public housing program and a two-year extension of rent control.

Maximum PAC Work

They bitterly denounced the Taft-Hartley Act and called for its immediate amendment and ultimate repeal. They laid down detailed policy on international affairs, including continued support for the United Nations and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

From two other CIO leaders—Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who also is president of the Electrical Workers—the UAW convention heard pledges of a united CIO effort on the organizational, political and legislative fronts and in the forthcoming negotiations with the AFL on the possibility of organic unity of the American labor movement. (See stories on these pages.)

They made the National CIO convention's legislative program their own. They adopted political action recommendations that included the rallying of maximum support behind liberals at all legislative levels, with joint local action with labor, farm and liberal groups until 1956 and then a nationwide conference of liberals, under CIO auspices, to get full strength behind a drive for liberal planks in both political party platforms.

Commies Slapped Down

They warned the industry that unless it heeds the union's requests for changes in present five-year agreements, raised by hostilities in Korea and revision of the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers' price index, they will sign no contracts for longer than two years in the future.

On these and dozens of other matters, including the many problems peculiar to their own industry, they determined union policy.

In addition, they slapped down the corporal's guard of Communists and party liners every time they raised their heads, and took further steps to protect the union from totalitarian sympathizers, from racketeers and from faithless local officers.

And they again elected their four top officers to carry on the stewardship of their union—Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also is president of the CIO; Vice Presidents Richard Gosser and John Livingston, and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey.

They were renominated without opposition and declared election amid a wild display of enthusiasm. Hundreds of delegates paraded across the platform to greet the candidate at each nomination while a band blared, noisemakers raised a thunderous din, cheers roared and gaily colored balloons soared in long strings to the towering roof of the hall.

The convention got under way with a warning from Reuther that free men and free institutions are facing their greatest challenge and greatest opportunities.

WALTER P. REUTHER
Auto Workers and CIO President makes a point at the mike.

"Never before in the history of modern civilization have we faced such possible disaster," he said.

"Yet on the other hand, never has the future held greater promise of a fuller, richer life for people.

"Whether we drift to disaster or whether we plan and work and fight to build a better tomorrow in a large measure depends upon what we do and what free men and men of good will everywhere do in the immediate period ahead."

Live By The Year

He discussed the guaranteed annual wage in detail. Until the industrial revolution changed the basic economic structure of civilization, he recalled, workers were paid by the year. He reduced the situation to its simplest form by pointing out that they still have to live by the year.

The question is not only one of economic justice to the worker, he stressed, but is "a matter of economic necessity if we as a free people are to find the answer to full employment and full production in peace time."

He expressed the hope that the industry would sit down with the union and discuss the guaranteed wage rationally, sanely and sincerely when major contracts open up in a little more than two years. The union hopes to attain its goal on a basis of reasonable dealing with reasonable men, he said, but is prepared to fight if it has to.

The convention voted $5000 for the relief of refugees who flee to free Berlin from the Soviet-controlled zone of Germany after hearing Mayor Ernst Reuter of West Berlin describe how that outpost of freedom is causing communism on the other side of the iron curtain to "disintegrate."

Reuter related the grim fight Berliners have waged against Soviet engulfment since the end of the war. Their success, he declared, has blocked Russia from taking over all of Europe.

"I have not yet seen a stream of refugees from West Berlin and West Germany going to East Germany. The stream is only onesided, from the part where tyranny reigns to where liberty is reigning and ruling."

Dr. Ralph Bunche, Nobel Peace Prize winner and director of the Trusteeship Department of the United Nations, called on all Americans to give more than guns and words to suppressed peoples struggling to emerge to freedom.

"The best way to strengthen freedom is to extend it," he said.

Act On Extremists

Constitutional amendments adopted included one giving the International Executive Board the right of review of local union trial board decisions involving defendants charged with "subservience to or membership in" the Communist Party, Nazis, Fascists or other subversive groups; racketeers, and local officers accused of embezzlement.

The change also gives the accuser as well as the accused the right of appeal to the board and eventually the international convention, as well as giving the board itself the right of review.

Reuther and the Executive Board scored another major victory over the Communists when about 95% of the delegates voted to uphold their action in depriving five minor officers of Ford Local 600, of which Carl Stellato is president, from holding office or running for elective office pending convention action.

Stellato later was defeated in an effort to capture one of the two co-directorships in Region 1-A in Detroit. He ran third to the incumbents, Edward Cote and Joseph McCusker.

The Communists took another thumping in a move to make the 30-hour week an immediate objective of the union instead of a long-range goal. A resolution denouncing them, along with opportunists and disruptionists, for pushing it at this time was passed with but little dissent.

In another move the convention boosted the salaries of its officers and staff members.

Reuther's salary was raised from $11,250 to $18,000 a year. Mazey's was increased from $10,750 to $14,000; Gosser and Livingston from $9250 to $12,500, and international executive board members from $7750 to $10,000.

Carey Says GOP Rule Will Aid Labor Solidarity

A PREDICTION that the "harsh lesson" of the 1952 elections will have "some beneficial consequences" for labor was expressed by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at the Auto Workers convention.

"It was a blow, beyond question, for labor to lose a good friend in the White House," said Carey, who is also president of the CIO Electrical Workers. "It was a sharp disappointment to lose officials sympathetic to working men and women in government agencies and in Congress."

However, he continued, the "new climate" may mean "greater dependence on our own resources, our own economic strength, our own solidarity.

Carey thought "the new philosophy of 'what's good for General Motors is good for the nation' will inevitably work its effects on millions of men and women who are still outside the ranks of organized labor.

"It may be that millions of Americans outside unionism's ranks, seeing their protections and benefits whittled away, will become aroused. And if they become aroused, and angry, they will again join together for collective action against those who would deprive them of their heritage."

The CIO secretary-treasurer pointed out that "we don't know for sure what big business is after." He said "one wing of the Republican Party headed by Sen. Welker (Ida.) and the Chicago Tribune, are loudly demanding that we sell the U. S. Post Office and the Tennessee Valley Authority to 'private enterprise.'

Carey said the CIO believes in free enterprise and that "therefore, if—as Sen. Welker wants—the U. S. Post Office and TVA are sold to private enterpris then the CIO will want to do its bi

"General Motors owns enough of Was ington already. We don't want to see take everything.

"Eventually big business will be force to understand not only that the CIO here to stay but the CIO will contin to grow as a force for economic and soci betterment of the great mass of the Ame ican people."

harted, by keeping CIO from the reefs of division we know he would have had the wisdom and sureness of purpose to avoid, by building CIO ever stronger, we can best pay tribute to our lost leader and take up the heavy tasks that fell to the CIO with his passing."

The convention also resolved to "roll the union on as Allan Haywood helped to roll it on in his lifetime."

"Allan S. Haywood come out of the rank and file," it said, "and he never left it in spirit or in his instinctive grasp of the moods and needs or ordinary men and women.

"He was a fighter with a blunt, serviceable creed. Part of that creed was a summing up of his life and of the history of the labor movement: 'We have had to fight for what we got.' Part of it was the equally simple, fundamental lesson he drew from that experience and did so much to apply through CIO: 'Organize the unorganized.' "

Haywood's nephew, Allan Haywood, a delegate to the convention from UAW Local 148, Long Beach, Cal., expressed the thanks of his aunt for the many tributes paid the CIO executive vice president on his death.

Reuther Stresses Basic Union Principles As UAW Endorses CIO Negotiations With AFL

FORTHCOMING unity conferences between the CIO and AFL were wholeheartedly endorsed by the CIO Auto Workers' convention.

In a resolution urging that the negotiations proceed on a basis that will protect industrial unions and other basic CIO principles, the delegates called for day-to-day "practical working solidarity" while sessions are being held.

Meetings between the CIO and AFL are scheduled to begin in Washington on Apr. 7.

The convention acted after UAW and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared the CIO will enter the negotiations "with a sincere desire to explore every possibility of achieving honorable labor unity."

As president of the CIO, he will head the CIO delegation.

'Working Too Well'

Reuther said the United Labor Policy Committee was broken up by the AFL "because it was working too well." The CIO will go into the coming negotiations determined to work hard for labor unity "on the basis of honorable, sound trade union principles . . . but we will not compromise our principles as a matter of political expediency," Reuther said.

Then he outlined a few of these basic union principles:

"The basic industrial union structure must remain intact. Under no condition will we permit any craft union to chip away any piece of our industrial union structure.

NADINE BROWN
Delegate from Chrysler Local 490 in Highland Park, Mich., reads resolution on labor unity adopted as convention opened.

"We believe there must of necessity be the kind of rational, intelligent, constructive machinery within the labor movement for the resolution of jurisdictional conflicts in order to eliminate the continuous strife that has plagued the AFL for the last 50 years.

"Further, we believe the American labor movement cannot meet its responsibilities or be the kind of symbol it must be to free labor unless membership in all unions is open to all people regardless of race, creed or color. We do not believe in Jim Crow trade unionism any more than we believe in that approach to our other basic problems."

Reuther also noted the New York dock situation and the AFL executive council's determination to clean out racketeering and underworld influence.

"We believe and hope they will," he said. "We don't believe the kind of labor movement we are willing to belong to can tolerate racketeering any more than we are willing to tolerate communism in the leadership of our own movement."

He declared that "for too long there have been vested interests standing in the way" of organic unity.

Good For Membership

"The only real basis for measuring the achievement of organic unity," he continued, "is not what is good for the leadership, but what is good for the rank and file membership of all unions. This is the only test that ought to be applied."

The CIO is not going to be looking for jobs in a new labor organization, he said.

"We don't care who leads the new labor movement providing it can be put together solidly," he declared.

"If the AFL is willing to sit down and sensibly and intelligently look at this problem and try to put it together honestly, the prospects for a united labor movement are good. On the other hand, if they want us to compromise basic principles, then we will get nowhere."

Delegates Join In 'God Save The Queen'

Delegates to the CIO Auto Workers convention stood for a minute of silence at the request of their Canadian brothers while Joe Bello, Jr., a UAW staff member sang "God Save the Queen" in memory of Dowager Queen Mary of Great Britain.

Curb Voted On Reds, Fascists

NEW AUTHORITY to the CIO Auto Workers to deal with "Communists, Fascists or racketeers" was voted by delegates to the Atlantic City convention.

Delegates voted the international union power to clamp down on Communists or other extremists, by ordering a retrial in cases in which extremists were cleared by their local union.

The proposition was approved by a 3 to 1 vote after some 40 minutes of debate early in the convention.

The measure was urged by Pres. Walter P. Reuther to strengthen the UAW's long-standing constitutional bar against Communists or Fascists holding union office. He said the change was needed to "fight a small group that would use the democratic structure of the union to undermine it."

A second issue involving the Communist question was won by the Reuther Administration by a 10 to 1 margin.

It involved an appeal to the convention from five members of Ford Local 600 who were removed from local office as subservient to the Communist Party. They were ousted by the UAW International Executive Board when the international union placed Local 600 under an administrator about a year ago.

The delegates turned down the appeal to reverse the board's action, thus rejecting Local 600's Carl Stellato's plea.

McDonald Pledges Steel Union Aid To Make CIO Stronger

PRES. DAVID J. McDONALD of the United Steelworkers last week squashed unfounded newspaper reports that the USA was considering leaving the CIO.

In a major speech at the Atlantic City convention of the United Automobile Workers, McDonald pledged:

"The United Steelworkers of America will not destroy the CIO. It shall be our earnest endeavor to make it bigger and better and stronger."

As the 3000 UAW delegates roared approval, the USA president detailed the Steelworkers contribution to CIO, "our investment in the CIO," McDonald called it.

From June, 1938, to date, the USA "total investment" in a financial sense amounts to $15,672,539.59—and that ain't hay," he said.

"We are proud of this investment for the good of the people of America, and we, the United Steelworkers of America, are extremely proud that God has been so good to us that we have been able to invest this money," McDonald added.

What We Have Won

He listed these "proud" results from this investment:

- "We have been able to build labor unions in America."
- "We have assisted in elevating the living standards of the working people and, in a sense, of all of the people of America."
- "We have been successful in securing for the industrial workers of our land a measure of industrial democracy."
- "We have contributed toward bring about improved social legislation, again not only for ourselves but for all of the people of America."
- "We have proven to the world that democratic capitalism is the best way of life for mankind."

"These are fine returns," McDonald told the cheering Auto Workers, "and we do not intend to stop investing in the Congress of Industrial Organizations."

Looking to the future, McDonald told of USA-CIO plans for organizing the unorganized. "But standing side by side with the UAW and all of the other great affiliates of the CIO," he added, "we will do many things for our land and for the world."

Elaborating on this point, the USA president said that "through this united CIO movement . . . we are going to establish a sense of security for the working people of America heretofore unknown. We are going to do that by working together to establish the guaranteed annual wage."

"We are going to bring into being," he went on, "a dream of Philip Murray, an idea born in his fertile mind: the industry council plan, wherein workers will have an even larger voice in the perpetration of this idea of industrial democracy."

Book-Burners Like Nazis—

Race-Baiters, Crackpots War On UNESCO

(First of two articles)

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

REMEMBER reading a few years ago about the book-burning parties the Nazis used to throw? It was part of their thought control program under which they tried to destroy whatever didn't agree with their master race theories.

Well read this: "Our suggestion would be that all the literature which has been issued by the United Nations and its subsidiary organizations to date which is still on hand be collected, put into one huge pile and made into a bonfire."

It's a quote from a recent issue of The Southern Conservative, an eight-page monthly published in Fort Worth, Texas. It slings other words that smack of the old Nazi talk, such as "efforts to bring about the mongrelization of the Anglo-Saxon race" and it incites to violence by suggesting "a nice, warm coat of tar and feathers for the members of any group which assembled for the purpose of stirring up racial trouble in the South."

Yes, it's a crackpot sheet full of slander, lies and nonsense, but it is quite crafty as "a professional agitator and rabble-rouser" (a remark the paper hurls against others), and the uninhibited malice threaded through its pages makes it lively reading. It's easier to be funny if you're mean.

The Pack Draws Blood

The point here is that the Southern Conservative is a fairly typical example of a whole pack of vicious publications and organized groups now yelping at the heels of the United Nations and its various agencies—with some success, it is sad to note. The pack has drawn blood.

Take the case of the public schools in Los Angeles. There the program and publications of UNESCO (United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization) have finally been dropped after a knock-down, drag-out fight that lasted a year and made the headlines nationally when raging at its hottest.

Texas is another place where the anti-UNESCO drive has been quite successful. In Houston, for instance, high school students were barred from taking part in the annual UN essay contest. (The Southern Conservative must have cut a notch in its gun after this victory.)

UN Programs Hurt

School authorities have reported that the number of schools taking part in UN essay contests dropped considerably after the drive against UNESCO. Public schools in many places have withdrawn UNESCO pamphlets and films, restricted classroom teaching about the UN, or cut out whatever UNESCO programs they may have had, in response to protests from local groups which all have a similar line of distorted and untrue charges.

Like other citizens, teachers and officials can get very jittery in these tense times, when they are accused of backing "anti-American" and "subversive" ideas.

What's this row all about? What is UNESCO trying to do, and why are attacks on the UN being leveled at this particular agency? What groups are fighting it? Are they all crackpots?

What stand has the CIO taken? Is it a subject of great concern to union members and all other American citizens, or is it a minor matter in this day and age heaped high already with hair-raising problems?

BID TO PRESIDENT—Members of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO pause on White House steps after inviting Pres. Eisenhower to address group's national conference in Minneapolis Sept. 15. Representing executive committee of UNESCO group (from left): Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO research and education director; Luther Evans, Max McCullough, Mrs. R. F. Sayre, Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.), Elvin Stakman, Judge Homer S. Brown and Walter Lavis.

Look To UN With Hope

You probably know the answers to some if not all of these questions. But it may not be a bad idea to list them briefly, starting with the last and most important first—because the attempts to weaken or destroy the UN and its working agency, UNESCO, are a very serious matter.

For of all the fears of people everywhere, the fear of another world war casts the blackest shadow.

Our more enlightened foreign policy leaders—liberals and conservatives alike—agree at least on one thing: It is to the United Nations that we must look for hope, if the horrors of another war are to be prevented.

In his inaugural speech, Pres. Eisenhower said: "Respecting the United Nations as the living sign of all people's hope for peace, we will strive to make it not merely an eloquent symbol but an effective force."

Both Sec. of State John Foster Dulles and Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., new permanent U. S. representative to the UN, were reported in the press as being "determined to make a new beginning in trying to restore confidence in the United Nations in this country."

It would seem then a matter of primary commonsense to do everything possible to strengthen the start that has been made with the UN and strive realistically and patiently to make it a strong, effective world organization which may be able to bring peace to the world. It's true it didn't prevent the war in Korea, but with some help it may prevent World War III.

CIO Participation

The CIO, which is always in the forefront of a fight to advance the interests of the people, is one of the strong supporters of the UN and UNESCO. CIO and its affiliate, the American Newspaper Guild, are among the 60 voluntary citizen groups concerned with education, scientific and cultural matters represented on the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO. Similar commissions function in many of the other 65 participating countries.

A major part of the activities of the U. S. Commission has been devoted to aiding UNESCO's program of promoting education about the UN. CIO Education and Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg, is one of the representatives of labor on the U. S. Commission, and is its vice chairman. Ralph Novak, ANG executive vice-president, is another member.

At the last CIO convention, a resolution was passed unanimously calling for strong support for UNESCO and charging that it has been made the "whipping boy" for attacks on the UN.

Super-Patriots Hit

"Unfortunately the effort to inform American youth about the United Nations has met with rabid opposition from the self-styled super-patriots, many of whom supported the 'America First' movement before and after World War II," the resolution states. These people, it says, "seek to create an unbridgeable chasm between nationalism and internationalism, so that a citizen who thinks in international terms as well as national terms will be branded as disloyal to the United States."

The ultra-isolationists and racial and religious bigots who are waging war against the UN through attacks on UNESCO seem to argue that since we are a rich, prosperous country, we are sufficient unto ourselves and ought to tell the rest of the world to go hang—or settle its own problems. If people in underdeveloped lands starve, it's not our fault, they say. To help them is "world socialism" or a "world WPA."

An isolationist has the same type mind as the self-centered prosperous citizen who is against unemployment insurance, or old age retirement benefits or other social security measures, because he thinks that anybody who amounts to anything can save money for rainy days. He judges everybody's circumstances by his own, as an isolationist judges other countries by his own.

Professional Haters

Mixed in with the isolationists, some of whom may sincerely believe from their limited experience that what they think is true, is a noisy crew of professional haters, rabble-rousers, and out-and-out screwballs, a few of them as dangerous as homicidal maniacs on the loose.

It's hard sometimes to tell one from the other, for they run in packs, as they have in the anti-UNESCO campaign, and chase the same victims, yelling "subversive" and "disloyal" at those who don't have the same notions they do. Although they accuse their enemies of Communist beliefs, they themselves are strong advocates of thought control.

And here lies the clue of what is behind the attacks on UNESCO, the agency set up by the United Nations with the main objective of promoting the interchange of education, science and culture among nations.

In this country, one of UNESCO's chief functions is to spread information about what the UN stands for, show how it works, and try to break down prejudice against foreign countries by making understandable their customs and way of life which may be different from ours.

Just Like Russians

The schools where the next generation is being educated, and on whom the support of the UN may depend, is the logical place for this program, and there is where much of it has been focused. But the isolationists and their mixed followers, don't want international understanding taught in the schools.

They call it propaganda for "world federation." They say it is disloyal to the U. S. and a violation of American sovereignty. They don't believe in the internationalist concept of the UN and UNESCO and they want anything that does not agree with their ideas kept out of the schools. So they call UNESCO subversive, un-American, communistic, and so on.

The funny thing is that the Russians don't like UNESCO either. They and the other iron curtain countries which are in the UN, don't even belong to it. The Communists' stand is quite similar to our own anti-UNESCO groups. They too, are hard-bitten nationalists—Russian Firsters—who don't want their people to know the truth about the outside world.

The isolationists and racial bigots ignore all this, and continue accusing others of what they themselves are guilty of.

(Next: Who are some of the attackers of UNESCO? See second installment next week.)

Facts About UNESCO

What is UNESCO?

The United Nations Educational Scientific Cultural Organization (UNESCO) is one of the specialized agencies of the UN. It was set up under Article 55 of the UN Charter to promote "international cultural and educational cooperation."

What's its purpose?

As expressed in its constitution, its main purpose is "to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture . . ."

How does it operate?

The governing body is the General Conference, to which 64 nations who belong to UNESCO send delegates. The conference decides all matters of policy, program and budget.

What does it do?

It strives to help its member nations combat ignorance, poverty and disease. It encourages the international exchange of art and science, and works to reduce obstacles to the free flow of information in the world.

What is the United States National Commission for UNESCO?

This Commission, set up by the law which made the U. S. a member of UNESCO, consists of 100 American citizens, 60 of them selected by national private organizations concerned with educational, scientific and cultural matters. The CIO has two representatives on the Commission.

What is the attitude of the Soviet Union toward UNESCO?

Russia and her satellites are hostile. The Soviet Union, Poland and Czechoslovakia refused to approve UNESCO's recent yearly report to the United Nations' Social & Economic Council. The Soviet delegate called UNESCO merely a tool of the United States.

Is UNESCO supporting a program of world government, as its enemies charge?

No, it functions as an organization of sovereign nations. The accusation is based on UNESCO's effort to emphasize the international rights of all countries.

MORE JOBS SOUGHT: Some 30 CIO Textile Workers led by TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka present to Labor Sec. Martin P. Durkin (at end of table, near center flag) a program for reviving the woolen and worsted industry in the North.

'Distressed Areas'—

Textile Group Asks Job Aid

A DELEGATION of CIO Textile Workers from hard-pressed woolen towns in New England and Middle Atlantic States last week came to Washington to ask once again for government action to save jobs.

They presented a 12-point program ranging from awarding defense contracts to distressed areas to tariff proposals to Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin and Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks.

"Mills have closed permanently and the industry is operating at a fraction of capacity," TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka wrote the U. S. Tariff Commission.

"THOUSANDS of workers have lost their jobs. Communities which are the center of wool manufacture, such as Lawrence and Lowell, Mass., have the highest unemployment rates in the country, upwards of 25% of the labor force."

Chupka, who is also director of the union's woolen and worsted division, urged the commission to increase to 45% the duty on woolen and worsted fabrics whose imports have exceeded 5% of domestic production during the last three years.

Chupka headed the delegation from Massachusetts, Maine, New Hamsphire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey and Pennsylvania textile centers that presented the 12-point program to Durkin and Weeks. TWUA represents 65,000 workers in the woolen and worsted industry.

MAIN POINTS made by the 30 some delegates included:

- Immediate request by the Secretary of Defense for bids for about three million yards of woolen and worsted fabrics under 1952-53 appropriations.
- Awarding contracts only to plants in which the spinning and weaving operations are operating not more than 80 hours a week, with preferential consideration being given to distress areas.
- Requesting by the armed services of congressional approval for the immediate release of funds for woolen and worsted fabrics for the first two quarters of 1953-54 to speed up awarding of contracts.
- Stockpiling by the armed services of woolen and worsted fabrics for one year's needs.
- Paying additional unemployment insurance to employes in distressed areas whose benefits have been exhausted and aiding them in seeking new employment through retraining and travel allowances.
- Directing immediately suitable contracts to distressed areas and encouraging the location of defense plants in those sections.
- Investigating immediately by the armed services of needs of service personnel which can be met with woolen and worsted products instead of the non-woolen substitutes now used.

In addition to Chupka, leaders of the delegation included Arthur Brown, assistant woolen and worsted director; Al Barkan, legislative director; Solomon Barkin, research director; John W. Edelman, Washington director, and Michael Botelho, New Hampshire and Vermont TWUA director.

Woolen Mill Jobs Drop By One-Third

Here in a nutshell is the story of the distressed woolen and worsted industry, where employment has declined by approximately a third in seven years.

The figures on employment: 1947, 167,000; 1950, 143,000, and 1953, 115,000.

And the CIO Textile Workers reported last week that a great majority of the 115,000 are working part time.

World Of Labor—

ICFTU Condemns Trujillo For Barring ILO Mission

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has strongly condemned the Trujillo dictatorship in the Dominican Republic for barring an Intl. Labor Organization mission.

Trujillo had invited the ILO to investigate the effect of Dominican laws on labor unions after he was charged with violations of the right of workers to organize. He later withdrew the invitation.

Luis Alberto Monge, general secretary of the Inter-American Regional Organization (ORIT) of the ICFTU, charged that democratic opponents of Trujillo "have paid heavily for their democratic activities," and that "hundreds of people have fallen before the bullets of Trujillo hirelings or have been savagely beaten for their resistance."

"Trujillo does not dare permit any democratic body to enter the country he has terrorized and so see the bloodshed that he is guilty of," said the ORIT-ICFTU statement.

France

Police raided the offices of several Communist-dominated unions in Paris, including the main headquarters of the General Confederation of Labor (CGT), and arrested three men for endangering French security.

Those arrested were Lucien Molino, a national secretary of the CGT; Andre Tollet, CGT secretary for the Paris area, and Andre Stil of the Communist paper L'Humanite.

Sweden

The Swedish Federation of Labor has just opened its second trade union school, a $1 million property at Akers Runo, near Stockholm, as part of its long-standing program of educational activities and training for union leaders.

The Swedish labor movement has had a workers' education school in Dalecarlia since 1920. About 1200 students are enrolled.

Small Business Aid Urged By Sparkman

A PROGRAM to aid small business was outlined last week by Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), but Republican leaders in Congress announced plans for legislation moving the opposite way.

Pres. Eisenhower and GOP congressmen agreed that the 21-year-old Reconstruction Finance Corp. has outlived its usefulness and should be abolished. There were also reports that the Small Defense Plants Administration will be allowed to die this year.

Sparkman, former chairman and now ranking Democrat on the Senate Small Business Committee, listed strengthening of the small business loan program and a stronger SDPA as two essentials if small business is to "remain an effective part of our private enterprise system."

A THIRD essential, Sparkman said, is tax relief for small businesses.

Senate Majority Leader Taft said GOP plans to abolish the RFC didn't necessarily mean an end to the small business loan program, which might be handled by another agency. Pointing out that RFC has operated the lending program at a profit averaging $12 million a year over the last five years, Sparkman questioned the need for a new agency.

"Instead of saving money," he said, "it is my guess that they will end up spending more to handle these functions separately."

Chicago CIO Raps Soviet Jew-Baiting

CONDEMNING "the emergence of organized, state-inspired anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe," the Chicago CIO Council has pledged support to "all further action necessary" to end Soviet attacks on the Jewish people.

Chicago CIO joined the Jewish Labor Committee and 50 other civic groups in sponsoring a city-wide protest rally against Russia's civil persecutions of religious minorities. Over 1500 people packed Chicago's Orchestra Hall to hear addresses by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.), CIO Regional Director Frank Cronin, and others.

"The recent anti-Semitic policies of the Soviet Union clearly indicates its moral degeneracy," Cronin said. "Their complete contempt for truth and human dignity has placed them in the position where they now must create a state of terror in order to distract attention from their record of miserable failures."

IN A LETTER to JLC Chairman Jacob Siegel, Ellsworth M. Smith, secretary of the Chicago CIO Council, pledged the full support of the 200,000 CIO members in the Chicago area "to force the Soviet government to desist from these tactics."

Writing for the Council executive board, Smith declared:

"The Communists, so long pretenders to belief in the American tradition of civil liberties, have exposed themselves for all time."

Reuther And Meany Share N. Y. Guild Page One Award

THE NEWSPAPER GUILD of New York, CIO, has voted a Page One Award in the field of labor to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany.

The joint award was made "for new and promising leadership in the two major arms of the American labor movement." These and other Page One Awards will be presented at the Guild's 20th anniversary Page One Ball in New York City on Apr. 17.

Judge Learned Hand, retired judge, U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, was voted the Page One Award in Public Affairs "for his half century of outstanding services to society and law and his humanitarian outlook."

In radio-TV, the Page One Award went to Jacob L. Holtzmann, a member of the New York State Board of Regents, for spearheading the plan for an 11-station network of educational television in the State.

In the same field, Elmer Davis of the American Broadcasting Co. was awarded a special citation "for his courageous, independent interpretation of the news in the spirit of Heywood Broun," the late and first president of the American Newspaper Guild.

U. S. Wage Order In Paper Bag Industry Blocked By Mill

APPLICATION of a new minimum wage rate for government work has been blocked in a third industry.

Former Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin had set the minimum at $1.115 hourly for pulp and paper bag work, but at 99.5c hourly for paper bag contracts under the Walsh-Healey Act.

The period for filing objections closed Feb. 26, but about Mar. 17 Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin extended for 10 days the objection period so that one firm could file objections.

Although the Labor Dept. did not make public the name of the objecting firm, it was reported to be an Atlanta, Ga., mill.

The CIO paperworkers last week charged that the file was reopened without either consultation, or notice to them. The CIO union declared that associations which represent most of the industry did not object to the new minimums.

When hearings were held two years ago, UPA and AFL unions in the field called for a $1.25 minimum. When Tobin set the new minimums UPA Pres. Harry Sayre wrote him that while the union did not want to file an official objection, it urged that subsequently a higher rate be set to reflect collective bargaining gains. Sayre also pointed out there was no precedent for separating paper bag manufacturing from the rest of the industry.

DURKIN earlier stayed the application of the $1.20 hourly minimum in the woolen and worsted industry. Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers said that Durkin in proposing new hearings was "badly misled" by the AFL textile union and "unduly influenced" by National Association of Wool Manufacturers.

Court action by cotton manufacturers has blocked the $1 minimum in that industry.

Your Pocketbook's Involved—

Consumers Out On A Limb As GOP Fills Key Agencies

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Associated

AS A CONSUMER you are now out on a long limb, which the Republicans can saw off at any time—and you wouldn't even know it until your pocketbook is suddenly hit.

It's part of the big game going on in Washington now, behind the scenes. All it takes is the "right" appointment by Pres. Eisenhower to any one of a number of government agencies the public seldom hears of. The decisions of these agencies mean millions and millions of dollars, one way or the other—either in preventing gouging of consumers, or in gravy to producers.

Although the GOP regime boasts that it is "business-minded," in at least one behind-the-scenes struggle the consumer may get a break, not because the GOP is tender-hearted, but because politicians are practical people, and like to get re-elected.

So the Republicans now are in two camps in regard to a forthcoming appointment to the Federal Power Commission. Those from the states that produce oil and gas are tugging at Ike one way. Those from states where the oil, and especially the gas, is consumed, are tugging the other way.

The stake? What consumers of gas in such states as Missouri, Michigan and Wisconsin will have to pay for natural gas that comes from such states as Oklahoma.

REMEMBER the Kerr bill, which Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.), a rich oil man, introduced. That bill exempted the gatherers and producers of natural gas from regulation by the Federal Power Commission. Ex.-Pres. Truman had the courage to veto that bill. So the oil and gas men got control of the membership of the FPC.

Result? The FPC ruled it had no regulatory power over gas "gatherers." That ruling say economists, increased the value of the holdings of the Phillips Petroleum Co. alone by $750 million dollars. By the same token, that cost the consumers of natural gas untold millions in higher rates.

While the FPC ruling is now before the US Supreme Court on appeal, a fierce struggle is going on behind the scenes as to whom Eisenhower will name to the two vacancies on FPC. Will it be two producer-minded men or two consumer-minded men?

What Eisenhower does in this case may mean a terrific difference in your gas bills.

Biz Lawyer In Anti-Trust Cases Confirmed On FTC

For 20 years, Atty. Edward F. Howrey has appeared before the Federal Trade Commission — to defend business firms charged with violating the anti-trust laws and other laws policed by the FTC.

Now Howrey is moving to the other side of the hearing room, as a member of the FTC. His nomination by Pres. Eisenhower was unanimously confirmed by the Senate last week and the President named Howrey as FTC chairman. He replaces former Sec. James M. Mead, who stays on the agency.

When Howrey told the Senate Commerce Committee hearing that he would disqualify himself in cases involving his former clients, Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.), commented, "I'm afraid you'd be on a vacation about permanently down there."

Appointment of Howrey—who succeeds John Carson—also was likened to Eisenhower's nomination of Albert M. Cole—bitter foe of housing—to a top federal housing job.

CIO Joins In National Conference To Seek Aid For 30 Million Handicapped Workers

THE CIO last week took part in a conference to help the nation's 30 million handicapped help themselves.

It was the third National Conference of Severely Handicapped held in Washington under auspices of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped.

Paul A. Strachan, AFPH president, gave an idea of the size of the problem by reporting that last year alone there were some 9,580,000 accidents which caused permanent or partial disability.

Some 350,000 persons were left permanently disabled, but only 61,000 of them were to get training and employment under Federal and state programs, while the rest were left to shift for themselves.

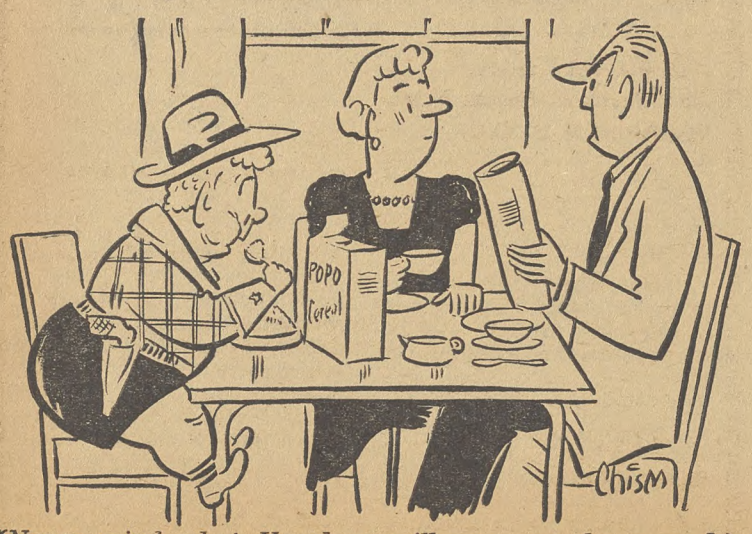
AFPH is backing legislation to create a Federal Agency for the Handicapped, which would end the present duplication of work handled by several federal bureaus. The aim of AFPH, Strachan stressed, is not charity but to help the disabled to help themselves.

WITH THAT in mind, AFPH called for a federal $10 million revolving fund, from which states which had exhausted their own rehabilitation funds could borrow. Strachan said the states in turn would advance the money to voluntary groups which would operate workshops—like the Goodwill Industries. The workshops would aim to become self-supporting through the sales of the products made by disabled workers.

To encourage employment of handicapped persons in industry, AFPH also asked for a federal second injury tax and fund to replace conflicting state laws which now constitute a barrier to hiring the disabled.

And in case the disabled person could not be rehabilitated, AFPH would have the federal government pay him $60 a month.

AFPH vice presidents include CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Pres. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, CIO Auto Workers; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, CIO Communications Workers; Pres. Elwood Swisher, CIO Chemical Workers; Pres. Karl E. Feller, CIO Brewery Workers, and Frank L. Fernbach, CIO associate research director.



"Never mind what Hopalong will say; cut down on his cereal!"

Child Labor Bills Killed

REPUBLICAN-sponsored efforts to weaken New York State's child labor laws were defeated in the closing days of the recent session of the Legislature.

Assemblyman Wadlin (R.), author of the state's utility anti-strike law, withdrew two measures to cripple child labor protection. They would have opened the way to use of child labor in farm harvesting during school vacations, with all wage and hour regulations lifted.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius
For Labor Press Associated

YOU'LL BE ABLE to pick up some reasonable values this month if you're selective and time your buying to take advantage of post-Easter clothing sales.

The new higher prices for gas, cigarettes and coffee in particular, announced when price controls were lifted last month, hit working families hard. This is a good time to do some extra comparison shopping. The coffee trade predicts that eventually the full rise will be 8c to 10c, and some brands will thus be close to $1 a pound again.

Shop for gas, too. Not all suppliers have upped their prices. As for cigarets, Wings and other cheaper brands are still 2c a pack less.

With no price ceilings, the only control left is consumer resistance. A drop in sales of the more expensive brands following a price jump would have a remarkable effect on the thinking of the manufacturers.

There are some good bargains this month too. One of the best is the new price reductions on sheets. You'll also get a continued break on food prices if you're selective. Beef, eggs and dairy products will remain at comparatively reasonable levels for some weeks ahead.

The big cost-of living problem continues to be the creeping inflation in rents and household operating costs, which is wiping out the savings from lower food and clothing prices.

Best Buys

Beef is still cheap (comparatively) this month, but can be expected to go up again this summer. If you have a freezer or locker, this is a good time to buy. Be careful in shopping; some markets offer sirloin and other steaks at low prices but trim the meats very little so there's a lot of waste.

Pork has gone up and will become more expensive. Young chickens for broiling or frying are reasonable this month; so are turkeys. But the best buys of all in protein foods are frozen fish fillets, cheese (especially cottage and cheddar) and eggs, all in heavy supply currently.

Cabbage, oranges and grapefruit and canned tomato juice are priced low, currently, according to the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

Here are buying opportunities you'll find this month, and tips on picking values:

Women's, children's clothes: Some types of rayon garments are arriving in the stores at lower prices. You can find good value dresses and sportswear made of rayon gabardines, spun rayon, and spun-rayon "butcher linen." You'll also find lower prices on cotton twill garments which are a good durable construction for children's garments and work clothes. But denims continue up in price.

Actually, prices of cotton textiles should be cheaper at this time. The price of cotton itself is about 7c less than last year, but the textile trade is pocketing the difference because, its spokesmen assert, previously they had been operating at a loss.

Men's suits: Prices are reasonable at this point but manufacturers are predicting a wholesale rise of $1.25 to $3 on a suit, which will mean a jump at retail of $2 to $5.

Sheets: The new price levels make the Type 140 muslin only 15-25c more expensive than the lightweight Type 128, and consequently the 140's are much better value.

2 Chains Hike Coffee Prices As 'Billion-Dollar-Gouge' Hit

TWO OF THE nation's biggest grocery chains pushed coffee prices higher, as a "gouge of billions of dollars" for coffee drinkers was protested in the Senate.

Both Atlantic & Pacific and Safeway Stores upped coffee prices from 2c to 4c a pound.

Sen. Gillette (D. Iowa) said these boosts "ad insult to great injury." Before coffee price ceilings were removed last month, he said prices already were "exorbitantly high." He blamed the "great speculative raid on our pocketbooks" by coffee producing nations and U. S. wholesalers in 1949.

PRES. EISENHOWER also has commented on coffee price boosting, calling it "that coffee thing" and trying to blame foreign growers rather than the U. S. coffee trade. Last week's chain store boosts belied his hopes.

Here are some tips from Sidney Margolius, LPA consumer columnist, on ways to beat the coffee price boost:

With a percolator, let coffee perc at least 10 minutes. With a drip-maker, pour boiling water through a second time. A little chicory increases the yield (not more than an ounce to a pound of coffee). And powdered coffee may bring savings for a small family.

Negro Named 'Mother Of Year'

Mrs. Leah Sykes Young has been named Virginia's "Mother of the Year" by a committee of club women. She is the first Negro ever to win the award.

Mrs. Young, 66, lives in Waynesboro. The Youngs have 14 children and in addition provided a home for five orphans. Six of the children are teachers, one a nurse, one a librarian, one a farmer and four are in the building trades. (LPA)

Organizationally Speaking

The following are CIO representation election victories as reported by the Organizational Department:

REG. DIR. ROY ATKINSON reports that in a representation election at the American Smelting & Refining Co., Northport, Wash., the workers favored the CIO Steelworkers by a vote of 18 to 5 for the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and two for the AFL. This campaign was supervised by Otto Orr, USA-CIO regional director.

The CIO Woodworkers won a representation election at the Spangler-Loranze Lumber Co., Spaulding, Ia., by the following vote: IWA-CIO 65, no union 14; IWA Rep. Martin Wolon and CIO Field Rep. John Glenn directed this drive.

Dir. Ewald Sandner reports a representation election victory for CIO among the workers of the Young Men's Hebrew Association, Newark, N. J., by the following vote: Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee, CIO 28, Independent 20, challenged 2, void 2. GCEOC Rep. George Knott conducted the drive.

NATL. DIR. JOHN RIFFE, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following CIO representation election victories: Out of 256 eligible votes, the workers at Stokely-Van Camp, Inc., Newport, Tenn., cast 143 votes for the CIO Packinghouse Workers, 76 no union, 21 challenged and 12 void. This campaign was conducted by Reps. Ed Lingo and Ramsay Wilson under the auspices of the CIO Organizing Committee.

At Armour & Co., Wilmington, N. C., the workers again chose the CIO Packinghouse Workers as their bargaining agent with the following vote: eligible 11, UPWA-CIO 10, one challenged. CIO Rep. Raymond Schnell directed this drive.

The CIO Retail Wholesale and Department Store Union reached a recognition agreement with the Marks-Fitzgerald Furniture Co., Birmingham, Ala.

Reuther Hits AMA 'Veto' Over New Health Dept.

PROVISIONS of the Administration plan creating a new Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare are "a shocking departure from good government," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther charged last week shortly before the Senate was expected to vote them into law.

In a telegram to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Reuther said that the proposal to raise the Federal Security Agency to Cabinet rank gave "long overdue status to the important governmental functions of health, education and welfare."

But, he added, some of the specific provisions of the plan and the circumstances surrounding their adoption are "alarming."

REUTHER singled out for criticism the proposal to set up a special assistant for health and medical affairs. He said that officers of the American Medical Association "unashamedly indicated" that they "control" the appointment to this key job.

Noting that FSA Administrator Oveta Culp Hobby told Congress that "no definite chart" of the assistant's duties had been prepared, Reuther pointed out that, under questioning, Dr. Elmer L. Henderson, past AMA president, produced a job description given him by the White House.

"This 'Duties Sheet' makes clear," Reuther said, "that the assistant secretary is to have control over all health programs and activities of the new department."

THE CIO PRESIDENT called the AMA "a private agency with a selfish interest," seeking to control a field "where the interests of all the people are paramount."

The Administration plan, he charged, gives "veto power" over all of the department's health activities to "an organization that in the past 20 years has tried to throttle virtually every constructive and progressive legislative move to improve and maintain the health of the American people."

The Secretary of Agriculture would be given new powers and three new administrative jobs under Agriculture Dept. reorganization plan which Pres. Eisenhower sent to Congress last week.

Eisenhower said Secy. of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson would use his new authority to place administration of farm programs closer to the state and local level.

Benson last week said he's trying to root out of the department all employes out of sympathy with his program but that Civil Service job protection rules have given him "some trouble."

Carey's Talk In Pamphlet

CIO now offers in pamphlet form the recent address of CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey condemning most congressional anti-Communist investigators as "anti-liberal, anti-labor and pro-reaction."

Its title is "Time To Get Angry: A Counter-Offensive to the Attack on American Education" and it contains the text of Carey's address at Howard Univ.

Copies of the address, published as Pamphlet No. 220, may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices are 5c a copy, 25 for $1, 50 for $2, 100 for $3.50 and 500 for $15.

Kyne Is Appointed

Martin C. Kyne, executive secretary of the CIO Retail-Wholesale Union, has been appointed to the New York State Retail Minimum Wage Board.

'End Sweat Shops On Farms,' CIO Urges Senate Hearing

CIO LAST week called upon Congress to put an end to the "agricultural sweatshops and slums" that are being fostered by the present law on use of foreign migrant workers in U. S. agriculture.

Testifying before the Senate Agriculture Committee, Nicholas C. Dragon, CIO regional director for Arizona and New Mexico, charged that the law gives foreign workers many protections now denied domestic farm hands.

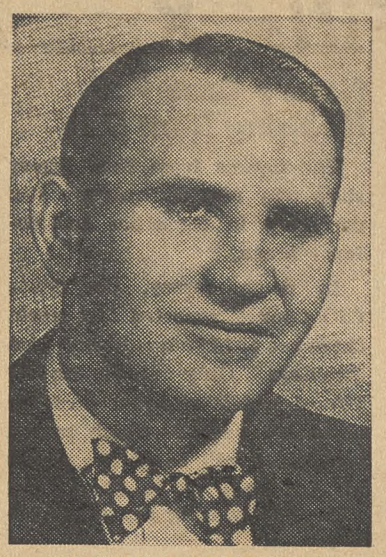
"This is highly unfair discrimination—against our own citizens," he pointed out.

Dragon opposed pending legislation which would merely extend the present law through 1956. Instead, he said, Congress should first make "substantial change" to provide essential improvements and, secondly, extend the revised law not later than June 30, 1955, "so that it can be reviewed in the light of experience."

AS EXAMPLES of how the present law works against the interests of U. S. farm workers, Dragon pointed out:

1. It provides a means for enabling farmers to obtain foreign workers but it does nothing to aid the recruitment of U. S. citizens.

2. Foreign workers are guaranteed employment three-fourths of the working days of their contract, but no guarantee is given U. S. workers, who are subject to dismissal at any time.



NICHOLAS DRAGON

3. In certain areas farmers are deliberately driving away from the farm all U. S. workers and using only foreign hands, thus escaping the need to provide decent working conditions.

4. Because of a "much too broad" definition of agricultural employment under the law, skilled American workers in packing and mechanical operations, as well as in field work, are being replaced by contract foreigners.

THE PRESENT Mexican farm labor law "has some definite inequities," Lloyd A. Mashburn, Under Secretary of Labor, told the Senate Agriculture Committee last week.

He urged that the law be continued for only one more year, instead of the three additional years called for in the pending bill. The present law expires next Dec. 31.

While most of Dragon's testimony dealt with the program under which Mexican farm laborers are brought in to the Southwest and California, he also pointed out that members of the CIO Citrus and Allied Workers Union in Florida have suffered unemployment and substandard conditions because large numbers of British West Indians have been imported "without proper safeguards."

Dragon pointed out that the Mexican government has insisted that certain minimum terms be granted to Mexicans and U. S. workers usually are paid the rate paid foreign contract labor.

THE FOREIGN worker actually gets 60c an hour plus such fringe benefits as subsistence, housing cooking and heating fuel, utilities, accident insurance, guaranteed minimum income, and transportation from the migration center where he is selected in Mexico to his place of employment, and return," Dragon said.

Dragon urged that a minimum wage of "at least 75c an hour" be established for "all agricultural workers, whether foreign or domestic."

"We believe the farmers of America can produce and prosper without agricultural sweatshops and slums," Dragon said.

Strike Vote Set In N. Y. Macy's Stores

THE MEMBERSHIP of Local 1-S, CIO Department Store Workers, will vote Apr. 8 on authorizing a strike at five Macy's stores in the New York City area. The local represents 8000 Macy's employes.

The strike vote meeting follows the action of the local's executive board which last week voted unanimously to ask the membership to empower it to call a walkout. Decision to call the strike vote was taken after Macy's had twice rejected the union's demands, calling them "outrageous."

Local 1-2 is seeking a "substantial" wage increase, a cut in hours from 40 to 35 with no loss in pay, a pension plan, an improved health and sick leave plan, adjustment of wage inequities, and contract changes to promote better working conditions.

SAM KOVENETSKY, the local's president, denounced the company's refusal to "bargain in good faith.

"While our members have earned a pay raise they have been forced to suffer a loss of purchasing power as a result of higher prices," he said. "The killing of rent control (by the New York Legislature) and the very real threat of higher (transit) fares further sharpens this problem."

GET the FACTS ...on Taft-Hartley

FACTS are ammunition in the fight to win fundamental improvements to the Taft-Hartley Act in the present session of Congress.

And CIO has them . . . the first of a series of pamphlets which will be issued during the coming weeks. They are:

1. "Sugar-Coating Won't Do," text of the CIO Executive Board's recent statement outlining the whys and wherefores of seven major T-H improvements needed to bring justice and fairness to labor-management legislation.

2. "Don't Pulverize Labor," a reprint of the recent House testimony of Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) exposing the NAM's "labor monopoly" war cries.

Send your orders now, for distribution to local union members and officers, CIO council delegates and the community.

The FDR Jr. reprint is available without charge. Prices for "Sugar-Coating Won't Do" are 5c a copy, 50 copies for $1.50, 100 for $2.50, 500 for $10 and 1000 copies for $18.

Ike, GOP Chiefs Postpone D-Day For Rent Curbs

EFFECTIVE rent controls—except in a handful of "critical defense areas"—will die Oct. 1, Pres. Eisenhower and top GOP Congressional leaders decided last week.

The federal rent law is due to expire May 1. After a conference with the President, however, Speaker Martin said that Republican leaders agreed with Eisenhower's suggestion that they seek a five-month extension to give states and cities time to set up their own rent controls if they wish.

EVEN this slight extension ran into immediate opposition from Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.) of the House Banking Committee. Wolcott, whose committee would draft the new law, said he has "reservations" about extending controls for communities which are not critical defense areas.

Although he might later decide to favor such an extension, Wolcott said he thinks that the states already have had ample opportunity to set up their own rent controls if they want them.

Of about 1200 communities now under rent control, only about 100 qualify as "critical defense areas." Nearly all big cities are excluded from the latter category, due to a rigid definition written into the rent law.

CIO and other consumer groups have called for a two-year extension of rent controls, plus a rewriting of the definition of critical areas, but landlord and real estate interests are demanding an end to all controls.

CIO's fight to keep rent controls and to extend them to such a key atomic energy center as Oak Ridge, Tenn., has been supported by the Oak Ridge town council and by that area's Republican congressman.

Testifying recently before the Senate Banking Committee, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey pointed to Oak Ridge as an example of many prime defense areas with critical housing shortages not eligible for rent control under the existing law's definition of a "critical defense housing area."

"EVEN THOUGH there has been a nearly continuous shortage of housing in the Oak Ridge atomic energy area ever since the Manhattan project started," Rep. Baker (R. Tenn.) told the House, "the Oak Ridge area cannot qualify as a 'critical' defense housing area under the rent law as it is now written."

Baker said this was due to the requirement for "substantial immigration" before an area can be designated critical. He pointed out that all other atomic energy centers qualify.

Oak Ridge was denied this protection, he said, because "it was in many ways the most important to the whole atomic energy program and was operating full blast even before the outbreak of hostilities in Korea."

Here's Case For Keeping Rent Lids

The figures from New Jersey show why rent controls are still necessary in big cities and defense areas.

In north Jersey, the State CIO Council reported last week, there are 507,100 tenant-occupied dwellings. Only six-tenths of 1% of non-dilapidated dwelling units are vacant—which means consumers will be at the mercy of landlords if ceilings end while the housing shortage continues.

According to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, rents in decontrolled cities climbed from 17% to 35% in the past two years, while the boost for low-rent apartments ranged from 29% to over 50%.

Now We've Heard Everything—Capehart's Called Communist

BECAUSE HE'S sponsoring two bills for stand-by economic controls, Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) of the Senate Banking Committee has become the target of attacks by special interest lobbies.

Last week, Capehart (at left), who heretofore had suffered their barbs in silence, objected when a witness implied that he is "a left-winger, Communist and Socialist."

He told Paul van Middlesworth, who was testifying against rent controls, that he had a "right" to state his views, but that he was "misrepresenting the facts."

"I am one man who has defended you fellows—taken the heat for you—and yet you come in here and attack me personally," Capehart said. (In past sessions, Capehart has backed amendments to weaken price controls.)

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) commented that he'd never heard Capehart "accused of being a leftist before" and called him "a true advocate of the free enterprise system." "I'm smiling through," Capehart assured him.

Wiretapping Okeh Sought In Congress

FEDERAL wiretapping and use of wiretap evidence in federal courts would be authorized under a bill introduced by Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.).

Similar measures sponsored by Reps. Keating (R. N.Y.) and Walter (D. Pa.) are pending in the House.

Meanwhile, the Justice Dept. revealed plans to submit to Congress a proposal to legalize the use of wiretapping in spy trials.

Atty.-Gen. Herbert Brownell reportedly has already given his approval to the proposal, which would enable the government to use wiretap evidence not only in future espionage cases, but also in pending cases where defendants have been granted a new trial because the government illegally used wiretapping.

ONE EXAMPLE of the latter is the case of Judy Coplon. The government admitted it tapped conversations between her and her attorney, and has delayed a new trial for over a year because of the ban on wiretap evidence.

Under the Federal Communications Act of 1934, it is illegal to "intercept and divulge" any wire communication, and previous Congresses have refused to invade telephone and other communications privacy. The latter is protected by the Constitutional ban against search and seizure without due legal process.

ACWA Wins 12.5c Raise For 150,000

CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers have won a 12.5c an hour increase for 150,000 members in the men's and boy's clothing industry, as a result of negotiations with the Clothing Manufacturers Association.

The effective date of the increase is May 25.

The wage settlement, reached amicably after several weeks of negotiations, followed an understanding reached in December 1952 between the union and the association providing for a number of "Fringe" benefits amounting to 3.5c per hour.

THESE INCLUDED an additional 1% employer contribution to the industry-wide social welfare fund to provide hospitalization for wives of union members and their dependent children.

Paid vacation and holiday provisions, under the contract, were also strengthened in the understanding arrived at in the December 1952 agreement.

The increase was based on the rise in living costs.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and industry leaders, in announcing the raise, said:

"The amicable relations which have marked the clothing industry for more than a quarter of a century, prevailed during the wage discussions of the past few weeks.

"BOTH PARTIES sought to understand each other's problems and a wage increase was arrived at which will meet the pressing needs of the men and women employed in our industry.

"With the improvement in social benefits recently put into force, we also feel that the clothing industry has gone another step forward in providing those services to its employes that go beyond the pay envelope.

"The health and welfare of the many thousands employed in the industry, and of their families, have been a joint labor-management concern for more than a decade."

GOP Milks Wage Earners As N. Y. Legislature Ends

By BERNARD RASKIN

THE REPUBLICAN majority of the New York State Legislature rounded out its program for milking wage earners as the 1953 session came to a hectic close last week.

The final squeeze came in the form of a payroll tax and transit fare rise to be imposed on New York City. A state-wide rent increase had been approved earlier.

There was some grim satisfaction for labor, however, in the defeat, for the second successive year, of efforts to outlaw union political action.

THESE ITEMS weighed heaviest in the Republican record which the State CIO summed up as "discriminatory and oppressive":

- Provided rent increases of at least 15% above original freeze levels on all controlled housing plus higher "fair return" guarantees for landlords and local option on complete decontrol.
- Posed a payroll tax for New York City of .05%, half to be deducted from workers' pay envelopes.
- Ordered a transit authority for the city with unlimited power to increase bus and subway fares.
- Approved public exposure of families receiving relief and even of those applying for it.

The attempt to ban labor political action was abandoned when last-minute Republican caucuses revealed several members prepared to break ranks if the issue came to a vote.

State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander and Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno termed the Legislature's rent action "a sell-out to real estate interests for their contributions to the Republican Party in the last campaign."

THEY ANNOUNCED that if the New York City payroll tax is put into effect it will be fought in the courts. They called it "class legislation of the most vicious sort."

A payroll tax combined with a 'higher fare authority," the CIO leaders said, would in time make of New York City "a ghost town."

GI Housing Plan Backed

REP. MAGNUSON (D. Wash.), last week voiced strong support for pending legislation to expand and extend the government's program of direct home loans to veterans under the GI Bill of Rights.

Pointing to numerous instances where veterans have been unable to obtain loans from private lending institutions, Magnuson urged the House Veterans' Affairs Committee to approve HR 3052, introduced by Rep. Rains (D. Ala.).

Rains' proposal, which would make available an additional $650 million for GI loans when they cannot get them at the 4% interest rate from private sources, is being bitterly fought by the real estate and lenders' lobbies. They are trying to jack interest rates on home mortgages to a 6% minimum.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

Developments last week:

Senate GOP leaders battled McCarthyites on the Bohlen appointment.

House and Senate committees approved oil give-away bill.

House Labor Committee heard CIO Communications Workers, CIO Rubber Workers representatives in support of substantial Taft-Hartley Act Amendments.

Pres. Eisenhower, GOP leaders agreed on five month extension of rent controls.

What to do:

Wire your congressman urging opposition to the House Committee-approved oil giveaway bill.

Write your congressman and House Labor Committee members, supporting CIO recommendations on Taft-Hartley.

Address lawmakers at House or Senate Office Buildings, Washington 25, D. C.

Price Index Falls Slightly

ANOTHER slight drop was reported last week in the new consumer price index by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The index figure for mid-February was 113.4%, a total drop of four-tenths of 1% in a month. The February level, however, was nine-tenths of 1% higher than a year ago and 11.4% above pre-Korean prices.

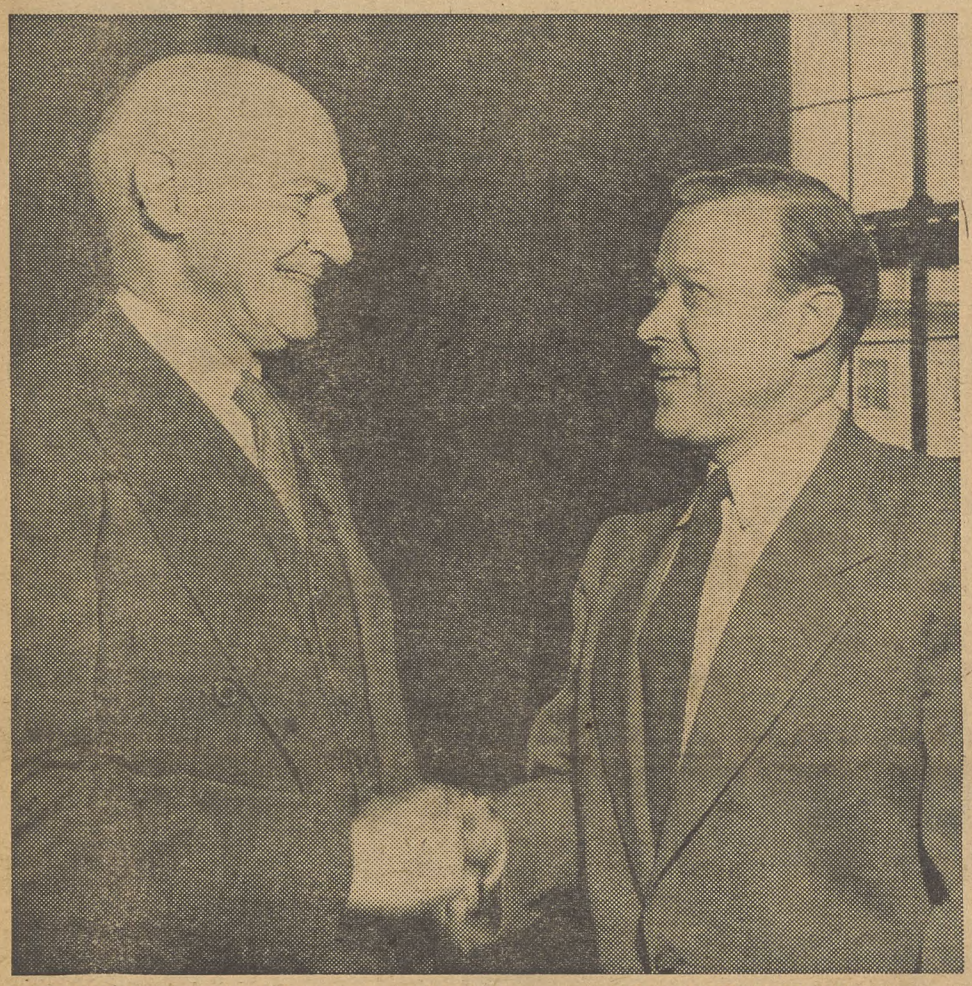
CIO Chiefs Condemn T-H



SIX CIO leaders testified last week at House and Senate Taft-Hartley hearings. Pres. Walter Reuther greets Sen. Smith, Labor Committee chairman.

"DRASTIC" amendments are necessary to bring about "justice and fairness," Reuther says. CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur Goldberg also testified.

DON'T BLOCK industry-wide bargaining, said Clothing Workers Vice Pres. Gladys Dickason and Gen. Counsel William Isaacson. (See pages 2-3.)

Congress Leaves Mountain Of Unfinished Work

By MILTON PLUMB

AS MEMBERS of the GOP-run 83rd Congress take off for an Easter recess this week, they're leaving behind a mountain of unfinished work.

With adjournment scheduled for July 3, and more than half the session over, few important measures have been acted upon.

Only one item in the sparse 11-point legislative program adopted by Pres. Eisenhower and congressional leaders has become law. That's the measure extending Eisenhower's powers to reorganize the government. And it was voted—after some squabbling among Republicans—even before the President's program of "must" legislation was announced.

Steady disagreement among GOP leaders has made it increasingly clear that the "honeymoon" between the White House and an all-powerful GOP leadership in Congress never reached Niagara Falls. Eisenhower has run into opposition from powerful members of his own party on nearly all of his major proposals.

Here's the current picture on key issues before Congress:

1. Taft-Hartley

Both House and Senate Labor Committees are engaged in lengthy hearings, but no draft of new legislation is even in sight from the Administration to carry out Eisenhower's promise of "justice and fairness" in labor-management legislation. Industry walked out on the Administration's joint labor-industry-public advisory committee.

2. Budget And Taxes

Not one of the key appropriation bills has been reported to the House. Administration officials have made heavy slashes in the budget estimates of former Pres. Truman but not enough to balance the budget. The President and Chairman Reed of the House Ways & Means Committee are deadlocked over Reed's committee-approved tax cut bill. And Reed charges the GOP—by failing to deliver on its whopping tax cut campaign promises—with "getting office under false pretenses."

3. Foreign Policy

GOP Majority Leader Taft split with the President over the Administration's anti-enslavement resolution, and now it is pigeonholed. A quarter of the Republican senators joined Joe McCarthy in opposing Eisenhower's nomination of Charles Bohlen, and now McCarthy has tried to take over from the State Dept. negotiations with foreign interests. Ahead are major contests over additional funds for the Mutual Security Program of economic and military aid to our allies and extension of the reciprocal trade program.

4. Tidelands

Even Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell has admitted there are constitutional questions connected with the coastal oil lands, but the House approved a sweeping give-away bill. Liberals in the Senate say they will "consume a great deal of time" in an effort to protect the nation's oil reserves.

5. Social Security

Eisenhower's campaign pledge to improve social security has run into delaying tactics in the House. A special subcommittee has been set up to "investigate" the whole social security field and probably won't report this session.

6. Economic Controls

The President has requested a five-month extension of federal rent ceilings, but even this inadequate proposal is opposed by Chairman Wolcott of the House Banking Committee. The Administration hasn't made up its mind on standby economic controls in case of a new emergency, as Sen. Capehart has proposed.

7. Civil Rights

A bill giving statehood to Hawaii, but denying it to Alaska, passed the House but the threat of a Dixiecrat filibuster makes its fate uncertain in the Senate. Reform of Rule 22 to curb filibusters was knifed as the session began, and GOP Senate leaders' promises to take steps to change the filibuster rule appear to have been forgotten.

About the only thing the 83rd Congress has done so far is to investigate.

House Labor Group Hears 3 CIO Unions

THE CIO'S DOCUMENTED case against the Taft-Hartley Act continued to be unfolded before the House Labor Committee last week as the CIO Textile, Clothing and Transport Workers testified.

Lead-off witnesss was William Pollock, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers, who called that union "the No. 1 victim of Taft-Hartley."

Tabulating results of representation elections before and after Taft-Hartley, Pollock demonstrated the way the act barred union organization. More important, he said, were examples where the union won the election but where "successful and continuing collective bargaining relationships" with employers had been killed by anti-union campaigns conducted under T-H rules.

INTRODUCING a 120-page volume of Taft-Hartley case histories, Pollock commented, "some of them may seem unbelievable, but all of them are true."

Since Taft-Hartley, he said, the union had "actually established collective bargaining in the grand total of 24 mills with 7364 workers, 49% of the total involved in the elections we won in this period. More than half the time the workers couldn't get a union even after they voted for one."

The union, he said, had "tried to be factual, moderate and fair" in its comments on Taft-Hartley, adding:

"WE DON'T SAY that the Taft-Hartley Act has been knocking our heads off. We're willing to give full credit to the southern textile manufacturers and the courts, the police, the Chambers of Commerce, the citizens' committees, and, yes, even the clergymen who are under their control. But we do say that Taft-Hartley has pinned our arms to our sides, while providing our enemies with an arsenal of weapons to use against us.

"What we hope for, what we earnestly believe our country must have, is a sound, sensible labor policy, expressed in fair and workable legislation. We do not say the Wagner Act is heaven and the Taft-Hartley Act is hell. We want something that works."

Jacob S. Potofsky, ACWA president, urged no interference with industry-wide collective bargaining and the freedom to bargain for any form of union security.

In a statement read by Gladys Dickason, ACWA vice president, Potofsky cited the peaceful labor-management relations in the men's clothing industry during the last quarter century in support of his position.

The closed shop, he said, creates "responsible trade unionism" and, since industry-wide collective bargaining was achieved in the clothing industry in 1938, the number of strikes and lockouts, and the number of workers involved, has dropped to the vanishing point.

Potofsky did not argue for universal application of the closed shop and industry-wide bargaining. He insisted, however, that these questions be left to the free, untrammeled negotiations of labor and management.

THE ACWA president argued that collective bargaining, free of government interference, works best for industry, workers and the public. He pointed out that clothing employers have supported union opposition to many T-H sections, because they knew these sections created, rather than prevented, trouble.

The Transport Workers, in testimony presented by Gen. Counsel John F. O'Donnell, charged Taft-Hartley was "founded on premises which are morally, economically, logically and practically unsound."

O'Donnell called for "razing this creaking, faulty pile" which Congress has built and replacing it with "an enduring structure on a worthy foundation of sympathy, understanding, knowledge and foresight."

'Labor Relations, Taft-Hartley Style' — A Case History In Textile Industry

Here is the way the Taft-Hartley Act can wreck a labor union. It is a hypothetical case, constructed for the House Labor Committee by Exec. Vice Pres. William Pollock of the CIO Textile Workers. He called it a "hypothetical, but entirely accurate" portrayal of Taft-Hartley in operation:

LET US suppose that the workers in the Dixie Cotton Mill voted, on Jan. 2, 1951, to be represented by the Textile Workers Union of America, CIO —the margin being about 2 to 1.

By Jan. 15 the official notice of certification arrived, and the union proceeded at once to notify the employer of its desire to meet in order to negotiate a contract. In the intervening period a series of meetings among the workers had determined what they wanted in their agreement.

On Jan. 25 a letter was received from the employer requesting the union to submit its proposals in writing. This was done on Jan. 26, and the request for an early meeting was repeated.

A meeting was held Feb. 13, the first date acceptable to the employer. The employer's lawyer submitted a series of counter-proposals, which he refused to discuss until they had been "studied" by the union.

After much correspondence, the union was able to get another meeting on Mar. 29. This meeting looked promising. Agreement was reached on four clauses; seven others were referred to the respective parties for study.

Somehow the union could never get the employer or his lawyer to meet again until May 8. Even then, this was a very short meeting; the lawyer had another engagement. The company was much tougher, and refused (claiming lack of time) to discuss grievances arising since the election.

A week later six workers (all active union leaders) were fired. The union applied at once for a session to discuss this matter.

THE COMPANY agreed to a meeting on June 6. But on June 4, the company called off the meeting because of an illness in the family of a company executive.

A meeting was finally held June 26. The company refused to yield on the dismissals, even though several of the workers had been featured in a company promotion program two months earlier because of their outstanding production records.

The next day the union filed NLRB charges of discriminatory dismissals and refusal to bargain in good faith.

For several days in September an NLRB examiner held hearings on the union charges.

On Feb. 13, 1952 the NLRB examiner ruled that the company was guilty and the case then went to the Board itself for consideration after the usual delays for filing exceptions and briefs.

AFTER MANY letters from the union the company agreed to a meeting on Apr. 12; but at that time the company said it did not believe the union represented a majority, and refused to meet further pending the outcome of a decertification petition being circulated in the mill.

Inasmuch as pro-union workers had been under pressure for over a year, and six fired with no apparent recourse; and inasmuch as the union had been unable to make a single forward step, the workers voted to decertify the union.

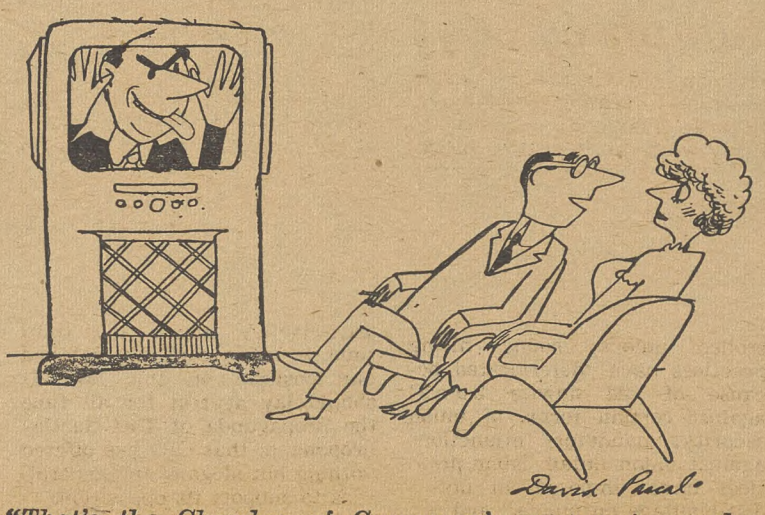
There, gentlemen, you have labor relations, Taft-Hartley style.

CCG Would Let Us Play Pinochle

Willford I. King, identified as an "economist" employed by the Committee for Constitutional Government, testified before the House Labor Committee holding hearings on Taft-Hartley revisions.

Asked by Rep. Weir (D. Minn.) if he believed workers should have the right to organize, King replied:

"I do not. If they want to have a social union it is fine, but not unions to interfere with wages and hours. I think labor ought to be bought and sold on the market place just like any other commodity in business."



"That's the Chamber of Commerce's answer to sorely-needed Taft-Hartley amendments."

Reuther Asks 'Drastic' Taft-Hartley Changes

By AL ZACK

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week urged the Republican majority in Congress "to redeem Pres. Eisenhower's promise" to bring "justice and fairness" to the Taft-Hartley Act.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee in favor of "drastic" amendments to the law, Reuther recalled the campaign promises and platform pledges of both parties.

Workers, he said, are "not political sophisticates, who look on campaign promises or political platforms as empty, lifeless words, designed only to win elections. They do not share the cynicism of some who believe political platforms are to run on, not stand on.

Redeem Promises

"They know only that both parties are pledged, either through repeal or amendment, to remove Taft-Hartley's unfair, one-sided, strife-provoking provisions."

"As reasonable people," Reuther continued, workers expect these promises to be redeemed by Congress.

In his second trip to Capitol Hill in a month to testify on the nation's basic labor relations law, Reuther again detailed CIO's opposition to the law and outlined the seven "fundamental" changes CIO believes are necessary. He also discussed major amendments offered by Republican Sens. Taft (O.) and Ives (N.Y.) and Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

No Window-Dressing

Reuther reiterated CIO's view that "the best and most practical approach" would be repeal of Taft-Hartley and passage of a new law.

"However, we can read the political handwriting on the wall," he commented "and since we are realistic, we are prepared to support any sincere attempt" to bring the law "into the boundaries set by Pres. Eisenhower—that there must be justice and fairness in the law."

That can not be achieved, he said, unless Congress does more "than adopt mere window-dressing amendments." It must not, Reuther warned, "treat only the symptoms and ignore the disease itself."

The CIO president described CIO's view of "sound labor relations law." It must be based, he insisted, "on the proposition that free collective bargaining and the right of workers freely to join labor unions of their choice is sound public policy."

These are not rights, Reuther continued, "which can be accorded lip service and then forgotten." They must be "fully and carefully protected."

In outlining CIO's "bill of complaint" which he said was based on "practical, harsh and painful experience" under Taft-Hartley, Reuther detailed the seven basic changes which must be made if, in CIO's opinion, the law is to match the President's promises.

Amounts To Repeal

He conceded that these amendments would be criticized on the grounds that they amount to virtual repeal of the present act.

"Such a charge does not alarm us," he said. "The fact is that Taft-Hartley cannot be made into a law that deals justly and fairly toward all unless the amendments are drastic and the changes substantial."

Discussing Taft-Hartley injunctions, which CIO wants eliminated, Reuther charged the so-called national emergency injunction has "clearly tended to delay the settlement of legitimate controversies."

He reiterated CIO's proposal that Congress write no specific provision for dealing with national emergencies, but place full responsibility on the shoulders of labor and management to settle the dispute at the bargaining table. He argued that Taft-Hartley had eliminated genuine bargaining by charting an injunction path in such disputes, which put the government on the side of the employer.

Real Bargaining

"If neither party to the dispute knows that he can expect strong governmental intervention on his side, then collective bargaining does take place," Reuther said.

In the event that bargaining did fail, he continued, the President could refer the dispute to Congress, "always available and possessed of plenary authority to create a tailor-made remedy which will resolve a particular dispute with equity and on its merits."

Reuther indicated "general agreement with the philosophy evidently underlying" the proposals of Sen. Ives, who would drop the 80-day injunction but bring Congress into the picture only after the collapse of settlement efforts resulting from recommendations of a fact-finding board named by the President.

Reuther called the Ives proposal "a long step in the right direction" but argued against creation of fact-finding boards, saying that uncertainty over what form governmental intervention might take would create a greater feeling of urgency on both parties at the bargaining table.

Oaths Ridiculed

Ives observed he "wouldn't dare let a thing like that go to Congress without preliminary steps," a position which was supported by Sens. Griswold (R. Neb.) and Douglas (D. Ill.). Griswold felt Congress would not "in the heat of emotion" be fair to the public and Douglas doubted "whether Congress can move swiftly enough, can move wisely enough," adding it "sometimes moves under the impact of emotion."

Reuther ridiculed Sen. Taft's proposal that the present non-Communist affidavits be extended to employers. "We do not believe," he said, "that the ranks of corporate executives are heavily infilitrated with Communists, or that these hypothetical Communist executives would be any more hesitant" about making a false oath than any other Communists.

The affidavit had "no proper place" in labor relations, Reuther insisted. Many committee members agreed with Reuther that today the affidavits "provided Communists, seeking to infilitrate the labor movement, with a paper disguise which has made the task of ridding unions of their influence even more difficult."

CIO Hits Goldwater Bill To Give States More Labor Powers

THE CIO last week roundly condemned the latest anti-union measure to pop up in the Senate—a proposal to make state labor laws superior to the federal act if they were more anti-union than Taft-Hartley.

CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, in testimony before the Senate Labor Committee, branded the measure introduced by freshman Sen. Goldwater (R. Ariz.) as "altogether undesirable."

Goldberg's condemnation of the Goldwater bill came after he had presented a 65-page, section-by-section summation of CIO's opposition to Taft-Hartley. In a supplementary statement, which discussed pending amendments to the act, Goldberg said the Arizona Senator's bill would.

- "Nullify a whole line of Supreme Court decisions both under the Wagner Act and the Taft-Hartley Act."
- Forbid "states from giving greater protection to labor than is provided for in the Taft-Hartley Act but giving them carte blanche to impose more restrictive provisions than are contained in the act."
- Run counter to the entire federal "concept that the laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land."

Goldwater sought to extend the present Taft-Hartley provision that state laws governing union security shall prevail, if they are tougher than Taft-Hartley, but union security laws in pro-labor states could not supersede the federal act. His proposal would allow state anti-strike and anti-picket bills to overrule the federal law.

IN PRESENTING his chapter-and-verse objection to Taft-Hartley, Goldberg said:

"This point-by-point documentation of the CIO's views on Taft-Hartley marks the third time we have carefully detailed our position on this law. It should lay at rest for all time the propaganda of Taft-Hartley proponents that CIO has offered nothing but slogans and generalities to support its opposition.

"CIO's objections to Taft-Hartley's one-sided, unfair and illogical approach to labor relations law are not theoretical. They are the result of six years of harsh and painful experience."

Following his 35-point documentation of CIO objections to the present act, Goldberg discussed the pending amendments, including the Goldwater bill. He told the Senate committee the CIO supported the proposal of Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) for changing board procedures and for establishing a Labor Court of Appeals for the sole purpose of review and enforcement of NLRB decisions.

"We are vigorously opposed," Goldberg added, "to the establishment of a labor court with general jurisdiction over all labor cases because of our belief that this would lead toward the direction of compulsory arbitration of labor disputes."

Compulsory arbitration, he said, "is opposed by CIO in any form or under any circumstances.

"I do not profess the belief that we have the final solution to all of the many complicated problems which I have discussed. Perhaps the suggestions I have made can be improved upon in the crucible of these hearings."

REITERATING CIO's belief that Taft-Hartley "does not fairly and equitably deal" with the problems of labor-management relations, Goldberg concluded:

"The CIO statements to this committee are designed to be of constructive help in the committee's task of formulating a fair and workable law. We pledge our continued assistance to the committee in this endeavor."

T-H Harmful To Industrial Relations, Sen. Humphrey Says

THE TAFT-HARTLEY Act has harmed labor-management relations far more than it has helped them, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) told the Senate Labor Committee last week.

Appearing as a witness before the committee, Humphrey summarized highlights of previous findings resulting from extensive hearings and investigations conducted by the Senate Subcommittee on Labor and Labor-Management Relations in the 81st and 82d Congresses. Humphrey had been subcommittee chairman during 1951 and 1952.

The act, the Minnesota Democrat charged, "has made no contribution to dealing constructively with emergency disputes. In many ways the injunction procedure has weakened our capacity to deal with emergency disputes." He added:

The right of workers to strike has been "undermined"; the non-Communist affidavit has "virtually no effect" on Red-controlled unions; sound hiring practices have "deteriorated because of the unwise bans" against certain forms of union security; mandatory injunctions against union unfair labor practices have "imposed an unfair disadvantage on unions" and the act has created "a climate hostile to the survival of unions."

HOW TIMES have CHANGED!

Harold Stassen says Joe McCarthy was "undermining" the Administration's foreign policy in his private diplomatic negotiations with the Greeks. Sec. of State John Foster Dulles disagrees, says Joe acted "in the national interest." Remember the good old days, when Candidate Eisenhower complained "we have today the picture of the right hand of government not knowing what the left hand does."

The Big Payoffs

The era of the "gigantic grab" is in full bloom now in Washington along with the cherry blossoms.

The "gigantic grab" is what CIO Pres. Walter Reuther called the coastal oil give-away and the raid on the nation's public lands and natural resources which is getting up steam.

It applies as well to a multitude of developments in the fields of education, health, welfare, social security, and consumer interests. Just figure what this adds up to:

• When the House whooped through the tidelands oil bill by a 285 to 108 vote, it scornfully turned down the "oil for education" amendments. That would have channeled some of the revenue from development of these fabulous oil reserves into building up the nation's schools. That's bad news for parents and their youngsters—and for the future of America.

• When the Eisenhower Administration selected a new housing chief, it picked Albert H. Cole, one of the bitterest foes of low-rent public housing ever to serve in Congress. That's bad news for tenants.

• With the private utilities warring on all forms of public power development, Sec. of Agriculture Benson forced the ouster of Claude Wickard as head of the Rural Electrification Administration, although his term had nearly three years to go. That's bad news for farmers.

• Now Sec. of Commerce Weeks wants to "re-examine" all Federal Trade Commission activities "in relation to the American business community and other agencies of the government." That's bad news for consumers.

• And when Pres. Eisenhower signed the bill enlarging the Federal Security Agency into a new Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, it contained a couple of gimmicks. One gives the American Medical Association "veto power" over all medical activities. The other gives the U. S. Chamber of Commerce representation—but denies it to labor—on a special advisory committee on social security. And the U. S. Chamber is out to tear social security to shreds.

The AMA Confesses

From the AMA itself has come confirmation that the "doctors' lobby" will have sweeping powers in the new Health Dept., just as CIO had charged.

Through a "special assistant" it will nominate, the AMA will be setting government policy not only on medicine but in related education and social security fields. In the latest AMA Journal, AMA Pres. Louis H. Bauer spelled it out:

"All medical activities within the new department, as well as all medical phases of any activities within the new department, as well as all medical phases of any activities within education or social security, must be cleared through this special assistant to the secretary. This will include appropriations and budgets as well as policies . . .

"Furthermore, this special assistant must be selected from among persons who are recognized leaders in the medical field with wide non-governmental experience. This gives medicine a status of dignity and a control over medical affairs, subject only to action of the secretary.

"This is a step forward and provides a status never before offered."

There you have it, in the AMA's own words.

The Record Is Clear

In Other Words—

Time To Retake Our Ideals

The U. S. needs more liberalism, not less, to cope with communism, says John Steinbeck. The following article by the famous novelist is digested from Brief magazine.

By JOHN STEINBECK

WE HAVE LOST a good many things to the Communists which we will very soon have to win back. For one thing, we have lost our nerve. We crouch in fear or run screaming from an enemy who has none of our strength.

In America we are terrified, 160 millions of us, of a group which at its maximum numbered less than 50,000. I know that certain politicians have made political fuel of this terror, but the point is that we must not let them.

When our people scream in fear of a party in whose ideas we do not believe, and whose efficiency has been proven full of holes, we are beating ourselves between the eyes with a hammer and giving the Communists the credit.

Terror and spies in the dark and "we are surrounded by enemies" may be a lot of fun, but I think right now we should deny ourselves this luxury. We are curbing our liberties out of a sense of danger, forgetting that we are strong not in spite of our liberties but because of them.

Weapon Of Free Men

Why are we frightened? Are we afraid our weapons will be stolen? Wars are not won by secret weapons but by the ability to produce and deliver great quantities of all kinds of weapons—not the least of which are free men.

We have lost a number of things in the cold war and some of them we have lost so gradually that we are not even aware of the conquest. The losses I deplore most are our dear words and the ideas we grew up with and live by. We have abandoned them without a struggle and it will take a long time to win them back.

The Communists have conquered some of our most holy words simply by using them and getting them dirty. Instead of taking them back and washing them off, we have haughtily walked away from such words, words like brotherhood, democracy, friendship.

The word people, one of our proudest words, has been stolen from us. The People's Republic of North Korea is no more a republic or a people's government than was the reign of Louis the Fourteenth, but we have timidly abandoned both words instead of fighting to get them back.

Most Americans are in favor of continuing improvements in our society, improving our production. This state of mind has been called liberal. Then along come the Communists and say they are for these same things, although in the Soviet fatherland the very conception of a liberal is nonexistent.

Then what do our liberals do? They hide their heads in the corner of the cake and rattle themselves silly, protesting that they are not liberals.

More Liberal Than Ever

It seems to me that we should be more liberal that we have ever been. Our improvement year by year have proved that it isn't a bad direction for our efforts. Using our words and our beliefs, we have built the strongest nation in the world and these words and their meanings have a large part to do with that strength.

This is getting to be a crazy world. The sweetest word humans have ever invented is peace. The concept of peace not only between governments but between men is the basis of good government, good religion and good society. And we have allowed the Communists to take our word, change its meaning and use it against us! It is just as though they picked up an unexploded grenade and threw it back at us.

They have made peace a disreputable word. They have said, there can be peace just as soon as we Americans are eliminated. They have plumped for liberty and made slave laborers of 15 millions of their own people. They have backed social reform and eliminated it where they have power. They back labor unions in other countries and eliminate them in Russia and the satellites.

Meanwhile, we frightened Americans, or at least many of us, have abandoned our causes and the names they go under. How in the world can we go on this way? It is time to retake our words and polish them up to their former brightness and live by them, instead of abandoning them and denying them and pretending we never heard of them. We must recapture our words.

If keeping our words and our ideals and our liberties ever becomes a crime in our country, I would rather be in jail.

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

IN HIS FIRST major speech, T. Coleman Andrews, the new Commissioner of Internal Revenue, told a Washington audience:

"We have normal taxes, surtaxes, excess profits taxes; but I have found very few people who do not think they are all surtaxes, which . . . means 'super taxes'."

The Burden Of High Excise Taxes

Although not singled out by Andrews, the most burdensome tax of them all is the excise tax.

When you go to a movie, use a telephone, or buy such items as gasoline, automobiles, beer, tobacco, sugar, sporting goods, electricity or electrical appliances, you pay an excise tax.

These taxes are so hidden that few people know how much they are paying. People who do not earn enough to pay income taxes pay as high as 5% of their income in federal excise taxes.

Since the early days of the Republic the excise tax has been regarded as a tax on the poor.

Excise Taxes Tripled

The first important excise tax under the U. S. Constitution was Alexander Hamilton's famous tax on whisky in 1791. It was so unpopular it led to the Whisky Rebellion in Pennsylvania.

Since 1939 excise taxes have been on the increase. In 1942 federal excises produced $3 billion in revenues. In 1952 this sum has tripled to $9 billion.

Today 33 states levy excise taxes on all consumer purchases—usually excepting food. These include the retail sales taxes. In 1952 total state revenues from excises reached $5.7 billion or over twice as much as 1942.

In the last year state tax receipts have risen $900 million. More than one-half, or $500 million, of this increase was raised from consumer taxes.

Federal excise receipts have risen $1.1 billion in the last year. Add this to the state consumer tax increase. We find that consumption taxes increased $1.6 billion during 1952.

This means that on the average a family of four paid close to $50 more last year in taxes on food, clothing, equipment and services.

This year it will probably be larger. Efforts are being made in many state legislatures to secure passage of new sales tax laws.

Taxes on purchases, whether imposed at the retail or manufacturing level, are the type that hit low and middle income groups the hardest.

A Tax On The Poor

The table below illustrates this. Unquestionably, if 1952 figures were available, it would show the lower economic groups being hit even harder.

Federal Excise Tax Payments as a Percent of Income

Income Class	1939	1948
Under $1000	2.9	5.1
$1000 to $2000	2.8	4.3
$2000 to $3000	2.7	4.0
$3000 to $5000	2.4	4.0-3.5
$5000 and over	1.9-0.8	3.4-2.3

Many excise taxes are imposed at the manufacturer's level. In 1951, Charles R. Sligh, chairman of the taxation committee of the National Association of Manufacturers, testified before a Senate committee in favor of a general manufacturer's excise tax.

The NAM spokesman told the Senators that not only is the tax paid by the consumer but that the consumer also pays a markup of "1 to 2%" to wholesalers and retailers on the tax.

This means higher prices and restricted consumption. The results: less production—steps toward unemployment and recession.

He Did Leave Brooklyn—

Celler Worked For The People's Good, Always Knew Their Will

THIRTY YEARS ago a young Brooklyn lawyer packed his bags and set off for Washington. He had just been elected to Congress.

That lawmaker, Rep. Emanuel Celler, has been there ever since. The people of his country—and the poor and oppressed everywhere—are indisputably much better off from his service in the nation's capital.

Yet, take his own word for it—he "never left Brooklyn."

What he means, of course, is that not only must a member of Congress remain close to his constituents, but constituents must keep close to their congressman if he is to be worth his Capitol Hill office space.

And in the latter regard Celler thinks he's been especially fortunate in his constituency. Brooklynites, he points out, are never reticent about telling their views about politics—or baseball.

JUDICIAL ADVICE—Cyril F. Brickfield, counsel of House Judiciary Committee (right), confers with Rep. Celler about a legal problem connected with his duties as ranking minority member. Celler is seeking a fairer immigration law.

Tenements Shadow

"The shadow of Brooklyn tenements falls upon the low houses of Washington," Celler wrote in his new book "You Never Leave Brooklyn," published on his 30th anniversary in Congress.

"What I said, what I did, how I voted, I realize now, as I look past the waves of the years, has been fashioned by Brooklyn."

But Celler would never have achieved his international stature if he had not also considered the nation's interests as well as those of New York's 11th Congressional District. Representative government requires respect for both.

"I am convinced now that the congressman represents, over and above his district, the national welfare," he says. "This is the summit to which he must climb. Else why a national legislature? To do otherwise, balkanizes the nation."

Celler says his many years in Congress have taught him that the constituency determines the strength or weakness of a democracy. He thinks most voters don't realize their own importance or responsibility for the success or failure of their representative.

Never In Silence

"I have been most particularly fortunate in the composition of my constituency," he affirms. "Brooklyn has never suffered in silence, be it in baseball or in politics. My constituents leave me in very little doubt about their sentiments."

Born in Brooklyn May 6, 1888, Celler was always proud to be a part of its teeming multitudes. After graduation from Columbia Univ. Law School, he was admitted to the bar in 1912 and came to know the problems of the people of his district first hand.

When he first ran for Congress in 1922, his district had never gone Democratic. He won by a margin of 3111 votes and proved himself so satisfactory to the people there that they've been Democratic ever since. In 1952 he was elected by a vote of 125,892 against his opponent's 36,805.

Fighting Liberal

A fighting liberal, Celler has always been in the forefront of legislative struggles to protect the interests of the common people. The issues that concerned him chiefly have been immigration, civil rights, civil liberties and monopoly.

As chairman of the House Judiciary Committee from 1949 until this year, Celler was able to push forward important measures in all of these areas.

He is still trying to do so as the ranking minority member.

Bitterly opposed to the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, he wants it replaced with fair immigration procedures. And he's seeking just as hard to end discrimination as an abridgement of political freedom as he's fighting all forms of monopoly as a curtailment of economic freedom.

"The most burning issue of our times is McCarthyism," he says. "I firmly believe that our greatest internal danger is that paralysis of fear gripping this country."

He's hitting back on every possible front—in articles, in speeches, in political activities.

Greatest Achievement

Perhaps his greatest achievement in Congress was his amendment to the Displaced Persons Act which permitted over 300,000 victims of tyranny to come to this country.

It is difficult to single out any particular aspect of his career for special praise, however. His record—right down the line—is perfect from labor's standards. He has had CIO's support in all campaigns since this organization was formed.

"I am pro-labor," he once told the House. "When you speak of labor, you are speaking of people. When I hear somebody speak against labor, I know he has never known or has forgotten the bitterness of the struggle to make ends meet."

When more congressmen "never leave Brooklyn"—no matter where they come from—this country will be much better off.

Reuther Meets The Press On TV

"WHAT WE NEED in this country is more good Republicans and fewer bad Democrats," Walter P. Reuther said last week.

The CIO and Auto Workers president was the featured guest on "Meet the Press," nationally televised program on the NBC network.

Reuther was questioned closely and sometimes critically on a wide range of current issues, ranging from the Taft-Hartley Act to pending CIO-AFL negotiations on labor unity and the UAW's bargaining program for a guaranteed annual wage.

The CIO president said the Republican 83rd Congress and Pres. Eisenhower have a "moral commitment" to amend Taft-Hartley in accordance with their campaign promises.

"Eisenhower's victory," Reuther said, "was not a victory for the Republican Party and for those people who believe in Taft-Hartley.

"We believe the act ought to be amended in accordance with Pres. Eisenhower's pledge that it should be workable, fair and just."

As an example of how T-H has prevented amicable bargaining and led to strikes, Reuther cited last year's protracted steel dispute, saying:

"At no time in those weeks and months did steel management bargain in good faith. They were waiting for Taft-Hartley to bail them out."

Questioned regarding CIO's attitude toward the GOP Administration, Reuther repeated past comments that "we will support Eisenhower when he is right and oppose him when he is wrong."

Reuther said that CIO was entering into negotiations with the AFL hopefully and in good faith, with a belief that a united American labor movement would be "good for the people."

He restated CIO's long-standing basic principles on unification of (1) preserving industrial union organizations, (2) settling jurisdictional disputes, (3) barring communists and racketeers, and (4) no discrimination.

Poison In The Schools—

Gerald Smith, Zoll Lead War On UNESCO

(Last of two articles)
By HOLLACE RANSDELL

YOUR KIDS may get a dose of mental poison in the schools, so it's a good idea to know something about the groups who want thought control along Joe Stalin or Adolf Hitler lines in this country.

Right now the leaders of the ultra right-wing groups are concentrating on UNESCO—the United Nations Education, Social and Cultural Organization.

All over the nation they are trying to bar UNESCO pamphlets and materials from school library shelves.

Since they usually conceal their goals behind a self-assumed disguise of patriotism, it's easy to be fooled by them—especially if you don't have the time to find out for yourself the truth about the UN.

IT'S WORTH noting — since these fake patriots go in so heavy for calling others disloyal —that some of the noisiest of them have headed or been associated with organizations on the Attorney General's list of subversive groups.

W. Henry MacFarland, Jr., who attacks the UN in a bulletin published by the American Flag Committee which he founded in 1950, formerly headed the Nationalist Action League. That outfit was on the Attorney General's list. He also has a long record of participation in other hate groups, anti-Negro and anti-Jewish in tone, among them the Philadelphia Nationalists, and the National Blue Star Mothers' which attacked the Crusade for Freedom and Pres. Eisenhower as well as the UN.

MacFarland hit the jackpot in getting attention for his anti-UNESCO attacks when the American Flag Committee's Newsletter No. 13 was published in full in the Congressional Record, Oct. 18, 1951. It was inserted by former Rep. Wood of Idaho under the title "The Greatest Subversive Plot in History—Report to the American People on UNESCO." This was widely circulated.

WOOD SAID later that the Daughters of the American Revolution and other patriotic organizations paid for printing thousands of copies of the statement. The congressman followed this up by introducing a bill calling for the withdrawal of the U. S. from the United Nations. (Wood, a co-author of Taft-Hartley, was defeated last year by Mrs. Gracie Pfost.)

Best known of all the foes of UN is Allan Zoll of the National Council for American Education. He is credited with the major role in provoking the rumpus that disrupted the school system in Pasadena, Calif., a year or more ago. Zoll called what the UN aspired to do "unutterably silly" and a "One World chimera."

ANOTHER well-known foe of the UN is Gerald L. K. Smith, a die-hard Jew-baiter of the fascist brand. His publication, the Cross and the Flag, has carried innumerable hate pieces against the United Nations. "Abolish the UN—Drive this Christless Monster from our Shores," read a banner in one issue.

In January 1952, Smith announced in the Cross and the Flag that he had been made chairman of the American National Committee for the Abolition of the United Nations.

John Bainbridge in an article in McCall's magazine, "Danger's Ahead in the Public Schools," describes other anti-UNESCO groups, some not so well known.

"FREE MINDS for a free world" is one goal of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization which was discussed by worker-students at CIO summer school in Boone, Ia., last year.

The Minute Women of the USA, founded by Suzanne Silvercruys Stevenson, a Connecticut sculptress and lecturer, has active groups of "Minute Women" in Connecticut, upper New York State, Texas, Ohio, California, Virginia, Georgia and other states. On a national basis, he writes, the Minute Women are violently opposed to UN.

In an address before the Minute Women of Connecticut, says Bainbridge, Joseph P. Kamp of the Constitutional Educational League endorsed Merwin K. Hart, Elizabeth Dilling and Gerald L. K. Smith, all like Kamp "notoriously anti-semitic." (It was Kamp of the CEL who a few years ago wrote the infamous pamphlet attacking the CIO: "Vote CIO and Get a Soviet America.")

Also described by Bainbridge are the somewhat mysterious activities of Florence Fowler Lyon of Los Angeles, the middy-bloused rabble-rouser who brandishes clippings as she speaks, mixing up quotes to suit herself. She claims credit personally for getting the UNESCO program banned in the Los Angeles schools.

The truth is she had plenty of help. From other sources, comes information about the flood of anti-UNESCO pamphlets issued by Pro-America Spiritual Mobilization sponsored by the Rev. James Fifield of Los Angeles, and fringe organizations.

OTHER AND less well known groups of a similar type mentioned by Bainbridge are Friends of the Public Schools, American Education Association, Church League of America, Employers Association of Chicago and National Association of Pro-America, among others.

These are a few of the groups attacking UNESCO that should be exposed as the real subversives working to weaken and perhaps to destroy the United Nations upon which the hope of peace in the world rests most heavily.

IT'S AN uphill job, to build the United Nations, but one that the CIO—together with other organizations which have the interests of the American people deeply at heart—can be proud to support.

For, as Carroll Binder, a member of the U. S. National Commission for UNESCO representing the American Society of Newspaper Editors says:

"It is much easier to gain attention for an alarmist or slanderous attack than for a reasoned presentation of some constructive effort."

McCarthy Subs For State Dept. In Deals With Greek Ship Owners

JOE McCARTHY horned in last week on the treaty-making, diplomatic powers of the State Dept., undaunted by his 74 to 13 defeat on the floor of the Senate.

A day after his defeat in a no-holds-barred campaign to block confirmation of Charles E. Bohlen as U. S. Ambassador to Russia, McCarthy reached again for the headlines.

The Wisconsin Republican announced that his Senate investigating group had reached agreement with Greek owners of 242 merchant ships to stop trade with North Korea, Red China and Russian Far Eastern ports. And he said he was going to negotiate a second agreement covering another 100 to 150 Greek-owned ships.

"I DON'T want any interference by anyone," McCarthy said when asked if he had worked these agreements out in collaboration with the State Dept.

McCarthy also said there was "no reason" to call the Greek ship owners—many of whom operate vessels under Panaman and other "runaway" flags, with miserable wages and conditions—before the Senate committee.

Next day Harold Stassen blew the roof off. The Mutual Security Administration chief—an ally of McCarthy's in 1948 and later—roared that the Senator was "undermining" the Eisenhower Administration's foreign policy.

The State Dept. revealed it had reached agreement with the Greek government, six days before McCarthy's announcement, curbing trade to Red ports.

"The Greek ship owners," Stassen pointed out, "were some of the past violators and profited from dealing with the Soviet Zone. If they are to be excused merely on the promise they won't do any more of it . . . I say you, in effect, undermine and are harmful in our efforts to close down East-West trade."

Then Stassen said to McCarthy: "I plead with you for cooperation between the two branches of the government."

"You needn't plead with me," McCarthy retorted.

AT MIDWEEK, after lunching with McCarthy, Sec. of State Dulles undercut Stassen's position. Dulles said McCarthy has acted "in the national interest."

Pres. Eisenhower, like Dulles, took it and liked it. He said he didn't think McCarthy had "undermined" the Adminstration.

McCarthy's defeat in the Bohlen case came after a final burst of senatorial oratory and a roll-call vote of 74 to 13 to uphold the nomination. Thirty-nine Democrats, 34 Republicans and one Independent voted to confirm Bohlen, while 11 Republicans and two Democrats opposed.

Voting against Bohlen were Republicans Bricker (O.), Bridges (N.H.), Dirksen (Ill.), Dworshak (Ida.), Goldwater (Ariz.), Hickenlooper (Ia.), Malone (Nev.), McCarthy (Wisc.), Mundt (S.D.), Schoeppel (Kans.), and Welker (Ida.) Democrats voting no were Johnson (Colo.) and McCarran (Nev.).

'A Campaign For High Stakes'

Sen. McCarthy "emerged with wings unclipped" from the Bohlen dispute, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch commented editorially. It said:

"If he mustered only one-eighth of the Senate, he ranged behind him nearly one-fourth of the Republican senators—and that is a sizable block to build on.

"We do not doubt that he regards it is a foundation, that he looks upon the Bohlen case as merely the opening skirmish of a campaign for high stakes."

Phelps Dodge, Quebec Cops Break Long Copper Strike

THE U. S.-OWNED Phelps Dodge Corp., which earned more than $35 million last year, has finally broken a strike of 550 Canadian members of the CIO Oil Workers at the Canadian Copper Refineries, Ltd., Montreal East.

The firm had the help of Quebec's antiquated anti-labor laws, the full support of Provincial Premier Maurice Duplessis' totalitarian government, the sturdy muscles of hundreds of provincial police armed with guns and clubs, and goons supplied by two detective agencies. In the United States it has used similarly underworld thugs, such as the notorious Anastasia brothers, to break strikes.

The Canadian Copper walkout lasted eight months and one week before the battered picket line was removed after one of the most heroic fights in the history of the North American labor movement. Union members still facing court charges will be protected with the help of a defense fund created by the Canadian Congress of Labor.

IN ADDITION, the possibility of legal action against the company, the province and the police, both public and private, is being studied with a view to collecting damages for the brutal beatings, torture and terrorization of the strikers.

Quebec is a paradise for anti-union employers. Shortly before the Oil Workers withdrew their picket line, a long strike by the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor at the Associated Textile Co., Louiseville, P. Q., ended in defeat, after a similar exhibition of official brutality. This is a subsidiary of the United Merchants & Manufacturing Co., owned in the U. S.

GOP Shakes Up Civil Service Rules In Search For Jobs

THE REPUBLICANS began to move in on civil service in earnest last week after a series of exploratory raids.

Pres. Eisenhower issued an executive order setting up a new civil service "Schedule C." It will remove from the protection of the merit system the jobs of many officials holding policy level posts.

The move had been planned for several weeks as part of the effort to pacify job-hungry Republicans. The White House originally said less than 1000 positions would be affected, but last week Presidential Press Sec. James C. Hagerty said the number would be more than the GOP estimated at the beginning.

Annual Wage Tops UAW's Bargaining Plans

By GERVASE N. LOVE

DELEGATES to the CIO Auto Workers 14th constitutional convention were back home last week plugging a five-point basic bargaining program the industry will be hearing about as present contracts expire.

The nucleus of the union's position in forthcoming negotiations was laid down at its Atlantic City, N. J., convention the previous week.

It consists of the guaranteed annual wage, a stand against signing long-term contracts unless employers indicate a willingness to maintain initial worker rights and equities throughout their terms, vigorous application of the union's traditional anti-speedup policy, a ban on outside contracting by employers without the union's consent, and a severance pay-pension program for aircraft plant workers.

Other bargaining aims will be added to the over-all program on the basis of local or company-wide situations.

Use 'All Resources'

The major goal is the guaranteed annual wage, so voted by the UAW-CIO convention's nearly 3000 delegates. The international executive board was instructed to "mobilize all the resources of our union" to win it in the next round of major negotiations.

The resolution also called on major employers to establish with the union a joint study commission to undertake exploratory work.

The UAW-CIO is not committed at this time to any particular program. The resolution, however, set forth the general objective in these words:

"Guaranteed annual wage payments should be made to workers for whom management fails to provide work in amounts sufficient to insure take-home pay adequate to maintain the living standards which the workers and his family enjoy while fully employed."

Head Off Crash

In a press conference held immediately after the convention's closing, UAW-CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther declared the union's strategy is predicated on heading off a recession or depression.

The plan would bolster purchasing power, he explained, because it would give auto workers with seniority either 52 weeks work or 52 weeks pay a year. Once it is achieved in the auto industry, he continued, it would act to stabilize employment in the steel, rubber, flat glass and other industries.

As another step in the same direction, Reuther urged the Eisenhower Administration to plan now for a broad public works program to plug the gap when defense spending tapers off. The needs of the American people are "enormous," he declared.

"The biggest question in my mind," he continued, "is whether the Republican Administration realizes it cannot rely on the automatic mechanisms of the market to avoid trouble.

"I hope I'm wrong, but I feel the Administration has indicated it is not aware of the danger and that it won't be able to meet the problem of transition. We have to be prepared in advance, so that as the economy begins to soften and then starts to snowball, we can check it without drastic action."

If we get into trouble, he added, "it will create a better case for the guaranteed annual wage."

Economists Named

Reuther named 10 prominent economists to serve as a Guaranteed Wage Public Advisory Committee. They are:

Vincent Wheeler Bladen, director of the Institute of Industrial Relations, Univ. of Toronto (Ont.); Eveline Mabel Burns, professor of social work, Columbia Univ., New York, and consultant on economic security; Edward L. Cushman, director, Institute of Industrial Relations, Wayne Univ., Detroit; William Haber, professor of economics, Univ. of Michigan, and chairman, Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security;

Also, Alvin Harvey Hansen, writer on economics, professor of economics, Harvard Univ.; Seymour Edwin Harris, professor of economics, Harvard; Richard A. Lester, professor of economics and chairman of Social and Economic Institutions, Princeton Univ.; Charles Andrew Myers, professor of industrial relations, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Edwin E. Witte, professor of economics and department chairman, Univ. of Wisconsin; and Arthur J. Altmeyer, retiring Social Security administrator.

The stand on long-term contracts reflects the union's differences with major employers over the dislocations caused by inflation and abandonment of the old cost of living index. It constituted neither a ban on such agreements, which a few delegates sought, nor a blanket endorsement, Reuther said.

Fight Speedups

The fight against speedups, carried on since the UAW-CIO was organized, provided that the international executive board continue to authorize strikes, where voted by the membership, when peaceful means of settling such disputes have failed.

The aircraft severance pay-pension program provides for cash severance pay of $150 a year up to 10 years service, with a deferred benefit for all workers with more than 10 years service, payable monthly at the age of 65.

AN EIGHT-POINT congressional program for strengthening education was approved by the CIO Auto Workers convention in a resolution bitterly attacking "the McCarthys, the Veldes, the Zolls and others" trying to undermine confidence in public schools.

The references were to Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), Rep. Velde (R. Ill.) and Allan A. Zoll, one-time Nazi apologist now executive vice president of the National Council for American Education.

"We urge all local unions to join in the fight to defend the freedom of the teacher at (all) . . . levels by urging their representatives in Congress to resist the drive against American education which under the guise of an attack on communism," it read, "is, in fact, a deliberate attempt to turn our schools over to the forces of reaction."

Improve The Schools

The program included grants to supplement local spending on education, improve school facilities and raise teachers' salaries; a lunch fund; use of off-shore oil royalties for education; federal aid in developing health services, and safeguards against use of U. S. funds to support or promote segregation in schools.

McCarthy and Velde, along with Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) and Sen. Jenner (R. Ind.), were belabored further in a resolution on civil liberties which declared they could not prevail "in their anti-democratic" attacks on our freedoms if they did not have outside help.

Condemn Filibusters

The union voted to step up its drive against discrimination by pledging aid to Senate liberals in their fight for elimination of Rule 22 and its replacement by majority rule.

It also instructed all locals to intensify efforts to cut discriminatory hiring, urged Pres. Eisenhower to reactivate the Committee on Contract Compliance, pledged continuing work for a federal FEPC law, called for an end to discrimination and segregation in Washington and in all public and private housing, and asked enactment of a federal anti-lynch law.

In another resolution, the convention reaffirmed the union's determination to place its model anti-discrimination clause in all contracts.

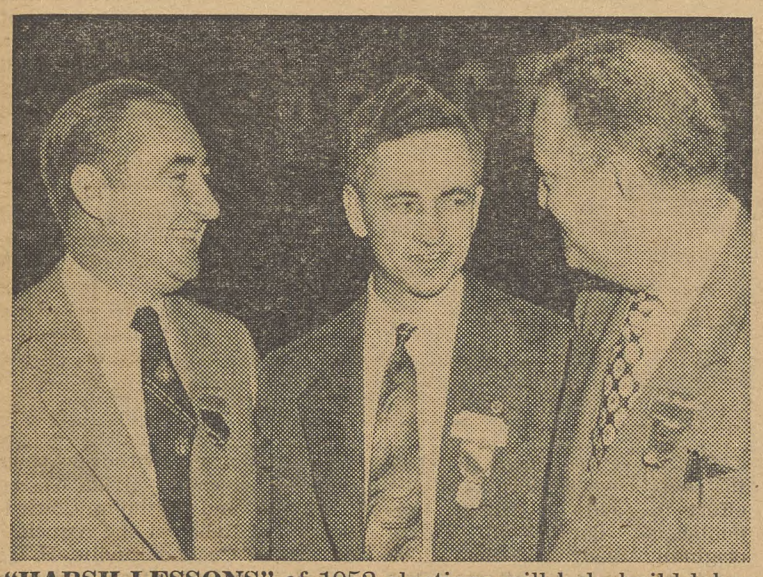
Reuther To Head ICFTU Delegation

UAW and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will head the CIO delegation to the Stockholm conference of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions this summer.

The ICFTU meeting will be held in July in the Swedish capital.

Reuther told the Auto Workers convention that one purpose of his trip will be to help European auto workers improve their wages and working conditions.



"HARSH LESSONS" of 1952 elections will help build labor solidarity, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Auto Workers convention. He's chatting with UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey and Vice Pres. John Livingston.

"THE BEST WAY to strengthen freedom is to extend it," Dr. Ralph Bunche of the United Nations said.

Labor, Agriculture Funds Cut By GOP; Foreign Aid's Next

SLASHES amounting to more than $142 million have been made by the Republican Administration in funds of the two government departments directly concerned with the nation's workers and farmers.

Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin has reduced Labor Dept. funds by more than $11 million.

For the Agriculture Dept.—despite the farm price crisis that has been increasing since the GOP took over—Sec. Ezra Taft Benson has submitted a revised budget cut by more than $131 millions.

A warning that still further reductions are ahead in the field of foreign aid came from Senate Majority Leader Taft.

After a White House meeting, he said that Mutual Security Administrator Harold Stassen has promised to recommend a definite cut in the $7.5 billion requested for foreign aid in the budget presented by former Pres. Truman. For example, Taft said the staff of MSA's Paris office has been cut by 50%.

BIGGEST cut at the Labor Dept. was a reduction of over $6.2 million in the funds for unemployment benefits for veterans of the Korean war. A cut of over $4.1 million was also made in funds for the Bureau of Employment Security, and another million was lopped off administrative funds to run the department.

Durkin pointed out that two-thirds of his budget goes to the states as grants for state employment service offices. He said his reductions meant that inadequate counseling activities of state offices will have to be held at their present level and assumed that fewer claims would be filed.

"To be perfectly frank," he added, "we may have to come back for additional money."

BENSON'S biggest cut was a reduction of $110 million in the agricultural subsidy program to take effect in 1955. This would totally eliminate payments to farmers — already pinched by falling farm prices—for recurring annual conservation practices, such as reapplication of lime and fertilizer. A cut of $40 million in the program was recommended next year.

Other slashes include reductions of $55 million in funds for rural electrification and telephone loans, $8.6 million in flood control funds, $5.5 million in Farmers Home Administration funds for farm ownership loans and production and subsistence loans to low-income farmers.

The new agriculture budget of $1,193,800,000 represents a reduction of slightly less than 10% in the figures submitted by Truman. Durkin's new total of $321,415,600 represents a 3% slash.

CIO Warns Of Peril To Social Security

A WARNING of "the possibility that this Congress will do serious damage to the nation's social security system instead of continuing to increase the protection it affords" was sounded last week by the CIO Legislative Dept.

In a letter to Congress, Nathan E. Cowan, department director, pointed out that the House Ways and Means Committee has set up subcommittees on social security and unemployment insurance.

"Both will undoubtedly be urged to go along," he said, "with proposals advanced by conservative interests that would, in fact, substantially change the nature of existing programs for the worse."

HE ADDED that "these undesirable effects are cleverly concealed from easy detection."

As an example, Cowan declared that the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance program is "endangered" by proposals of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce. These proposals would end federal matching grants to states for old-age assistance and give all retired persons a "pitiful minimum benefit of perhaps $25 a month."

Deep Freeze

—Seaman for LPA

"Cold Comfort"

Another provision would bring all gainfully employed workers into the OASI system, charging the cost to the trust fund built out of workers' and employers' contributions.

"The popular idea of universal coverage," he said, "cloaks the pitifully low protection that would be afforded and the grave obstacles to future progress that would be created by the drain on the fund and the so-called 'pay-as-you-go' feature."

AS A "THREAT to unemployment insurance" Cowan cited the recommendation of the Interstate Conference of Employment Security Agencies that administrative funds be given automatically to the states, over and above regular congressional appropriations.

"This would be another step," he said, "in undermining protections against abuse which Congress wisely wrote into the original act for a federal-state system and entrusted to the Federal Bureau of Employment Security for administration."

Cowan also warned that the activities of the proposed Commission on Federal-State Relations, whose establishment soon will be considered by Congress, will affect social security as well as taxes and other important policies.

"IF THE MEMBERS or staff are primarily interested in reducing taxes rather than advancing the general welfare, then such progress made in the last 20 years will be undone," he said.

"We urge that you do not support a Commission on Federal-State Relations unless adequate safeguards are included in the proposal to assure proper consideration of the views of those interested in preserving and improving social programs."

Senate Votes Approval Of Health Dept.

REORGANIZATION of the Federal Security Administration into a full-fledged government department received final congressional approval last week.

The Senate by voice vote approved Pres. Eisenhower's plan to expand FSA into a Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. The changeover will be effective this month.

CIO has supported the reorganization but opposed "veto" power given the American Medical Association over health programs of the government. The AMA was given control over a special assistant for health and medical affairs.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has called this "a shocking departure from good government."

Additionally, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce social security committee and insurance company representatives have been named to an advisory group on old age pensions. Labor representatives were excluded.

The Chamber already is driving to kill off the present funded system of social security and turn over to Congress the power to vote annual appropriations for benefit payments.

Barroom Bribery Rumors Backfire For The Boss

UNSUPPORTED charges of bribing a witness at a National Labor Relations Board hearing backfired last week for the Grand Central Aircraft Co., of Tucson, Ariz.

The NLRB, in polite language, disgustedly tossed out the company's charge, made in its brief, that the board "general counsel and/or" the CIO Auto Workers had offered a former foreman, John G. Crissman, $5000 to testify the right way.

The testimony was supposed to have been given at a hearing on union charges of unfair labor practices. An investigation in which the FBI took part disclosed that the company's slanderous charge, which it said was based on the testimony of "disinterested and reliable persons," actually was founded on nothing firmer than a barroom conversation about which the principals professed to recall very little.

The board also slapped the wrist of the company's attorney for waiting until nine months after the close of the hearing to make the charge, which he said was still being investigated by the FBI. The NLRB Los Angeles regional office, meantime, had been advised by the FBI that the charges did not hold up and that the company had been so advised. The board ruling said:

"HIS (the company counsel's) unqualified statements in the brief . . . and his indifference to the outcome of the investigation of the charges by the FBI exceeded the bounds of reasonable decency."

The board also threw out the results of a representation election held on Apr. 20, 1951, in which the UAW-CIO was defeated, and ordered a new one; found the firm guilty of "numerous" unfair labor practices, including interference with the right of its employes to choose their own bargaining representative, and ordered reinstatement with back pay for two employes it found were discharged for union activity.

CIO In 3 Industrial States Joins In Pleas For FEPC

IN THREE MAJOR industrial states—Ohio, Illinois and California—CIO councils were engaged last week in bitter fights to achieve equal job opportunity for all workers, regardless of creed or color.

The Ohio CIO Council, joining with religious, educational and other labor groups, was fighting a legislative battle for FEPC. It marked the fifth straight time the CIO had made a concerted effort to win this measure from the Ohio Legislature.

More than 600 FEPC supporters jammed the Senate and House hearing rooms to hear the State's top clergyman, representing Protestant, Catholic and Jewish organizations, demand "fair play in employment."

OPPOSITION spokesmen, charging workers would "react violently" to non-discrimination employment practices, had the charge hurled back in their teeth by CIO spokesmen.

Ohio CIO pointed out the law would bar discriminatory practices by labor as well as employers and that CIO unions were insisting on non-discriminatory clauses in labor relations contracts. "If you think workers might react violently," CIO challenged the Legislature, "put us to the test. Make us prove we have come here in good faith."

In Illinois, the Committee for Equal Job Opportunity was sponsoring Equal Job Opportunity Day on Apr. 12. The committee is seeking to arouse greater interest in a measure to create a State Fair Employment Practices Commission.

In California, the State CIO Council joined with the NAACP and 40 other groups in a conference in the capital, Sacramento, in support of the creation of a similar commission. Some 500 delegates reported that 31 of the lawmakers interviewed promised to vote for a State FEPC.

IN NEW JERSEY, the State CIO Council called for "a full-scale investigation of the Newark police department" by the U. S. House Judiciary subcommittee which is investigating policy brutality. In a letter to Chairman Keating (R. N.Y.) of the subcommittee, Arthur Chapin, State CIO civil rights director, cited admissions in court by a Newark sergeant and policeman.

Chapin wrote that the policemen admitted "that they have beaten prisoners before they were booked on specific charges on order from Newark Public Safety Dir. John B. Keenan."

The subcommittee has been investigating the reported agreement between the U. S. Dept. of Justice and the New York City Police Dept. barring the FBI from investigating violations of civil rights in police brutality cases.

CIO Endorses NAACP Campaign

CIO has endorsed the drive of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for 300,000 new members.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, head of the CIO Civil Rights committee, wrote Dr. Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the NAACP board of directors:

"For many years the NAACP has had the support of the CIO. I am convinced that we will only realize the full equality guaranteed in our Constitution and in democratic society by joint efforts of organizations like ours."

TALKING TO LAWMAKERS.—Delegates to the New Jersey CIO legislative conference at Trenton question Assemblyman N. C. Smith (R. Cape May) on his stand on State rent controls and boosting unemployment and disability insurance benefits.

Reuther Hails New Policy of African Labor

CONGRATULATIONS OF the CIO went to two South African labor organizations last week a few days after they reversed their historic policy with a formal declaration that union organization on a racial basic must be abandoned.

The greetings were sent by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to the South African Federation of Trade Unions and the South African Trades and Labor Council. At a meeting in Johannesburg on Mar. 29, they had asserted that union membership should be open to all "irrespective of race or color."

The change in their position was regarded as close to "revolutionary" in South Africa, where Premier Malan's Ministry of Labor has forced segregation on unions although Negroes are not barred by law from white unions.

"WE HAVE FOUND in the years of our growth," Reuther wrote the two labor bodies, "that a strong policy against discrimination or segregation in the ranks of our own unions is one of the foundations of our strength...

"We agree with your statement that the 'inevitable result of forcing non-Europeans out of existing trade unions will be to create competition among workers in the same occupation of an unhealthy and anti-social character.'

"So, we hail your policy position . . . and congratulate you for taking so firm and constructive a stand for inherent democratic rights in the Union of South Africa.

"I AM SURE that the effect of this position will be great not only in your own country but throughout the world; and that your voice, crying out against intolerance, will aid all the peoples of the free world who know that the fight against Communism . . . can be won only if the democratic world consistently proves itself ready to practice as well as to observe the best of the democratic traditions."

Dolnick Leaves UPWA

Norman Dolnick, publicity director of the United Packinghouse Workers since 1946, has resigned for "merely personal reasons." He expects to enter public relations work in Chicago.

Jersey Legislature Praises CIO For Record Of Gains

THE NEW JERSEY Legislature last week praised the State CIO Council as "one of the outstanding non-partisan groups in the State in fighting corruption, communism and injustice."

The Council was lauded in a resolution adopted by both Houses of the Legislature as more than 500 CIO delegates—representing 250,000 members in all counties of the State—sat in the galleries. They were at Trenton for a CIO legislative conference.

"CIO officers and members have been in the forefront of those producing goods and services for the use of the people at home and abroad in peace and war," the resolution said.

"The CIO has been one of the outstanding non-partisan groups in the State in fighting corruption, communism and injustice."

HOUSE SPEAKER Simmill (R. Monmouth) and Senate Pres. Young (R. Morris) welcomed the delegates and Carl Holderman, Council president, addressed each house briefly.

Before the delegates went to the capitol, Paul Krebs, chairman of the State CIO-PAC, spoke to them, and Harry Kranz, State CIO legislative director, briefed them on current legislation. The delegates also had legislators as their guests at a luncheon.

Then they went to the capitol to call on their assemblymen and senators to ask support for a strong State rent control law and 20 other measures and to urge defeat of nine bills.

THE DELEGATES called for the enactment of measures that would increase maximum unemployment compensation and temporary disability benefits to $45 weekly for single workers and up to $65 weekly for workers with four dependents, extend the coverage of both laws to all employers, and permit unemployment compensation payments in lockouts.

They also pressed for the passage of a 75c hourly minimum wage and 40-hour week for intra-state employes.

One of the bills opopsed would require most workers installing wires and electrical appliances to pass an examination and obtain a $25 license for the right to work.

New York CIO Wins Fight For Compensation Costs Inquiry

A LONG and determined battle by the New York State CIO Council brought results last week when Gov. Dewey announced that he would begin an investigation of workmen's compensation costs in the State.

Expressed purpose of the investigation is to determine why "less than 40c of every dollar paid by employers for workmen's compensation ever reaches the injured workman and his dependents."

This is a point the State CIO has been hammering away at for many years. The Council's charge has been that profits, commissions and unnecessary expenses of private insurance companies and brokers were draining off more than $90 millions annually.

The CIO has called for establishment of an exclusive State fund so that this amount could be used to provide increased benefits for workers without additional cost to employers.

State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander promptly commended Dewey for authorizing the investigation.

"A THOROUGH and impartial investigation will demonstrate that insurance companies and brokers have benefited from the state workmen's compensation law to a far greater extent than have the workers whom it was designed to protect," Hollander said.

"Private interests have no right to profiteer on this social insurance program. An exclusive state fund is needed to assure maximum benefits for workers at minimum cost to employers."

'Right To Work'?

Anti-Union Bills Fought In States

THE RECENT U. S. Supreme Court decision upholding state open shop and anti-picketing laws has given new impetus to the campaign in several state legislatures to put new legal shackles around unions.

Latest development came in California, where GOP Assemblyman Harold Devering planned to redraft his version of a so-called "right to work" bill so that it would conform with the Virginia law which was upheld by the Supreme Court.

THE COURT, by a 7 to 2 verdict a month ago, upheld injunctions banning peaceful picketing which had been issued under the Virginia law.

In his dissent, Justice William O. Douglas pointed out that "picketing is a form of free speech — the working man's method of giving publicity to the facts of industrial life. As such, it is entitled to constitutional protection."

But the drive in the states to strip labor of that "constitutional protection" continues, and it dovetails with the case that several major business groups have presented to Congress concerning Taft-Hartley.

UNANIMOUSLY, the testimony of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers and American Farm Bureau Federation has included pleas for turning complex labor-management relations "back to the states to handle."

Taft-Hartley already gives state anti-union security laws priority over federal legislation. But now business groups want to whittle down the federal government's powers, break up unions into local units (through bans on industry-wide and multi-employer bargaining) and give even more power to the states.

So industrial relations have been a big issue in the state legislatures which have been in session the past three months, and CIO state councils have joined with other labor groups in fighting a flood tide of similar "right to work" laws.

ACCORDING to the latest count by the CIO Political Action Committee, the "right to work" measures—outlawing all forms of union security—have been defeated or bottled up in committee in six states. They are Utah, Colorado and Kansas, and, earlier, Indiana, Idaho and Wyoming.

In Oregon, according to the IWA-CIO's International Woodworker, some 800 persons—mostly union representatives—turned out for House committee hearings on a series of anti-labor measures. As result, indications are that the measures will stay in committee.

The "right to work" bills are still pending in at least three other states: Maryland, Missouri, and Oklahoma.

Church-Labor Group To Meet

Jack Kroll, Director of the CIO Political Action Committee, and Roy Reuther, chairman of PAC for the CIO Auto Workers, will be among the speakers at the 20th annual convention of the National Religion and Labor Foundation. It will be held Apr. 7 and 8 in Cincinnati.

If At First You Don't Succeed—

Fortnight ago, CIO joined other labor groups in New York in sidetracking Republican efforts to push a ban on any and all union political action through the Legislature in its closing days.

Now similar measures have been introduced in the Ohio Legislature by Sen. Lowell Fess (R.). They would prohibit unions from spending any funds or making any contributions for city, county or state political contests.

"The bill," as the Ohio CIO Council commented, "is a poorly disguised effort to thwart the expression of liberal ideas in all political campaigns.

"With a Republican party expenditure of $2,050,651 and a Democratic party expenditure of $51,152 in 1952 (in Ohio) and with the newspapers solidly lined up on the Republican side of the playing field, who will be left to present the liberal issues to the people if the union's political expression is stifled?"

IUE Parleys With GE Are Stalemated

GENERAL ELECTRIC'S "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude last week stalemated negotiations with the CIO Electrical Workers in New York City.

Meeting the day before union-GE talks, IUE's GE Conference Board rejected the company's 1.4% wage increase proposal as "insulting."

The board also recommended to locals "that the negotiating committee be empowered to determine the date for a strike unless a satisfactory settlement is offered us in the meantime."

Other recommendations included setting up strike committees, advising members to stop working overtime and an intensification of the union's educational program for the membership and the community.

FOLLOWING the negotiations last week, IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is also CIO secretary-treasurer, was highly critical of the company's "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude.

IUE asked the firm for a 21c an hour increase and a number of non-economic benefits affecting vacations, holidays, the unemployment security fund and the union shop.

The talks were begun under a wage reopener but since the company itself had requested that the contract be extended six-months beyond Sept. 15, 1953, IUE considers the full contract now is open to bargaining.

Negotiations will be resumed Apr. 16, the day before the conference board meets again.

CIO Joins With Women's Groups In New Drive For Equal Pay

A THREE-WAY effort to win equal pay and to eliminate wage discrimination for women workers in factories, stores and offices now is under way.

Labor, women's and church organizations have joined to form a National Committee for Equal Pay, with headquarters in Washington.

It plans to serve as a fact-finding clearing house for efforts in the fields of legislation, education and collective bargaining to reduce wage discrimination against women.

National CIO is a founding member of the committee, along with the CIO Auto Workers, Electrical Workers and Clothing Workers.

Other participating groups include: General Federation of Women's Clubs, League of Women Voters, Business & Professional Women's Clubs, Women Lawyers, University Women, National Consumers' League, National Catholic Welfare Conference, National Education Association, YWCA, and national councils of Catholic, Jewish and Negro women.

Chairman of the non-governmental committee is Marjorie L. Temple, of the BPWC. CIO's representative is Katherine Ellickson, CIO associate director of research. David Lasser, IUE-CIO research director, is chairman of the collective bargaining sub-committee.

The first bulletin by the commitee pointed out that "women workers themselves are often not aware of the difference in pay for the same job. For example, one employer applied to an agency for a bookkeeper—male $350 a month, female $237 a month. From the employer's side of the picture, the employer who through a collective bargaining contract gives equal pay must compete with firms which do not."

CIO UNIONS, through bargaining and legislation, have sought to eliminate wage or work discrimination based on sex, national origin, race or religion. CIO has supported equal pay measures but has opposed efforts to toss out existing legislation giving women workers wage and hour protection.

Some CIO affiliates with large numbers of women workers—and continuing problems of winning wage equality—are the Electrical, Packinghouse and Communications Workers. In clothing, textile and shoe industries, where strong unions exist, wage discrimination against women has been largely wiped out, the Equal Pay Committee reported.

FTC Policy Changes Seen As Howrey Takes Over; Sec. Weeks Is Critical

A POLICY change by the Federal Trade Commission was forecast last week as Edward F. Howrey assumed the chairmanship of the agency.

Republican colleagues of Howrey said the new chairman can cast a deciding vote in the sharp split that has developed in the commission on the enforcement of the Robinson-Patman fair competition act.

The act forbids a manufacturer to charge competing wholesalers different prices, if the price discrimination would tend to destroy competition.

It was designed with a double purpose: To protect small manufacturers from being driven out of business by price cutting by their larger competitors, and to protect competing wholesalers from arbitrary discrimination by manufacturing.

IT WAS reported that Howrey is expected to side with Commissioners Lowell B. Mason and Albert A. Carretta. They contend that a manufacturer should have some opportunity to cut his prices "in good faith" to meet the prices of a competitor in one locality without having to cut his prices in the same amount in other parts of the U. S.

A majority of the five-man commission has held that "good faith" is not enough to justify discrimination if competition may be affected.

Another instance of the "new climate" for business in the Eisenhower Administration was given by Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks.

He said he would "re-evalue" the functions of the Bureau of Standards "in relation to the American business community and other agencies of government." And he added that senators might want to "re-examine" the FTC's power to issue orders against firms involving misleading advertising claims.

HOWREY succeeded former Sen. James M. Mead as chairman, but Mead will remain a member of the commission.

Mead doubtless had in mind a likely change in commission policy that would weaken the Robinson-Patman Act, when he declared in a farewell statement that the act "has been criticized and defended by many sources in the past."

"In general," he continued, "it is looked upon as the Magna Charta by the small businessman. Without reference to the wording of any particular statute I suggest that the principle of prohibiting price discriminations which substantially lessen competition or tend to create monopoly is sound."

Quacks Keep Up With Atom, FDA Catches Up With Them

THIS IS heralded as "the atomic age," and medical quacks are exploiting it to a fare-thee-well with a new scheme to exploit arthritis victimes with what the U. S. Food & Drug Administration calls "false and misleading" arthritis "cures."

The effort to turn abandoned Montana uranium mines into a "bonanza" was reported as the FDA cracked down on interstate shipments of highly-touted but medically-useless ore.

The metal came from mines with the fancy names of "Merry Widow," "Free Enterprise," "Sunshine," "Last Chance," and "Uranium Mountain" near Great Falls, Mont.

Last year, as Labor Press Associated reported, the mines got four pages of publicity in Life magazine. They've attracted some 100,000 arthritis sufferers at rates of from $3 to $10 an hour.

FDA wasn't able to do anything about these local operations, but it acted when two firms went into the mail order business.

One outfit, the Radon Supply Co., shipped five-pound bags of "uranium ore" at $10 a bag. Another, the C. & J. Rental Service, offered metal cabinets for "gamma ray" treatment at $400 per cabinet. And Radon tossed in leaflets about "Now you test the healing efforts of the gamma rays of uranium ore in your own home."

FDA has cited both firms for hearings for violating the Food & Drug Act. And it said "tests with Geiger counters showed that the ore emitted less gamma rays than the luminous dial of an ordinary wrist-watch."

United Welfare Appeal Urged

The Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) Area CIO Council has called for one welfare campaign a year "to put an end to the present state of confusion that is injuring all worthy charity appeals."

The council followed the lead of CIO Steelworkers Local 1782, which had called on various organizations to affiliate with the Community Chest. Council officers were instructed to communicate with the Community Chest, the Red Cross and other agencies to make known the wishes of the CIO members.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THIS IS THE SEASON for refurbishing the family car. New developments can help save you money and get added satisfaction in two of the most important car renovation needs: repaint jobs and slip covers.

CAR REPAINTING: You can now have your car repainted with a factory-type baked-enamel finish for about half the cost of the lacquer repainting formerly considered the only good professional method.

'Green Thumbs' Get Warning

If your interest in gardening is increasing with each passing week of spring, better think twice before you shell out for the heavily-advertised and highly-priced chemical soil conditioners.

These chemicals, the ads imply, take all the back-breaking work out of gardening.

But the Federal Trade Commission points out their effectiveness still needs testing. Whatever the soil conditioner used, you still need fairly good soil to begin with. You need to till and prepare it. And the results with chemical conditioners won't equal or surpass use of peat moss.

Which is best? Auto shops that do both lacquer and enamel repainting consider them both good. Enamel repaintings—even though less costly—stand up somewhat better under severe weather conditions (salt air or extreme dampness). Too, enamel doesn't have to be waxed as often to bring out a glossy surface.

Lacquer repaintings generally cost close to $130—sometimes even more—compared to about $65-$75 for baked enamel. The good quality and comparatively reasonable cost of the enamel finishes has been made possible by the development of baking ovens. Many repaint shops now have such factory-type equipment, which bakes the enamel onto the metal under temperature of 175 to 200 degrees.

Some very low prices are quoted on enamel repaint jobs, as low as $35 in fact. While some price variation can be expected, beware of very low prices sometimes advertised.

Much of the quality of the work depends on the preparation of the car prior to actually repainting. A shop that does a good job sees to it that the bare metal has a perfectly smooth and level surface before applying the paint. Before sanding the car, the surface is cleaned with a chemical grease and wax remover. Then all bare metal areas are chemically treated to prevent further rust damage, a primer coat is applied to cover any chips and cracks in the metal, and glazing putty is applied to secure a smooth surface to which the paint will adhere. After three coats of enamel have been sprayed on, the car goes into the oven.

The best shops have the spray booth and oven built as one unit so dust can't collect when the car is moved from the booth to oven. Another tip: Look over the paint shop to see if it's clean. Ask to see some completed jobs and look for specks and bubbles on the surface that indicate lack of care.

SEAT COVERS: The secret of getting good wear from seat covers is not only the quality of the covers, but the way they're fitted. Custom-made covers last noticeably longer than ready-mades not because the material is necessarily better, but because they are more precisely and tightly fitted to the seat so there's less strain and pull.

But custom covers may not be worth their high price for a car you expect to keep not more than a couple of years. Well-constructed ready-made covers can last several years if carefully fitted and retightened from time to time. If you do buy ready-mades it's worth having them professionally installed.

You can get a professional installation for not much more than $3. Sometimes shops even throw in the installation as a special. But beware quickie jobs. It takes even a professional installer close to an hour to do a satisfactorily snug job.

ACWA Gains 10c For 100,000 Members

THE CIO Clothing Workers have won a general 10c hourly pay increase for 100,000 members employed in the shirt, pajama and other cotton garment industries.

The ACWA also obtained additional improvements estimated at 2c an hour.

Benefits included an additional 1% employer payment on weekly payrolls into the industry insurance fund to provide hospitalization for spouses and dependent children, and six paid holidays a year to be paid regardless of whether they fall on Saturday.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky declared that the wage increase and other gains—effective May 25—will affect all shirt, pajama and cotton garment firms in contractural relation with the union.

These gains were agreed upon the day after ACWA won a 12.5c an hour increase for 150,000 members employed in the boy's and men's clothing industry.

A statement issued jointly by Potofsky and representatives of the shirt, leisurewear, rainwear, robe and pajama industries said:

"The unquestioned rise in living costs since the last general increase in the shirt, pajama and cotton garment industry influenced the thinking of both sides of the table during the negotiations.

"Again, as in previous collective bargaining discussions, mutual forebearance and understanding marked our meetings during the past few weeks.

"THE IMPROVED picture in the industry makes the increase possible after a protracted period of economic decline. It is our joint hope and expectation that production may now be obtained at normal levels so that all elements in the industry may prosper and the consumer obtain the best possible product for his money.

"The amicable settlement of the wage question is another evidence of the enlightened labor-management relations which have marked the shirt, pajama and cotton garment industries for more than a decade.

"We are convinced that they will continue for many years to come."

TWU Gains Conference On Threatened N. Y. Layoffs

THE CIO Transport Workers last week moved to save the jobs of thousands of its members on the city-owned subways, buses and elevated lines in New York City.

As a result of protests by TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill—including a warning of possible strike action on the city-owned and private lines—the Board of Transportation agreed to meet with TWU leaders Apr. 6.

TWU represents some 45,000 employes on the city-owned system. Approximately 10,000 jobs would be eliminated if control of the transit system, now in the Board of Transportation, passes to an autonomous authority as proposed by Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and tentatively accepted by the city.

In a move designed to forestall the Dewey action, the board proposed to lay off "unnecessary" workers. One civic group, the City Affairs Committee, called for ending 8200 jobs and other economies.

Quill took to the air in a TWU telecast to appraise the public and TWU members of the situation. He said that the city's plans calling for the dismissal "of approximately 10,000 workers will put the subways in a tailspin."

"There will be stoppages in the shops unless they meet with us," he said. "As soon as the layoffs start, there will be a strike on the entire rapid transit system."

After the board scheduled the meeting, Quill immediately called off all plans for a strike.

DuPont Fires 27 CIOers At Atomic Plant

THE DuPONT CO. is blacklisting CIO members at the Savannah River atomic energy plant near Aiken, S. C.

The firm, which is building and will operate the big plant for the Atomic Energy Commission, has laid off 27 CIO Chemical Workers who were employed as protective firemen.

The company's latest anti-CIO move came after UGC&CWA defeated the AFL by a 40-to-1 majority among the protective firemen. Now the CIO is conducting a campaign among some 1400 operation workers in the completed section of the plant for a representation election.

A UGC&CWA delegation last week protested the company's action to Sens. Maybank and Johnston and Rep. Riley, all South Carolina Democrats, and to AEC Chairman Gordon Dean.

THE UNION MEHBERS urged that the layoffs, which were to become effective late last week, be rescinded while a fact-finding commission appointed by Dean study the case.

Five of the men laid off were members of the union's negotiating committee.

One of the "blacklisted" men applied for a production job at the plant, was questioned as to whether he belonged to the CIO. When he said he did, he was given a lecture on how a worker at the plant needed no "outside" representation, and was told there were no jobs.

AS A RESULT of the layoffs, the UGC&CWA local unanimously authorized the negotiating committee to call a strike at its discretion.

The UGC&CWA delegation included Pres. Elwood D. Swisher, Vice Pres. Joe Joy; Lloyd P. Vaughan, South Carolina CIO director, and Joseph Donovan, South Carolina CIO director, who is in charge of the organizing campaign at the plant.

Ike Faces GOP Opposition On Rent Control Extension

PRES. EISENHOWER'S proposal for extending federal rent controls for five months ran into Republican opposition in Congress last week.

Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.) of the House Banking Committee said Congress may let federal controls for "non-critical" areas die on schedule Apr. 30.

"But I would not rule out the possibility of a brief extension—perhaps 30 to 60 days," he added.

The committee will not begin work on a rent bill until after the House returns from a 10-day Easter recess, which probably means that a final congressional decision of controls will not be made until close to the Apr. 30 deadline for the present law.

The Senate Banking Committee will begin drafting rent control legislation this week. Chairman Capehart (R. Ind.) is opposed to extending rent controls for non-critical areas.

Rep. O'HARA (D. Ill.) reported that some Chicago tenants already are receiving Apr. 30 eviction notices from landlords who don't believe Congress will extend rent ceilings beyond that date.

In New York State, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey signed a new residential rent control measure permitting increases up to 15% for 835,000 to one million tenants.

In Minnesota, Gov. C. Elmer Anderson vetoed a bill lifting rent controls Apr. 30, but a legislator immediately challenged the legality of the veto.

THE SAN FRANCISCO CIO Council warned that if controls are not retained after the Apr. 30 deadline there is a possibility of rent increases of as much as 100%. The Council urged CIO unions and members to write each San Francisco supervisor requesting extension of rent lids.

A decision by a New York Supreme Court judge paved the way for rent increases of from 5 to 10% for 65,000 families living in limited-dividend housing developments in the state.

Organizationally Speaking

The following CIO representation election victories have been reported by the Organizational Dept.:

SEC.-TREAS. AL HARTNETT, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE-CIO representation election victories: Charles A. Rose Manufacturing Co., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE 25, no union 1, challenged 1, eligible 28; Bendix Co., York, Pa., IUE-CIO 55, no union 1, IAM-AFL 21, eligible 95; Independent Lock Co., Fitchburg, Mass. (run-off), IUE-CIO 575, UE 446.

Intl. Vice Pres. Claude Ballard of the CIO Woodworkers reports that the IAW-CIO won a representation election at the Red Blanket Lumber Co., Prospect, Ore., by a vote of 38 to 28 for no union, with 4 challenged votes.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won a representation election at the Mathieson Chemical Corp., North Little Rock, Ark., by the following vote: eligible 167, UGCCW-CIO 78, DPO (independent) 65, no union 3, void 4. Intl. Rep. Dave Sisco, assisted by Tucker, directed this campaign.

REG. DIR. IRWIN DeSHETLER reports that in a representation election at the Long Beach Independent, Long Beach, Calif., the workers favored the CIO Newspaper Guild by a vote of 177 to 6 against. Vice Pres. Robert Abramson, Los Angeles Newspaper Guild, and CIO Rep. Syd Rose conducted the campaign. CIO LIU No. 78 won an election at the Danny Dannenberg Co., El Centro, Calif., by a vote of 54 to 1 against. Local Rep. Tony Gose and Ben Perry, executive officer, handled this situation.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the Allen Morrison Sign Co., Lynchburg, Va., by a vote of 99 to 90 against. The CIO Textile Workers won a representation election at Pontiac Products, Lynchburg, by the following vote: TWUA-CIO 60, against 20, challenged 4.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports a CIO Brewery Workers' victory at the Tennessee Brewery Co., Memphis, Tenn., by a vote of 88 to 2 for no union. An election for the employes of seven beer distributors resulted as follows: Brewery Workers 109, no union 2. Brewery Rep. Charles Hewgley and Local Pres. Robert Howell did a splendid job on these projects, with the assistance of the CIO regional office.

Nelson Named REA Chief

PRES. EISENHOWER last week nominated Lt. Gov. Ancher Nelson of Minnesota to be Rural Electrification Administrator succeeding Claude R. Wickard.

Wickard was asked to resign although he had three years to go on a 10-year appointment. He quit Mar. 16 after he was told that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell said he could be forced out.

Meanwhile, the post is vacant. Even after the Senate confirms the nomination, Nelson will not be available until Apr. 25, when the Minnesota Legislature is scheduled to adjourn.

Guest Re-elected By UCDS Board

George D. Guest, a CIO Auto Workers official in Atlanta, has been re-elected to the board of directors of the United Community Defense Services.

1952 Proceedings Now Available

Bound proceedings of the CIO's 14th Constitutional Convention, held last December in Atlantic City, N. J., are now available for distribution.

They may be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Price, $2 per copy.

Steel Union Wins By 3-To-1

The CIO Steelworkers have won representation rights at the Timken Roller Bearing Co. plant, St. Thomas, Ontario, by defeating the AFL Machinists by a three to one vote. USA-CIO represents employes at six Timken plants in the U. S.

'Price Of The Presidency'—

House Whoops Approval Of Oil Give-Away

CONGRESSIONAL machinery giving away the people's rights to the rich offshore oil and gas reserves began to roll in both houses of Congress last week.

After less than three days of debate, the House approved a bill giving away all federal rights to the offshore lands within their "historic" boundaries. The Senate will continue debate after the Easter recess.

The House vote was 285 for passage and 108 against. It came shortly after CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther had sent an open letter to members of both houses of Congress calling for the measure's defeat.

First Move In Grab

"The offshore oil and gas giveaway is only the first move in a gigantic grab of vast national resources—forests, oil and gas, water rights, water power, grazing lands, coal and other minerals with an estimated total value of $1000 billion," Reuther said.

"The time to stop this plunder of the public domain is before it gets underway."

Before passage, the House voted to knock out a section, approved by its Interior Committee, that would have permitted the coastal states to tax oil taken from the continental shelf beyond the area given them by the bill.

Rep. Keating (R. N. Y.), who led the fight against the proposal, said that it would not be proper for a few states to levy taxes on property that belongs to all the people. House Republican Leader Halleck supported him, warning that the tax section might "jeopardize" passage of the bill.

As passed the House measure is similar to the bill being considered in the Senate. Both would give coastal states clear title to submerged lands out to three miles, except for west Florida and Texas. There the "historic" boundaries extend 10 miles into the Gulf of Mexico.

The rest of the continental shelf is left under federal control in both measures, but the House bill also provides for its development under government leases.

Leading the fight against the entire give-away proposal, Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) argued that the House measure would be "abortive" because the Supreme Court would rule the new law "unconstitutional." He pointed out that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell argued that Congress can allow states to develop the resources but can't legally give them outright ownership.

How Come, Fellers?

Rep. McCarthy (D. Minn.) called it a "contradiction" for Dixiegop supporters of the bill to be urging Congress to overrule the Supreme Court when most of them had "applauded" last year when the court threw out former Pres. Truman's seizure of the steel mills.

The Supreme Court has held on three separate occasions that the federal government has "paramount" rights over all the submerged lands. Because sovereignty over them is a question of international law, leading constitutional lawyers contend Congress lacks power to transfer them to the states.

Before passing the bill, the House rejected by a vote of 82 to 28 an "oil for education" amendment offered by Rep. Feighan (D. O.). This would have given the states 37.5% of all royalties from land within their historic boundaries and set the remaining 62.5% aside for federal aid to education with all 48 states receiving their prorated share.

Not even one Republican voted for the Feighan proposal.

The most blistering indictment of the giveaway legislation was made by Rep. O'Hara (D. Ill.) who called the bill "the price of the Presidency."

"I see no other reason why Republicans from the North and from the Middle West and from the East should vote to give away the treasures of this country to four states," O'Hara said.

"I am saying to you that the price you are paying for the Presidency in dollars and cents reaches to a figure of no less than $500 billion—enough to pay twice over the national debt."

Grab Broadens

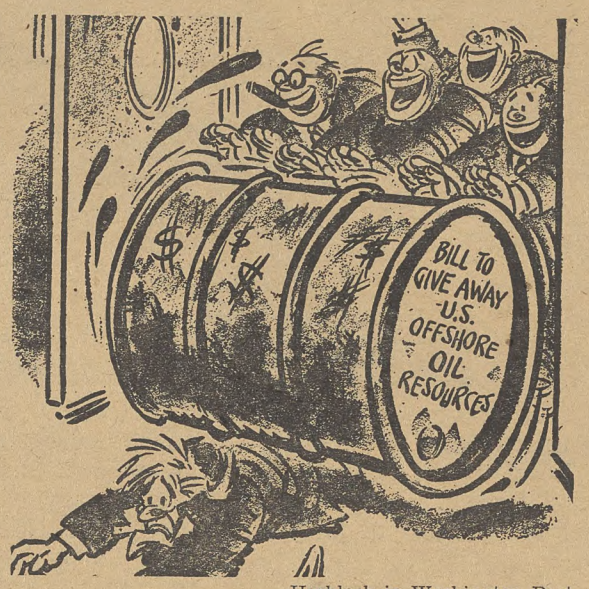
As soon as the Senate Interior Committee reported its bill to the Senate floor, word got around that other private interests besides the oil lobby are driving to take over public lands on the precedent set in the offshore oil case.

Sen. Hennings (D. Mo.) said he has heard reports that private power companies are putting on "considerable pressure" to force abandonment of the development of public resources by the federal government.

Sens. Malone (R. Nev.) and Watkins (R. Utah) sought an amendment, based on the tidelands giveaway, to cede to all states all the underground mineral resources on public lands within their boundaries. This was defeated in the committee but a similar move on the floor is expected later.

—Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"This deal's going to be different."



—Herblock in Washington Post

"Roll out the barrel."

Rep. Yates Calls It A 'Misappropriation'

The so-called "Tidelands Oil Bill" has been misnamed, Rep. Yates (D. Ill.) told the House.

"It should be called the Tri-States Mutual Aid Bill, or the Tri-States Misappropriation Bill," he suggested.

Yates pointed out that the measure "misappropriates the wealth of all the 48 states for the benefit of Texas, Louisiana and California."

URW Strikes 19 U. S. Rubber Plants; Negotiations Continue

SOME 35,000 members of the CIO Rubber Workers went on strike at 19 plants of the U. S. Rubber Co. last week when negotiations on a basic contract broke down after a series of meetings in New York.

The walkout was the first since the union won company-wide bargaining rights shortly after the close of World War II. It started after the union had postponed the deadline for 24 hours to permit talks to continue.

Further negotiating meetings were being held as pickets marched at mills and factories in all parts of the country. Company operations in textile, chemical and plastic plants where other unions represent the workers were not affected.

Wage clauses were not an issue in the dispute, as they are negotiated separately. The principal point of contention, it was reported, was the union's proposal for modification of incentive pay provisions.

The union and the company in their negotiations have been examining the whole basic contract with the intention of strengthening and clarifying clauses. The negotiations are the second in the union's series with the industry's Big Four. Settlement already has been reached with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Roberts Takes His 10% And Goes Back To Kansas

C. WESLEY ROBERTS, top man among the Republican 10 percenters who are pledged to drive out Democratic five percenters, resigned under fire last week as his party's national chairman.

The ranking politician—in an Administration Pres. Eisenhower said would be staffed by people "to whom low public morals are unthinkable," — quit when a Kansas legislative investigating committee found him guilty of violating the "spirit" of the State lobbying law in a 1951 building deal that paid him an $11,000 fee.

Roberts was involved in the sale to the State of a $110,000 hospital built by the Ancient Order of United Workmen, an insurance order, on State-owned land at Norton, Kan. He had been under heavy fire from fellow Republicans in Kansas.

"YOUR committee is constrained to the view that while there is doubt that there was a violation of the letter of the law," the legislators reported, "the committee is firmly convinced that there has been a violation of the spirit of the law.

"The protection which it was designed to afford to the people of this State was deliberately and intentionally frustrated by Wes Roberts and Edgar Bennett."

Bennett is grand master of the insurance group.

The investigating committee found that Roberts was not registered as a legislative agent when he negotiated the sale of the building to the State, a purchase that required action by the Legislature.

He "approached and met with" members of the State Board of Social Welfare to secure a recommendation for the purchase to the State House Ways and Means Committee, the committee reported, and also talked to the legislative committee chairman, who from his approach thought he was representing the State and not the seller.

THE HOSPITAL, built in 1926, would have reverted to the State without cost, according to Roberts' critics. The legislative investigating committee also censured all State officials involved in the deal for "a lack of diligence and thoroughness" in examining the title and ownership of the building.

GOP Lawmaker Faces U. S. Inquiry

A grand jury investigation to determine if Rep. Ernest K. Bramblett (R. Cal.) took money from his office employes for political purposes has been ordered by the Dept. of Justice, it was learned last week.

Bramblett, 52, is a resident of Pacific Grove and a former mayor and school principal. He has been in Congress since 1947.

According to the CIO Voting Records, he has been "right" on but four of 79 key votes during his congressional service—two of them on the same issue, the poll tax.

African Gold Coast Premier Is Proud Of His CIO Union Card

THE ONLY CIO MEMBER to become a prime minister has been located at Accra, on the African Gold Coast.

He is Kwame Nkrumah, an active member of the CIO Maritime Union from 1937 to 1944—and still very proud of it.

Nkrumah was interviewed recently by Edwin Lahey, reporter for the Chicago Daily News, who is now touring Africa. The Gold Coast is a British colony and protectorate, with a population of about four million.

The prime minister sailed on American ships during 1937-1944, while he was gaining an education in the United States.

After going back to his native land, Nkrumah apparently remembered some CIO Political Action Committee principles. At any rate, he has emerged as head of the Convention People's Party.

Fighting for a greater measure of self-government for the Gold Coast, Nkrumah has had some run-ins with the British. He was in jail for a while in 1950. He was elected prime minister while imprisoned.

Nkrumah vehemently denies charges that he is Communist-influenced, and points out that a law sponsored by his party keeps propaganda from the red-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions out of the Gold Coast.

"Our party is against exploitation and imperialism," the prime minister told Lahey. "Our big problem is to lay the foundation for real parliamentary democracy."

Successor To Haywood—

John Riffe Elected By CIO Board

JOHN V. RIFFE is the new executive vice president of the CIO. He was unanimously elected to fill that post, left vacant by the death of Allan S. Haywood, at a special meeting of the CIO Executive Board in Washington on Apr. 6.

Riffe took over his new duties immediately. He will also act as director of organization and councils and as chairman of the CIO Organizational Policy Committee. All were posts held by Haywood before his sudden death on Feb. 21 in Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

IN OTHER major actions, the Executive Board:

- Paid formal tribute to "a great and warm-hearted figure, Allan S. Haywood."
- Formally created the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation; elected a Board of Trustees, headed by CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; made plans for a Public Advisory Board to be announced later and reported that more than $750,000 of the million-dollar fund had been collected to date.
- Mapped initial plans for a comprehensive organizational campaign to sign up "hundreds of thousands" of unorganized workers in basic industries.
- Created a CIO Free World Labor Fund to raise contributions for educational and organizational work among the free trade unions of the world, carried on either by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions or overseas representatives of the CIO. (Story on Page 9.)
- Contributed $25,000 to the CIO Free World Labor Fund and called upon all its affiliates to contribute to the fund.

John Riffe, who was sworn in by Carey, told the board in a short acceptance speech he was "dedicated" to "carrying on the great tradition" started by Philip Murray, Allan Haywood, Van Bittner and Sidney Hillman.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther told a press conference later in the day that, under Riffe's direction, the CIO would launch a major campaign to "quickly and aggressively organize the unorganized."

The CIO Organizational Policy Committee will meet on Apr. 21, Reuther said, to map a "comprehensive organizational campaign" concentrated in such industries as chemicals, petroleum, textiles and communications.

"There are enough unorganized workers in the basic industries to keep us busy for some time," Reuther told newsmen. He added that later the CIO will move to organize white collar workers.

Following the Apr. 21 meeting, Reuther said there would be early meetings with individual unions to complete arrangements for the organizing drive. Such a series of meetings had been planned for late February, but was canceled due to Haywood's death.

The 49-year-old ex-miner, who succeeds Haywood as the CIO's top organizer, told reporters he was not prepared to announce his assistants as yet.

RIFFE is a member of the CIO Steelworkers and, until his election on Easter Monday, was director of the CIO's Southern Organizing Committee. He has a long history of union organizational activity.

He played an active role in major organizational campaigns of the Steelworkers and the Packinghouse Workers, prior to his assignment to the Southern Organizing Committee as assistant to the late Van Bittner.

He was nominated as executive vice president by the CIO Executive Committee, and was elected unanimously to serve the balance of Haywood's term.

CIO EXECUTIVE Committee, with Pres. Walter Reuther at head of table and CIO aides, held a luncheon meeting before full Executive Board met to elect John V. Riffe as executive vice president succeeding the late Allan S. Haywood.

CIO Sets Up Murray Fund To Aid Workers And Nation

THE CIO last week announced the formal creation of the Philip Murray Memorial Foundation to promote "charitable, scientific and educational purposes" and aid workers and their families.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said a million-dollar fund would be created to establish the Foundation in memory of Murray, beloved president of CIO who died last November.

To date, Reuther said, more than $750,000 had been subscribed toward the million dollar goal.

NAMED as chairman of the Foundation Board of Trustees was CIO Vice-Pres. Emil Rieve, who is also president of the CIO Textile Workers. The Foundation secretary-treasurer will be James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the CIO Electrical Workers.

Other trustees will be the CIO Executive Officers, Vice Presidents and General Counsel.

A Public Advisory Board to the Foundation, composed of distinguished Americans, will be announced at a later date.

THE FOUNDATION was incorporated in the District of Columbia. Its purpose is described in the certificate of incorporation as follows:

"The particular business and object of said corporation shall be to commemorate the memory of Philip Murray, distinguished American, leader of labor, and great humanitarian, by engaging in the following charitable, scientific, and educational purposes exclusively:

1. "To aid in seeking, through education, science, and charity, to improve the health, welfare, and cultural level of working men and women and their families; to aid in conducting study and research concerning the problems arising out of the relationship between labor and management and the methods for achieving fair and peaceful solution of such problems; to aid in the advancement of research and education concerning the causes of poverty, unemployment and other socially undesirable economic conditions; to promote and assist education by securing public recognition and respect for individual and group contributions to the public welfare by meritorious achievement in charitable, scientific and educational fields.

2. "In order to achieve the above purposes it shall be within the purposes and powers of the corporation to take all actions which may be appropriate or useful to the furthering of said purposes, including the publication and dissemination of educational information; the establishment, endowment, award, and maintenance of scholarships, prizes, fellowships, research and publication grants, lectureships and professorships, and the granting of assistance or support to other exclusively educational, charitable or scientific associations or corporations having similar purposes.

3. "It shall not be within the purposes or powers of the corporation to carry on propaganda, or otherwise to attempt to influence legislation, either as part of its purposes or objects, or as a means of furthering any of its purposes or objects.

4. "The corporation shall have power to take, receive, hold and convey real and personal estate necessary for the purposes of the corporation set forth above; to receive gifts, bequests, devises, or other conveyances or property, personal or real, tangible or intangible, to hold the same, and to invest and reinvest the same, the entire principle and income to be applied only for the charitable, scientific or educational purposes set forth above."

Reuther Listed On 2 TV Shows

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther is scheduled to appear on two television programs in the next fortnight.

On Friday, Apr. 17, Reuther will be interviewed on the "Cracker Barrel" section of the Kate Smith Show over the NBC television network. Reuther will be interviewed by Ted Collins. The show originates from New York City from 4 to 5 p.m. (EST).

On Sunday, Apr. 26, the CIO president will answer questions posed by a panel of teen-agers on NBC's "Youth Wants to Know" program. This telecast, which originates in Washington from 1 to 1:30 p.m. (EDT), will be carried on the NBC TV network and is moderated by Theodore Granik.

'We'll Keep Alive The Haywood Tradition'

"WE MOURN HIS irreplaceable loss; but we pledge ourselves in the years ahead to live up to the great and humanitarian tradition which was the life of Allan S. Haywood."

With those words, the CIO Executive Board last week mourned the death of "Mr. CIO Himself," the late executive vice president who died "in harness" on Feb. 21.

Standing with heads bowed in reverent silence, the CIO Executive Board formally adopted the statement of CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. It had been issued on behalf of the board immediately after Haywood's death.

Allan Haywood "will always live in the memories of American trade union members," the board said at its first meeting since his death. "We recognize the tremendous contribution he made to the welfare of CIO. We know the hope and encouragement he gave to hundreds of unions, both local and national in the ranks of the CIO."

"Union members respected him and loved him," the board resolution said, "because they knew instinctively he had no interest except their interest. No meeting was too small or too distant if workers needed him and the inspiration which he always brought them played a vital part in building the unions of America."

A "great and warm-hearted figure" had departed from the ranks of labor and his fellow officers of CIO, who had served with him through many a crisis, bowed their heads in grief.

CIO Remembers Police Who Went To Haywood's Aid

THE CIO has remembered the Wilkes-Barre police and firemen for their efforts to save the life of Allan S. Haywood when he was stricken in the Pennsylvania city Feb. 21.

The CIO has given checks of $100 each to the Wilkes-Barre Firemen's Relief and Pension Fund and the Wilkes-Barre Police Pension Fund.

In a letter to Mayor Luther M. Kniffen, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey wrote that "members of both (fire and police) departments acted with promptness and efficiency."

"All that humanely could be done was done, a fact which is a comfort to all who knew and loved Allan Haywood," the letter continued.

"We want to especially thank Assistant Fire Chief Edward Jacobson, and Firemen Michael Jacobs, Joseph Buczko and Frank Michaels, and Police Privates John Zardeski and Louis Keller.

"Their performance of duty on this sad occasion reflects the highest credit to both departments and the city of Wilkes-Barre.

"WE HAVE lost a great and good friend. It helps to know that, in his final minutes, he was among friends."

Haywood was speaking at a banquet of the Wilkes-Barre-Wyoming Valley CIO Council when he collapsed. An emergency squad was summoned and oxygen was administered only moments after he collapsed. He was rushed to the Wilkes-Barre General Hospital, but medical aid was in vain.

CIO, AFL Begin Labor Unity Talks

Thimmes, Emil Rieve, Joseph Curran and (standing) Joseph Beirne, John Riffe, David J. McDonald, Michael J. Quill and O. A. Knight.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

LEADERS of the CIO and AFL, meeting Apr. 7 to "try to achieve labor unity," emerged from a two-hour discussion in agreement that they should study the possibility of ending raiding between unions of the two federations.

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and AFL Pres. George Meany, speaking for their respective groups, pointed out that the "efforts and resources of the labor movement should be used to organize the unorganized, rather than to fight each other."

The 18 union leaders present at the unity session at Washington's Hotel Statler agreed to set up a six-man sub-committee to study the raiding problem, and to bring in a fact-finding report and recommendations by the first week in June. They will be considered by another meeting of the full committees at that time.

The sub-committee was also directed to "study the problems inherent in the structure and jurisdictional lines of the affiliated unions of the two organizations."

CIO'S MEMBERS of the sub-committee are Pres. Reuther, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. David J. McDonald of the United Steelworkers. The AFL trio are Pres. Meany, Sec.-Treas. William Schnitzler and Vice-Pres. Matthew Woll.

Reuther described the study of inter-union raiding as an "essential first step" to working out unity plans.

Meany, elaborating on that, said: "We recognize that if we're going to get unity, we've got to get the proper atmosphere. The only way to get the proper atmosphere is to stop raiding."

Both union officials emphasized, at a news conference following the unity talks, that the sub-committee would have no powers of arbitration or conciliation of existing disputes or raiding efforts. Its purpose is to see what basis can be found for eliminating raids in the future.

Newsmen sought to get a narrow, precise definition of "raiding" from Reuther and Meany.

The CIO president, pointing out that "all of us understand each other," said the "accepted definition is when one union tries to take away people working under the contracts of another union." Meany noted that "competing to organize a new plant is not raiding."

The other aspect of the study will be to examine the jurisdictional boundaries of the various CIO and AFL unions, as well as their structure. From such a study, it is felt that a basis may be laid for more detailed negotiations in the future.

Raiding, the joint CIO-AFL statement acknowledged, is "not conducive" to unity.

THE STATEMENT pointed out that the meeting was held in good faith to try to achieve unity, and that "no prior conditions" had been laid down by either party. "Both sides agreed to explore all the matters involved on their merits," it said.

It was the first unity meeting between CIO and AFL since the break-up of the United Labor Policy Committee in August 1951. The ULPC represented united action by the two organizations on problems relating to defense mobilization arising from the Korean military action.

The last talks at which organic unity had been discussed were held in Washington in the summer of 1950.

The six-man sub-committee will schedule meetings in the next fortnight, probably in Washington.

Joint CIO-AFL Statement—

'We Met In Good Faith To Seek Labor Unity'

The following statement was issued on Apr. 7 by the joint meeting of the CIO and AFL Unity Committees in Washington:

"WE MET TODAY in good faith to try to achieve labor unity. Both sides came into the meeting with no prior conditions. Both sides agreed to explore all the matters involved on their merits.

"There was a general discussion of all phases of the problem. In particular, the conference gave consideration to the problem of 'raiding,' which, it was agreed, is not conducive to unity.

"The conferees decided to appoint a sub-committee of six—three from the AFL and three from the CIO—to study the possibility of eliminating raiding between affiliates of the two organizations, as a prerequisite to achieving labor unity.

"The six-man sub-committee will also study the problems inherent in the structure and jurisdictional lines of the affiliated unions of the two organizations.

"The sub-committee was empowered to prepare a factual report and recommendations, as well as an agenda, for the next joint meeting of the full committees. This meeting will be held in Washington, D. C., during the first week of June.

"The members of the sub-committee are: Pres. George Meany of the AFL; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO; William F. Schnitzler, secretary-treasurer of the AFL; James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO; Matthew Woll, vice president of the AFL, and David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers of America, CIO."

Participants In Joint Talks

These are the 18 leaders of the CIO and AFL who participated in the unity talks at Washington on Apr. 7:

CIO: Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Executive Vice-Pres. John Riffe; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. David J. McDonald, Steel; Vice-Pres. James Thimmes, Steel; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, Clothing; Pres. Emil Rieve, Textile; Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, Rubber; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil; Pres. Joseph Curran, Maritime; Pres. Joseph Beirne, Communications; Pres. Michael Quill, Transport.

AFL: Pres. George Meany; Sec.-Treas. William Schnitzler; Vice Pres. Matthew Woll, Photo-Engravers; Pres. Harry Bates, Bricklayers; Pres. William C. Doherty, Letter Carriers; Pres. Daniel Tracy, Electrical Workers.

Steel Wage Meet Called

THE CIO Steelworkers last week announced a meeting of the union's International Wage Policy Committee to act on wage proposals in forthcoming negotiations with the basic steel industry.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald announced that the union's Executive Board will meet in Atlantic City on Apr. 27 and the wage-policy group on the following day.

He said the meeting will be "in connection with reopening provisions of the basic steel agreements." The settlement after last year's long steel strike provided for a two-year contract with a mid-term wage reopener.

Some 650,000 steel workers are affected directly by the basic steel agreements, which also affect the pattern for as many more workers in fabricating, aluminum and other plants.

The USA-CIO may reopen the contract by May 1. The union gave no indication of forthcoming wage proposals.

Reuther Urges Ike Call Full Employment Meet

CIO AUTO WORKERS Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week urged President Eisenhower to call "a broadly representative conference" immediately to plan for the transition from defense to civilian production with full employment.

Reuther's recommendation was sparked, he said, by "recent reactions in the Congress and in Wall Street to apparent change in Communist policy in Korea, Germany and elsewhere."

The conference should, the UAW president said, "draft a worksheet for full production and full employment."

There was "added urgency" now, Reuther said, because of the Soviet peace offensive for "adequate and timely planning for the transition of our American economy from peak defense production to sustained civilian production at levels that will continue to provide full employment in the critical months and years ahead."

"DEPRESSION," Reuther continued, "is wholly unnecessary. It can be avoided, but not by leaving the outcome to chance. There are enough unmet needs within the United States and among the free peoples of the world to provide full production and full employment at steadily rising standards of living for at least the next quarter of a century."

Reuther called "fantastic and inhuman" the Wall Street reaction to the Soviet moves. He lashed at those "afraid that 'peace will break out' and depression will follow."

"As rational human beings," he observed, "we need to take counsel together, think, talk and act responsibly and quickly to replace fear with practical plans and confidence that such plans can and will be carried into effect."

"AT MOMENTS in history such as this," Reuther told the President, "bold plans, quick decisions and actions turn dangers into opportunities and open the way to great advances. This is not the time to relax, to be either over-confident or panicky with fear of so-called overproduction. It is a time to dedicate our efforts to production and cooperation among all free peoples for peace."

(See Reuther speech and editorial comment, Page 4.)

Employment Peak Seen

Employment will set a new record of more than 62.6 million this year, according to Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin. The mid-February total was 61.4 million.

25,000 Sugar Workers Walk Out

Twenty-five thousand members of the Puerto Rican Sugar Workers Union, which is affiliated with the CIO Packinghouse Workers, went on strike last week when negotiations for a wage increase broke down.

Intl. Rep. Alexander Summers of the UPWA-CIO said the walkout halted work on hundreds of thousands of sugar cane acreage owned by members of the Puerto Rican Sugar Association. The association rejected union demands for a pay boost of 6c an hour.

Looking Ahead

Last week the CIO and AFL resumed their discussions looking toward a reuniting of the U. S. labor movement.

The CIO delegation led by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and the AFL delegation led by Pres. George Meany had a successful initial session.

Their discussions, as the two federations jointly announced, were "in good faith to try to achieve labor unity." And there was agreement on both sides "to explore all the matters involved on their merits."

This was a preliminary session and the discussions were general. But the two labor groups got down to work, naming a sub-committee which will explore fully the questions of "raiding" and of union jurisdiction. And the full CIO and AFL groups will meet again in Washington shortly.

Still ahead are many complex and important problems which must be ironed out before labor unity can be achieved on a fair and sound basis. Complex and important, too, are the problems free labor faces in the nation and the world—problems which could best be met by a single U. S. labor federation.

Caught Short?

With the resumption of United Nations negotiations with the Communists in Korea and a few faint signs of civility from the Kremlin on other world issues, there are indications that psychological warriors of the Eisenhower Administration have been caught short.

This is most important because of the failure of the Administration to prepare for a full production-full employment economy if and when settlement of international disputes makes possible some reduction in defense orders.

The Administration has only itself to blame for multiplying signs of what CIO has called "a depression psychology." Just six weeks or so ago, the Congress killed off the three-man Council of Economic Advisers.

On the economic front, publications such as Business Week and U. S. News are filled with ominous reports: the edge is coming off the boom, consumer credit is sky-high, and more autos, TV sets, etc., are being produced than there are buyers in sight at present wages.

In this situation, Auto Workers and CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has challenged the GOP Administration to act now to prevent depression later. The UAW has urged Pres. Eisenhower to call "a broadly representative conference at the earliest possible date to draft a worksheet for full production and full employment."

Depression, as Reuther said, is "wholly unnecessary." It can be blocked by bold plans, quick decisions and great advances through steadily rising standards of living. Handwringing and business-as-usual practices by the big tycoons of the Eisenhower Administration will be futile.

Monkey Business

Now that C. Wesley Roberts has taken his 10% lobbying commission, resigned as Republican national chairman, and prepared to go back to Kansas, the FBI has sent a hot potato to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell—a report on job selling of postmasterships in Georgia. It reminds us of Fortune Magazine's prediction of "maybe quite a lot" of corruption under the GOP.

Another Egg Rolling

In Other Words—

Our Opportunity If Peace Comes

The latest Soviet peace offensive poses a great challenge for America, which, if met, can mean tremendous economic advances and social progress for the United States, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week at the United Defense Fund Dinner in Washington. The text of Reuther's speech covering this latest development in international relations follows:

THE NEWS HEADLINES of the past fortnight indicate possibility of improvement in international relationships. All of us are deeply hopeful that the rulers of the Soviet Union are sincere in their protestations of peace, whatever the specific motives may be.

The people of the entire world are hungry for peace, for the cold war which has been imposed on America and the free world by the forces of Soviet tyranny has cost us heavily in both human and material values.

Billions of dollars are being spent throughout the world for armament—for military programs arising directly from the challenge of Soviet aggression and imperialism. Indeed, many of the activities of the United Defense Fund arise from this same challenge.

If the Soviet rulers are sincere, if their actions square with their initial words, if some measure of peace descends upon us, we in America will have a challenge of major proportions.

No Sigh Of Relief

We cannot afford to let our defenses down in a gigantic sigh of relief. We must be strong and we must be prepared for any threat to the peace, regardless of where it comes. Never again, so long as any potential threat remains, can America and the free world permit themselves to be caught unprepared.

There are those among us who fear that peace and depression are handmaidens. I say that peace, or even a breathing spell from cold war, offers the possibility, not of depression, but of tremendous economic advances and social progress.

Can any man rightly say that America is as well housed as it should be? I know there are tremendous areas of slums and sub-standard housing that we, as a nation, must remedy. I know, having served on a presidential health commission, that the health of too many Americans is sub-standard. I know that too many of our schools are old and over-crowded, and that too many of our teachers are being paid too little money for one of the most important tasks in any civilized system, the education of the young.

I know that in great areas of the world, millions of people go to bed hungry at night. I know there is a universal desire to share the benefits of twentieth century industrial and technological advances. I know that democracy can never find a strong foundation if it is built on the misery of great numbers of people.

Regardless of progress in Korea this week, regardless of new moves coming from the Kremlin, regardless of what may transpire in Peiping or Berlin, a fundamental challenge remains. That challenge is simply this—can democracy and the free world apply the techniques to raise living standards, to improve the welfare of workers and farmers, to make millions of the downtrodden recognize that they have a direct and functional stake in militant democracy?

Defense Fund Praised

The United Defense Fund is "a prime example of democratic unity in action" and "a symbol of America at its best," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said at a UDF dinner in Washington last week.

Reuther said CIO's association with UDF had been "a happy one" and he predicted CIO "support will continue in full measure" for what he called its "tremendously worthwhile activities and services."

"The depression taught America many lessons," Reuther said, and convinced us "our concept of privilege for the few and charity handouts for the many was economically stupid and morally wrong." Out of that lesson, he said, "we have gained new concepts of democratic citizenship" and must "never forget that every family must participate in the community and that no citizen in a free society can ignore the needs of the community nor his responsibility to the community."

Washington Window

By Public Affairs Institute

ALMOST EVERY DAY someone gets up in Congress to announce that last November the voters of America gave a mandate for this or for that.

The official election statistics, just released by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, provide an impartial view of this statement. The figures show what the voters actually voted for last November.

The Vote For Ike vs. GOP

Without question they voted for Pres. Eisenhower. He won over Adlai Stevenson by a decisive 6.5 million votes. The official vote:

Eisenhower	33,824,351
Stevenson	27,314,987

The popular vote for the Republican Party in Congress, however, lagged far behind Eisenhower's vote. The official House vote:

Republican	28,543,334
Democratic	28,178,682

If you count the votes for Alaska, Hawaii and Puerto Rico, the House score is even closer:

Republican	28,707,763
Democratic	28,677,642

In New York the Liberal Party supported Stevenson. At the same time it endorsed 29 Democratic and one Republican candidate for the House. Adding the Liberal Party votes they received, the Democrats had 162,303 more ballots nationally than the Republicans.

On the other hand, if you exclude ballots of the territories but include the Liberal Party votes, Republican House candidates received 171,128 more votes than the Democratic candidates.

Congressional Vote Close

On the basis of official party statistics no party received an absolute majority of the votes for the House seats. The Republicans needed over one-half million more votes to gain a clear majority.

The Republicans captured a majority of the House seats. Yet, they were elected by a minority of the American voters.

A study of the official statistics provides some striking examples of how strong the American people voted for Pres. Eisenhower.

Eight states in the South and Southwest voted for him but sent overwhelmingly Democratic congressional candidates to Washington. The eight states were: Arizona, Florida, Missouri, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia.

In Texas, over one million voters cast their ballots for Eisenhower. Yet, only 22,108 voted for Republican House candidates.

In no state did Eisenhower run behind his party. Some of the states which voted far heavier for Eisenhower than for the Republican Party follow:

State	Eisenhower Vote	Republican House Vote
Alabama	149,231	18,673
Arkansas	177,155	51,889
California	2,897,310	2,539,366
Florida	544,036	191,582
Kansas	616,302	489,661
Louisiana	306,925	36,161
North Carolina	558,107	356,472
Ohio	2,100,456	1,836,354
Oklahoma	518,045	383,859
Tennessee	446,147	203,766
Virginia	349,037	138,604

HOW TIMES have CHANGED!

PRES. EISENHOWER praises the United Nation's proposed declaration of human rights as a "significant beacon in the steady march toward achieving human rights and fundamental freedoms for all" in message to UN Commission on Human Rights meeting in Geneva.

All well and good, but just the day before Sec. of State John Foster Dulles revealed that the Eisenhower Administration will not sign the UN human rights declaration nor a covenant on the political rights of women.

ARE TAXES coming down? Pres. Eisenhower tells visiting congressmen, "I never promised either to balance the budget or reduce taxes during the campaign." And Sen. Taft says of tax cuts: "I never promised it and I never heard anybody else promise it in the first year."

Remember the campaign days last fall, when Candidate Eisenhower said on radio spot announcements: "We are going to bring them (taxes) down. And here's how. We are going to cut out the billions that Washington is wasting and put that money back into the pockets of the people."

★

SEC. EZRA BENSON has just ordered a 10% whack in the Agriculture Dept.'s budget, covering everything but a drive to promote meat buying. It seems people got out of the habit of buying beef when prices were so high. So the U. S. is pouring out leaflets and recipes on "Seven Savory Beef Dishes" and advice that "pounding helps to make the meat tender."

Remember the good old days, when Sen. Taft's advice to consumers was "eat less' and Republicans split their sides every time the government issued a leaflet on "How to Wash Dishes"?

Pen Guided By Ghosts—

Bricker Has A Gimmick And It's Aimed At Labor's Gains

By GERVASE N. LOVE

WHEN JOHN W. BRICKER, the less well-known Republican Senator from Ohio, sat down to write what has come to be called the Bricker Amendment to the Constitution, his pen was guided by ghosts.

They were wraiths which indulged in the luxury of wishful thinking. They wanted to come back.

And they wanted to bring with them the times in which they flourished—the dear, dead days beyond recall (neither they nor Bricker will concede THAT point) when the United States was just another country and not yet a world leader, when it was isolated by oceans that had not yet become ponds, when the robber barons of finance and industry controlled government and could give free play to their bitter anti-unionism.

The proposed amendment is aimed—or so its 65 senatorial sponsors insist—at "protecting" the domestic rights of American citizens from "socialistic" infringment by means of international treaties and agreements. It would do this by curtailing the President's power to conduct foreign affairs.

Roadblocks For Labor

What it would actually hit is the workers of the world, including those of the United States. It would throw roadblocks in their march to higher wages and better working conditions.

Its real objective is the preservation of the sweatshop in the many foreign countries where American industry and finance have invested their capital. It would accomplish this by virtually killing the Intl. Labor Organization, the only world organization where the spokesmen of workers have an equal voice with the representatives of government and industry.

It would throw other roadblocks in the world path to peace, because it would bar effective participation of the United States in the United Nations and its member agencies, such as the ILO.

The heart of the proposed amendment consists of only about 100 short words. Their simplicity conceals incredible complexities that Bricker himself has conceded he does not fathom. Its full implications and effects just cannot be neatly packaged, neither by Bricker nor anyone else.

There are four significant sections. They are:

"Sec. 1. A provision of a treaty which denies or abridges any right enumerated in this Constitution shall not be of any force or effect."

(Says the CIO: "This provision is entirely unnecessary for the Supreme Court of the U. S. has clearly indicated that no treaty can authorize what the Constitution forbids.")

Provisions Examined

"Sec. 2. No treaty shall authorize or permit any foreign power or any international organization to supervise, control, or adjudicate rights of citizens of the United States within the United States enumerated in this Constitution or any other matter essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of the United States."

(Says the CIO: "The second section would prevent the U. S. from making various treaties and international arrangements through the United Nations which this country, in the past, considered highly advantageous to make. Here, too, the existing constitutional machinery provides adequate restraints against the making of bad treaties.

—Herblock in The Washington Post

"We don't want you to get tied up abroad."

("In the first place, if a bad treaty is proposed, the President can refuse to sign it. If he does sign it, its ratification can be killed by one-third of the Senate plus one. The Senate, moreover, can consent to a limited ratification and reject those parts considered undesirable.")

"Sec. 3. A treaty shall become effective as internal law in the United States only through the enactment of appropriate legislation by the Congress.

"Sec. 4. All executive or other agreements between the President and any international organization, foreign power, or official thereof shall be made only in the manner and to the extent prescribed by law. Such agreements shall be subject to the limitations imposed on treaties, or the making of treaties, by this article."

(Says the CIO: "The third and fourth sections . . . would seriously hamper our foreign relations during a time of peace and divide us from our allies in war-time.")

Distorting The Facts

The concerted attack on labor and the rights of the individual is coming from the sources one might expect. They are the ones that have been gunning for the ILO for the last few years.

Right up in the front lines, firmly entrenched beside the isolationist patrioteers who always make anything like this their own, are the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the increasingly political American Medical Association.

The employers are distorting the facts about the ILO. When that won't work, they are inventing plain lies. For instance, ILO efforts to do something about refugees have been stymied by charges that Communist nations would set policies. The fact is that only two of the 66 ILO members, Poland and Czechoslovakia, are Red-dominated countries. Neither has anything to do about setting ILO policy.

Sec. of State John Foster Dulles and Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell last week testified strongly against the proposed amendment before the Senate Judiciary Committee. So has Jacob M. Lashley, former president of the American Bar Association and a distinguished St. Louis Lawyer. Chief Judge John J. Parker, of the 4th U. S. Circuit Court, told the committee that 164 years of U. S. history have demonstrated it isn't necessary.

A Move To 'Turn The Clock Back'

THE PROPOSED Bricker Amendment to the Constitution would seriously hamper efforts to conduct the country's foreign affairs, the CIO has warned Chairman Langer (R. N.D.) of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

CIO opposition to the amendment was made known to Langer in a letter signed by Jacob Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers, and Dir. Nathan E. Cowan of the CIO Legislative Dept.

"It will negate the role of the U. S. within the United Nations and its specialized agencies," they wrote, "and through international negotiations to increase the security, the material well-being and the rights of individuals throughout the world."

The letter declared the amendment would "turn the clock back to a period when the United States was a much less significant force in the world."

"In the present time of crisis and instability," it continued, "U. S. leadership is vitally needed to help forge effective international instruments that will provide peace and security in freedom for the peoples of the world.

"The proposed constitutional amendment, while giving no protection that is not already written into constitutional law firmly and supported through long practice, would stultify and restrict such needed leadership.

"Its adoption would give comfort and aid to the totalitarian powers."

Taft-Hartley In Action—

'My Gun Will Belch Fire,' Mill Cop Boasted

A case history of how the CIO Textile Workers were driven out of Alexander City, Ala., by a campaign of beatings, bribery, terrorism, espionage and villification, was presented to the House Labor Committee recently. TWUA Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock told the committee the facts come from official files of the National Labor Relations Board.

ALEXANDER CITY, Ala., is a typical cotton mill town of about 16,000 population located in an agricultural county and isolated from other industrial areas.

In 1945, when the TWUA first attempted to organize workers in Alexander City, roughly 6000 were employed in the several plants of the Russell Manufacturing Co. and in the Avondale Mills. The majority were employed in the Russell Mills. Most employes of the two companies live in company owned houses.

Politically and economically Alexander City is dominated by the Russell Manufacturing Co. and the Russell family. The head office of the Avondale Mills is at Sylacauga, Ala., a branch plant is operated in Alexander City. The Avondale Co. is referred to because testimony shows an employe was induced by local police officers to spy on the CIO union organizer in the community at that time.

They Own The Works

The mayor of Alexander City, Thomas C. Russell, is the uncle of Thomas D. Russell, president of the three cotton textile concerns owned by the family. Mayor Russell's name was carried on the letterhead of the company as its treasurer. The mayor owns the principal bank; the textile company has its office in the bank building.

The company owns the hotel and the town water supply. The Russells own a woodworking plant, a grist mill and a creamery, which afford whatever other employment there is outside of the cotton mills.

Four people, all members of the Russell family, tightly control the stock in all these concerns.

In January 1945 an organizer for TWUA came to visit his father who had lived in Alexander City for some years, and was a well and favorably known citizen. The organizer was fairly well acquainted in the community, had been born and raised in that part of the state.

Although he came simply to see his family, the union representative was quickly made aware that there was a great deal of discontent among the cotton mill workers. After consulting his immediate superior, the organizer came back, registered openly at the hotel and invited some friends working at the Russell mills to discuss forming a union.

Cop Threatens Mobbing

Before he could even get started on his unionizing campaign, he was called to city hall by Chief of Police G. Mark Horton and told to "get the hell out of town" or he would be "mobbed." The chief intimated he would use influence to have the organizer drafted into the armed services. The organizer was beyond the age limit for military service, and told the chief he would stay and continue his lawful effort to contact local workers.

Chief Horton had two assistants who did most of his "leg work" in the deliberate campaign to drive the representative out of town. Alfonso Alford admitted under oath that he was a "paid police informer." Alford spoke in the name of the company and the chief.

Later Floyd Mann was hired as a regular member of the police force. For months Alford, and then Mann, followed TWUA representatives literally day and night. When the union men would drive out to the mill villages a police car would follow. Alford sat in the restaurant whenever the organizer ate; it was not posible to talk to a soul without being observed by either Alford or Mann. Despite this open intimidation some employes signed union application forms and urged others to do so.

Boasted of Beating

The beating of the union organizer in the center of town was carefully staged. Supervisors boasted that the beating would take place later in the day. The men who did the beating were given time off from the plants. Without preliminaries or provocation, two workers set upon the representative, slugged him until his face was bleeding profusely, knocked his head against the pavement and kicked him in the ribs as he lay on the ground.

A soldier made a move to intervene but Alford insisted no one "interfere." A uniformed police officer stood within 10 feet and abused the organizer.

The TWUA man staggered to his feet as Chief Horton came and bundled the organizer and assailants into his car and took all to city hall. The Chief ordered the two workers back to work in the mill. The organizer was placed under arrest.

Chief Horton refused to issue a warrant against the two men.

Labor Spy Confesses

The NLRB record shows Mann recruited and offered to pay workers who would spy on the union representative and inform on fellow workers. At a meeting in city hall Chief Horton and Sheriff Corprew helped to "persuade" one worker, Hudson Murphy, employed at Avondale Mills, to take on the job of a "stool pigeon."

Murphy was instructed to take a room in the hotel from which he could see anyone who came in and out of the organizer's room. Murphy became ashamed of his role and confessed to the TWUA representative. The two men agreed Murphy should continue to pose as a spy and give incorrect or garbled information to the police.

Murphy had great difficulty in collecting pay for spying. After pestering Mann and Horton for days, Murphy finally managed to collect $22, ostensibly for "lost time" in the mill. This money Murphy marked and the union representative presented it at the NLRB hearing.

Mann found a veteran, Roy H. Boddie, working in the Russell Mill, to act as a provocateur. Boddie testified he was offered $100 if he would "pick a fight" with another employe, Ernest Willis, a union sympathizer.

Mann told Boddie to report to personnel director, E. A. Coley of the Russell Co., who would assign him a job next to Willis. Boddie did as directed and was assigned by Coley next to Willis. When he got to know Willis, Boddie decided to could not beat the man up. Instead he quit his job.

The company instigated a crude company union known as The Committee, which the NLRB ordered disbanded. Alford played a role in setting up this "committee," told workers the "company wanted it."

Two-Gun Pete

Alford openly threatened to kill anyone who joined the union. "My gun will belch fire and smoke if I catch anyone joining," Alford frequently shouted. A second TWUA organizer swore Alford threatened to shoot him if he remained in Alexander City.

Employes were told repeatedly by Alford, Mann, Coley and supervisors that the Russells would "close down" the mills if the "union came in." "You will have to choose between John L. Lewis and your job" was one catch phrase used by supervisors. There was constant reiteration to employes that "you will have to work with niggers and wops if you bring in the union."

Formal charges against the company and its agents were filed with the NLRB in September 1947, and a formal hearing took place in December.

As a result of pressures by the employer, the NLRB was unable for some days to find any building in which to conduct hearings. The NLRB was forced to move four times before it was finally allowed to use the city hall.

The NLRB had expected to hold hearings at the city hall. The mayor refused. Then NLRB then rented a hall owned by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, but the post went back on its agreement.

Next the NLRB sought a lodge building owned and operated by the Univ. of Alabama, nine miles from Alexander City. Actually the hearings opened at the Lodge and continued for four days until the manager, V. V. Lowe, ordered the government out.

The next try was a road house . . . the next move was to the federal courthouse at Opelika, 50 miles way. As a last resort the NLRB took over premises a sympathetic property owner had rented to the TWUA. TWUA moved its effects out. By the time counsel for the NLRB had presented his case, the city solicitor offered the use of the city hall, where hearings were concluded.

As Time Goes By . . .

More than 15 months elapsed between the hearings and the decision. The Board sustained the charges, ordered reinstatement with back pay of most of the workers dismissed. The NLRB held the chief of police and Mann and Alford acted as agents of the employer in committing a long list of unfair labor practices.

Within 48 hours the company printed an advertisement in local newspapers announcing it would ignore the Board's order and advising employes and everyone else to treat the ruling as a quaint kind of joke.

The company's attorneys appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals.

On Feb. 9, 1951, the court exonerated the local police and other local "public" officials on the grounds they had not acted in the interest of the employer within the meaning of the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947 (Taft-Hartley), but ordered six persons, found to be discriminatorily discharged, rehired and paid back pay.

The company sought a rehearing, which was granted on May 10, 1951.

On Sept. 13, 1951, the court issued a further decision, in which it knocked out all cases of discrimination.

Union Destroyed

On Nov. 15, 1951, the court handed down a "decree enforcing as modified, an order of the National Labor Relations Board." The company was required to post a notice in its mill saying it would not interfere with the rights of employes to organize, nor recognize the company union and would instruct employes that assaults on TWUA organizers should cease.

Since the local union in Alexander City had been destroyed years before, the TWUA has no way of knowing if even this notice was actually posted.

In any event this formality would not mean a thing to workers obliged to watch the TWUA being driven from the community by threats, violence and vilification.

'We Will Not Comply With NLRB Ruling,' Russell Official Says

Unfair Practices, Interference With CIO Organizers Is Verdict

The Russell Manufacturing Company will not comply with the orders issued April 13 by the National Labor Relations Board in regard to alleged unfair labor practices, in 1945 and 1946, a company official said Monday.

In a ruling handed down by the NLRB, the Russell Manufacturing Company was ordered to reinstate six

CHARGES OF WHICH the company and policemen were found guilty by the 3-man labor relations board are as follows:

Interferring with, restraining and coercing workers in their attemps to join or to remain members of the CIO textile workers.

Domination and interference with the organization and administration of "the committee" which was in effect a company-controlled group.

Discharging four employees, demoting two others and refusing to hire another because of their activities in the union.

Aiding, abetting and approving physical assaults and threats of violence by their employees against union organizers and other employees to discourage them from joining the union.

The board ordered the Russell Mills not to engage in any of these

HERE IS HOW the Russell Manufacturing Co. displayed its contempt for the laws of the United States, and openly proclaimed its defiance of a National Labor Relations Board decision in a CIO Textile Workers case typical of Taft-Hartley operations.

How The Anti-Labor Press Operates In The Mill Towns

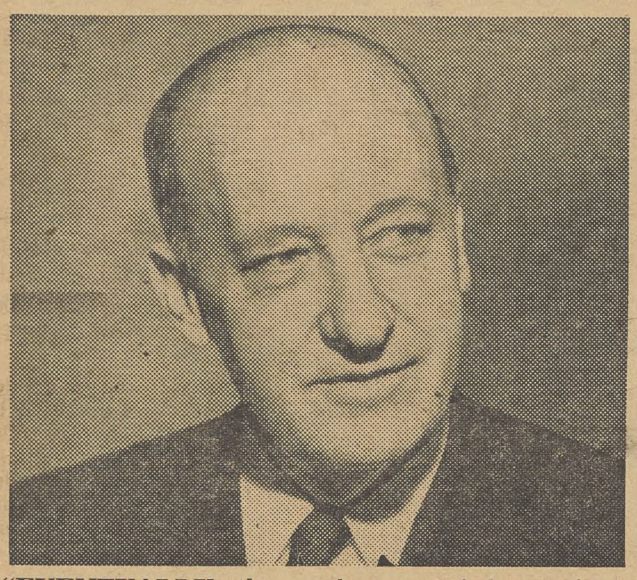
TESTIMONY by the CIO Textile Workers presented to the House Labor Committee revealed the way southern newspapers aid employers in anti-union campaigns. Executive Vice Pres. William Pollock testified:

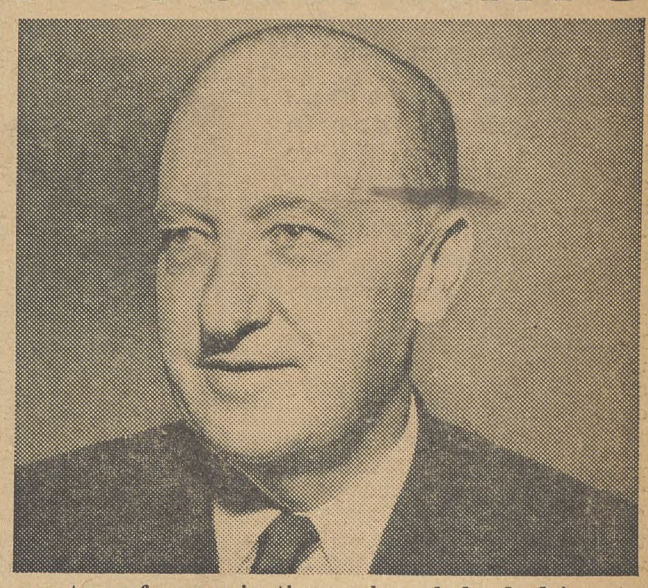
"The typical southern newspaper will seek out and publish, usually on Page 1, every strike story carried by the Associated Press, United Press or International News Service.

"The nation may be enjoying a period in which there are virtually no strikes of any consequence whatever; but if the wires carry a story about 150 workers on strike against a company that makes phonograph needles, you can be sure that readers of the typical small-town, southern newspaper will get the impression that unions are halting the production of atomic bombs."

Union Man Since 1918—

Portrait Of A Man Of Steel—John Riffe





"EVENTUALLY, the workers get fed up with too little pay and too much insecurity and they turn to the union for the answer," says John V. Riffe, CIO's new executive vice president and director of organization, who pledged drive to bring democratic unionism to more workers.

"ORGANIZING the unorganized is a basic mission of the CIO. There are still millions of workers in every part of the country who do not enjoy the benefits of union protection and security.

"I pledge myself to work toward the goal of bringing democratic unionism to more men and women, and to the fulfillment of my deepest aim in life—to bring unionism to the country through the CIO. That was the mission of Philip Murray, of Van Bittner, of Sidney Hillman and of Allan Haywood. I hope to carry on the great tradition which they started."

With those words. John Vernon Riffe took over the post of executive vice president of the CIO—a post which had been vacant since the death last Feb. 21 of "Mr. CIO Himself," the late Allan S. Haywood.

21 Years Organizing

The 49-year-old ex-miner, who assumed the job of CIO's top organizer, has dedicated 21 years to organizing workers into trade unions. His new job, which makes him director of organization and of councils and chairman of the CIO Organizational Policy Committee, represents to John Riffe an extension on a national scale of the organizing activity he has been doing for over two decades.

John Riffe (the name rhymes with "life") was born on Mar. 15, 1904, at Jenkins, in Pike County, Ky. He grew up in the coal mining region around Jenkins, and received a grammar school education in that town.

He was the son of a union man. His father, Gabriel Riffe, was a member of the AFL Carpenters.

John Riffe, like his two brothers, got a job in the coal mines at the age of 14. On Columbus Day, Oct. 12, 1918, he went to work at the Consolidated No. 4 Mine near Jenkins. Within a week, he had joined the Mine Workers and he has carried a union card ever since.

'Honest Persuasion'

His first job in the mine was as a trapper. Not long afterwards, he "graduated" to driving mules in the mine.

Looking back on that early job experience, John Riffe says:

"I learned a good deal about stubborn employers from those mules. But I found that a mule can change his mind—and during the years of organizing. I have found that a lot of stubborn employers, when they get to see the advantages of democratic collective bargaining, have changed their minds, too. Mules and employers, I find, will sometimes listen to honest and gentle persuasion!"

In 1932, Riffe began a long and close association with the late Van A. Bittner, one of the great union organizers in American trade union history. Bittner at that time was president of Dist. 17 of the Mine Workers, in West Virginia. In 1939, he appointed Riffe a Dist. 17 representative.

After three years of acting as a Miners district representative, Riffe moved to Chicago in the summer of 1936 to become a member of the staff of the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, the forerunner of the present United Steelworkers of America.

Riffe served as a sub-regional director in the Chicago steel area, under Bittner's direction. Later, as SWOC assistant director in the Mid-West, Riffe traveled to many of the nation's steel centers to continue the work of organizing the unorganized in the basic steel industry.

In 1938, he served for a year as acting director of Dist. 32 of the Steelworkers in Milwaukee, Wisc. In 1939, he went to California as director of USA-CIO Dist. 38. In that year, he was instrumental in increasing the steel union membership in Dist. 38, from 2200 to 22,000.

In 1940, Bittner was assigned by the late Philip Murray—CIO and Steelworkers president—to direct organizing of the farflung Bethlehem Steel properties. Riffle was drafted by Bittner as his assistant in this campaign.

The Southern Drive

When it was over, they had helped negotiate the first union contract with Bethlehem—the overwhelming majority of Bethlehem's 70,000 employes were members of the CIO.

When the Bethlehem campaign was completed, Riffe directed organizing activities for the Steelworkers at the American Rolling Mills in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Maryland and Ohio. He also found time to serve as a labor member of the Regional War Labor Board in Cincinnati.

In 1946, the CIO established its Organizing Committee to bring democratic industrial unionism to the workers of the Southern states. Bittner was the chairman of that committee and Riffe was his right-hand assistant from the very beginning.

In 1950, Riffe became director of the committee.

"The CIO's drive in the South has brought thousands of members into our unions," Riffe points out. "We have signed an impressive number of union contracts in plants that once were unorganized and where the workers were completely without representation.

"I have no patience with some calamity howlers who think that the CIO drive in the South has been unsuccessful because it has had failures as well as successes. Patience, however, is a major ingredient in successful organizing work.

"I have patience and I want my staff to have patience. That doesn't mean that I will tolerate lack of activity by union organizers. They have a job to do and they have responsibility to see that every penny of union organizing funds is spent to get constructive results.

Not Done In A Day

"But a good organizer knows that if Rome wasn't built in a day, most factories aren't organized in a day either.

"The Southern states are in the midst of a tremendous industrial revolution. Standards of living have risen in considerable degree because of the higher wages we have been able to win for CIO members.

"Thousands of workers in Dixie have learned the advantages of belonging to a democratic trade union. No amount of repression or false propaganda or wishful thinking is going to keep the great majority of Southern workers out of the unions in the years ahead. An anti-union employer in the South isn't different from an anti-union employer anywhere else. But it is not just a question of fighting the employers, it is a question of fighting for what is right.

"Eventually, the workers get fed up with too little pay and too much insecurity and they turn to the union for the answer. I have been saying that for 35 years, and I hope to be showing workers for another 35 years to come that that statement is right and true."

Democrats Win In St. Louis; GOP Takes Michigan Contests

DEMOCRATS last week celebrated their biggest plurality in St. Louis history, as they won easily in a nationally significant city election there.

Raymond Tucker, the Democratic mayorality candidate, in a thumping 61,433-vote margin over Republican real estate dealer Carl Stifel. Democrats won 11 of 14 aldermanic contests and in one of the three GOP wards the Republican candidate had only a shaky five-vote lead.

On the West Coast, Mayor Fletcher Bowron of Los Angeles, supported by CIO, trailed Rep. Morris Poulson in the city primary election. One of the major issues was public housing, with the real estate lobby battling Bowron because of his pro-public housing position.

A run-off election on May 26 will pit the five-term Republican Congressman against the Republican who has been mayor since 1938, winning reelection three times.

In Michigan, Republicans swept to victory in major races featuring the State's biennial spring elections. Former Gov. Harry Kelly, Republican, came out of political obscurity to win a Michigan Supreme Court seat, raising speculation that he might run for the U. S. Senate in 1954.

'Nylon Curtain'

CIO Names DuPont In A-Bomb Blacklist Case

By JULES WEINBERG

FORMAL CHARGES were filed with the National Labor Relations Board last week to prevent the DuPont Corp. from using its Savannah River H-Bomb plant as a test case for swinging labor back to the days of labor spies and private company armies.

That announcement was made by L. P. Vaughan, South Carolina CIO regional director, who said the charges were in addition to recent demands for government investigation of plant safety standards at the Aiken, S. C., installation.

DuPont wrecked its safety standards by firing 27 CIO Chemical Workers, employed as protective firemen, shortly after the Chemical Workers defeated the AFL by a 40-to-1 margin in an NLRB election.

VAUGHAN cited DuPont's interference in the distribution of union literature and causing the arrest of four CIO representatives by company police.

This denial of free speech to workers was halted by the Atomic Energy Commission, following an official protest to the attorney-general and the AEC by James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer.

"But the time has come," Vaughan said, "to go beyond mere investigations and to strip away the nylon curtain DuPont has hung around the Savannah River project."

Vaughan charged further that company layoffs of protective firemen, who had voted for the CIO, was calculated to influence the representation election among 1400 operation workers in the completed section of the plant.

THIS NLRB election has been scheduled for Apr. 16 and 17 and the union reported that five of the men "laid off" were members of the union's negotiating committee.

Vaughan, in filing the unfair labor practice charges with the NLRB charges, cited cases of discrimination in hiring and questioning of prospective employes about union affiliation. DuPont has been operating an anti-union blacklist, CIO had previously charged.

"DuPont is trying to use the Savannah River project as a pawn in a vast anti-union game," Vaughan said. "We don't intend to let them get away with it."

'Economic, Spiritual Welfare'—

Church, Labor Bonds Strengthened At Meet

By MILTON PLUMB

RELIGION'S common bonds with organized labor in building a free world were emphasized last week at the annual convention of the National Religion and Labor Foundation in Cincinnati.

The unity of the two movements, CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told the delegates, rests upon their joint belief in the essential dignity and spirituality of mankind.

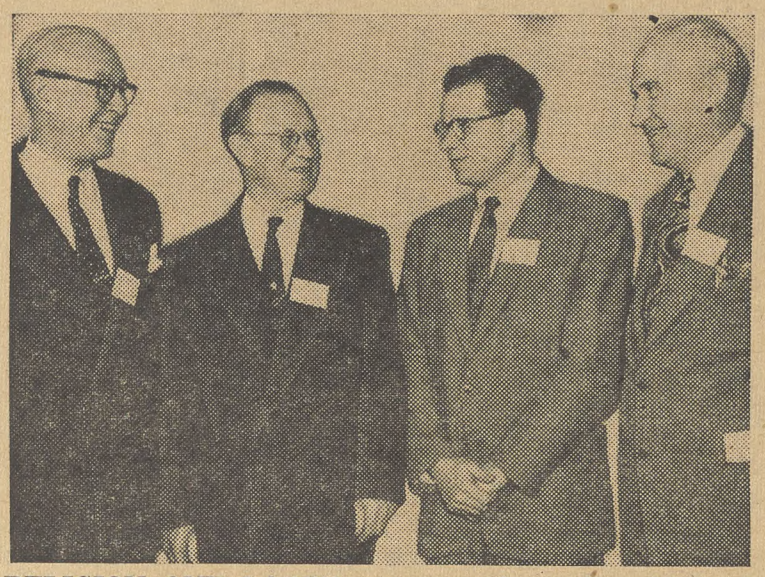
"My own system of ethics is rather simple," Kroll declared. "I believe in people, and therefore that everything which contributes to the extension of their welfare and natural rights is good and the reverse, evil."

CIO'S POLITICAL action stems from its desire to have good people in office, he said, since the daily life of all is affected by the actions of elected officials.

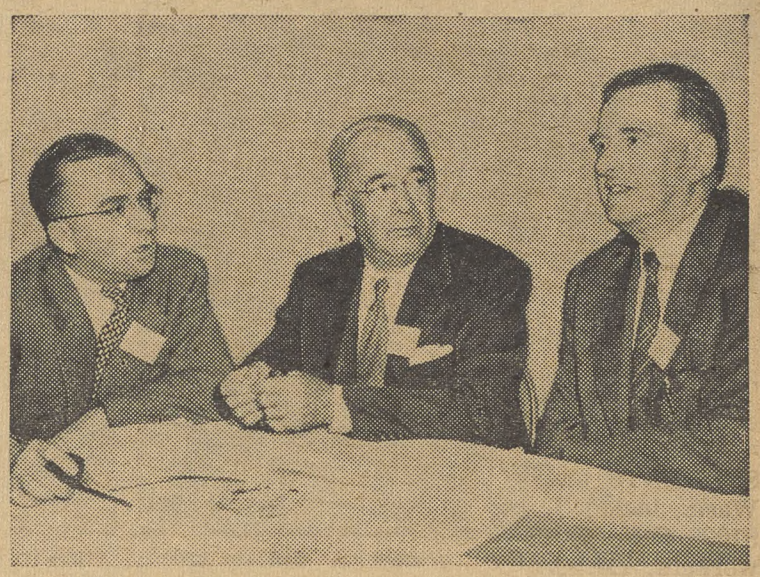
"You cannot say you will serve a man's soul and ignore his economic status," Kroll observed. "We of labor believe that as we better man's economic status we administer to his spiritual welfare."

Roy Reuther—representing his brother, CIO Pres. Walter Reuther, who is a member of the NLRF executive board—called for more cooperation between the churches and labor in support of programs for the economic betterment of mankind.

"If we do not want a world fashioned in the image of Malenkov, McCormick or McCarthy," he said, "we must unite the liberal, progressive forces of religion and labor behind a program of action for democracy and freedom.



RELIGION AND LABOR representatives who addressed NRLF convention are, in usual order, N. Y. Industrial Relations Consultant Dwight J. Bradley; the Rev. Witherspoon Dodge, NRLF executive director; Roy Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers; and NRLF Chairman John G. Ramsey.



DISCUSSION LEADERS Ben Segal, CIO associate education director (left), and Ohio CIO Education Director Orville Jones (right) discuss program of National Religion and Labor Foundation with CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, who gave keynote luncheon address at Cincinnati meeting.

"Organized religion and free labor can only survive in this great struggle against tyranny if we roll up our sleeves and join the day-to-day fight for social justice in the community."

HOWARD Univ. Pres. Mordecai W. Johnson, who shared the platform with Reuther, warned that there is a growing danger that religion will desert labor and align itself with reaction in order to escape the reactionary attacks being made upon it.

"If religion should stand aloof and allow American labor to be pushed aside," he said, "it would commit suicide. The power of the church lies only in the embodiment within her of a radical, ethical sincerity and dedication to the betterment of human life."

More than 100 clergymen of all faiths participated in the two-day meeting. There were about the same number of delegates from all branches of organized labor.

Others active in the running conference were Ben Segal, associate education director of the CIO; Orville Jones, director of education for the Ohio CIO Council, and NRLF Chairman John G. Ramsey, director of community relations for CIO's Southern Organizing Committee. Each presided over a convention general session.

CHAIRMEN and consultants of the three commissions also included the following CIO representatives: Al Herman of the Ohio State CIO; Harry Read of the National CIO; Lucy Randolph Mason, Morton Elder and NRLF Treasurer Waldo E. Rasnake, all of the Southern Organizing Committee; Charles Webber, president of the Virginia CIO; Al Whitehouse, district director of CIO Steelworkers.

Al Jordan of the Cincinnati CIO; George DeNucci, Ohio CIO regional director; George A. Crago of CIO Chemical Workers; Emma Ferrari of CIO Clothing Workers; William Akos of CIO Glass Workers, and John Nichols of CIO Brewery Workers.

CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald and Jones were among those newly elected to the NLRF executive board, and CIO board members re-elected include Webber, Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO, and Joseph Schlossberg of the CIO Clothing Workers. Ramsay and Rasnake were also re-elected to office for another year.

Murray, Green Honored By Church-Labor Group

PHILIP MURRAY and William Green last week were posthumously named winners of the 1952 Social Justice Award of the National Religion and Labor Foundation.

The founder and donor of the award, Dr. Jerome Davis, made the presentation to representatives of the late presidents of the CIO and AFL at the foundations's annual convention banquet in Cincinnati. He termed the two men, who died last year, "two of the world's greatest labor leaders."

"The lives of both illustrate the fact that in America men can rise from the humblest of backgrounds to position of world responsibility," Davis said. "They are an inspiration to all of us to follow in their footsteps in the search for both the spiritual and material blessings of this life."

Roy Reuther, who accepted the award to Murray on behalf of the CIO, recalled that Murray had served on the committee that the NRLF set up to pick the first winner of the award.

"THE WORLD is incomparably better off because these two men lived," Reuther said.

Mrs. Clarence E. Scarr and Mrs. H. A. Scott, daughters of the late AFL leader, accepted the award on behalf of their father, and Glenn Atkinson, assistant to the president of the Railway Clerks, voiced thanks for the AFL.

High-Tariff GOP Wars On Reciprocal Trade

HIGH-TARIFF Republicans who haven't been able to forget the party's traditional protectionist viewpoint opened fire on the reciprocal trade agreements program last week.

The opening gun was fired by Rep. Simpson (R. Pa.), who introduced a bill that would continue the protective coloration of the reciprocal trade program name, but could so hamstring its operations as to make them virtually ineffective.

Simpson is third ranking GOP member of the House Ways and Means Committee. The chairman, Rep. Reed (D. N.Y.), father of the Administration - opposed tax cut bill, endorsed Simpson's measure and scheduled hearings to start Apr. 22. Other advocates of high tariffs also supported it.

PRES. EISENHOWER wants the law extended for a year without change pending a "comprehensive reexamination" of U. S. foreign economic policy. Speaker Martin asked his protectionist-minded GOP colleagues to abandon their plan of clamping restrictions on the extension.

Senate protectionists were getting into the act, too.

Sen. Watkins (R. Utah) said westerners will fight for higher tariffs to protect their wool and mining industries even if "they may call us isolationists."

They want either an outright assurance from Eisenhower that he will order higher rates where necessary to protect wool, zinc and lead, or authority for the Federal Tariff Commission to cancel preferred rates when U.S. producers can show major damage.

SIMPSON'S bill would continue the program for a year beyond its expiration on June 12. It would kill the authority of the President to use his own discretion on accepting recommendations of the Federal Tariff Commission in the negotiation of new agreements, and require him to follow them.

It would also require him, instead of permit him, to invoke the escape clause when the tariff commission finds damage or threatened damage to domestic industry through the operation of a reciprocal trade agreement.

In addition, it would put crude petroleum and residual oil under a quota system, and prohibit agreements cutting import levies on lead and zinc.

Rep. Smith (D. Miss.) introduced a bill renewing the act for three years and restoring it to the form in which it operated from its start in 1934 to 1947-8. This would take the FTC out of the picture completely.

U. S. Jury Indicts MCS President

Hugh Bryson, president of the CIO-expelled Marine Cooks & Stewards Union, was indicted last week in San Francisco. A federal grand jury charged him with perjury in filing a non-Communist affidavit under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The jury also charged him with lieing in saying he wasn't affiliated with the Communist Party. The MCS was expelled from CIO some three years ago because of long-standing Communist domination.

CIO Asks St. Lawrence Power Project Okeh

THE RIGHTS of consumers in New England and elsewhere to share in the industrial benefits of cheap electric power should be protected in St. Lawrence Seaway legislation, the Massachusetts CIO told Pres. Eisenhower last week.

J. William Belanger, president of the State CIO Council, asked the President to "urge upon Congress the absolute necessity of legislating in advance to assure New England a fair share of the large block of low-cost power that can and should be generated by this project."

Nine House and four Senate measures have been introduced on the question of U. S. participation with Canada in constructing the seaway. Hearings are scheduled to begin Apr. 14 before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

SENATE Majority Leader Taft said that the White House will not make its views known before the hearings are completed.

The committee's chairman, Sen. Wiley (R. Wis.), is sponsoring a bill that would authorize U. S. participation only in construction of the seaway and would make no provision for power development.

New York State asked the Federal Power Commission for permission to undertake the power project on the American side.

Rep. Roosevelt (D. N.Y.) acted at once to prevent "monopoly distribution by private interests" by introducing a bill requiring the FPC to insist that preference in the sale of power be given to public bodies and cooperatives.

SEN. LEHMAN (D. N.Y.) and nine other senators have introduced a bill that includes all provisions of the Wiley measure but also authorizes federal participation in the power development phases of the project.

The CIO Clothing Workers, supporting the Lehman bill, said it was necessary to "safeguard for all the people" the tremendous benefits that would be available.

"If the power of the St. Lawrence, and later the power of Niagara Falls, are to be frittered away under license, no substantial savings in costs to power consumers in the Northeast can be expected," the ACWA said.

CIO Gives $25,000 In Drive For Free World Labor Fund

A CAMPAIGN to raise money for the CIO Free World Labor Fund, intended to help free trade unions of the world strengthen themselves, was touched off by the CIO Executive Board at its meeting in Washington last week.

The board formally designated the fund as the agency to receive contributions made during the campaign. And the board made the first gift by appropriating $25,000 from the CIO treasury.

The money raised will be used to help democratic unions overseas in their educational and organizational work. It will be spent either directly by the National CIO, or through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

THE CAMPAIGN was authorized by the National CIO convention in Atlantic City last December. In getting the fund started, the Executive Board called on all affiliates and their locals to contribute to it "and further its purpose to the best of their ability."

In a follow-up letter to international unions, CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther seconded the plea and named John Brophy, veteran CIO leader, as coordinator of the fund-raising drive.

"In the labor movement we are well aware that well-intended resolutions are not enough," Reuther reminded the international unions.

"MORAL and political support alone will not do. Practical financial assistance is needed—the kind of assistance that will help our friends organize, staff, build and extend their unions.

"They need those things which we in America sometimes take for granted—pencils, paper, typewriters, mimeograph machines, training for and assistance to organizers, printed materials—the very elementary tools of trade union organization and administration.

"This costs money—a lot of money. I am appealing, therefore, to you and to every union in the CIO to take part in this campaign."

The fund was set up on the recommendation of the CIO International Committee of which Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, is chairman.

THE MONEY will be spent for the same purpose that in 1951 prompted the ICFTU to raise a fund of $700,000 to promote free trade unionism throughout the world. The CIO made an initial contribution of $100,000. Labor centrals in other countries helped swell the fund.

The ICFTU used part of the money to set up an Asian Trade Union College in Calcutta, India, to train potential union leaders in a part of the world where the labor movement is young, weak and inexperienced. The second group of students, representing a dozen countries, is now in the midst of its training.

Plans have been drawn to open ICFTU offices in Accra, in the Gold Coast of West Africa, and at Beirut, Lebanon. A one-month training course for English-speaking students was recently given at Christiansborg, near Accra, under ICFTU auspices.

Oil Criminal Case Dropped By Brownell

THE JUSTICE Dept. last week decided that it won't press criminal charges against the five American oil firms under investigation by a federal grand jury for their dealings as part of an international oil cartel.

Former Pres. Truman earlier offered to do the same thing provided the oil firms would cooperate in developing all the facts needed to carry through a civil suit to recover $67 million allegedly overcharged the government. The companies refused, despite Truman's warning that if the government is forced to subpoena certain documents, national security would be jeopardized.

In announcing that he plans to recommend to the federal court in Washington that the criminal charges be dropped, Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell also said that his department has decided definitely to prosecute the oil firms through a civil anti-trust suit.

AFTER FILING the civil suit, Brownell said, the Justice Dept. will ask the court to direct the companies to produce the documents but that a screening committee be set up to prevent public disclosure of those which might endanger national security.

This would leave the companies in about the same position they would have been in had they accepted Truman's offer. If the court approves the department's request, they would have to produce the documents they refused to surrender voluntarily.

Ike Condemns Tax Dodge Plan

Pres. Eisenhower again has condemned the drive in state legislatures for the "millionaires' amendment" setting a 25% limit on U. S. income taxes.

In a letter to Ohio State Sen. Anthony Celebrezze, of Cleveland, the President warned the proposal "would endanger the country's financial structure."

CIO-Builders Go To School In Far West

THE TECHNIQUES of building stronger unions and playing a greater role in community leadership were carried to scores of CIO members at education conferences held under national and local CIO sponsorship in four major far western cities.

The meetings were held in Salt Lake City, Utah; Seattle, Wash.; Portland, Ore., and San Francisco, Cal. Ben Segal, National CIO associate director of education, headed the faculty at all four. Mrs. Ruth Miller, education director for the CIO Clothing Workers in Los Angeles, assisted in the three coastal cities.

The first session was held in Salt Lake City. Segal reported on the legislative situation in Congress and CIO Reg. Dir. Clarence Palmer on the situation in the State. The group was divided into two sections after a general discussion of the Taft-Hartley Act.

UNDER THE leadership of Segal and Ronald Hale, area director of the CIO Communications Workers, they discussed stewards' training problems and parliamentary law. Later the groups switched subjects. International affairs also were discussed, while Rex Mainard, of the CIO Auto Workers, led a session on the attacks on education.

At Seattle, State CIO Sec. Harold Slater joined with Segal and Mrs. Miller to lead discussions on national and state legislation, how to make unions work better, and international affairs.

That program was repeated at Portland, with State CIO Sec. George Brown discussing the Oregon legislative situation.

It was also similar to that at San Francisco. In addition, Segal discussed what is ahead for organized labor, and one session was devoted to attacks on the schools.

Workshops were held on community services, steward training, union administration, union education and parliamentary law.

Pennsylvania CIO Meets—

'We'll Have More Muscle On Defensive,' Carey Says

ORGANIZED labor is on the defensive as never before, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the 16th annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council in Philadelphia last week.

"No force can destroy the democratic American labor movement without destroying American democracy also," he declared. "The two are indivisible."

Being on the defensive, said Carey, "will give us more muscle."

"We're going to have to use more muscle, more brains, more devotion and more self-sacrifice than ever before to defend what we have and to advance to new gains," he added.

"I don't care if it's reactionary employers, or the new Republican Administration, or a combination of both. No one can try to suppress the democratic labor movement in America without having it explode underneath them.

"We can outwait the McCarthys, the union-hating employers, and corporate reaction. Democratic labor has always eventually won, and we'll continue to win."

Pres. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers announced that his union has assigned four legislative representatives to work at the state level. They will function in each state where the USA's 31 district's operate, he explained, and will be concerned principally with industrial health, safety, unemployment compensation and fair employment practices.

HE ALSO declared that Pres. Eisenhower "should do something about the annual wage," which both the USA-CIO and the CIO Auto Workers have made major objectives.

Other speakers included Council Pres. Harry Boyer, who warned against a State sales tax and flat income tax; Dist. Dir. William Hargadine, Jr., of the U. S. Wage-Hour Div., and Moshe Bitan, representative of the Israel Federation of Labor in the United States.

CIO, Mexican Unions Confer On Migrants

A JOINT conference on problems of mutual concern to U. S. and Mexican workers will be held between the CIO and the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM) in El Paso, Tex., and Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, on Apr. 14 and 15.

The meeting was first proposed by the late Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president and director of organization, who had planned to attend. His successor, John V. Riffe, designated R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, to head the CIO delegation.

Others in the CIO group will include Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon, Arizona-New Mexico; Reg. Dir. Irwin L. DeShetler, Southern California; Acting Reg. Dir. C. A. McPeak, Texas; Assistant Reg. Dir. William Smith, Florida; James Smith, Salinas, Cal., president of LIU 78, composed of field and packing shed workers in California and Arizona; and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, director of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee.

Leading the CTM group will be Sec.-Treas. Fidel Velasquez, one of the outstanding leaders of the democratic Latin American labor movement, who played a major role in leading the one million CTM members into the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and its Regional Organization of American Workers (ORIT).

VELASQUEZ is a member of the CTM Dairy Workers Union and formerly served in the Mexican Senate. Accompanying him will be six CTM state directors.

Schwarz said the conference will attempt to develop a closer working relationship on matters of mutual interest. On the agenda for discussion, he said, are the general status of Mexican workers; discrimination against Mexicans in this country; the so-called "wetback" problem, and the use of Mexican farm labor in the U.S.

The wages and working conditions of Mexican industrial labor are matters of growing concern to CIO members, he pointed out. Many American firms have established factories below the border for the manufacture of products formerly made in this country. The lower wages paid Mexican workers, he added, help put them in direct competition with U.S. workers.

Big Steel's Own Report Shows How Unions Aid Labor

A SECTION of the U. S. Steel Corp.'s annual report for 1952 contains a section headed "U. S. Steel's Operating Story 1910-1952" which brings out clearly the progress made by organized labor in the steel industry.

The chart shows, among other things, that in 1910 wages were $15.33 a week, 22.4c an hour, and weekly hours worked were 68.4.

In 1952, wages were $78.53 a week, $2.265 an hour, and weekly hours worked were 34.7 —and that's thanks to the CIO Steelworkers.

Who says unions don't help workers?

'Let The Buyer Beware' Policy Develops In GOP Firing Case

"LET THE BUYER beware." That seems to be the policy of the new GOP Administration, according to the doctrine being preached by Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks.

Growing out of the controversy over the firing of Dr. Allen V. Astin, head of the Bureau of Standards, this may bring a change after 40 years of government concern that consumers be protected from shady advertising practices of some businessmen.

Astin was fired because he refused to kill a factual scientific report showing a powder, supposed to increase the life of batteries, didn't work.

Weeks, who believes businessmen should be allowed to make any claims they want for their product and sell it to an unsuspecting public, wanted the report killed. Astin, who believes a scientific fact is a fact, refused. Astin, a Republican who served during 20 years of Democratic rule, was soon out of a job.

His march to the political guillotine revealed the new Administration policy. According to Weeks, unless the product is a food or drug intended for human consumption, the buyer should risk his money on the perhaps unfounded and certainly untested claim of the manufacturer.

Beyond the ability to fire scientists who will not supress laboratory reports demonstrating a product isn't all it is claimed, Weeks also wants control over the Federal Trade Commission. Now an independent agency, the FTC was set up in 1914 to check the truth of advertisements and the Bureau of Standards, with a long reputation for scientific accuracy, did its laboratory work.

Whether Weeks will get that power remains to be seen. Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.) and the Federation of American Scientists want a congressional investigation of the Astin ouster and the scientists want a technical investigation of the battery dope to determine whether Astin or the politicians were the better scientists.

Astin has repeatedly asked for such an independent test. Weeks is silent on the subject.

U. S. Fight On Chemicals In Bread Won

ONE BATTLE to protect consumers was won last week when the U. S. Supreme Court upheld a decision issued by the Federal Security Agency during the Truman Administration.

That court upheld an order banning the use of chemical softeners in bread. Technically, the Supreme Court refused to review a nearly year-old ban issued by a lower court.

OSCAR EWING, former head of FSA, in issuing the ban said the softness which the chemical agents caused had nothing to do with the age of the bread or its freshness and thus deceives the buyer.

Ewing also said the chemical contains "residues of known poisonous glycols" and that tests had not established that bread so treated is harmless.

Wholesale and retail bakers did not fight the order but two manufacturers — Atlas Powder Co. and Glyco Products Co.—did. It was their order which the court refused to review.

However, the Food and Drug Administration said they will not institute action to enforce the ban, until another legal test, now pending in the St. Louis court of appeals, is settled. It promised to push for early action in the St. Louis case.

Housewife's 'Bargain' Leads To Oleo 'Butterleggers'

MILLIONS of pounds of oleo have been sold for butter at four times the cost, according to the U.S. Food & Drug Administration.

FDA's drive against "butterlegging" has resulted so far in two convictions, three other cases pending and more under investigation.

So far, the racket has been uncovered only in the metropolitan New York and northern New Jersey areas, but the leads are taking FDA investigators into other states.

The first indictments were handed down against Temp-Tee Foods, Inc., the Bronx; Louis and Harold Alpert, officers of the firm, and Sol Abramson, a supplier who had been enjoined from the practice by a federal court a year earlier.

THEY PLEADED not guilty, and trial was set for Apr. 21. Maximum penalties, on conviction, would be a $10,000 fine and three years in jail on each count.

FDA said Abramson delivered more than a quarter of a million pounds of oleomargarine to Temp-Tee Foods last year. In their first inspection of the Temp-Tee plant, FDA men were unable to find anything wrong, but a glance at the outside of the building showed them why:

The outside was much larger than the inside. Another inspection revealed a concealed room equipped with machinery for processing oleo (mixing in a small amount of butter for texture) for repacking as butter. Operations were carried on at night, and the "butter" was delivered by day to a multitude of small local grocery stores in the New York area.

Henry August and his August Food Products Co., Newark, N. J., pleaded guilty to selling oleo as butter. Each was fined $500. Awaiting action is Morris Abramson (no relation to Sol), alias Murray Abramson, alias George Murray, of Newark.

THE TRAIL to Morris Abramson began when an FDA inspector was dining at the home of friends. His hostess was proud of the "bargain" she got in a tasty, unique kind of "butter."

The inspector thought it tasted like oleo, went to the grocer and bought several pounds of the "butter," which had an unfamiliar brand name and was selling at several cents below the regular price for real butter. Analysis confirmed his suspicions, and the search for the source led eventually to Abramson. (LPA)

"They look like nice young men. I can see the Amalgamated union label in his suit."

Art Exhibition Is Planned For Union Members

THE NEW YORK Public Library has announced its second annual exhibition of arts and crafts for trade union members will open Apr. 23 at the Agricultural League of New York, 115 East 40th St., New York City.

Union members living anywhere in the U. S. can enter the show if their union has headquarters in New York City and is willing to sponsor an exhibit for them and other members.

Interested members and unions should address Mrs. Dorothy Kuhn Oko, Library Service to Trade Unions, New York Public Library, 42nd St. and Fifth Ave., New York 18, New York.

Sunday School Week Supported By CIO

CIO support of National Sunday School Week, to be observed Apr. 13-19, has been voiced by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He said "regular religious instruction and inspiration in the church of their choice provides the broad moral base our youngsters must have to meet the responsibilities which will be theirs in the future."

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

THIS DEPARTMENT has been asked a number of questions about how and where working families might invest savings, with reference to U. S. savings bonds.

For maximum safety combined with fair earnings, U. S. Series E bonds are still hard to beat although savings bank and building-and-loan dividends have been catching up to and in some cases passing the 3% earnings offered by the bonds.

One advantage the bonds have over other forms of savings is that if handled right they can be the poor man's tax-exempt security. As you may know, well-to-do investors these days are very interested in tax-exempt bonds issued by state and city governments. A return of 2.5% on muncipal bonds for an upper-bracket taxpayer is the equivalent of 4.5% to 5% return from other investments.

In these days of high taxes on moderate income families, this becomes a factor for them too although of course to a much less extent. But if a working family loses 22 to 24% of the interest earned by its small savings it feels the bite just as keenly as a man who pays out 50% of his investment earnings in taxes.

Reuther Aids Bond Drive

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther has been named by Sec. of the Treasury George M. Humphrey to succeed the late Philip Murray as national chairman of the CIO Labor Advisory Committee on U. S. Savings Bonds.

The committee advises with the Secretary on the bond program and helps coordinate sales among CIO members. Serving with Reuther are CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, and Pres. Emil Rieve of the Textile Workers.

The advantage of the "E" bonds is that you have an option of reporting the increase in value each year as it accrues (as shown on the back of the bond) or you can wait to report the entire increase the year you cash the bonds.

Advantage Of Bonds

For example, if you bought a $100 bond for $75 in 1943 and cashed it when it matured this year you are obliged to report the $25 of increased value as 1953 income and pay tax on it. But if you let the bond remain uncashed even after maturity, so it will earn further interest as Series E bonds do, you won't have to declare any interest income on it until you finally do cash it.

Thus you could hold an E bond for as long as 20 years on a tax-exempt basis. If you're holding such bonds for retirement or as a backlog against unemployment, you probably would have little other taxable income at the time you do cash it and so may escape paying any tax at all on the accrued interest. (But if you expect to cash a lot of bonds at one time while you're still working, as for some major purchase, then you may have a lot of extra income to declare in a single year which could be costly tax-wise.)

Advice On Taxes

You may at any time elect to report each year the annual increase in value of the bonds, but if you do, you have to report the entire increase to date and must continue to report the annual increase each year. If you're already reporting bond interest each year, you have to continue to do so unless you get permission from the Internal Revenue Bureau to change. This may be advisable if you are holding the bonds for retirement. (Note that interest from U. S. savings bonds bought before Mar. 1, 1941 is not taxable. Some people unnecessarily pay tax on the increase in value of these older bonds when they cash them in.)

Incidentally, interest earned by savings in your children's names whether bank accounts, bonds or securities, is not taxable either, as long as a child doesn't have total income from all sources of more than $600 a year.

Your Home Loan Will Cost More; U. S. Ups Interest Rate

THE COST of borrowing money to finance buying or construction of a house or the purchase of an auto is going to jump soon.

Next month, the Treasury will begin selling a new type of government bond. It will pay 3.25% interest, the highest rate since 1941, and will not become due for 30 years, the longest term for a government issue since 1933.

The higher interest rate and longer term mean that investment money will be sunk in new bonds and stay there, according to economists. This, in turn, means that less money will be available for borrowing by home builders and installment purchasers, and that those who have it to lend can demand higher interest.

Since the bonds will be sold principally to savings banks, insurance companies and other large holders of personal savings, it means that the rich will get richer while the average worker will continue to buy defense bonds yielding a lower interest rate.

The government expects to sell half of a $2 billion issue on May 1. The higher interest rate and longer term is the Republican idea of how to borrow money to keep the government operating with a "minimum" inflationary effect.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

I WOULD LIKE to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks to the officers of our international unions and to the officers of National CIO in selecting me as executive vice president.

I want CIO members everywhere to know that I will do all in my power to work and to cooperate with all our international unions, state and local councils and staff throughout the country in building a stronger, bigger CIO.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO Auto Workers won a representation election at the Chrysler Tank Engine Plant, New Orleans, La., covering the office, clerical, technical and professional employes. The vote was: UAW-CIO 143, no union 58. UAW Reps. Carl Jones and Tom Connole conducted the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn reports that in a representation election held among the machinists, tool and die makers at the Western Can Co., San Francisco, Cal., the vote favored the CIO Steelworkers by 18 to three for the AFL, with 12 votes for neither.

Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that the UAW-CIO won a representation election at the Palmer Manufacturing Co., Phoenix, Ariz., by a vote of 127 to six for the AFL Sheet Metal Workers, seven for the AFL Machinists, 50 no union and 16 challenged ballots. Intl. Rep. William Gillespie, assisted by Ann Tinnon of the CIO staff, directed the campaign.

★

REG. DIR. GEORGE DeNUCCI reports that in a representation election at the Hercules Trousers Co., Jackson, O., the workers favored the CIO Clothing Workers by a vote of 100 to 40. The company also agreed without an election to recognize the Clothing Workers at their plants located in Hillsboro and Manchester, O. Each plant employs around 200 workers. ACWA Reps. Earl Graham and Bill Becker handled the organizational efforts at these plants.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that workers at the Cargill Grain Elevator, Memphis, Tenn., favored the CIO Brewery Workers by a unanimous vote. Brewery Rep. Robert Howell conducted this campaign.

The CIO Organizing Committee reports the following representation election victories: Borden Co., Lakeshire Marty Co. Div., Atlanta, Ga., CIO Retail-Wholesale 55, no union 53; Willis Lumber Co., Bainbridge, Ga., CIO Woodworkers 96, no union 33; Mathieson-Alabama Chemical Corp., McIntosh, Ala., CIO Chemical Workers 43, no union 42.

URW Sets Pace In New Medical Insurance Won At U. S. Rubber

SOME 35,000 members of the CIO Rubber Workers went back to work in 19 U. S. Rubber Co. plants last week after closing them for two days with a strike that brought speedy settlement of a new basic contract.

As part of the settlement, the company also reopened a five-year insurance plan agreement signed in 1950 and yielded what URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster hailed as the "largest company-financed, comprehensive medical insurance plan ever negotiated by a CIO union."

He described it as a "precedent-making move that can have vast implications for workers in mass production industry in this country." He also said the reopening made the union the first "to crack industry's stand against reopening long-term agreements."

Company officials said the pact was reopened in 'the interest of improving relations between the company and its employes, who are scattered throughout the country.

The basic contract settlement included agreement on a method of resolving troublesome differences over determination of incentive pay rates; negotiations on intra-plant inequities; improvements in the grievance machinery, and two weeks' vacations after three years' service instead of the previous five.

The settlement did not cover wages, which are negotiated separately. The new pact is subject to ratification by a majority of the 19 locals. It expires Mar. 31, 1955, and contains a 60-day reopening clause with the right to cancel the whole agreement if there is no settlement.

3 N. Y. Store Unions Push Merger Plans

THREE UNIONS in related fields, all now operating separately, last week moved closer to unity within the CIO.

They are the Distributive, Processing and Office Workers; the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, CIO, and the United Department Store Workers of America, CIO.

Representatives of the three groups—with an estimated 135,000 members—met at the offices of Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO, who was asked recently by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther to handle details of the merger.

AFTER A two-hour meeting, they issued a statement reporting unanimous agreement "on the desirability of a merger as soon as feasible."

R. J. Thomas, representing the National CIO, Hollander and representatives of the groups indicated that unity was almost a foregone conclusion. Only administrative and organizational details remain to be worked out and these will be taken up at another meeting on Apr. 23.

The majority of DPO members left the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in the early postwar days as a result of internal differences. After CIO expelled the Communist-dominated unions, the ousted Food & Tobacco Workers and the United Office & Professional Workers attempted an unsuccessful marriage with the DPO.

MOST OF THE members represented by these two expelled unions returned to CIO and today little remains of them. The DPO, once considered left wing, later came under heavy attack from the Daily Worker and the Communist Party.

CIO leaders in New York, who have closely observed the union, are now convinced any links it may have had with the Communists have been long ruptured.

Pete Mosele Honored By CIO, Steel Union Friends

HUNDREDS of his union friends turned out last week to honor 69-year old Pete Mosele, who retired recently as New York Dist. 2 director of the CIO Steelworkers.

A host of messages praised Mosele for a wide variety of services to the cause of building unions.

Messages were received from CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers and many others.

Throughout the evening, phrases like "deep gratitude," "great respect," "loyalty" and "modesty" were used to describe the guest of honor.

AMONG those who spoke at the testimonial dinner at New York's Hotel Commodore were Vice Pres. James Thimmes and Sec.-Treas. I. J. Abel of the Steelworkers, R. J. Thomas, assistant director of organization, and the Rev. Benjamin Masse.

The words of praise were buttressed with gifts—luggage, a gold watch, a set of sterling silver from the Steelworkers, a $500 U. S. Savings Bond.

Mosele, looking a little surprised by all the fuss, brought the audience to its feet when he announced he would turn over a "substantial portion" of the bond to the Philip Murray Memorial Fund.

PETER MOSELE
Steel veteran honored.

MOSELE, who for many years was CIO regional director in New York City, has also held posts with the United Auto Workers, the Packinghouse Workers, the Miners and other unions. He was a close associate of the late Allan S. Haywood, former CIO executive vice president.

Now planning to return to his home near Terre Haute, Ind., Mosele told the union audience that "I'm going to be watching your activities. I'm not just an old man who is going to stand on the sidelines. I'll watch your victories as well as your defeats, but don't let the defeats occur."

Mosele recalled that he had firist joined the Miners Union in his native France in 1891 and that nothing had given him more satisfaction than the growth of unions in every democratic nation.

Vet Seniority Case Is Won In High Court

SPECIAL seniority credit for military service for newly-hired veterans, as provided in contracts between many CIO unions and major employers, was upheld by the U. S. Supreme Court last week.

The ruling came in a suit against the CIO Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. filed by about 275 employes, both veterans and non-veterans, of the Ford plant at Louisville, Ky. Union and company won in the federal district court, and appealed to the Supreme Court when they lost in the Circuit Court.

A clause in the contract between Ford and the UAW-CIO gives veterans seniority credit for time spent in the service regardless of whether they had been employed by Ford before they went into the service.

THE WORKERS who sued claimed the clause made them liable to injury when layoffs came, as veterans who had spent less time actually at work in the plant outranked them in seniority and were further down the layoff list.

Meyer Bernstein, CIO veterans' representative, in calling the decision to the attention of CIO unions, pointed out that the high court agreed the clause merely filled out the legal protections given veterans under the draft law.

N. Y. Brewery Workers Set $3 Pay Goal

"WE WANT $3 in '53" is the slogan of the CIO Brewery Workers as they prepare to reopen wage discussions with brewers in the New York City area.

A meeting of 250 local leaders enthusiastically decided to press for increasing the hourly base pay to $3, with an equivalent increase in base pay for delivery workers.

Brewery union members have won weekly increases totaling $16 from 1949 to 1953.

Sec. William Greenstein of the joint board and local leaders said that not only the $16, but all additional labor costs, have been absorbed by the employers without a profit cut because of the workers' continuously increasing productivity.

ALL BW LOCALS in the New York City area recently agreed to aid employment of Negroes in the industry.

At least 100 jobs will be allocated to qualified Negro applicants in the busy season between Apr. 15 and Oct. 15 in all New York City breweries.

This agreement was reached after more than 15 months of study, discussion and negotiations. Participants in these discussions also included the New York City CIO Council, the late Allan S. Haywood, CIO executive vice president, the National Urban League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

'Fresh Look' At Housing Planned

Albert M. Cole, the public housing foe named by Pres. Eisenhower to head the Housing and Home Finance Agency, said he's going to take "a full fresh look" at the entire program.

Cole already has whittled down public housing construction requests. He has cut former Pres. Truman's request for 75,000 new units down to 35,000 units—about 2% of the need.

GE Locals Vote Walkout

A CRUCIAL meeting of the CIO Electrical Workers' General Electric Conference Board will be held in New York on Apr. 17—the final day of the wage reopening period established in the contract.

The next day the union will be able to strike, and every IUE-CIO local in a GE plant which had taken a strike vote balloted overwhelmingly for a walkout.

Previous to the conference board session, union negotiators will meet with company spokesmen on Apr. 16 in an effort to pry a legitimate wage offer out of the firm.

In the interim, the company persisted in its refusal to meet with the union and try to settle a lockout of some 11,000 members of Local 320 at Syracuse, N. Y. The dispute started with a strike caused by the company's shipment of television sets in anticipation of a companywide strike over the wage issue.

The IUE's Westinghouse and General Motors conference boards also meet in New York this week.

CIO Employes Form Bay Area Local Union

CIO union office employes in the San Francisco Bay Area have formed a local industrial union, with employes of the Clothing, Furniture, Maritime, Radio Association, Broadcast Engineers, and CIO regional office represented.

Jane Hanna is president and Julia Schneider is secretary of LIU 1811.

'New Gold Rush'

Oil Give-Away Fought In Senate

THE "NEW GOLD RUSH" to give U. S. oil resources and other valuable public lands to the states and private interests was in full sway in the Senate last week.

During a week of debate, Republican and Dixiecrat senators proposed to ignore three U. S. Supreme Court decisions and give coastal states lands containing resources valued at between $50 billion and $300 billion.

The courts have held this fabulous wealth belongs to all the people of the nation. Under the whiplash of the oil lobby, the Administration proposes to give this wealth to the coastal states, where the oil lobby has even more influence than it does in Washington.

SEN. DOUGLAS (D. Ill.), branding the measure a "gigantic give-away" program, said it would "start an avalanche of demands from other regions and states to get hold of other portions of the public domain."

"If the offshore oil and gas deposits are given to the states, it will not only be the minerals, forests and grazing lands which will follow," he warned. "The big multipurpose dams which the federal government has built on the rivers will quite possibly be next to go."

Douglas said Kentucky "with a straight face" might try to claim the $25 billion in gold reserves stored in the underground vaults at Fort Knox.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) charged Pres. Eisenhower was "induced" to endorse the bill while "under political pressure" during last fall's campaign. Eisenhower, he said, fell "victim to his political friends and advisers" and "it was contrary to his character to make such an agreement in the election campaign and it is only fair that he should be released from it."

CHALLENGING the "moral right" of Congress to "give away to three states the share of the people of 45 states in their heritage under the marginal seas," Murray added:

"As members of the Congress . . . we must realize that we are serving in the nature of trustees of this vast underseas wealth and in years to come will be called upon to account for our stewardship.

"If we fail to conserve this great reservoir of wealth in gas and oil which the Supreme Court holds belongs to the U. S. . . . we shall be guilty of a flagrant failure of duty and responsibility to the people."

KINGPIN of the Dixiecrats supporting the giveaway is Sen. Daniel (D. Tex.), who led Texas legal forces in the battle which the Supreme Court awarded to the U. S. Daniel claimed passage of the bill will help block a "dangerous trend" toward nationalization of property. He failed to explain how the Supreme Court legal decision meant "nationalization."

Meantime, Philip B. Perlman, former U. S. solicitor general, called the proposal "the boldest, most brazen grab of national assets in history." It was, Perlman said:

"In some respects, a thousand times worse than the 'Teapot Dome' scandal of the Harding Administration."

Quote

No one knows just how much of a give-away is involved in the offshore oil deal. The Congressional Record reveals the following:

Sen. Hill (D. Ala.): Is it not true that we get back to the proposition that we do now know where these boundary lines are? We do not know where they are or what they are, do we?

Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.): There has never been any question about what they are. We know what they are, but not where they are.

Big Industry Gets Hand In Atom Energy

LATEST attempt by the Administration to give away national resources was revealed last week by the Atomic Energy Commission.

Under orders of Pres. Eisenhower, the AEC has drafted legislation to let private industry reap the harvest of profits made possible by the government's investment in atomic energy discovery and development.

Secret sessions of the joint House-Senate Atomic Energy Commission are scheduled shortly to hear details of the proposed policy for relaxation of the federal atomic energy monopoly.

THE PROPOSAL followed a year-long study and the AEC said 50 individual firms have expressed a desire to get in on the ground floor when the time is ripe.

It is expected the AEC will propose that private firms operate atomic production plants creating both power and atomic fuel and sell the products to the government for its bomb stockpile and also sell to private users.

Rep. Hinshaw (R. Calif.), who heads a special congressional subcommittee studying the subject, said the government will have to subsidize private industry to the tune of $30 million a year to push development of the atomic plants.

Injuries Decline

Factory injuries in 1952 were at a new low rate of 13.5 disabling injuries for every million hours worked, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

'Old' Price Index Revived By BLS; 2.4 Drop Hits Rail, Auto Workers

THE BUREAU of Labor Statistics brought its "old" cost of living index back from the dead last week.

The reanimated Consumer's Price Index, reflecting the cost of the old set of goods and services on both Jan. 15 and Feb. 15, showed a total drop of 2.4 points, or about 1.3%.

It was enough to send down the wages of some two million workers covered by escalator clauses in union contracts.

ABOUT one million members of the CIO Auto Workers were told they will be cut by 1c an hour beginning with the pay period starting nearest Apr. 15.

So were 35,000 members of the CIO Electrical Workers employed in General Motors electric plants.

About 1.3 million railroad workers were due for a cut of 3c an hour because of a three-point drop in the old index since Nov. 15. They had just received a 4c productivity increase through an arbitration award.

Fifty thousand members of the CIO Textile Workers employed in New England cotton and rayon mills had their wages cut by 2c an hour.

THE "OLD" BLS index was supposed to have been killed after the Dec. 15 reading of 191 and replaced with what was described as a more up-to-date figure based on different goods and services, and priced in different localities.

Pres. Eisenhower ordered the "old" index reinstated after the Jan. 15 pricing date had passed, bringing a clamor of objections from unions with escalator clauses based on the old figure. The UAW-CIO was already in negotiation with General Motors in an effort to resolve the difference caused by the change.

The BLS pulled together enough prices to yield a figure of 190.3 for Jan. 15. The regular pricing process showed a further drop to 188.6 on Feb. 15.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index
1939 monthly average	99.4		1950: June 15	170.2
1943 monthly average	123.6		1951: June 15	185.5

CIO Aide Named To Advisory Unit

Mrs. Katharine Ellickson, secretary of the CIO Social Security Committee, was last week named as a consultant to Federal Security Administrator Oveta Culp Hobby. Mrs. Ellickson and other consultants will discuss extension of coverage of old-age and survivors insurance, an Eisenhower campaign promise.

Rent Boosts Approved By Senate Group

THE SENATE Banking Committee voted to give the landlords another rent increase last week in a last-minute amendment to a bill extending emergency economic powers.

The committee had already agreed on the substance of a bill and was considering the language in a closed session when the amendment popped up.

The bill extends the present rent control law, which expires Apr. 30, through Sept. 30. The law now on the books authorizes ceilings up to 120% of 1947 levels. The committee raised them to 130%, which means a boost of 7 to 8%. Thus a rent of $40 in 1947 can be raised to $52 if the bill becomes law.

THE PROPOSED controls law gives Pres. Eisenhower standby authority to freeze wages, prices and rents for a period of 90 days in any future national emergency.

In addition, it gives the Federal Reserve Board authority to clamp controls on consumer credit, including installment buying, and on housing credit, or mortgages.

It also extended rent controls in critical defense areas through Apr. 30, 1954, but set up new rules making it tougher for a community to qualify.

The CIO favored a detailed, carefully-drawn standby economic controls law rather than the stopgap proposed by the committee. It also urged a two-year extension of rent controls, instead of the five months the committee approved.

'They're Our Sons—' CIOers Hosts To GIs On Easter Day

"THEY'RE SONS of our CIO brothers and sisters. Many of them may themselves be CIO members some day."

For that reason, the CIO Council and several locals of the Steelworkers in Lebanon, Pa., were hosts to some 250 GIs on Easter Day.

The men came from the 50th Field Artillery Battalion in training at the Indiantown Gap Army post.

CIOers provided "the works" for the servicemen on Easter Day: A traditional holiday dinner extending from baked ham to ice cream and cake, served at the USA-CIO hall; an open house at the YMCA; and a dance that night at a Lebanon hotel, with the wives of CIO members providing the refreshments.

"The men at the Gap have been an enormous assets to this community," the Lebanon Steelworkers officials said. "The least we could do was to give them some little token of our gratitude."

"They're our sons and brothers," said an official of the CIO Clothing Workers. "Our ladies want them to feel that this is their home away from home."

The 'Give-Away Administration' Is Rolling

YOUR STAKE in America's estimated trillion dollars worth of natural resources won't be worth a plugged nickel if the GOP Administration and the GOP Congress put over all they're planning.

That was indicated as developments in and out of Congress last week pointed to a drive to take the nation's and the public's resources in oil reserves, chemicals, power projects and resources, war-built plants and public lands and turn them over to big business. Here are some of the developments:

- The Senate was near a showdown vote on the coastal oil give-away bill. Sen. Taft and Republican leaders tried to ram it through last week. They were delayed by a small group of liberal lawmakers.
- Pres. Eisenhower sent a special message to Congress urging that the government sell to private industry a half-billion dollars worth of war-built synthetic rubber plants.
- Former Pres. Herbert Hoover demanded that the government turn over all low-rate public power programs to the high-rate private utilities. That was too much even for Sec. of Interior Douglas McKay.

It all points, said Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) to a "give-away program." If the oil bill wins, he predicted "ever-increasing demands that the federal government give away to the states other great natural resources constituting the national heritage of all the people."

"I hope," said Hill, "that this Administration does not build up a record of such a nature that it becomes known as the 'Give-Away Administration.'"

Oil Lands

By GERVASE N. LOVE

LIBERAL senators fought a bitter rearguard action last week in a final attempt to bloc the Eisenhower Administration's give-away of the off-shore oil lands.

They offered a mass of new figures and arguments in long speeches, frequently interrupted for friendly questioning, that cost Republican Leader Taft (R. O.) the loss of his temper and blocked his plan for a final vote last week.

He angrily denounced them for filibustering, a charge they quickly denied. A "line count" of the Congressional Record, he declared, showed foes of the bill sponsored by Sen. Holland (D. Fla.) had used more words in debate than proponents. This brought the tart rejoinder from Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) that he hoped Taft had something more important to do than "count lines."

WITH COMPLETE disregard for the country's interests and safety, the GOP leader asserted the bill would not be sidetracked for action on extension of economic controls, which expire Apr. 30.

"As far as I'm concerned," he said, "the defense production bill will expire unless we finish this bill first."

Sen. Anderson (D. N. M.), sponsor of a rival bill to confirm federal title to the off-shore lands, recalled the Teapot Dome scandal in the Republican Harding Administration.

"Oil," he observed, "has a peculiar way of getting around the country and involving itself in political appointments and the lives of individuals."

—Herblock in Washington Post

"And Next, Mates, We Head For Land."

Sen. Jackson (D. Wash.), citing former Pres. Hoover's demand that the government sell its dams, wanted to know what Hoover Dam would be called then.

"It will be known as 'The Public Be Damned,'" snapped Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), said the Interior Committee, which conducted hearings on the bill, ignored recommendations of Atty.-Gen. Howard Brownell intended to avoid future legal actions.

"Sharp man, that Attorney-General," Humphrey noted. "He sees full employment for every lawyer in the country."

Power

EX-PRES. HOOVER raised his voice from the political grave last week and demanded that the federal government get out of the electric power business.

The idea is to "rescue free men from this variety of creeping Socialism," which threatens "a new oppression of free men greater than the old dog-eat-dog economy," he said in a characteristic speech at Case Institute in Cleveland. (During Hoover's term, dogs didn't dare eat dogs; they were afraid of men.)

Hoover declared that Congress should stop appropriating funds for any more steam or hydro-electric plants built solely for power, and that private enterprise should build them and pay taxes on them. This, of course, disregards the fact that private enterprise doesn't build them except to supply current to comparatively populous communities.

IN ADDITION, he said, Congress should stop appropriating funds for new multi-purpose projects unless the power is first leased. In addition, he claimed, Congress and the President should reorganize "this whole federal venture."

Hoover raised no quick echo from Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay. His reaction was that "private industry must live and government should not put roadblocks in its way," but that existing public power developments should not all be scrapped.

But Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) scented danger. He called on Ancher Nelson, new Rural Electrification Administration head, to assure REA cooperatives that he won't let the power program "be slashed and crippled."

Workers Have Job Stake In Conservation Policies

A WARNING that complete destruction of timber stands is a distinct possibility if Congress yields to the clamor to turn the national forests over to the states has been sounded by Nat Goldfinger, CIO associate director of research.

Goldfinger spoke at the annual conference of the League for Industrial Democracy, in New York.

Trade unionists have a vital stake in the development and conservation of natural resources, Goldfinger said.

"WORKERS have a stake in stable job opportunities," he pointed out. "Stable employment is, in part, dependent on our timber supply, iron ore, petroleum reserves and other natural resources.

"As members of the community and as consumers, trade unionists are interested in the quality, quantity and prices of goods, which are, in varying degrees, dependent on the development and conservation of the natural resources with which this nation has been blessed.

"Our national security, too, is involved in the effort to protect our natural resources from short-sighted policies that could leave us in a vulnerable position."

Headaches On High Seas Due If Give-Away Wins

IF THE REPUBLICANS in Congress give away the rich off-shore oil fields—as they say they will—they will be putting chains around Pres. Eisenhower's ability to deal with foreign governments.

That action would undermine the traditional American principle of freedom of the high seas. It is a principle America has gone to war to protect in the past.

This charge is only one of many made in a case against the oil give-away, filed by three members of the Senate Interior Committee. The "minority report" flatly opposes Republican attempts to hand the fabulously rich oil lands over to four coastal states.

POINTING OUT that the bill would extend U. S. boundaries beyond the three-mile limit—an extension which the U. S. under international law has always refused to permit to other countries—the report warns that passage of the measure will encourage extravagent boundaries claims of the Soviet Union and other nations.

"Recent incidents involving the shooting down of American aircraft off the coasts of the Soviet Union or Soviet-occupied territories," the report points out, "indicate the importance of maintaining the doctrine of freedom of the high seas and the air space above them. The U. S. will be in no position to protest further such incidents, or press past protests if the policy of our government should now be changed."

Enactment of the oil give-away legislation would violate the Constitution, the report contends, because Congress does not have the power to convey continental shelf lands to the states. This would lead to a long-drawn out legal battle and seriously delay development of oil resources needed for national defense.

THE REPORT also charges that the measure would:

1. Halt and prevent future progress of the government's program of multiple-purpose river development for flood control, irrigation, improved navigation, and low-cost public power.
2. Imperil the multi-million dollar U. S. fishing industry, which gets more than half its income from fisheries on the high seas contiguous to the borders of foreign nations.
3. Start a "chain reaction" of other "give-aways" of the public domain to private power companies, cattle raisers, lumber and mining interests.

AS A substitute, the report recommends enactment of the measure introduced by Anderson, which would protect legitimate state rights while providing for prompt development of oil for national defense under federal sovereignty.

Also, the minority urges, that the "oil for education" amendment sponsored by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) be adopted as a step to meet the serious financial crisis affecting the nation's schools. This would make revenues from the nation's off-shore oil and gas deposits available for grants-in-aid to education.

The Big Grab Will Cost $68 Billions For Schools

THIRTY-FOUR states stand to lose more than $68 billion in funds for schools if the campaign of the special interests for the off-shore oil lands is successful.

For that grab is only the first—and smaller—of two. The second and larger, which depends on the success of the first, involves giving three coastal states the oil and gas in the continental shelf beyond the three-mile limit, AND giving the western states all the oil, gas, coal and other riches in the federal lands within their borders.

THE OTHER 34 states, whose citizens own all this wealth equally with the citizens of the coastal and western states, will get left. How much is estimated in the figures below. They are based on customary royalties for oil, gas and coal, with pro rate shares determined by combining formulas in two bills which would devote the royalties to school construction and aid to education.

Here are the figures for the 34 states:

Alabama	$3,066,270,000

Plants

ANOTHER BARGAIN was in sight last week for private industry. Pres. Eisenhower sent Congress a message recommending that the government sell about $550 million worth of synthetic rubber plants which last year produced two-thirds of the new rubber the country used.

Eisenhower said his recommendation was based on a suggestion from the Reconstruction Finance Corp. and consultation with the National Security Resources Board. The Administration also is planning to cut big business in on atomic energy resources developed by the government.

The U. S. consumed 1,206,000 long tons of new rubber last year. Synthetic rubber produced in government-owned plants supplied 806,500 tons.

The President told Congress he had not submitted a detailed plan for selling the plants, but would leave the mechanics to be worked out by federal agencies and congressional committees.

A Day That Has Lived In Infamy

The "open shop"—that was the naked demand of American big industry 40 years ago.

"The American Plan" was the sugar-coated language of 30 years ago for the same industrial slavery.

And now the title for the same old open shop is the "right to work."

This is the thirty-ninth anniversary of a "monument" to the open shop—the Ludlow Massacre of Apr. 19, 1914.

The coal miners at Ludlow, Colo.—employed by the Rockefellers—had been out half a year. Their wants were simple: the eight-hour day, a 10% wage increase, and recognition of the Mine Workers union.

Gunmen, company cops, and Colorado militia turned Ludlow into a battlefield. On Apr. 19, 1914, they moved on the miners' tent camp; machine guns chattered as the troops burned the tents.

When the flames died down 14 hours later, 33 were dead—11 of them children—and more than 100 were wounded. As Aleine Austin observed in "The Labor Story":

"John D. could hold his head high—principle had triumphed."

Last week—nearly two score years after a day that has lived in infamy—there were some American employers who apparently want to go back to the days of Ludlow.

—Print from Harper's Weekly of May 23, 1914, courtesy of the Library of Congress

"Success" was the ironic title for O. E. Cesare's caricature of John D. Rockefeller after the massacre at Ludlow.

The Congress is hearing arguments pro and con on amending the Taft-Hartley Act. Last week the Senate Labor Committee heard a representative of two national retailers organizations urge that employers be given an unlimited right to "lockout" their employes.

His arguments were much the same as those voiced by the National Association of Manufacturers, the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the American Farm Bureau Federation and all the separate federations of participating industries.

Together they want to "amend" Taft-Hartley Act into a total curb on the rights of workers to organize securely into unions of their own choice while making "the sky the limit" for employers' moves to destroy unions.

Then they want to whittle down federal law in the field of labor-management relations and give to subservient state legislatures more powers to swat unions, block picketing, outlaw strikes . . . and create more Ludlow Massacres.

And in the states they're driving for "right to work" open shop laws. Carbon-copy bills, just about identical, to outlaw every form of union security have appeared in a dozen legislatures.

The Ludlow Massacre didn't stop American labor. Murder in the Rockefeller mine camp helped open the eyes of the American public. The "open shop" boomeranged then. Labor can turn the "right to work" into a boomerang now. —W.M.

Carey Hits Lucas Bill To Set Labor Back 100 Years

By AL ZACK

ADOPTION by Congress of the Lucas Bill to bar industry-wide bargaining "would set organized labor back 100 years," CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told a congressional committee last week.

Testifying before the House Labor Committee as president of the CIO Electrical Workers, which he also heads, Carey denounced the measure as having an element of "hypocritical nonsense."

Carey predicted passage of the Lucas Bill, which is aimed at breaking international unions, would have the following effects:

- "The number of labor disputes will be greatly increased."
- "More time will be lost in strikes than has heretofore been the case."
- "Satisfactory labor-management relationships built up carefully over periods of years will be destroyed."
- "The general public and national defense will suffer."

THE LUCAS BILL would bar certification of a union as representative of employes of competing companies, unless the employes are less than 100 and their plants less than 50 miles apart. It would mean the IUE-CIO, Carey said, could not represent employes of Westinghouse and General Electric, as is now the case, since the firms are in competition.

"It must be apparent to anyone with a knowledge of labor-management problems that these pious protestations of concern for the public weal, cited by Lucas as the reason for his bill, conceal a fixed purpose to render the major unions in this country impotent, and to make the collective bargaining process ineffective as a means for protecting and promoting the interests of the employes," Carey said.

In an exchange with committee members, after he had endorsed testimony of other CIO witnesses in opposition to Taft-Hartley, Carey charged the General Electric Co. with collaborating with the Communist-dominated UE, which CIO expelled four years ago.

OBSERVING that he had no immunity from suit for libel or slander, as do congressmen, Carey charged, "General Electric plays footsie with the Communist Party through UE."

Earlier in the hearings William J. Barron, GE's labor relations counsel, had delivered a 62-page tirade against unions—chiefly those that are anti-Communist.

Only one paragraph of the Barron testimony even mentioned the major Communist-dominated union with which GE deals, the UE. But he devoted some 12 pages to sly hints that CIO wasn't interested in a "so-called house cleaning" of communism when it expelled 11 unions in 1949 on charges of red-domination and that many remaining CIO unions may be "strongly suspected" of being Communist-dominated.

Meantime, four other CIO witnesses were appearing before the Senate Labor Committee, continuing to document CIO's case against Taft-Hartley.

JOSEPH A. BEIRNE, president of the CIO Communications Workers, also dealt with attempts to limit collective bargaining. "We feel," he told the senators, "that the unity of management must have as its corollary the unity of workers if there is to be equality at the bargaining table."

He said such proposals to ban industry-wide bargaining or to "atomize unions to bring about the same effect" would "subvert the avowed principles of proponents of Taft-Hartley that the Act was intended to give equality of treatment to both labor and management."

Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, detailed Taft-Hartley's effect on that union, saying it has been able to establish collective bargaining relationships in a total of only 24 southern mills employing 7364 workers in the act's 5.5-year history.

In 34 other plants, Rieve said, workers had voted for a union but had been denied the protection they wanted as employers made use of Taft-Hartley's multiple anti-union provisions.

O. A. KNIGHT, president of the CIO Oil Workers, told the Senate committee workers need greater protection by the government of the right to organize and bargain collectively. This protection, he said, they are not getting.

Taft-Hartley, Knight continued, affords employers greater protection than it does their employes, despite the fact that industry is still in a superior economic position and is able to thwart efforts of workers to organize and bargain collectively.

Under Taft-Hartley, the Oil Workers president said, the NLRB is required to "crusade" for the protection of management, but has failed to "crusade" for workers' rights.

The oil industry, Knight charged, was a highly integrated, extremely monopolistic industry in which employes of a single company could have little or no effect on the economic status of a single company if strike action were limited to that particular firm.

HARRY D. SAYRE, president of the CIO Paperworkers, criticized in particular that section of Taft-Hartley which is "an invitation for craft organizations to conduct raiding activities against well-established, efficiently functioning industrial units."

The Paperworkers president also charged that during the past three years four strikes, resulting in more than 5 million wasted man-hours, were provoked or prolonged by provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Reuther Hails Ike's Peace Proposal

CIO PRES. Walter P. Reuther last week congratulated Pres. Eisenhower on his challenge to Soviet Russia to back words of peace with deeds.

The President, in a foreign policy address in Washington, urged the new Russian leaders to demonstrate a will for peace by ending the Korean war, lifting the Iron Curtain, and joining in a world atomic disarmament pact. He also proposed a world development plan.

Reuther praised Eisenhower for a "clear and courageous statement" which will give "hope and renewed faith" to people throughout the world. In a letter to the President, Reuther said:

"Congratulations on your clear and courageous statement. I am confident it will instill hope and renewed faith in the hearts of hundreds of millions of people throughout the world.

"The practical implementation of a peace proposal, within the framework of the principles you outlined, is the key to the future of mankind.

"Only an affirmative program that gears our productive power and economic resources to the fulfillment of the hopes and needs of mankind will enable America to provide the moral and spiritual leadership to the world and will enhance our efforts to achieve a just and lasting peace."

"Do-Badders" Take Over

Last summer and fall, when promises were cheap, the GOP promised to improve the quality of government personnel at every level of operation.

How are they succeeding?

• In Germany, the New York Times, on the basis of a survey by its correspondents, finds the morale of American civil servants "at its lowest ebb since the end of the war . . . Morale has been disintegrating at an accelerated pace . . . under the impact of Congressional investigations . . ."

• In Washington, 50 scientists at the Bureau of Standards, the government's top laboratory, are reported ready to resign because of political interference by Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks, who forced the removal of Allen V. Astin, the Bureau's esteemed scientific director.

• To the Subversive Activities Control Board, Pres. Eisenhower has nominated ex-Sen. Harry Cain of Washington, once voted by capital correspondents as the "worst" member of the upper house.

Cain, for years subservient to the real estate lobby, has—on the basis of past statements—indicated he couldn't tell a Communist from a member of the Girl Scouts. Yet, if one business-sponsored Taft-Hartley amendment were to pass, Cain might have a major voice in deciding what's a "Communist" union!

• At the newly-created Dept. of Health & Welfare, Parke Banta has been named to the key post of general counsel. A GOP Representative from Missouri in the "awful 80th Congress," Banta presumably "qualified" for his new post by voting to cut down social security, to cut down the school lunch program, and to entrench segregated schools.

• As National Chairman of the GOP—where he will have a major voice in recommending people for top government jobs—the Republicans have elected ex-Rep. Leonard Hall of New York. Hall's record in Congress was one of consistent "wrong" votes on just about every piece of social welfare legislation in recent years. He voted against even those items that even Pres. Eisenhower approved in the late "liberal" period of his campaign.

Nobody—least of all, the CIO—expected the Eisenhower Administration to bring a squad of convinced liberals into the federal service. But the so-called "do-gooders" are rapidly being replaced by "do-badders," and the entire federal service is suffering.

Two Veterans Depart

Two of the departing public servants deserve a special nod from the people of the nation.

Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor during the Roosevelt era, more recently a capable member of the Civil Service Commission, is leaving government after 20 years.

Although union people sometimes got into spats with "Fanny," they had keen respect for her integrity and intelligence.

Another GOP casualty is Arthur J. Altmeyer, head of the social security system since its start in the mid-30's. A quiet man, a widely recognized authority on security matters, Altmeyer was "reorganized" out of his job just a month before he would have qualified for retirement under government rules. He will be missed as a great security technician—and the question will arise: "Why such haste, Secretary Hobby?"

It Never Rains But It Pours

In Other Words—

Case Against The Give-Away

One of the important Senate speeches against the bill sponsored by Sen. Holland (D. Fla.) to give away the off-shore oil lands was made by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.). Excerpts from his conclusions are given below.

By PAUL DOUGLAS

I SUBMIT that there is no good or sufficient reason why we should pass the Holland Bill. There is on the contrary every reason why we should reject it and pass the Anderson-Hill Bill instead.

The Holland Bill gives away to a few states enormous treasures which belong to us all. Most of the sponsors are the very ones who say they are concerned about the size and burden of the public debt, yet this bill would alienate assets which may ultimately be equal in value to that debt and could be used to reduce it.

We are concerned with the 2.5 million illiterates in this country and the low level of education given others, yet this bill would throw away a large future income which could be used to wipe out illiteracy and help assure to all an acceptable minimum of education.

Weaken National Interest

We take great pride in the Nation as a whole and in the principles for which it stands, but this bill would weaken the national interest and increase the feeling of separatism when more than ever we need to be united.

We give lip service to the idea of soil conservation and lament when we see our rivers carrying away to the sea enormous quantities of our rich top soil. Yet this bill will be merely the prelude for a drive to turn back our national forests and grazing lands to the states with the almost inevitable result that they will be overcut and overgrazed. This will increase floods and erosion.

The Holland Bill will endanger the rights of our fishermen off the coasts of Alaska, Mexico and Newfoundland. It will touch off interminable legal disputes between some states and the federal government; it will raise grave questions of international law.

From every consideration of the national interest, I submit this is an unwise bill. Now I can understand the position of the Representatives and Senators from California, Texas, Louisiana and Florida.

But what I cannot understand are the mental processes of the representatives and senators from the other states, who are nevertheless supporting the Holland Bill. Their states gain nothing from this bill for the submerged lands in their navigable inland waterways have never been threatened by the federal government and we will confirm their title by statute in the Anderson Bill.

But the Holland Bill will take away from those states enormous assets which can be used to decrease their burdens and to confer positive benefits on them.

The Anderson-Hill Bill would conserve these precious assets for the Nation as a whole, but would allow a fair additional share to go to the coastal states. It would be fair to existing leaseholders. It would permit immediate development of these fields by avoiding all the legal suits which the Holland Bill will almost immediately touch off. It will permit our fishermen to ply their trade without fear of reprisals.

It will enable the income from our natural resources to be used to help meet the heavy costs of national defense, to help balance the budget and to reduce the national debt. It will dedicate this income to the development of our greatest national asset, the human resources of the country.

What It Means

The value of the oil, gas and sulphur in the off-shore reserves was estimated at between $50 and $300 billion by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) in a Senate speech. He continued:

"It is hard to visualize what these sums mean, but the following illustration may help. If we pile $1000 bills tightly on top of each other, $100,000 will come to .8 of an inch, and $1 million to eight inches. A billion dollars would therefore amount to 8000 inches, or over 660 feet. This is higher than the Washington Monument and the value of these resources would amount to 50, or 300, of these towering piles."

THE OFFSHORE OIL give-away proposal, known as the Holland bill, may soon determine what will happen to as much as a trillion dollars worth of publicly owned natural wealth under our national lands.

The bill was recently passed by the House. It is now before the Senate. It would turn over rights to $12.5 billion worth of offshore oil and minerals to four coastal states: California, Texas, Louisiana and Florida.

A Trillion Dollar Bill?

A number of supporters of the bill maintain that if it becomes law it will establish the principle of "states' rights" to all the minerals and other natural wealth underlying public lands within their borders.

Experts say this is no small right. It is estimated that the coal and shale under these lands, alone, will someday be worth nearly a trillion dollars ($980 billion). This does not include other rich minerals.

The usual royalities on this coal and shale, enough to produce 130 billion barrels of oil, could reach as high as $123 billion.

If the principle of states' rights to these minerals is established, it would mean that 10 Rocky Mountain states would gain most of the royalties at the expense of the remainder of the states.

Even the three coastal states of California, Texas and Louisiana —the strongest supporters of the oil give-away bill—would lose if the Holland Bill became law and was carried to its logical conclusion.

Under the Holland Bill these three states stand to gain a billion dollars ($975 million) in royalties from offshore oil and minerals. However, they would lose as much as $10.4 billion if the Rocky Mountain states could claim coal, shale and minerals underlying their public lands.

Two substitute bills before Congress, the Hill and Anderson proposals, establish the principle of turning over 62.5% of royalties to states without such resources for educational purposes on the basis of school-age population. At the same time, all the people of all the states would continue to own the public lands.

The rejection of these bills, in effect, could cost school children in 35 Eastern, Midwestern and Southern states as much as $61 billion in royalties. Even over a 50-year period this would be enough to greatly develop our sadly lagging educational facilities and programs.

Many congressmen from the 35 states, possibly unaware of this, voted for the off-shore oil bill. And many Senators from these states have declared their intention of voting for it.

This action comes as the U. S. Office of Education reports that our educational needs are critical. This nation's school plant needs, alone, as of last September were $10.7 billion. By 1958 this figure could reach $18 or $19 billion.

'Blueprint' Of Drive For Federal Sales Tax Revealed

A SECRET "blueprint" for imposing a national sales tax on consumers has been exposed by the Madison (Wisc.) Capital Times.

The "blueprint" was drawn by Carl Byoir and Associates, a top drawer publicity firm, whose star-studded account list reads like a "Who's Who in Big Business."

In a confidential memorandum, prepared for the Sheaffer Pen Co., the publicity firm has outlined a slick-trick program designed to kid the public into believing a federal sales tax is a better bet than the federal income tax.

Sales Tax Aids Rich

The truth is a federal sales tax is beloved by the very rich, for it saves them real money and heaps the tax burden on the little guy struggling to get along.

Byoir's memo to the Sheaffer Co., headed by Craig R. Sheaffer, Assistant Sec. of Commerce, calls for using the Eisenhower appointee as "star speaker" on TV and radio shows to sell this bill of goods to the taxpayer.

Sheaffer's earlier tax activities included promotion of the "millionaires' amendment" which would limit federal income taxes to 25%, saving millions for the handful at the top of the economic ladder and saddling new burdens on "Mr. Average Taxpayer." The Sheaffer plan was too bald a scheme even for the Eisenhower Administration and the President has frowned on it.

The secret blueprint, revealed by The Capital Times, says in part:

"The sales tax proposal lends itself readily to a nation-wide campaign . . . Generally for it are the industry groups. The organized labor groups . . . New Dealers and liberal economists . . . are opposed, insisting on steeper graduated income taxes." (This means: taxation according to ability to pay, with the richer paying more than the poor.)

'GOP Promised Too Much'—

'Start Tax Cuts By Boosting Family Exemptions,' CIO Says

IF TAXES are going to be cut, the place to begin is with average income families squeezed for years between rising prices and unfair federal and state taxes.

And the "first tax cutting action of the Congress," CIO said last week, should be to provide "at least a $200 increase in the individual exemption allowance" —an action which would materially reduce the tax load on workers' families.

CIO's full-length examination of the tax situation—highlighted by high, wide and handsome Republican campaign promises before the election and increasing caution by Pres. Eisenhower ever since his inauguration—was contained in the current issue of the Economic Outlook.

Republican congressional leaders, warned the CIO Education and Research Dept. bulletin, plan to "give the most aid to individuals and corporations least in need of tax relief."

"A Sobering Effect"

In the face of continuing international crisis, the Outlook said, there is a "continuing need for high federal revenue."

"During a period of substantial business profits," it continued, "it is particularly desirable that income match expenditures."

Therefore, the Outlook backed Eisenhower's position that tax cuts must wait on a balanced budget, observing this official position conflicted with GOP campaign statements. "But," it added, "the responsibility that comes with victory is beginning to have, for some, a sobering effect."

The President's "sober post-election warning," the economic report said, was realization that the Republicans "promised too much too soon." Calling the President's restraint "laudable" and reflecting "concern for the long-run national interest," the Outlook warned:

"There is danger that it will further inflame his reactionary colleagues to demand wanton budget slashes regardless of public welfare and security, in order to hasten tax cuts for the well-off which they pursue with frenzied zeal."

Where To Start

When the proper time for tax cutting comes, the Outlook argued, "substantial tax relief must be provided first for the average families of the nation through revision of individual income and excise tax laws. Then, and not before, the excess profits tax should be revised and the normal corporate tax rate should be moved downward."

In support of its proposal for at least a $200 increase in individual income exemption allowances, the CIO cited government statistics that a city worker's family of four needs about $4290 to maintain "reasonable standards of comfort and decency."

Present exemptions for that size family are $2400 and the CIO proposal would mean a minimum exemption of $3200—"still an inadequate minimum for family needs."

"Every family in America would be benefited," the Outlook said. "A family with an income of $5000 would save $177.60 yearly; those with earnings which reach higher income tax brackets would benefit more."

This proposal, CIO said, "would spread the tax cut benefits more widely and more fairly than any other proposal. Most important, it would increase the purchasing power of millions of low and middle income families and help sustain consumer buying at the critical time when reduced defense spending might otherwise threaten a reduction in national production."

Reed Bill Hit

The Outlook called the Reed Bill "a 'sweetener' concocted as a smoke-screen." It was intended to make more acceptable, CIO said, the end of the excess profits tax on June 30, "a $2.5 billion bonanza handed to a small fraction of our corporations—the most profitable ones in America."

To the family of four with a net income of $4000, CIO said, the Reed bill would mean a weekly saving of 68c, while to the family with a $50,000 income the saving would be $41.69 a week.

Outlook Warns Of Drive For Federal Sales Tax

There's a growing drive in Washington to enact a federal sales tax, the CIO Economic Outlook warned.

"Since the Republican victory a growing number of business spokesmen have been championing this cause," long backed by the National Association of Manufacturers, the Outlook said.

One proposal is to establish a U. S. sales tax bringing in $2.5 billion a year to substitute for present revenues from the excess profits tax on big corporations.

"Sales and excise taxes are particularly unfair to low and middle income families," the Outlook points out.

"They are taxes on consumption and touch even the poorest. They are borne in inverse proportion to income—the higher the income the less the burden; the lower the income the greater the burden. This fact makes sales taxes so attractive to the well-off."

Textile Town: The Story Of Lawrence...

25% Of Workers Are Out Of Jobs

(First of two articles)
By FRED ROSS

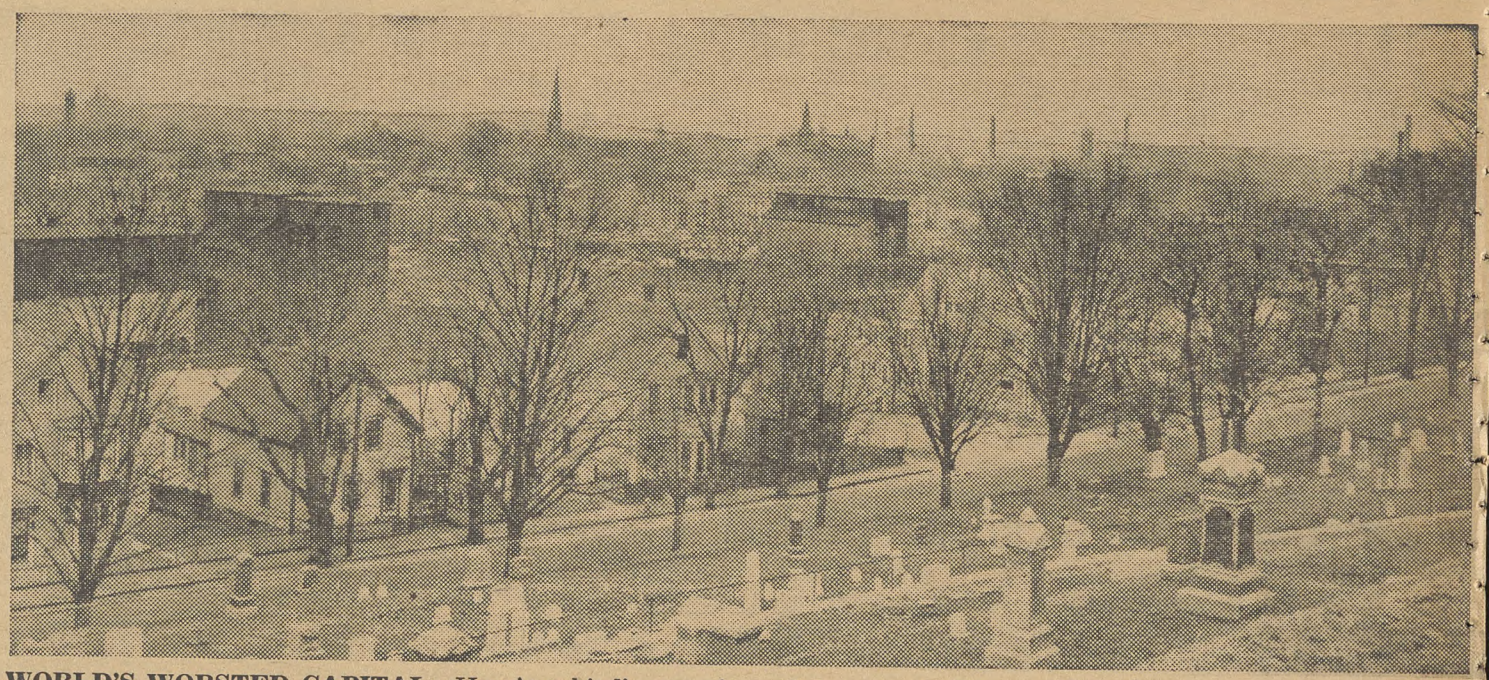
THIS IS THE STORY of a town and its people, its troubles and heartaches, its history and its hopes.

The city is Lawrence, Mass., the woolen and worsted mill town where the ancient brick mills line both banks of the Merrimack, one of the fastest-flowing rivers in the world.

That's the reason Lawrence is where it is. The Boston financiers who established the town in the mid-19th century picked out the site because they needed water power. They built dams to divert the swift-flowing river into canals which still flow alongside the mills.

Thanks to water power, Lawrence became the worsted capital of the world.

Long years ago, most mills switched from water power to electricity—except for the processing of wool.



WORLD'S WORSTED CAPITAL: Here's a bird's eye view of Lawrence, Mass., taken from a cemetery overlooking the city. In the foreground is May Street, where many "displaced" woolen workers have their homes.

Town Left Behind

Something else has happened to Lawrence. That's been the revolution in the textile industry since the advent of "miracle fibers"—the synthetics such as dacron, orlon or dynel.

And Lawrence has been left behind, with its mills . . . and with thousands of its workers out of jobs.

Right now Lawrence is awaiting an arbitrator's decision on the demand of the American Woolen Co., which has two mills in operation in the Lawrence area, for a 31c hourly pay cut.

When synthetics developed, some wool fabric manufacturers hastened to make use of man-made fibers by blending them with wool to create new fabrics.

Management Lagged

Other mills, like American Woolen Co.—which is the biggest firm in the industry and operates the Wood mill at Lawrence, the biggest woolen and worsted mill in the world—were not so progressive.

They depended on government orders for cloth needed for our fighting men. They did very well during World War II and until last year. When government orders failed to arrive so abundantly, they found themselves outdistanced by their more alert competitors in the contest for the civilian market.

With the growth of the wool and worsted industry, Lawrence and the surrounding towns of Andover, North Andover and Methuen grew until it is a community of 126,000.

Figures of the Massachusetts Div. of Employment Security show that there is more unemployment in the Lawrence area than in Boston, which has a population of more than a million.

On the basis of weekly unemployment benefit checks paid during the nine-month period ending Mar. 28, John McKenna, director of the Lawrence office of the Massachusetts agency, estimates that some 26,000 jobless workers in the Lawrence area drew benefits for 10 weeks.

The official estimate of the division issued in its March bulletin is 9800 currently unemployed. That's 25% of the working population.

The number drawing and claiming unemployment benefits is lower than that, but does not show the number of persons who have exhausted their unemployment benefits. Thousands of persons have exhausted their benefits.

As Arthur W. Brown, manager of the Lawrence Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers and assistant director of the union's woolen and worsted division, puts it:

"You can't displace 18,000 woolen workers as has occurred since 1945 without affecting the community."

Even those workers who have been fortunate enough to get jobs in defense industries in other Massachusetts communities will be "out of luck" when these plants curtail production, because they have built up little seniority.

The situation would be worse if a few industries had not moved into Lawrence. The largest of these is Western Electric, which about a year ago took over a closed woolen mill and now gives employment to some 900 persons.

ALSO DOWN: Some 6500 lost their jobs when this large Arlington mill closed about a year and a half ago. Note dammed river which once ran the mill.

TWUA Fights American W

"WORKERS IN AUTO, Steel and other industries are getting raises. Why should we get a 31c hourly pay cut?" asked a member of the executive board of Local 227, of the CIO Textile Workers in Lawrence, Mass.

The local union official was referring to the demand of the American Woolen Co. that workers at their score of plants take a 31c slash. The case is now before an arbitrator, with a decision due any day.

"Why should we take a cut when our work load has been increased?" asked the worker, who is employed at the Wood Mill, the largest woolen and worsted plant in the world.

New Machinery

"With new machinery one girl does the work of five," he said. "We accepted the new machines. Why should we accept a cut? Why should we lose money with prices as high as they are?"

The answers to these questions were in the brief filed by TWUA-CIO with the arbitrator, Raymond O'Connell. They all add up to this: American Woolen's demand is out of this world.

To start with the new machines and the increases in the work load, TWUA said:

"We bargained in good faith, making concession after concession in work assignments. Our members have extended the fullest measure of cooperation on the basis of our belief that the company was sincere in its avowed purpose of increasing efficiency without reducing wage standards.

ARTHUR W. BROWN, TWUA Lawrence Joint Board manager, and Mayor John J. Buckley.

"Now that the company has accomplished the desired increases in work assignments, it proposes to renege on its commitment to maintain wages."

TWUA agreed last year to increase the world load after Francis W. White, American's president, in a speech pleaded that the company's "chances of survival in New England and Lawrence" were at stake.

"As a result the increases in work as-

TWUA agreed to job changes affecting 9 workers. As a result, 1326 workers the total 3659 have been displaced—%. The overall work productivity of se remaining on the job has been in-eased 57%. The company's payroll was $4,310,000 a year.

"Two sacrifices, namely higher work ks and fewer jobs, are a sufficient con-ution to the competitive system," old the arbitrator. "There appears e no justification for demanding a third rifice through wage cuts."

s it any wonder that TWUA members "burned up" over American Woolen's mand for a third sacrifice, particularly e their average wage would be cut from out $60 a week to approximately $48?

ofits Fabulous

"Aside from one firm, American Woolen is the only one in the industry that anded a wage cut," and "the ers have renewed their contracts with-t a request for wage adjustment," WUA pointed out to the arbitrator.

"The company's financial record shows has enjoyed fabulous profits since 1939," union pointed out. "The loss in 1952 s the only financial reverse suffered in last 14 years and it was due to unusual circumstances which make it irrelevant to the present case.

"The burden of past management failings, the cost of current changes in management policies and approaches and the company's management difficulties in meeting the problems faced in 1952 by the entire industry should not be used as the basis for taxing the workers with lower wages.

"Between 1941 and 1952, the firm had piled up $270 million in profits before taxes, and $123 million after taxes. In 1951 alone, it earned $23.6 million before taxes, and $13 million after taxes.

"From the end of World War II through 1951, the American Woolen Co.'s annual profits—after taxes—never dipped below $4.3 million (in 1949) and ranged as high as $22.3 million (in 1946)."

Cotton Pact Set Without Pay Cut

The CIO Textile Workers have signed a two-year contract with an association of 23 New England cotton and rayon mills maintaining the present wage scales and fringe benefits. These firms traditionally set the pattern for the cotton-rayon mills in the North.

Doc Comes Only For Sick Kids In Jobless Mill Worker's Home

LITTLE GEORGE CHAREST got a pair of shoes on his seventh birthday. His grandmother bought him the shoes because his father "considers himself lucky if he works six months in a year."

His father, George, Sr., is a woolen worker. Like some 10,000 others in Lawrence and nearby towns, he is on the "labor market," ready and willing to work but unemployed most of the time.

He has not had a steady job for two years since the closing of the mill where he worked three and a half years.

Charest is ready and willing to work, preferably at his trade where the average wage is $1.52 an hour. He worked two days during the week of his son's birthday.

Job Too 'Expensive'

With a friend, who has an old car, he went to work at Waltham, Mass., some 35 miles away. The job was listed at the Lawrence office of Massachusetts Div. of Employment Security as "battery work," Charest said.

When they got there they found that a battery plant was being remodeled and that they would be paid $1.10 an hour.

He and his friend had spent $4 for gasoline and oil. His buddy also knew that if they made the round trip to Waltham every day his car would require extensive repairs. The inescapable conclusion was they could not "afford" the job at $1.10 an hour.

"How do you live?" Mr. and Mrs. Charest were asked when interviewed in their modest but neat-as-pin home.

They have been getting $29 a week unemployment compensation (when Charest isn't working part-time), but the benefits will be exhausted in a few weeks. With that money, they paid the rent, which is $12 monthly. The rest of the money goes for groceries.

They heated only the kitchen and the living room downstairs during the winter. When Charest made $50 a week at his last job, he spent $30 for necessities and put the rest aside. He was laid off two months ago.

He had to use the savings to buy oil for the furnace, and shoes for himself so that he could continue to look for work.

They don't call the doctor unless it is absolutely necessary, as when one of the children had the measles. When Mrs. Charest got pneumonia last year, she lay in bed two weeks without benefit of medical care. Charest said he needs dental care and treatment for a scalp rash, but can't afford it.

"I'm the kind of a fellow who doesn't like bills," he said. "My bills have got to be paid."

In The Legislatures—

'Right To Work' Tories Battled; Farm Labor Curb Lost On Coast

WITH legislative preliminaries out of the way, for the most part, in many states, organized labor was getting deeper and deeper into a series of two-way fights last week.

On the one hand, the CIO was intensifying its fight for new laws and amendments to old laws aimed at advancing the interests and welfare of workers. On the other, it was fighting grimly at an apparently unending job—stemming the usual rash of reactionary bills intended to undercut the gains of the workers.

IN OKLAHOMA, the CIO and the rest of organized labor have had two anti-union shop bills—the kind called "right to work" measures by their tory sponsors—to contend with. Both make it contrary to public policy to make union membership either a deterrent or a requirement for holding a job.

One measure, introduced in the House, apparently has been successfully bottled up in committee. The other, started through the Senate, is still alive.

Nearly 1000 union members jammed their way into a Senate committee hearing on the latter measure and booed lustily from the galleries when the surprisingly small number of proponents made their pitches.

They cheered just as lustily when the union case was presented by Sec.-Treas. Len Yarborough of the Oklahoma CIO Council; Lena Kountz, of the CIO Communications Workers, and spokesmen for the AFL, miners union and railroad brotherhoods.

ORGANIZED labor in Tennessee suffered a setback when a proposed amendment to legalize the union shop was beaten in the Senate, 20 to 12.

The open shop law was passed in 1947, when the then Gov. Jim N. McCord refused to veto it. The next year organized labor supported Gordon Browning for Governor on his promise to fight against it, but he broke his pledge. Last year it supported the present Governor, Frank Clement, on his backing of the amendment.

However, the Tennessee Senate increased unemployment compensation from $25 to $28, medical expense coverage from $800 to $1500, and death benefits from $7500 to $8500, and passed a law requiring payment of the prevailing wage on all State construction. But it voted down a minimum train crew bill.

IN CALIFORNIA, the first major pro-labor bill to reach the Assembly floor, one prohibiting the employment of minors 16 to 18 years old on farms during the school season, was defeated.

A few days later, however, the Assembly's Finance and Insurance Committee approved a labor-backed bill also fought by the farm lobby when it recommended inclusion of agricultural labor in the workmen's compensation program.

A farm lobby attempt to slip an Associated Farmers of California-sponsored measure past the Assembly Industrial Relations Committee was blocked. The bill would have prohibited the State Mediation & Conciliation Service from attempting to settle a farm labor dispute unless requested to do so by both sides.

In Ohio, the CIO and the rest of organized labor was drawing lines for a bitter fight on a bill introduced by Rep. French (R.) which would outlaw the closed shop, forbid the union shop and prohibit peaceful picketing.

2 States Defeat Tax Dodge Plan

The proposed millionaires' amendment to shift part of the tax load from the vaults of the wealthy to the tables of the poor has been beaten back in two more states, thanks to vigorous fights by organized labor.

The Oregon State Senate turned down the proposal by a 19 to 11 vote. A similar resolution was passed by the Tennessee Senate but was badly beaten, 68 to 8, in the House. The measure would amend the Constitution to limit the federal income taxing power to 25%.

KARL ARNOLD, minister-president of North Rhine-Westphalia, largest state in Germany with a population of 14 million, brought the fraternal greetings of Pres. Walter Freitag of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB) to the Pennsylvania CIO Council convention at Philadelphia.

Arnold, leader of the liberal wing of the Christian Democratic Party, is an old-line trade unionist. He was an officer of the Christian Trade Union Federation before the war until deposed and jailed by Hitler. In addition to speaking to the convention, he had a long conference with CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Accompanying him were Adolf Flecken, minister of finance for North Rhine-Westphalia, which includes the industrial Ruhr Valley, and Walter Hensel, city manager of Duesseldorf. They are visiting this country under the auspices of the State Dept. and the Government Affairs Institute.

The Name Still Means The Same

The satellite Polish government paid tribute to Soviet Premier Stalin at his death by—among other things—changing the name of the Silesian industrial city, Katowice, to Stalinogrod.

The old name means "hangman's place." The new one, of course, means "Stalin town."

Polish workers are getting a good laugh out of the switch, according to word from the underground reaching the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The Communists didn't really change the name, they say; they just translated it into modern Russian.

Wilson Tries Again To Get No-Stock Rule Set Aside

DEFENSE Sec. Charles E. (General Motors) Wilson is trying to get the Senate Armed Services Committee to relax the rule which caused him and his top aides to sell their stock holdings.

Wilson reportedly has told committee members the law—which prevents government procurement officials from having an interest in firms with which they do business—is preventing him from hiring well-qualified businessmen in the Defense Dept.

The battle over Wilson's own nomination, which ended in a decision that he had to promise to dispose of his General Motors stock before being confirmed, touched off the first big fuss of the Eisenhower Administration.

Wilson has since disposed of all his stock, making a neat and unexpected profit, stock market reporters say.

Initial reaction to the latest Wilson proposal for setting aside the law was that Wilson would get another flat refusal.

Three prominent senators, who swing a lot of weight on Capitol Hill, were reported dead set against changing the rules to accommodate the two new assistants Wilson wants. He now has three assistant secretaries, who get $15,000 a year.

Sen. Byrd (D. Va.), who first raised the stock issue, was reported to have said he saw no reason for changing the rules.

Durkin Hits Bricker Move To Curb ILO

THE INTL. Labor Organization, under vigorous attack by some proponents of the Bricker Amendment to the Constitution, was strongly defended last week by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin.

At the same time the Emergency Committee of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions voiced concern over the opposition of some employers and governments to the ILO. The subject was scheduled for discussion at the ICFTU World Congress. in Stockholm next July.

Durkin declared that ILO conventions, or treaties, which would be limited or nullified by the Bricker Amendment, "certainly do not constitute any threat to our domestic institutions."

THE PROPOSAL by Sen. Bricker (R. O.) would sharply restrict the power of the President to conduct foreign affairs, allegedly to "prevent" him from "enacting" domestic legislation through treaties with other countries.

"The fact is," Durkin said, "that nothing adopted by the ILO is anything more than a recommendation for the consideration of this government through its normal constitutional procedures.

"ILO conventions . . . serve a useful purpose and legitimately set recommended standards for matters admittedly within the domestic jurisdiction of the members."

Israel

Ezra Hayut has been appointed labor attache of the Israel Embassy in Washington. Born in Rumania, he received his education in Canada and this country and settled in Israel in 1934. There he served on the staff of the General Federation of Labor, and recently had been Southern Israel regional director of the Refugees' Absorption Dept. of the Jewish Agency.

Latin America

An office of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has been opened in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to serve as an information and advisory center for unions in that country and as an agency for the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), ICFTU coordinating body in the Western Hemisphers.

In charge is Joviani de Araujo, veteran Brazilian trade unionist. He is president and treasurer of the National Union of Maritime Cooks & Bakers, and also secretary of the National Federation of Workers of Maritime & River Transport. Seven national union centers in Brazil are ICFTU affiliates.

The third course of the trade union training school at the Univ. of Puerto Rico, sponsored by ORIT and given scholarships by the Point IV Administration, is under way with 10 students from six Latin American nations. Upon completion of the course in June, the students will spend two months on a study tour of the United States.

Africa

As a result of recent constitutional changes in Sierra Leone, British colony and protectorate on the West Coast of Africa, Gen. Sec. Siaka Stevens of the Sierra Leone Council of Labor has become Minister of Lands, Mines and Labor.

Sweden

Average hourly wages of Swedish industrial workers have increased three times since 1939, according to a survey by the Swedish Federation of Labor, with the boost in real wages estimated at 20 to 25%.

The study showed that the average increase for men workers since 1939 is 189%, and for women 220%. White collar and service trades workers registered smaller raises.

Ford Brass Is Challenged By Reuther On Job Bias

CIO AUTO Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week challenged the top brass of the Ford Motor Co. to implement its spoken opposition to racial prejudice and job discrimination.

In a letter to Benson Ford, vice-president of the Ford company, Reuther took note of a recent Ford speech before the National Conference of Christians and Jews in Miami. Ford is a co-chairman of the group.

In his speech Ford attacked racial prejudice and the denial of opportunities to minority groups. Reuther called Ford's speech "extremely timely and welcome in this period of increased practices of discrimination at the employment gate."

"Your address," Reuther wrote, "indicates that you subscribe to the principle that we cannot maintain our position as leader of world democracy unless we are willing to close this dangerous gap between the slogans of democracy and its everyday reality."

Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan has again called upon that State's Legislature to adopt an FEPC law as was promised in the platforms of both major parties.

Beirne (seated, left), chairman of National CIO Community Services Committee, was principal speaker and urged expanded CSC work.

Beirne Urges Expanded CSC Work

By BOB SENSER

FANNING OUT from the bargaining table into the community is the big job ahead of the CIO, Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers told the eighth annual banquet of the Chicago CIO Council.

Addressing a capacity audience of 600, Beirne said "our achievements in the community are but scratches on the surface compared to what remains to be done."

As new chairman of the National CIO Community Services Committee, he hailed the community services program of the Chicago CIO as an example of what "we must do to give life and meaning to those things we believe in."

The big Mural Room of the Morrison Hotel thundered in applause as Beirne said: "We stand united in the CIO."

"THERE IS NO rift within the CIO," he said. "There is a renewed determination to drive harder and harder for new social gains—nationally and locally. It's up to you and all of us to carry the ball."

As an instance of what must be corrected, he cited the poor labor representation on Blue Cross boards across the nation.

Seven Philip Murray Awards, given annually by the council in recognition of outstanding work for the community, were given two individuals and five local unions. Beirne described them as "living memorials to a great man."

Receiving the awards from Council Sec. Ellsworth M. Smith were Maynard Wisner, former director of the Chicago Commission on Human Relations, and Theodore Maynard, of the Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee, for his work as chairman of the council housing committee.

Recipients for the locals were Ralph Rubino, Auto Workers Local 59; Norman Harris, for Subdistrict 3 of Dist. 31, Steelworkers; James Ganly, USA-CIO Local 65; Vonn Northrop, USA-CIO Local 1091, and Karl Grutter, USA-CIO Local 1091.

Reuther Appears On Youth TV Show

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther will appear on the NBC television program, "Youth Wants to Know," on Sunday, Apr. 26.

He will answer questions posed by a panel of teen-agers gathered in NBC's Washington studios. The program, which will be carried on the NBC TV network from 1:00 to 1:30 p.m., EDT, is moderated by Theodore Granik.

GOP Turns Down Ike—

House Group Votes To Kill Rent Curbs

A REPUBLICAN-controlled House committee last week rejected proposals of the Republican Administration that rent controls be continued for five months.

The House Banking Committee, by a 16 to 10 vote, decided to let controls expire automatically at midnight Apr. 30 on 4.3 million of the nation's 5.6 million rent-controlled dwellings.

Action came on a proposal of Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.), which the Eisenhower Administration had fought. The President had urged continuation of controls until Sept. 30 to allow state legislatures time to act.

Committee Democrats had tried to substitute "the Eisenhower plan" for the Wolcott move, Rep. Bolling (D. Mo.) said, but had been beaten on an almost straight party-line vote, with Democrats supporting the Republican President.

"It's another example of Republicans in Congress opposing an Administration proposal and the Democrats trying to bail out the Administration," Bolling said.

If the Wolcott measure carries in the House, controls will die in two weeks in Chicago, Philadelphia, Cleveland, San Franscisco and many other major cities. Only critical defense areas, with that definition tightened up to exclude many communities, would still have rent control protection.

DEFENSE MOBILIZER Arthur Flemming had pleaded, in Eisenhower's name, for the five-month extension, previously approved by the Senate Banking Committee. The Senate committee had only partially backed the Administration, adding approval for automatic 8.3% rent increases effective May 1.

Democrats, planning a House floor fight to save rent controls for the five-month period, were counting on "Mr. Eisenhower's influence to try to get the House to approve Mr. Eisenhower's plan," according to Rep. Spence (D. Ky.), ranking Democrat on the House committee.

Ike Names Ex-Sen. Cain To McCarran Board

PRES. EISENHOWER has nominated two defeated Republicans to be members of the Subversive Activities Control Board, charged with responsibility for registering Communists under the McCarran Act.

They are former Sen. Harry P. Cain of Washington and former Gov. Thomas J. Herbert of Ohio. Both will receive $12,500 a year.

THE SUBVERSIVE Activities Control Board, created by the McCarran Act, would become engaged in new harassment of unions if bills pending before Congress become law.

The measures, introduced by Sen. Goldwater and Rep. Rhodes, Arizona Republicans, would let the control board rule whether unions or union officers should be labeled as "subversive" and would face stiff fines and jail penalties.

HARRY P. CAIN
Ex-Senator reaches for a cup of coffee in his filibustering days.

Possibly, anti-union or ultra-conservative board members could bust militant, non-Communist unions by publicly applying the label of "subversive" to them.

CAIN, one of the most ultra-conservatives in the Senate, was decisively beaten last November by Democrat Henry M. Jackson. Jackson ran up a plurality of 134,000 votes in an election which saw Eisenhower carrying the State by 100,000 votes out of the million cast.

Since the election, the one-term Senator has been busily shopping for any kind of a government job in Washington.

Herbert, who is 58, is a Cleveland attorney and was a one-term Governor of Ohio. A candidate for the Republican nomination for governor in the 1952 primaries, he was defeated by Sen. Taft's brother, Charles, who later lost the election. Both Taft and Ohio's Sen. Bricker had backed Herbert's appointment.

How's The GOP Doing?

'You Pays Your Money And Takes Your Choice'

REPUBLICAN leaders last week observed the Eisenhower Administration's first 75 days with three contradictory summations of what has or has not been done.

First was the official "party line." Issued by retiring Chairman C. Wesley Roberts, the Kansas 10 percenter who quit under fire, the statement claimed "memorable and significant" accomplishments. In 5000 words, the party claimed these:

- Creation of the new cabinet-level department of health, education and welfare. (This Truman proposal had been earlier blocked by the Republicans, who now claimed credit for its passage but only after giving the American Medical Association veto power.)
- Paring 7800 workers from the federal payroll. (This is the normal number of quits in a three-month period among 3 million workers.)
- A willingness to take Communist peace moves at face value until proved otherwise. (This was the Truman-Acheson policy.)

IN THE same period, former Gov. Alf M. Landon, Republican presidential candidate in 1936, charged the Eisenhower Administration had "bungled" almost every major political problem since coming to Washington.

Third view came from Mr. Republican," Sen. Taft of Ohio. Taft said: "Some progress has been made. But it seems slow and will seem slower in the future."

How are the Republicans doing? Well, you pays your money and you takes your choice.

Social Security Founder Gets Ax

THE MAN WHO helped found and directed the Social Security program for 18 years will lose one of his Social Security benefits because he was ousted by the Republican Administration.

He is Arthur J. Altmeyer, who was "reorganized out" of his position in the promotion of the Federal Security Agency to a Cabinet Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare.

He had planned to retire on May 8 on his 62nd birthday, the minimum retirement age under federal civil service. He will collect retirement pay, but he lost a right that would give his wife half his annuity upon his death. Under civil service rules, a federal employe must serve until the minimum retirement age to obtain this benefit.

New GOP Chairman Has A Record—Opposed To Ike

THE REPUBLICAN National Committee—top political machine of the Eisenhower Administration—now has as its new boss a man who has voted against most of the publicly-stated views of Pres. Eisenhower.

He is Leonard W. Hall, former New York Congressman, who replaced C. Wesley Roberts of Kansas.

The Hall appointment was greeted with a Democratic party score card which showed the new Republican political boss had a voting record in Congress which ran almost completely counter to the views Eisenhower has publicly stated.

In 1952, for example, Hall voted to cut foreign aid by $2 billion, after Eisenhower (then commander of NATO), had publicly warned that a cut of more than $1 billion might endanger the military build-up in Europe which Eisenhower termed "essential in the interest of United States security."

HERE ARE other highlights in the Hall voting record:

Against Point Four; for cuts in foreign aid; for Taft-Hartley; against expanded social security; for the Kerr Bill to enrich oil and gas companies at the expense of consumers; for suspending the anti-trust law on rate-fixing by railroads; against rural electrification; against federal school lunches; against increased funds for federal power projects; for limiting public housing; for the McCarran immigration bill.

FDA Faces Congress Critics On Restoring Inspection Powers

By ED BENNETT
For Labor Press Associated

"EVERYBODY'S agin' sin" but protecting American consumers against contaminated food, misbranded drugs and poisonous cosmetics is not easy—and not without opposition.

Congress now has before it five bills that would restore to Food & Drug Administration agents the right to enter and inspect factories within its jurisdiction, a right that was lost through faulty wording of the present law as interpreted by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Everybody, it seems, wants the power restored—all the reputable food, drug and cosmetics manufacturers, their trade associations, the retailers, the press, the public—but watch for trouble to develop when hearings open this week.

The trouble began a long time ago with one Ira D. Cardiff, who heads a firm that packs dried apples in Yakima, Wash. FDA had seized several shipments of Cardiff's apples that contained arsenic spray, but it had never been able to get into the plant to inspect the apples before they were packed. His competitors, all the while, were permitting inspections.

Cardiff was charged with violation of the Food & Drug Act, was found guilty by the U. S. District Court at Spokane and fined $300. He appealed to the U. S. Court of Appeals and got the verdict set aside. FDA carried the case to the Supreme Court and lost—because the law reads that the inspector may enter "after first making request and obtaining permission of the owner, operator or custodian."

The Grocery Manufacturers of America urged that the law be amended to restore the FDA's inspection power. Support has come also from the American Drug Manufacturers Association, the American Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association, the American Toilet Goods Association, and the National Association of Retail Grocers.

Sec. of Welfare Oveta Culp Hobby has written to Pres. Eisenhower, pleading for action, but the New York Journal of Commerce warned her that her "simple" amendment "will not breeze through Congress without opposition."

FOR EXAMPLE, Rep. O'Hara (R. Minn.) says he's afraid of unlawful searches prohibited by the Constitution," but he didn't amplify what he meant. Rep. Beamer (R. Ind.) says he wants "a more detailed description of an inspector's authority."

And there have been other murmurs in Congress about "defining what an inspector can do and can't do" and about "trade secrets" and "information sought by competitors"—something like the "management prerogative" stuff that union negotiators have to listen to. Remarked an FDA man: "We don't want to look at the deed to the property or the profit-and-loss statement, but we do want to see what's going into the food that consumers buy and eat."

But Congress is likely to worry about "protecting businessmen" even though responsible businessmen want no such "protection." Meanwhile, the fringe operators are turning away Uncle Sam's inspectors at the rate of one a day.

How To Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

BUYING CLOTHES is no longer a simple matter of selecting a rayon blouse, a wool suit or cotton dungarees. Now there are new synthetic fibers like orlon, dacron, dynel, etc.

What's more, the new and old fibers are often mixed into "blended" fabrics. Now you find rayon blended with nylon, wool orlon and dacron; wool blended with orlon and dacron, and so on.

By this time the public is understandably confused. Are the new "wonder fabrics" good enough to justify their high cost? What are they best used for, and why do mills and manufacturers make so many different blended materials anyway?

Why Grocery Prices Are Up

Sales increased 20% for Libby, McNeill & Libby in 1952, but profits jumped 229%. The annual report, for the fiscal year ended Feb. 28, showed net profits of $6,123,819, or $1.69 a share, against $1,863,-209 or 51c a share in 1951.

Increased earnings were laid to lower costs of some raw materials, tight control of spending, operations economies, a steady market, and higher sales.

The answer to the first question is that for certain needs, orlon and dacron are excellent—but not necessarily worth the high price currently charged for them for all purposes.

The answer to the second question is that manufacturers "blend" several fibers in one fabric because they want to secure the best qualities or price advantage of each fiber. Thus they often now blend high-priced nylon or orlon with rayon to achieve some of their wear resistance and stability but at rayon's lower cost.

But sometimes a manufacturer may have used just a little of one of the newer and costlier fibers like orlon or dacron in a blend with an inexpensive fiber like rayon to capitalize on the publicity campaign behind the new fibers.

Look At The Label

So from now on when you buy clothes it will be important to look at the garment label to make sure just how much of each fiber is in the fabric.

As a shopping rule of thumb, a blend should contain at least 12-15% of a particular fiber to have some of its characteristics, and closer to 35 to 50% to really resemble the costlier fibers.

Thus, cotton work pants with 12-15% nylon do take on some of nylon's ability to resist abrasion, although they are still basically cotton garments. A suit of rayon and orlon (or dacron) should have close to 35-50% of the orlon or dacron to resemble these costlier materials.

It's unwise to invest much money in these new costly fibers, even though they are heavily publicized. For one thing, new materials are always ultra-expensive when first introduced because of their novelty and because production is still limited.

Good And Bad Points

Here are the good and bad points of orlon and dacron, and where they may be useful to you and where not:

Both orlon and dacron have excellent wear resistance, wrinkle recovery and shape retention, are easy to wash, dry quickly and need little ironing. Thus even a "dressy" dress with orlon blended properly in the fabric becomes washable at home. Or a blend of one of these synthetics with wool helps the wool hold its crease in humid weather. A blend of cotton and orlon helps the cotton resist wrinkling and makes it quicker drying.

Orlon drapes nicely and thus is particularly useful for women's dresses. Dacron is more resilient, has a high degree of "wetness stability" and is the strongest fiber developed so far.

Orlon fabrics or blends cost less than dacron and thus are sometimes a better value for similar uses.

These new materials have disadvantages too. Dacron tends to "rough up"—form little pills of fiber. By themselves, synthetic materials have a glossiness which some people don't like in some types of clothes, as for suitings, and an undesirable transparency when used for shirts and other woven garments. Too, a cigaret ash melts a hole in these fabrics which is difficult to repair.

Austrian Women Unionists Visit CIO Headquarters

FOURTEEN Austrian trade union women visited National CIO headquarters in Washington last week and listened intently for several hours to a discussion of the CIO and the American labor movement—past, present and future.

Meyer Bernstein, of the CIO Intl. Affairs Dept., spoke to them in German, explaining CIO policies and programs and answering a flood of questions. Harry Pollak, also of the Intl. Affairs Dept., and Katherine Ellickson, of the Research Dept., spoke briefly.

The Austrian women are members of an all-labor technical assistance team brought to the U. S. for a six weeks' visit under a Mutual Security Agency program designed to help strengthen free, non-Communist unions in Europe.

Rosa Weber, the team leader, is secretary of the Women's Div. of the Austrian Federation of Trade Unions. Others in the group also head women's divisions of various unions, or are executive board members.

UNIONS represented by the visitors included Textile, Garment & Leather; Metal & Mine Workers; Public Service Employees; White Collar Workers in Private Industry, and Municipal Employes.

After nearly a week at the MSA Orientation Center for labor teams at Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y., the group attended the convention of the CIO Auto Workers at Atlantic City, N. J. Anna Panek, paint sprayer in a sewing machine plant, who is head of the Metal & Mine Workers' Women's Div., spoke there briefly.

U. S. Boost In Interest Rates Due

THE GOP Administration is getting ready to charge you more for borrowed money for buying or building a home.

Under pressure from the mortgage bankers and home financing groups, the government is preparing to up interest rates of private borrowing, just as the Treasury Dept. did on long-term government bonds.

Both GI loans guaranteed by the Veterans Administration and FHA mortgages would be upped. On GI loans, the interest rate is expected to go from 4% to either 4.25% or 4.5%. And FHA interest is expected to go from 4.25% to 4.5%.

Such a boost, it has been estimated, would cost the average home buyer at least $1000 in extra interest payments. And higher mortgage interest rates would be followed by a similar boost in interest on installment loans for autos, TV sets, etc.

THE "HARD MONEY" policy of the Administration was condemned as "drastically deflationary" by nine senators, led by Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.).

Pointing to the recent Treasury Dept. long-term bond issue, which will cost an extra $225 millions in interest, the statement said:

"It will cost the government enormous sums at a time when the people are being asked to forego essential services to permit relatively minor economies.

"It will cost the taxpayers equally large sums on private borrowing.

"It will be a drastically deflationary step at a time when there are increasing evidences that deflationary and not inflationary forces are the current economic problem. The American people are aware that similar hard money policies were adopted preceding the depression after 1929 . . . "

Beirne, Murray Hit Firing Case As Peril To Consumers

PRES. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers last week demanded an immediate investigation of the firing of Dr. Allen V. Astin, director of the U. S. Bureau of Standards.

Astin was fired by Sec. of of Commerce Sinclair Weeks because he refused to approve a battery additive which laboratory tests had proven worthless.

"If a reputable scientist is to be discharged for publishing the truth about a product," Beirne wrote Pres. Eisenhower, "and discharged at the request of the manufacturer of the alleged worthless product, then all the findings of the bureau will be suspect from now on.

"To us there is perhaps an even more important aspect of this controversy. The Bureau of Standards has been kept out of politics for the past 20 years. If it is now to become a political football, public confidence in its work will completely disappear."

Meantime, Sen. Murray (D. Mont.) denounced the Astin firing as "incredible."

"It means a return to the 19th Century days of 'let the buyer beware' and 'the public be dammed.' It means filth in your food. It means fraud in your advertising. And it means you'll buy drugs for your sick child without ever knowing whether you're getting medicine, nostrums, or even poisons."

Social Work Leader Dies

DR. Eduard C. Lindeman, president of the National Conference of Social Work, and a widely known leader in the field of adult and workers education, died last week in New York after a long illness. He was 67.

Dr. Lindeman was a popular discussion leader at union education affairs for a quarter of a century. He spoke at the International Institute last year in Storrs, Conn., held under the joint sponsorship of the National CIO and the American Labor Education Service, in which he was active for many years.

Born in St. Clair, Mich., the son of Danish immigrant parents, Lindeman was orphaned when he was nine. He worked as a farmhand and laborer for 13 years.

Educated at Michigan Agricultural College, he edited an agricultural journal, served as State director for 4-H Clubs, and taught in several colleges before he joined the staff of the New York School of Social Work.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

ON APR. 10 I addressed the annual convention of the Pennsylvania CIO Council. This council, one of the largest in CIO, has men and women throughout the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. Its accomplishments are all the more notable when we consider the relatively small staff which it operates.

Our industrial union councils are going to become increasingly important as CIO grows and becomes more deeply rooted in the economic, social and political fabric of our communities. To meet these growing responsibilities they must achieve a more stable and realistic financial status.

It was good to return to Pennsylvania, where I once lived and where I participated in exciting and important organizing campaigns in the early days of CIO. It was good, also, to meet again so many old friends. To see the 1200 delegates hard at work planning better ways to implement CIO policy in the Keystone State was a source of encouragement.

In my brief remarks, I reminded the delegates that the main function of the Organization Dept. is to organize unorganized workers. On behalf of the organizing staff I pledged increasing effort toward this end. From the delegates, in turn, came a responding assurance that in this task the CIO organizing staff will have full cooperation of all CIO members and unions.

McDonald Warns Doctors To Aid Prepaid Medical Care Plans

PRES. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers last week warned the medical profession that only adequate medical and hospital care, through private arrangements, would prevent national health insurance.

Addressing the joint national conference of the Blue Cross and Blue Shield in Hollywood, Fla., McDonald called it a mistake to assume the present Administration "is so firmly opposed to Federal Health Insurance that there no longer is a need to broaden and improve" present social insurance plans.

"In my opinion," he said, "nothing could be further from the truth. I believe our representative form of government makes any Administration in Washington keenly aware of the problems and dissatisfactions of the people."

McDONALD LISTED some of the problems he said must be corrected under social insurance plans negotiated by the USA-CIO and the steel industry in 1949. He added:

"We are determined to fight on until the goal of complete security, medical and otherwise, is achieved for the workers of American industry. If your organizations rise to the challenge we are willing to go forward with you."

The USA-CIO president listed these three goals of the union to improve social insurance clauses in its contracts:

- "Early diagnostic and preventive medical care."
- "Payment of medical, dental, drug and appliance bills."
- "Payment of all hospital bills."

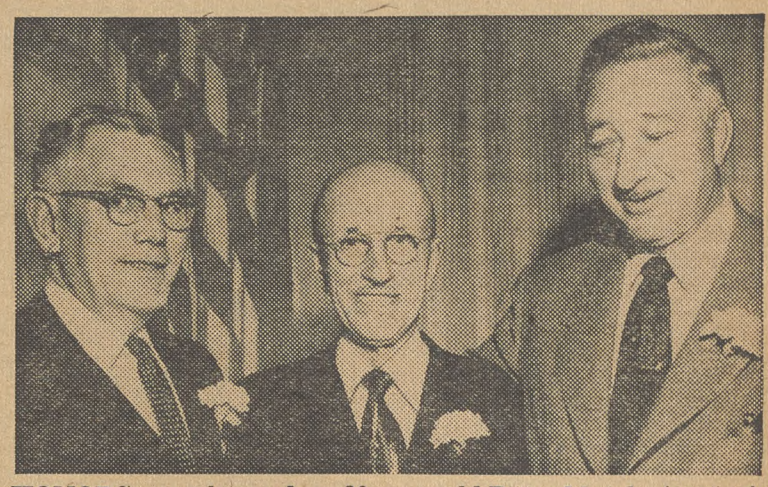
These proposals, said McDonald, "are not unreasonable or impossible to meet. They must be met by one means or another."

McDonald said most of the social insurance programs negotiated by the CIO Steelworkers after the six-week strike in 1949 for these programs and the pension system, are based on a National Blue Cross plan worked out to fit the steel industry.

REFERRING to steady increases in costs of medical care and hospitalization in recent years and Blue Cross predictions of future increases, McDonald asked:

"Is there no intelligent way in which we may insure ourselves against these great burdens? Is it not possible to broaden the range of medical benefits available through private prepaid medical plans?

"If the answer to these questions is in the negative then I believe the American people will demand that their government step in."



HONORS were heaped on 69-year-old Peter Mosele (center) when he retired recently as director of Dist. 2 of the CIO Steelworkers. Shown with him at a dinner in New York, where he also had served many years as CIO regional director, are USA-CIO Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel (left) and Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes.

McDonald Is Top Steel Vote-Getter

PRES. David J. McDonald emerged as top vote-getter in the nationwide referendum election held by the CIO Steelworkers last Feb. 10, the union's Board of Intl. Tellers reported last week.

McDonald, who was unopposed for the office left vacant by the death of the late Philip Murray, polled 294,244 votes.

James G. Thimmes, reelected vice president without a fight, received 279,587 votes. I. W. Abel, only nominee to succeed McDonald as secretary-treasurer, won 281,978 votes.

THREE of four district directors who faced opposition were reelected. These were Eugene Maurice, in the Johnstown, Pa., district; James P. Griffin, in the Youngstown, O., district, and Earl T. Bester, who had been acting director in the Minnesota-Michigan district with headquarters in Duluth.

In the Philadelphia district, H. Charles Ford, the incumbent, lost to Richard G. Davidson, veteran USA-CIO staff representative, after a fight in which the tellers threw out the votes of five locals because of irregularities. Davidson polled 12,886 votes to 10,965 for Ford.

U. S. To Study Linking Of Jobless Funds, Annual Wage

UNION proposals to use state unemployment insurance funds to pay part of a guaranteed annual wage will be studied this summer by the Labor Dept.

This disclosure, made at a closed hearing of the House Appropriations subcommittee on Mar. 6, was made public last week. E. L. Keenan, deputy director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security, outlined the plan to the committee.

Two major CIO unions—the Auto Workers and the Steelworkers—have announced plans for an all-out fight for establishment of the guaranteed annual wage.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald recently called upon Pres. Eisenhower to "do something affirmatively soon about the annual guaranteed wage" to offset "a feeling of insecurity among the people of America."

FOR YEARS, he said, "the people had a feeling of security, but today there seems to be a feeling of insecurity. When people have that feeling they are going to stop buying and then you will have a depression.

"The guaranteed annual wage will restore that feeling of security to the people. I recommend the proposal to the President of the United States because it is good," McDonald said.

Macy's Local Wins Wage Boost In Short Walkout

A FIVE-HOUR strike last week won 8000 members of the CIO Department Store Workers a $1.75 weekly pay increase, an improved pension plan and other benefits at five Macy's stores in the New York City area. Wage increases are retroactive to Feb. 1.

Some 3000 pickets surrounded the main Macy's store in Herald Square when it opened for business after negotiations that continued until the night before the strike failed to bring agreement.

AFTER an hour most of the pickets were withdrawn to attend a rally at which the strikers voted unanimously to accept the agreement reported by the union's negotiating committee.

Samuel Kovenetsky, president of Local 1-S of the CIO United Department Store Workers, hailed the contract as "a milestone in the retail industry."

The revised pension plan will give employers retiring at 65 after 25 years' service a minimum payment of $100 a month, including Social Security. The agreement also brought a $2.50 a week increase in the starting minimum.

Other gains were absorption by the company of the increased costs of the Blue Cross hospital plan, and payments of sick leave benefits on the third day instead of the fifth.

Wisconsin CIO Asks Strike Aid

The Wisconsin CIO Council last week appealed to its affiliates for financial support for two strikes.

One strike, involving 400 members of the Modine Local 82 of the CIO Auto Workers at Racine, was described by the State CIO as "one of the State's most bitter labor conflicts." The other strike is at the company-dominated town of Phelps, where Local 142, CIO Woodworkers, struck after management refused to bargain for two years.

Red Cross Board Elects McDonald

The American Red Cross last week announced the election of David J. McDonald, president of the CIO Steelworkers, to its board of governors.

He succeeds the late Philip Murray, and will serve out the balance of Murray's unexpired term which runs until 1954.

IWA Stalled In Pay Talks

SPOKESMEN for 50,000 members of the CIO Woodworkers and representatives of 400 employers were deadlocked last week in negotiations for a new contract covering woods operations in five Pacific Northwest States.

Although the union's Regional Negotiating Committee sharply scaled down the workers' demands, the employers have refused to make an acceptable offer.

The union is now seeking a wage increase of 12.5c an hour, three weeks' paid vacation after 10 years' service, and favorable clarification of holiday and vacation clauses. Originally it asked a 22.5c pay boost and a six-hour, five-day week.

Contracts expired Apr. 1 but automatically continued in the absence of termination by either party. One employer cancelled the agreement when his workers refused to accept weaker vacation, holiday and hours clauses, but reinstated it after a seven-day strike and rejoined the negotiations.

The agreement covers operations scattered through Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon and Northern California.

CIO, Mexican Labor Plan For Joint Action

By MILTON PLUMB

EL PASO—Members of the CIO last week extended the hand of friendship across the border of Mexico to form a new working unity with their 1.3 million brothers in the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM).

At the first international conference between the two organizations held Apr. 14-15 in El Paso, Tex., and across the border in Ciudad Juarez, a new International Committee on Labor Relations of the Frontier of the United States and Mexico was created to deal with all matters in which labor in the two countries has a common concern.

Thomas Names Aides

R. J. Thomas, assistant to the CIO executive vice president, who headed the CIO delegation, named the three CIO state directors in the states along the border to serve on the committee. CTM Sec.-Gen. Fidel Velasquez, leader of the Mexican delegation, named CTM representatives from the border states of Mexico. They also will invite the AFL to cooperate in the undertaking.

Creation of the committee was one of the first acts of the conference. By the time the meeting adjourned it was already functioning with directives to carry out specific assignments.

And as the outgrowth of conference discussions of the illegal Mexican "wetback" problem and the need to strengthen protections for illegal Mexican contract labor, Dr. Ernst Schwarz, director of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, left at once for Mexico City where he will work out a program for joint remedial action.

(In Washington, the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill extending for three years the program for importing farm workers from Mexico. The vote was 259 to 87.)

Plans for action on both sides of the border to deal with the problem of U. S. corporations who are setting up new "sweatshop" factories in Mexico were also formulated.

As the meeting adjourned, the heads of the two delegations called the conference "historic" and "only the beginning of a long series of similar meetings and of a new cooperation between our two organizations."

'Working Together'

In a joint statement, Thomas and Velasquez declared:

"We pledge our continued cooperation and joint action for the common benefit of the workers of our two countries. By working together, Mexican and U. S. labor will be more able quickly to end the discriminations and injustices which the forces of reaction are perpetrating on both sides of the border."

The conference opened with a breakfast meeting of the CIO-CTM delegates, followed by addresses of greeting by the leaders of the two delegations. Efficient translating by Schwarz, CTM Delegate Luis Alva of Mexico City, and Alice O. Quesada, secretary to the CIO regional director for Arizona and New Mexico, eliminated any language barrier. Miss Quesada was official recorder of the bilinqual discussions.

The conference quickly established that the CIO and CTM have similar policies and beliefs and are working toward the same democratic goals. This was strongly confirmed by the complete unity of viewpoint that prevailed on all issues discussed.

In welcoming the Mexican delegation, Thomas praised CTM—one of the strongest labor movements in Latin America—as one of the great democratic forces in the world today.

Velasquez replied that, like the CIO, the CTM is a free labor movement and aspires to win democracy and liberation for all the workers of the world.

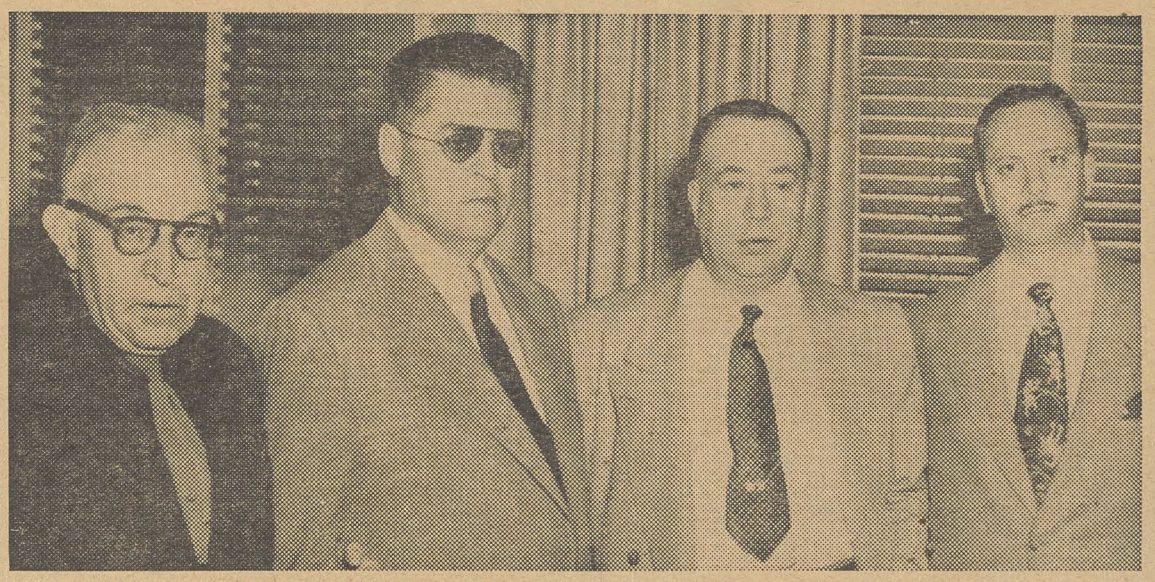
He said that, since all CTM unions are now members of ORIT, the regional organization of the ICFTU, they realized their obligation "to work much more closely with other free unions."

Sees 'Great Things'

One of the highlights of the conference was a Mexican-style banquet given in honor of the CIO delegation by the CTM members of Ciudad Juarez, Mex. More than 500 officials of the union in the thriving border city turned out for this gesture of friendship. Juarez Mayor Pedro N. Garcia welcomed the delegations.

In his remarks at the banquet, Velasquez praised the CIO for its leadership in international cooperation and predicted that "today's talks will bring great things for the workers of Mexico."

Thomas told the Mexicans that "our two organizations have the same goal—to bring the standard of living of all of our people to a higher level. The message I bring us from U. S. workers is this: 'we're your buddies and we're going to work together to build a better world for our wives and children'."



COMMON PROBLEMS of U. S. and Mexican workers were discussed in international labor conference at El Paso, Tex., by CIO and Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM). Shown are (left to right) Ernst Schwarz, director of CIO Latin American Affairs Committee; CTM Sec.-Gen. Fidel Velasquez, head of Mexican Delegation; R. J. CIO Opposes Bills Putting Curbs On Jobless Benefits

CIO LAST WEEK registered strong opposition to two pending House measures which, it charged, would make a bad unemployment insurance situation worse.

Appearing for CIO before the House Ways and Means Committee was Leonard Lesser, legal consultant to the Social Security Dept. of the CIO Auto Workers. Supporting his testimony were Albert G. Clifton, appearing for the Massachusetts State CIO, and Victor J. Canzano, Rhode Island State director for the CIO Textile Workers.

LESSER testified that bills introduced by Reps. Mills (D. Ark.) and Mason (R. Ill.) would "accentuate the problems which exist and also create new difficulties."

Lesser said the bills would:

- Earmark federal unemployment tax collections in a special Treasury account and limit their use.
- Establish a reserve account to make loans to states whose reserves are seriously depleted.
- Distribute 80 to 100% of the excess over administrative grants to the states in the form of outright grants, with largest grants going to the largest states. This money could be used without federal control for administration or for benefits.

CIO SUPPORTED the proposal for earmarking the funds but opposed "the manner in which these bills propose that such earmarked funds be used."

The loan provisions, Lesser said, "utterly fail to deal with the problem of those states where unemployment is high . . . The only assistance offered to the state in need is to push it further into the abyss of depression."

Calling the third provision "extraordinary," Lesser said it "runs directly counter to the pledge of the Administration and Congress to eliminate and prevent waste of federal funds." Its sole purpose, he added, is to "further reduce employer contributions toward the financing of the benefit aspects of the program."

CANZANO and Clifton, testifying to the problems in states hard hit by unemployment, joined Lesser in supporting a bill introduced by Rep. Forand (D. R. I.).

Clifton said New England workers "have had the bitter experience of the flight of industry, and have felt the harsh effects of technological changes, and the widespread fluctuations in many types of enterprise. A sound and well-planned system of unemployment insurance is the best protection yet devised to assist the people who work for a living, and to maintain at least a moderate level of purchasing power."

The Forand Bill, all three testified, would achieve this goal.

'Together We Have Strength To Win'

Besides our common philosophy and objectives, the CIO and the CTM also have the same enemies, R. J. Thomas, leader of the CIO delegates told the Mexican delegation at the El Paso labor conference.

"You should know," he added, "that although the CIO has more members than CTM its enemies are probably stronger. We have more millions of dollars to fight than you do."

By working together, he added, CTM and CIO "will have the strength to win against any odds."

Joint Statement—

CIO, Mexican Labor Pledge Continued Joint Action

Following is the text of the joint statement issued by the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM) and the CIO at the conclusion of the first international conference between the two groups, held last week in El Paso, Tex.:

THE CIO and the CTM have just completed an historic conference in the interests of freedom, democracy and international good will.

Our two organizations, in discussions completed late last night, have found many problems of mutual concern to the workers of both the United States and Mexico. We have discussed informally ways in which each of our organizations can aid the other in helping to win our common goal of improving, by democratic means, the conditions of all who toil.

Our meeting in El Paso is only the beginning of a long series of similar meetings and of a new cooperation between our two organizations. As a first step our delegations have decided to form a new International Committee on Labor Relations of the Frontier of the U. S. and Mexico. For the present, it will be composed of the state directors of our two organizations in each of the states along the Mexican-U. S. border, but we are also going to invite the AFL to cooperate in our undertaking.

ANOTHER problem which was the particular concern of our meeting was the urgent need to do something about the forgotten people of the U. S. and Mexico. These are the downtrodden "wetback" braceros who are daily being lured across the border illegally to be forced into virtual slavery on the large corporation farms of the Southwest.

Both of our organizations recognize that this illegal immigration must be stopped and we have pledged ourselves to use all of our influence on our respective governments to secure the necessary action.

We agree that the present open border is bringing about lower wages and working conditions not only for Mexican workers who legally come into the U. S. to work under contract, but it also is bringing added poverty to millions of native farm migrants in the United States.

ON THE other side of the border, we agreed that we must work together to put an end to the growing exploitation of Mexican workers by many large American corporations which are setting up new factories in Mexico. We shall make recommendations to the respective executive boards of our two organizations for appropriate action on these and other problems.

As we conclude this meeting, we pledge our continued cooperation and joint action for the common benefit of the workers of our two countries. By working together, Mexican and U. S. labor will be able more quickly to end the discriminations and injustices which the forces of reaction are perpetrating on both sides of the border.

This clasping of the hands of the workers of our two organizations in international support and friendship is democratic labor's answer to the forces of reaction on both the right and the left which have tried to use the injustice of exploitation as a knife to divide and weaken our solidarity.

Action In The House—

GOP Turns Down Ike, Kills Public Housing

By MILTON PLUMB

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS in Congress and the CIO last week supported Pres. Eisenhower's proposals for low-rent public housing construction and extension of federal rent controls, condemning efforts by House Republican committees to scuttle both of those Eisenhower programs.

In joint letters to Congress, Chairman James G. Thimmes of the CIO Housing Committee and Nathan E. Cowan, director of the CIO Legislative Dept., protested against two separate bills approved by different GOP-controlled committees that would end low-rent public housing and almost completely wipe out rent controls.

The CIO made clear that it regarded the Administration's recommendations as "grossly inadequate" to meet current housing needs but said that they represented an "irreducible minimum."

A DEMOCRATIC move to restore the Administration's request to continue the housing program at the present level of 35,000 new starts a year was rejected by the House by a vote of 198 to 106. That left intact the bill's provisions killing off funds and forbidding construction of any new public housing. And the House approved the measure by voice vote.

The committees which started the congressional nose-thumbing at Eisenhower and the public were the House Banking Committee, headed by Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.), and a House Appropriations subcommittee under Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.) and Appropriations Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.).

Wolcott's bill rejected completely the Administration's request that rent controls be extended to Sept. 30 to give state legislatures time to take over.

AT THE WEEK end, with the law expiring on Apr. 30, the situation on the rent bill was this:

The House passed a Wolcott proposal to extend rent ceilings for three months, until Aug. 1. A five-month extension—as advocated by the Administration—was turned down by a 139 to 39 vote. The Senate had still to act.

Urging the House to reject Wolcott's measure and to continue rent control two more years, the CIO spokesmen warned that the bill approved by the committee "would feed the flames of inflation."

"It would impose higher rents on large groups of working people forced to compete for limited housing supply at the very time of decreasing wage and work opportunities," they added.

In voting to scuttle the public housing program, the House Appropriations Committee rode roughshod over Republican campaign promises as well as Eisenhower's wishes.

The President had asked funds for the construction of 35,000 dwellings next year. This was already a big reduction from the 75,000 units recommended in the budget submitted by former Pres. Truman.

The committee ignored both requests and wrote language into the independent offices appropriations bill that would make the Public Housing Administration halt all further construction.

AS A FINAL BLOW, it told the PHA to refund with private money over $271 million local housing authority bonds it is holding and directed the Federal National Mortgage Administration to sell $1 billion of its mortgages.

The committee also sought to prohibit FNMA from buying any more mortgages after July 1, but the House struck this out.

In its letter protesting these actions, the CIO noted that Eisenhower had referred to public housing during the 1952 campaign as a "moral obligation" and had pledged to support the program in at least four separate speeches.

Pres. Eisenhower's position was backed up in the House by a number of Democrats led by Rep. Yates (D. Ill.), while most Republicans backed the committee's move to kill public housing as "socialistic." Senate Majority Leader Taft said, however, that he intends to support Eisenhower's request when the bill reaches the Senate.

OTHERS FIGHTING for the program were House Minority Leader McCormack (D. Mass.), and Reps. Bolling (D. Mo.), Javits (R.-Lib. N.Y.), and Sullivan (D. Mo.). Bolling, who also is actively fighting for continued rent controls, summed up what happened thus:

"It's another example of the trying to bail out the Administration and the Democrats trying to bail out the administration."

In the Senate, a group of Democrats, led by Sens. Maybank (S. C.), former chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, Douglas (Ill.) and Humphrey (Minn.), were getting ready to do the same thing. They said they'd fight for the 35,000-unit program which House Republicans voted to deny the Republican Administration.

Ben Fischer Named To CIO Housing Post

APPOINTMENT of Ben Fischer as National CIO housing director was announced last week by James G. Thimmes, vice president of the CIO and of the CIO Steelworkers and chairman of the National CIO Housing Committee.

At the same time, Thimmes called a meeting of the Housing Committee for National CIO headquarters in Washington on May 13, immediately following a two-day National Housing Conference set up by many organizations interested in housing.

Fischer got into the labor movement as research director for the former CIO Aluminum Workers of America in 1941. Three years later, when that group was merged with the Steelworkers, he became a USA-CIO international representative.

DURING World War II he served with the Steel Commission of the National War Labor Board. When wage controls were again enacted after the outbreak of fighting in Korea, he worked with the Appeals Committee of the National Wage Stabilization Board.

The new CIO housing director got basic experience in this field by his work as organizing president of the Aluminum City Housing Association, of New Kensington, Pa., which built one of the first cooperative housing ventures in the country and provided living quarters for 250 families.

BEN FISCHER

Fischer's headquarters will be in the new office of the USA-CIO at 1001 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D. C. He also will continue as a USA-CIO international representative.

Oveta Says 'Don't Call Me Madam'

"Call Me Madam" may be the title of a popular musical, but don't mention it to Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of the new Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. Her office issued this announcement:

"Sec. Hobby requests that she be referred to as 'Mrs. Secretary,' not as 'Madam Secretary.' Her request is based on the fact that she feels the title of 'Mrs.' is a fine American word and prefers this to the more formal protocol title of Madam."

'Phony' Economy—

GOP Slashes Deep Into Social Agencies' Funds

THE HOUSE Appropriations Committee last week came up with the first money bill of the present session and slashed deeply into funds for 23 independent agencies, particularly the social agencies created by the New Deal and the Fair Deal.

Chairman Taber (R. N. Y.) claimed that the measure—the first product of his advisory staff of businessmen "experts"—would save taxpayers $2.8 billion. The committee voted to provide only $451 million—less than half the appropriations for 1953—and said it had cut budget estimates by 61%.

Particularly hard hit were the regulatory commissions set up to protect consumers, insure fair trade practices, and guard small business against the spread of monopoly. These include the Federal Trade, Federal Power, Interstate Commerce, Securities and Exchange and Federal Communications Commissions.

GOP "ECONOMY" claims were immediately denounced as "phony" by experts on government financing, including Rep. Cannon (D. Mo.), ranking Democrat on the committee. They said the bill looked more like the work of someone cutting out paper dolls than a cleaver operation, because most of the alleged "savings" were on paper only.

Cannon pointed out that more than three-quarters of the money the bill usually carries had simply been left out for action in a later measure. The items omitted include such expensive operations as Selective Service, the Atomic Energy Commission, the multi-billion dollar Veterans administration and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

As an example of "fake cuts," Cannon singled out a $368-million "saving" that Taber claimed was made by denying money for the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund. The money is not needed now because the fund has a surplus, but under the law it will eventually have to be paid.

"We'll just have to appropriate it later," Cannon pointed out.

Other "savings" claimed by the committee were accomplished by simply ignoring existing laws and ordering basic changes in government policies.

CONGRESS almost certainly will order some of these funds restored as over $400 million was cut off the revised budget submitted by Pres. Eisenhower for these agencies. The Administration trimmed former Pres. Truman's budget by about $321 million before Taber went to work on it, but the committee included these cuts in arriving at its claim of making a 61% slice.

Referring to the committee's action in leaving the biggest portion of the independent offices funds for inclusion in a bill to be sent to the floor in May, Cannon added:

"This is supposed to be an administration of businessmen, but I never saw anything so unbusinesslike."

One of the biggest cuts aimed at the understaffed regulatory commissions was made in the budget for the Federal Trade Commission, from $5.5 to $4.2 million.

THE CIO NEWS earlier revealed that the FTC was responsible for the investigation which led to the indictment of five oil companies on charges of defrauding the government. Taber, however, appointed representatives of two of the oil companies to work on cuts in the agency's funds.

The Federal Communications Commission also was cut from $8 million to $7.1 million. Taber had appointed a representative of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which the commission regulates, to help determine its appropriations.

Price Index Moves Up

THE COST of living went up again last month after three months of decreases, the new consumers' price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed last week.

The Mar. 15 level was reported as 113.6, a jump of two-tenths of 1% over the 113.4 of Feb. 15. The sharpest increase came in the "other goods and services" classification, 1.5%, chiefly because of a rise in cigaret prices following decontrol on Feb. 25. Food also went up slightly, largely because of higher prices for coffee, shortening and eggs.

Food prices are due to go still higher, the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index indicated last week. It jumped 3c to $6.38, the first time since November 1951 that it has been higher than the previous year.

Announcing . . .

It's Your Washington

An informative and exclusive new feature—"It's Your Washington"—begins next week in The CIO News.

"It's Your Washington" will be written by Willard Shelton.

In a period in which the nation's capital is jam-packed with big business brass, millionaires and Cadillacs, "It's Your Washington" is dedicated to the proposition that what happens in Congress and the government is the concern first of the people.

WILLARD SHELTON

"It's Your Washington" will search out and report the big news and the serious news—and will find time, too, for the lighter side of the capital scene.

Shelton, author of "It's Your Washington," brings to this new exclusive feature in The CIO News nearly seven years of reporting from the capital. Well-known for his honest, liberal reporting, Shelton has served as an editorial writer for the Chicago Sun and St. Louis Star-Times. Ike Writes Reuther, Pledges Job Action

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

PRES. EISENHOWER, in a letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther, has voiced strong endorsement of the Full Employment Act of 1946, and has promised to use "every useful measure, private and public" to foster economic stability and rising living standards.

Pres. Eisenhower said that "the Employment Act of 1946 reflects a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land."

(That law in its final form was considerably watered down from original wording proposed by Pres. Truman and Fair Deal senators and congressmen. Two weakening amendments by Sen. Hickenlooper (R. Ia.), on which there were record votes, found support from 27 of the 33 GOP senators voting on the issue.)

The President's letter, dated Apr. 13, was a reply to a letter from Reuther—acting in his capacity as head of the Auto Workers—which had been sent Apr. 6. The Reuther letter had called for Administration action to guarantee full employment in the event of an end to hostilities in Korea, and it had proposed a full employment conference representing government and various groups of the population.

LAST WEEK, in an "administrative letter" to all UAW-CIO locals and staff officials, Reuther noted that the President's letter expresses "general agreement with the objectives of planning to insure full employment and a rising living standard in peacetime."

Reuther's UAW-CIO letter added:

"We cannot, in good conscience, overlook the naked political facts that many people in key positions in the present Administration, both in Congress and in the executive branch of the government, have opposed and continue to oppose every reasonable and practical step by the government necessary to planning effectively to meet the threat of economic dislocation and unemployment.

Editorial comment on Page 4; Textile Town, story of unemployment center, on Pages 6-7.

"THE NATIONAL CIO has pledged its full cooperation to Pres. Eisenhower in all matters in which he acts in the public interest.

"In this matter of planning for full employment and full production in peacetime, he shall have our full and undivided support. We sincerely hope and trust that his leadership will prevail over those obstructionist elements within his Party and his Administration."

Pres. Eisenhower's letter noted that the Employment Act of 1946 "reflects a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land."

"The achievement of a steadily growing and a prosperous economy," the Eisenhower letter added, "requires continuous thinking and planning for the future" and it said that "towards this end, we shall consult actively with private citizens and groups."

EISENHOWER indicated he expects the government to play an important and continuing role in the country's economy.

He said he "firmly subscribes" to the principles of the 1946 full employment law — which has been sharply criticized by many Republican officials and a large number of businessmen and industrialists.

The President said he hoped

Here's Text Of Eisenhower's Letter To CIO President

Here is the text of Pres. Eisenhower's letter, written from the White House on Apr. 13, to CIO and Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther:

DEAR MR. REUTHER: I want to thank you for your letter of April sixth focussing attention on the question of maintaining the American economy at a high level of employment and production.

This, of course, is a matter of fundamental importance. It is a matter which is very much in our thinking. Administratively, I look to the machinery set up by the Employment Act of 1946 to bring together the analyses and planning of the Executive Branch and of the Congress in this vital field.

As you know, I have undertaken to rebuild the old Council of Economic Advisers and make it a genuinely useful agency. In proceeding with this task I have been able to secure the services of our country's leading economist in the field of business cycles. I am informed that the Joint Committee on the Economic Report is also getting some essential studies of stabilization policy underway. I look forward to a close and fruitful collaboration between these two groups.

The Employment Act of 1946 reflects a determination on the part of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land. I firmly subscribe to the principles of that law, as I have said more than once in the past.

I INTEND to see that every useful measure, private and public, is taken to create conditions that foster economic stability and a rising standard of living for our people.

To achieve this goal requires the creation of a climate in which confidence about the future can grow and in which every group in our society pulls together for the good of all. In such an environment, I am confident we can greatly increase the stability and productivity of our economy. This situation, buttressed by steady vigilance and by firm and coordinated government policies, holds promise for the future.

THE ACHIEVEMENT of a steadily growing and a prosperous economy requires continuous thinking and planning for the future. Towards this end, we shall consult actively with private citizens and groups. We will need to draw on the accumulated experience and knowledge of our people as well as their goodwill. I know we can count on your support in this effort.

Sincerely,
DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

'Peace Should Bring Better Living, Not Depression,' Says Reuther

"THE AMERICAN people do not expect peace to bring depression and unemployment. Peace ought to mean greater opportunities to do the things we all dream about—of a better, richer, fuller life for our children and ourselves in the days ahead."

That was the message the American public must impress on politicians in Washington, said CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Reuther, appearing on the Kate Smith television show over the National Broadcasting Company's TV network on Apr. 17, noted America has "a tremendous amount of unfilled needs."

"WE NEED better houses, we need more schools, we need more hospitals, we need more roads," Reuther told Ted Collins, who conducted the interview.

"There is a tremendous amount of work that can be done in America, and I believe that if America knows how to meet the threat of war, we ought to find a way to mobilize our tremendous productive power to meet the needs of people in peacetime."

During the interview, the CIO president discussed his recent letter to Pres. Eisenhower, urging formulation of "a sensible, constructive plan by which we can facilitate the orderly and sensible conversion to civilian production."

Purpose of the plan, Reuther said, was to "minimize the number of unemployed and insure full employment, with workers making the good things of life as quickly as we can."

IT IS ESSENTIAL, Reuther said, that America plan now "so we can make the most of what we have in terms of basic human values and human happiness and human security and human dignity, because we are the biggest, strongest, freest country in the world."

"The tragedy of the world," Reuther said, was that "we work together, fight together, sacrifice together, we even give our lives together in war. And if we can do these things for the negative ends of war, there must be a way to tap the spiritual strength of free people and get them to work, plan, fight and sacrifice together for the good things of life in peacetime."

Reuther said the American housewife, "one of the most important people in America," can force Washington politicians to plan now to avoid a depression and unemployment if current peace talks are successful.

A flood of letters to congressmen and senators from housewives would bring a favorable response, Reuther predicted, "because the housewives of America are voters and they control votes."

OVER THE CRACKER BARREL.—CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther chats with Producer Ted Collins (left) during "Cracker Barrel" session of NBC-TV's "Kate Smith Hour" program.

Full Employment

Pres. Eisenhower, in his letter to Walter P. Reuther (see Page 3), has given a strong and welcome endorsement of the principles of the Employment Act of 1946.

The Chief Executive was not exaggerating when he said that that law represented the "determination of the American people to see to it that the stupidity of mass unemployment never again visits this land." Equally welcome was the pledge that the Eisenhower Administration intends to employ "every useful measure, private and public" to help "create conditions that foster economic stability and a rising standard of living."

Pres. Eisenhower's letter does much to off-set the concern which followed his omission of any specific reference to full employment in his State of the Union Message. That, followed by the dismantling of the old Council of Economic Advisers, gave rise to fears that the new Administration was turning its back on the concept of government programs to assure jobs for every person willing to work.

The Eisenhower letter now sets forth a clear outline for a liberal economic philosophy for America—the sort of economic philosophy which has proven so beneficial to the country and its people during the past 20 years.

But, as Pres. Reuther wrote to UAW-CIO locals, "we cannot, in good conscience, overlook the naked political facts that many people in key positions in the present Administration, both in Congress and in the executive branch of the government, have opposed—and continue to oppose—every reasonable and practical step by the government, necessary to planning effectively to meet the threat of economic dislocation and unemployment."

The President, in supporting the important principle that full employment and full production require a degree of planning by government, has the full support of the CIO.

It is to be devoutly hoped that his leadership will prevail over the obstructionist elements in his party and in the Administration.

If there is ever again mass unemployment, it will be deeds, rather than words, that will count in solving the problem and easing the hardship of the jobless.

Facts vs. Slogans

If congressional investigators are interested in facts rather than slogans, they would do well to look at the phenomenon at Gimbel's department store in New York.

Gimbel's placed "on sale" so-called cooperative apartments, in a housing project not yet even started. Prices for living space ranged from about $1000 to $1500—with monthly maintenance-rental costs of from $75 to $125 a month.

Next day, 10,000 people showed up at Gimbel's; 150 laid out the money on the line; hundreds of others placed small option deposits.

Why should this interest the congressional probers? Because, in one week the House passed (1) a bill which weakens rent control still further and (2) which knocked out funds to build 35,000 public housing units across the nation during the next 12 months.

Perhaps a majority of the congressmen believe their slogans attacking rent control and public housing. But they'd do well to put more reliance in facts than slogans.

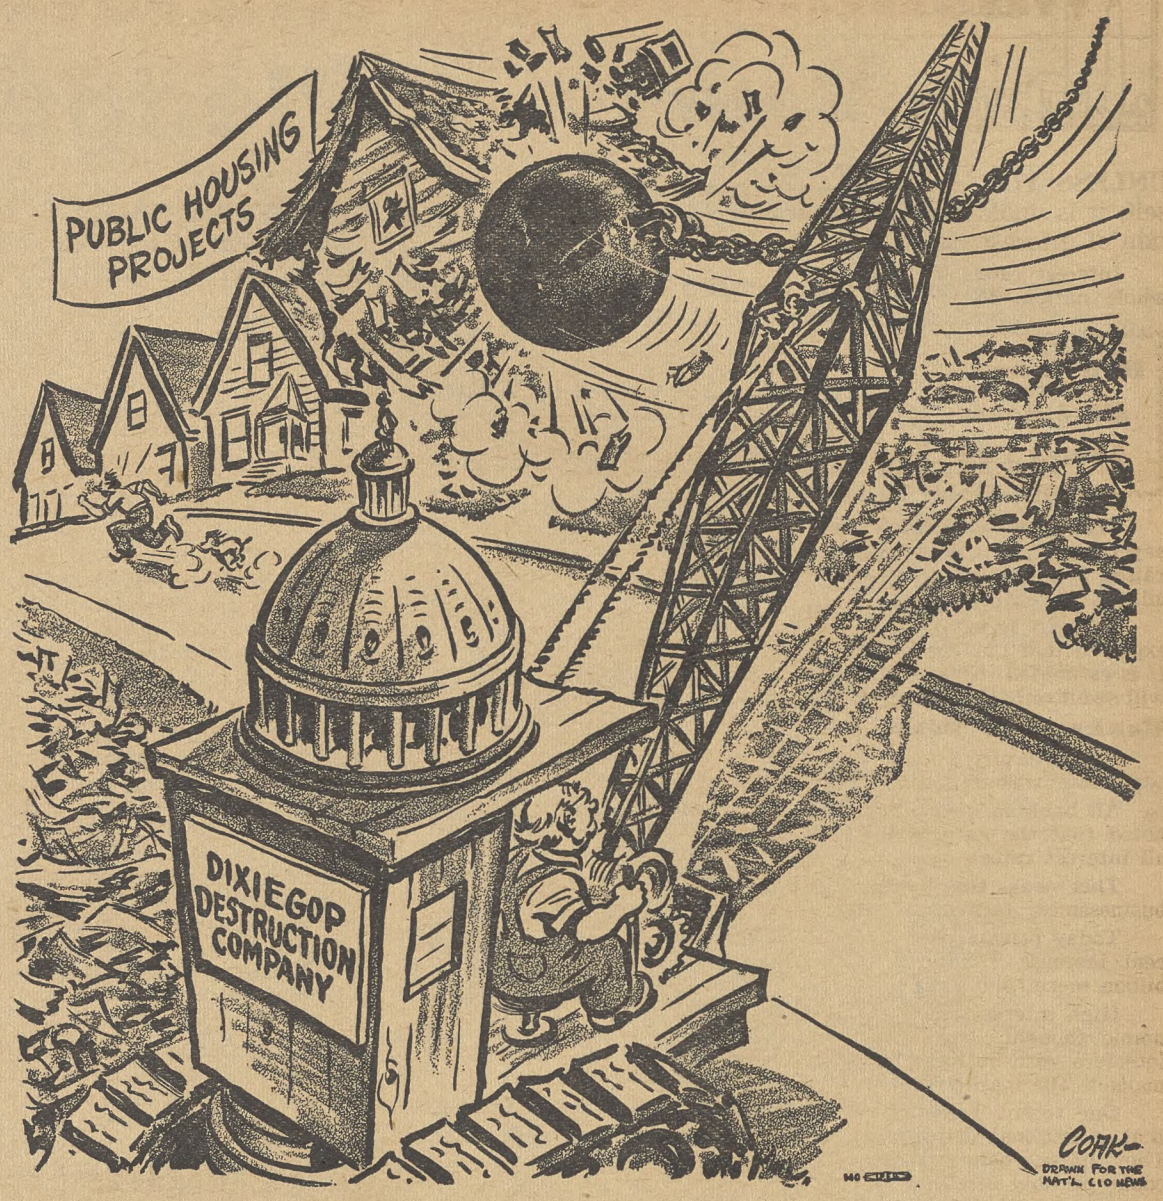
The Wrecking Crew



In Other Words—

Red Headaches In European Labor

Here is a digest of "Communist Strategy and Tactics in Western European Labor Movements," by Val R. Lorwin, formerly with the State Dept. Div. of Intl. Labor Affairs. It appears in the current Industrial and Labor Relations Review, published by the New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations.

By VAL R. LORWIN

LABOR, especially industrial labor, is the chief target of Communist strategy in Western Europe. This is not a sentimental or even primarily ideological preference derived from Marxian emphasis on the historic role of the working class which makes the Soviets commit most of their crimes in the name of the working class.

The trade unions are obvious centers of independent power in industrial countries. Some of them may command places strategic in defense preparations or in war. Labor, moreover, is the battleground on which the Soviet Union has its best chance of success.

The members of the trade unions in France and Italy are the most active and articulate section of a class long alienated from the national community. The Communist drive on labor thus attacks the weakest point of those societies.

Success After The War

In France and Italy the Communist strategy unfolded with an alarming degree of success after the liberation, then turned in new directions with the overt East-West break in 1947. The Communists, with amazing rapidity, obtained control of the trade unions.

They have sought the neutralization at the top, or the atomization at the base, of organizations competing for working class support. They have been concerned with nationalization and social reform only as propaganda themes, or as a means of infiltrating the state apparatus and strengthening the party organization and patronage machine.

They have labored to build the image of the U. S. as the enemy, the source of all difficulties of the moment and of deepest-rooted evil. They have sought to alienate workers and all classes from the western defense effort and to weaken the will to fight if war comes. They have created an apparatus for clandestine operations in the event of war with the Soviet Union.

For a few years after liberation, Communist strategy had a place for efforts to take power by parliamentary means, perhaps backed up by a show of trade union force.

Since the Marshall Plan and the explicit American commitment, the Communist parties of France and Italy can no longer hope for that. Civil war, if the issue were in doubt, would become international war. The Soviet Union, therefore, cannot permit them to make a full bid for power until it is ready for a general conflict.

Nor would the Kremlin want them to win beyond the reach of the Soviet army. The French and Italian parties, therefore, are now deprived of the ultimate strategic purpose.

Conditional And Vulnerable

Among the working class, communism, for all its inevitability, remains conditional and vulnerable.

If millions flocked into Communist parties after liberation, millions have gone out, and most members today are innocent of any Leninist-Stalinist training.

If the workers feel excluded from the decisions of the government, they have little desire to transfer the electoral and parliamentary battle to the barricades. If they are fearful of serving as the foot soldiers of the West, they are even less enthusiastic about facing courts-martial to prove Togliatti and Thorez correct in saying their countrymen would never fight against Soviet liberators.

If the Communist unions are still dominant, they are beset with the heresy of economism, for their members would rather collect economic dividends for themselves than make political capital for the party.

The French and Italian working classes are among the easiest and the hardest for the international Communist movement to manipulate.

Easiest because of the workers' class consciousness and sense of justice, resentment with crude factory discipline, the long hostility of employers to unions, the low expectations of improvement through gradualism, out of the tradition of unfinished revolution.

Hardest because of the individualism, the skepticism toward leadership and organization, the anticipation and habit (at least in France) of political democracy, the dulling of constant crisis appeals, and rifts in class solidarity.

UNLESS YOU are planning to borrow some money yourself, it is unlikely that you will get excited about the question of interest rates. You should!

Interest rates are related to the health and prosperity of our whole nation. In the past, changes in rates have had a direct connection with the ups and downs of the economic cycle.

How Interest Rate Boost Affects You

In short, interest rates affect your pocketbook whether you are borrowing or not.

That is why the recent action of the Treasury Dept., in boosting interest rates on future long-term government bonds, has created such a storm.

The rates were raised 30%—from 2.5% to 3.25%. The taxpayers will pay the increase. Interest on the national debt will be raised $7.5 million a year, or $225 million on just the proposed $1 billion, 30-year bond issue.

As each series of outstanding government bonds matures, it is expected that the Treasury will refinance them at such higher rates. It is estimated that the additional interest paid on the national debt will swell to half a billion dollars a year.

Banks Will Benefit

The Treasury states that the purpose of the new, higher-rate bond issue was to attract and benefit insurance companies.

All banking institutions will also benefit. The New York Times noted that the government bond rate increase will start a rise on all interest rates.

This means that borrowing will be more costly for home owners, businessmen, farmers or anyone else.

Today private debt totals $330 billion. A three-fourths of a per cent increase in interest rates would cost private borrowers $2.5 billion more each year.

High interest rates are part of a "hard money" school of economic thought. This school believes that government should not interfere with business but should rely on the free workings of the market. The market should set interest rates too.

Our recent Treasury secretaries, on the other hand, have said that a national debt as large as $260 billions must be managed. They did not believe that, with a debt so large, the private market could possibly establish the interest rate.

Now, however, Treasury Sec. George Humphrey is following a "hard money" policy. Interest rates are a major tool of that policy.

It Means Deflation

One of the explanations Humphrey gives for the rate rise is that our economy is a little inflationary. He believes that there is too much money and credit around with production and employment at a peak.

A policy of financing the government debt with longer term bonds and higher interest rates will restrict the supply of money and credit—that is its purpose. It means deflating our economy.

Many economists, however, would not rely primarily on money and credit policies to check inflation. Such policies are ineffective, they believe, unless applied so strongly that a recession or depression is actually provoked.

"Hard money" policies were adopted preceding the serious recessions of the '20s, the depression of 1929 and the recession after 1937. Its influence and effect on our economy is of major importance.

N. Y. Times Says—

Administration Hit For 'Gigantic Give-Away'

ONE OF Pres. Eisenhower's staunchest campaign supporters, the New York Times, has cracked down on his Administration's give-away of the submerged oil lands.

In two recent editorials, the newspaper described the oil steal as an attempt to take from all the people billions of dollars worth of property that is rightfully theirs, and present it to the people of Texas, California, Florida and Louisiana.

One editorial declared that "one of the greatest and surely the most unjustified give-away programs in the history of the United States is legally taking shape before our eyes."

"The Administration itself, which unfortunately has favored this gigantic give-away to the states," said the Times, "has had to do a certain amount of back-tracking already in an effort to bring the offshore oil bill into conformity with constitutional and international law.

"But quite apart from the complications involved in giving individual states any kind of rights beyond the three-mile limit, there is no justification that we can see in giving them even the oil between the low-water mark and the three-mile limit.

"Congress unquestionably has the right to do so if it chooses, but in doing so it nullifies decisions of the Supreme Court, it benefits a few states at the expense of the rest of us, it divests the federal government of control over a resource vital to the national defense, it paves the way for state claims even beyond the 'historic' boundaries, and it raises a threat to the rest of our federally owned properties in public lands, forests and parks throughout the nation.

"The Senators . . . who are fighting the offshore oil legislation are doing a public service in calling its dangers to the attention of the country."

Looking To 1954—

Big Business Raises Slush Fund For Drive Against Sen. Humphrey

LOOKING TO 1954, reactionary forces in Minnesota have begun one of the biggest, slickest and most costly propaganda jobs ever attempted in the history of state elections.

Objective of the anti-labor, anti-farmer forces is: To change completely the thinking of the people of Minnesota and thus to bring about defeat of one of the nation's best lawmakers, Sen. Humphrey (D.).

"Already," reports Minnesota Labor, organ of the Minnesota CIO Council, "it is certain that more money will be concentrated on the job of whipping Humphrey than was spent in the successful attempt to re-elect Sen. Robert A. Taft in Ohio in 1950."

Poll Shows Strength

The reason for this huge slush fund is clear from the results of a statewide poll conducted by the Minneapolis Tribune in cooperation with the Univ. of Minnesota. The Tribune is a Republican newspaper; its polls have predicted recent State election results with outstanding accuracy.

The poll shows that a clear majority of Minnesotans of voting age approve the job Humphrey is doing for them in Washington. That means he has a good chance to be re-elected overwhelmingly if the election were to be held now.

HONORARY MEMBER of the CIO Communications Workers, Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) signs membership card given by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne.

Humphrey, however, has been marked as the No. 1 target by big business reactionaries because of his liberal record. They are determined to change the people's present thinking, regardless of what it costs to carry out its tricky campaign of deception.

"The anti-Humphrey slush fund is being built up by huge contributions from Texas oil millionaires, great business combines, the national Republican Party treasury and the Dixiecrats who are incensed over Humphrey's championing of civil rights legislation," Minnesota Labor reported.

These are the same forces which supported Sen. Taft in 1950 by pouring millions of dollars into the Ohio campaign that led to his re-election. This time, however, instead of trying to re-elect one who has favored their cause, they are out to defeat their most outspoken opponent.

Labor Fights Back

"As this campaign picks up tempo Minnesota will become a political battlefield such as it has never known before," Assistant CIO-PAC Director Darrell D. Smith warned a PAC conference in Minneapolis.

Labor will fight back against the flood of gold that will be poured into Minnesota to remove Humphrey, Smith added. He called for the formation of a working coalition of the clergy, farmers, organized labor, cooperatives, small business, conservationists and other groups to back Humphrey's campaign.

Buckmaster Urges Cooperation Of Business For Industrial Peace

Here are excerpts from an address by L. S. Buckmaster, president of the CIO Rubber Workers and vice president of the CIO, at a recent forum on "Labor - Management Relations In the Next Decade" at the Univ. of Pennsylvania.

By L. S. BUCKMASTER

IN ANY discussion concerning labor-management relationships in future years, I believe we must begin by probing the workers themselves to determine, as well as we can, their needs, their aspirations, their desires.

The question is then: what do workers want, what do they believe is theirs by right of employment, and how can these wants be resolved in a sane, reasonable manner?

First, quite simply, workers want security, more than just the seniority provisions that call for an orderly layoff and recall procedure, but security in the larger sense. Security in their jobs, yes, but security also against unemployment, illness, age.

Annual Wage Plans

On job security and unemployment, the guaranteed annual wage plans supported by a number of major labor organizations appear to be a constructive step.

On illness and accidents . . . broader hospitalization and surgical coverage that will include dependency benefits.

On age . . . adequate pensions, with the worker keeping the right to move from one plant to another, all the while retaining his equity in his pension fund.

Second, how do these programs become facts . . . and they surely must become facts if we are to have industrial peace. We all realize that demands, as such, drawn up by a union, do not automatically become realities by the simple fact of their expression. Usually, it takes years of work, in and out of bargaining sessions, tremendous pressure by unions and, many times, actual strikes before the demands are satisfied.

At least, this is what has occurred in the past. I do not believe it need occur in the future. And I am firmly convinced such strikes can be avoided only by a greater degree of genuine cooperation between labor and management on these problems before they become heated issues.

I believe it is time that industry face up to its full responsibilities to the people who work in its shops and factories.

If the timeworn, stereotyped formula of resistance to any and all proposals advanced by unions continues to prevail, the burden of responsibility for the travail and strife that will surely follow must lie directly on the shoulders of the corporation policy makers.

It is true that industry's responsibilities to its stockholders must be the prime driving force behind its actions. But with industry growing larger each year, the importance of the relationships between the corporation and the worker is increasing rather than diminishing.

National Welfare

In this light, the responsibility of both labor and management, while directed primarily for the benefit of their constituents, now more than ever includes the general welfare of the nation.

Because of this added importance, it is imperative that these problems be worked out in advance, with emphasis on meeting issues squarely and facing reality.

It could mean setting up groups of technicians, selected by both unions and management, to investigate various areas to determine factors such as cost and feasibility of suggested reforms.

I would strongly urge that if we are to have harmony and peace in our industrial house over the coming years, the various managements take a fresh look at the problems workers are facing and revamp their past personnel attitudes. Progress will be made, without trouble and strife, if possible . . . or with trouble and strife, if necessary.

I am convinced that with a maximum cooperative effort on the part of both labor and management, with the duties and rights of both outlined by a government that plays no favorites, we can establish genuine stability in labor-management relations in the coming years.

HOW TIMES have CHANGED!

PRES. EISENHOWER asks Congress to extend the reciprocal trade program unchanged and tells women voters that "needless and expensive barriers" must be removed to strengthen the free world.

Maybe he should get together with ex-Rep. Joseph E. Talbot, his recent appointee to the Tariff Commission. Talbot says the President has too much power now over reciprocal trade, that tariff barriers should be upped.

Textile Town: 'Steady Job' Is Hope Of T

Unemployed Mill Workers Tell Their Stories Of Getting By

(Last of two articles.)

By FRED ROSS

"THERE'S NOTHING like a steady job," is a sentence that echoes through the homes of Lawrence, Mass., the worsted capital of the world.

It is a sentence that is on the lips of thousands of workers who lost their steady jobs when woolen mills closed or curtailed production.

It is a sentence that springs naturally to their lips for it is based on their privations of recent years and their hopes for a better tomorrow.

Let the workers and their families tell the story . . .

Frank Moran, 48, has only had a couple of jobs since the Ayre mill of the American Woolen Co. closed about a year and a half ago, throwing 2500 persons on the street.

Frank was working at an odd job when this reporter called at his home, but his wife, Sarah, 35, told the story of the privations that have beset the family during the past 18 or so months.

Live In Tenement

The Morans have four children: Caroline, 2; Farrell, 5; Margaret, 6; and Kathleen, 8. They live in a three-room tenement, which rents for $6 a week.

They owed the landlord $18 for three weeks during the period when Moran had a part-time job and was unable to make his pay stretch to cover the rent. The landlord obligingly wrote off four weeks' back rent at that time.

When Mrs. Moran was interviewed, the city welfare department was paying the rent. The city also was giving the family a $16 weekly grocery order, which Mrs. Moran said "lasted from Monday to Friday."

"What do you do over the week ends?" Mrs. Moran was asked.

"My father helps out, like when he paid the gas bill when the company was going to turn it off," he replied. "He's not rich himself, but one of my brothers who lives at home is working."

Running In Debt

She said the family has debts totaling about $140. There are three grocery bills totaling $100. Bills of about $40 are outstanding at hospitals.

Mrs. Moran underwent four operations in the past year, two of them for "glandular trouble" which she said resulted from child bearing. When she had her last baby, she underwent a Ceasarian.

"I did housework to pay for that operation," she said.

Like Moran, 62-year-old Peter Valcourt, who is the father of 10 children, has had a difficult time finding work since the big Ayre mill closed.

He worked at the Ayre mill 16 years and was running an elevator when the mill closed. An elevator is an important part of the multi-storied mills, for not only does it take the men to work, but it is used to transfer wool from one department to another as it is being processed.

Valcourt said his age was against him in getting another job. He recalled that at one mill "they wanted to know my age and then I heard nothing more about my application."

Too Old To Work

He said that he had exhausted his unemployment benefits for one year, and that he would reapply in May for another period of 23 weeks.

His children, five of whom are at home, and his wife help keep the household going. The fact that he had dealt at one grocery store for years helps, because he is able to get credit.

Rent is no problem, because a son, Armond, 25, owns the home and the family doesn't have to pay rent. Another son, Leonard, 18, is employed as an apprentice electrician at the Boston Navy Yard, and contributes to the support of the household.

Mrs. Valcourt does part time work, like cleaning a doctor's office. A daughter, Pauline, 20, worked part time in a store until recently when a doctor ordered her to stay home and have a steak every day to overcome anemia.

"We get her a steak whenever we can afford it," Valcourt said, ironically.

Sen. Kennedy Urges Minimum Pay Hike

Sen. Kennedy (D. Mass.) last week urged the Labor Dept. to boost minimum wages on government woolen and worsted contracts by 15c an hour as soon as possible.

Kennedy spoke at a conference called by Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin to review a proposal to raise the minimum in the woven goods, yarn and thread branch of the industry.

The proposed order to raise the minimum from $1.05 to $1.20 was issued by former Sec. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin. The conference was called by Durkin at the request of industry leaders opposed to the raise.

UNCERTAIN FUTURE.—Mrs. Sarah Moran holds youngest child, Caroli 2. Her husband, Frank, has had only odd jobs since textile mill closed.

'A Good Place For New Plants

THE CIO Textile Workers believe in the future of Lawrence. The union believes—and U. S. government figures and trade publications bear it out—that there is an increased demand for men's and women's wool clothing.

The union believes that some of the industry — including the giant American Woolen Co., which has three plants in the Lawrence area—will get more business if it blends the new synthetic "miracle fibers" with wool to create new fabrics.

More U. S. Purchases

The union believes that the government can and should divert more of its wool purchases for the armed forces to Lawrence.

The union believes that Lawrence is a good place for new industries to settle because there are several unused wool plants that can easily be converted to other manufacturing.

Arthur W. Brown, manager of the TWUA Joint Board in Lawrence and assistant director of the union's woolen and worsted division, put it this way:

"We have tried to be part of the community and want to work out the problems of unemployment and of readjustment such as we did last year when we agreed to let the American Woolen Co. make jo adjustments.

"Although TWUA represents woole workers, we are not blind to the necessi of bringing in other industries. Howeve we remain desperately opposed to the e ploitation of anybody living in the area

He was referring to plants that seek make use of the unemployment to bri down the wage standards and other ben fits won by TWUA through years struggle.

31c Wage Cut vs. $65,000 Home . . .

"We're so tired at night we can't stan up straight since the work load was i creased—and now White (Frances W White, American Woolen Co. president wants to cut our pay 31c an hour," said woman worker at the company's Woo mill in Lawrence, Mass.

"Everybody's plenty burned up abo that. They're also burned up because h asks for pay cut when he's getting $127,0 yearly salary and is building a $65,0 summer home at Plymouth, Mass."

Management Falls Down On Its Job

THE CIO TEXTILE Workers are trying to help the American Woolen Co. to help itself—but not at the expense of the union members and the community of Lawrence.

In the face of stiff competition, the firm let its staff of designers drift away and failed to make use of new "miracle fibers" to create new fabrics.

TWUA told Raymond F. O'Connell, the arbitrator who heard the firm's demand for a 31c hourly wage cut, that the company "permitted its staff of stylists and designers to deteriorate in 1951 when a large proportion of its production was in government orders."

"A number of the company's top stylists have resigned or retired and have not been replaced," the union said. "In the spring of 1951, new styling was stopped for several weeks but at the last minute a hasty styling job was performed to produce a new line of fabrics.

Failed To Venture

"The American Woolen Co. has not shown the venturesomeness or originality required in today's markets, which favor fancy and striking fabric textures."

TWUA also pointed out that the firm did not take advantage of the new "miracle fibers" as did several other woolen companies

Arthur W. Brown, TWUA's Joint Board manager in Lawrence and assistant director of the union's woolen and worsted division, has called for a congressional investigation with a view to making the new fibers available to companies not "in favorable position" with the large chemical firms making the synthetics.

Brown also asked for an investigation of "the amount of worsted cloth being imported into this country which is depriving our textile workers of such needed work."

Reminder To Ike

In a letter to Pres. Eisenhower, Brown reminded him of a campaign speech in Lawrence. Eisenhower had said "you can come right down to my office and be put in touch with the finest experts and professionals" who would help with Lawrence's unemployed problem.

Brown urged the President to implement War Manpower Order No. 4 which instructed military procurement agencies to give priority to distressed areas in placing orders.

"It is perfectly obvious to all by now that such help (as was promised by Eisenhower) must come on orders direct from your office, as you stated in your Lawrence speech," Brown wrote.

"The military procurement agencies have an unexpended balance of $35 million which has been earmarked for the purchase of textiles. You could help this situation greatly if you would urge these agencies to place the remaining orders immediately."

NEW INDUSTRY.—Some of 900 employes, members of CIO Communications Workers, quit for day at Western Electric plant which moved into closed Monomac woolen mill at Lawrence.

Save Money With Military Wool Orders Now, Textile Union Tells U.S. Officials

THE CIO Textile Workers have told Uncle Sam that he can save money by buying worsted for the armed services now.

The union made that plain in a letter by Solomon Barkin, TWUA's research director, to Sec. of Commerce Sinclair Weeks.

A TWUA delegation recently called on Weeks and Sec. of Labor Martin Durkin to present the union's program for reviving the woolen and worsted industry. Pres. Eisenhower also has been sent a copy of the plan.

"We are anxious to promote the further implementation of the proposals we offered you," wrote Barkin.

'Evasion' Protested

"We wish to impress you with the fact that the military authority must be won over to a constructive rather than evasive attitude. They will try to play safe, in view of all the current criticism of their policies.

"But the savings being effected by the government in current procurement are considerable because businessmen are calculating their bids right down to the bone.

"The industry is feeling the pressure of low operations. The worsted branch has been particularly hard hit. It needs government work to tide it over until a new worsted style trend establishes itself. Moreover, the present men's wear market is demoralized by the current talk about blends which has discouraged buying.

'Uncertainties' Told

"Buyers are glamorized by the name of the 'miracle' fibers. The retailers are not stocking up with normal inventory, because they are uncertain as to the reception of these new fabrics. The smaller and some of the larger worsted mills are being drained of their working capital by these uncertainties.

"Government work during this period as well as liberal consideration of their financial needs would help many mills tide over this transitional period. The New England banking fraternity has not been sympathetic to the financial needs of the woolen and worsted mills."

When it visited Weeks, the TWUA delegation called on him to assure fair allocation of the new fibers to all woolen and worsted firms.

The union leaders mentioned two concerns in urging that steps be taken to see that the chemical companies "be not in position to discriminate and thereby coerce textile manufacturers or determine which concerns shall survive in the textile industry."

The two firms are the DuPont Corp., manufacturers of orlon and dacron, and the Union Carbon & Carbide Corp., makers of dynel.

Ask Congress Funds

The delegation also urged the armed services to call on Congress for the immediate release of funds for the first two quarters of 1953-54 for woolen and worsted contracts, and stockpiling by the armed services of such fabrics for one year's need.

The program also asked direct contracts for distressed areas of the industry, location of defense plants in these sections, and an immediate investigation by the armed services of their needs that can be met with woolen and worsted products.

Aid Promised To Small Business

The government is going to give special recognition to requests for loans from small business firms in areas hard-hit by unemployment.

That's what Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin said in a recent address to the Lawrence Chamber of Commerce.

Durkin said that the Reconstruction Finance Corp., under a newly-adopted policy, will give "full consideration" to hard-hit areas such as Lawrence in acting on small business loans.

How Times Have Changed

Labor Dept. Tells Gains Of 40 Years

"FOOD and clothing and shelter—these are the least you must have. You need them for yourself and your family. But to get them you need a job.

"You don't expect the job to last forever. Long ago you learned that at times you may be out of work. You accept that as one of the risks of living. But you hope you will never be out of a job and have to depend on others for help.

"Nevertheless the thought nags you. You think about what might happen in your old age, or of how the family would get along if you were ill or injured and unable to work. So you lay plans that in some way will give you something in place of a job.

"Call these plans insurance benefits, savings, or what you will, they give you a feeling of security. You'd prefer a job. But, while you are out of a job, you would like to have security.

"THINKING THESE things and doing these things, you are like workers everywhere else — in other countries as well as the United States. There are few people indeed who do not have to worry about jobs and security. For the problem is the problem of living."

This is the introduction to "The Workers' Story 1913-1953," the U. S. Labor Dept. yearbook, which marks the department's 40th anniversary.

Not So Long Ago High Court Okehed 'Yellow Dog' Contracts

"In 1913 a worker could join a union, but his employer could discharge him for doing so," says "The Workers' Story 1913-1943."

"In fact, so strongly was the right of the employer upheld, that in 1917 the Supreme Court ruled that any attempt by unions to recruit as members of a union employes who had entered into a 'yellow dog' contract was illegal and enjoinable . . .

"Under these conditions it was extremely difficult for existing unions to organize workers who did not belong to labor unions. Large-scale organization of workers, such as we have today, had to await the passage of the Anti-Injunction Act (popularly known as the Norris-LaGuardia Act) of 1932, which said that 'yellow dog' contracts could no longer be enforced in the courts, and the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act (or Wagner Act) of 1935."

The 143-page book pretty nearly covers the waterfront.

There are chapters on the American worker, on production, and on living standards. Other sections deal with the worker and his job, protection on the job, protection for unemployed workers and the workers' freedoms. And there are chapters on labor unions, collective bargaining, state labor departments and the U. S. Labor Dept.

The American worker, who has yet a long way to go, has come a long way in the past 40 years. As the report says:

"Freedom, as the American worker of today understands it, is so much a part of his daily living that he often does not feel the need for thinking about the freedoms he has—and possibly could lose.

"NOR IS HE likely to think often, particularly if he is a young worker, of the many freedoms that have been gained during the past 40 years, a period so short that many workers of today were workers then.

"The freedoms enjoyed by workers at the turn of the century were basically political and personal freedoms. Those gained during the past 40 years have been largely economic."

The book also includes a thumbnail synopsis of the Taft-Hartley Act. After telling of the advances made under the Wagner Act, "The Workers' Story" says:

"This newer law greatly changed the earlier National Labor Relations Act (Wagner Act).

"In its provisions prohibiting actions which it called 'unfair labor practices,' the earlier act listed only employer activities. The new law included for the first time a list of certain union activities which it called 'unfair labor practices.'

"THE LAW reintroduced, in limited form, earlier restrictions on some strikes, secondary boycotts, and certain forms of picketing. It revived not only the injunction but also damage suits against unions. Furthermore, this time it made the unions responsible for all acts of its members, whether the union authorized or forbade them.

"The new law controlled some of the contents of the bargaining agreement particularly by restricting the union shop and flatly prohibiting the closed shop. This prohibition meant that, even if the employer and union willingly should agree that only union members shall be employed, if they included that decision in the bargaining agreement they were acting illegally.

"The new law prohibited a union from seeking the protection of the National Labor Relations Board unless it has met with certain requirements set forth in the law."

Why Workers Need Unions—

Organization Is Other Half Of Collective Bargaining

Why workers need unions is explained in every-day language in "The Workers' Story 1913-1953":

"SUPPOSE THAT there were no labor unions and no labor laws, and you went out to get a job. Unless you had something very special to offer, you would be in competition with a lot of other workers trying for the same job.

"As a result, you would have to accept what the employer offered you, or look for something else to do. You would quickly find that the man who has a job to offer almost always has the advantage over the man looking for work.

"Then, supposing that, having got the job and there being no union or law to support you, you found your wages too small to live on or the working conditions unsatisfactory.

"YOU WOULD ONLY be one individual against the employer's strength. You could not successfully insist on his giving you what you ask, if he did not want to do so. As an ordinary individual worker you would have little bargaining strength.

"But suppose that you and several workers got together and elected some of the group to speak on your behalf with the employer, pointing out that unless he could see his way clear to making such-and-such an improvement in wages or conditions of work, the group would stop work.

"Either he would have to look for workers elsewhere (and if these other workers belonged to your group he would not be able to get them), or he would have to come to some kind of an agreement regarding your demands, at least to the extent that he still finds it profitable to stay in business.

"COLLECTIVE bargaining can be conducted by a small group of workers or by a large one. The larger the group, or the more completely it covers all workers in the occupation or industry, the stronger its bargaining position.

"But grouping together just once, for the immediate purpose of getting what the workers want, would have little lasting result if immediately afterwards the workers disbanded, each going his own way. It would be easy then for the employer to tackle each worker separately, and soon things would be back where they were before.

"There is need for the election of workers from the group who will be able to see that the agreement is kept by both parties to it. There is need, in other words, for a permanent union of the workers. Collective bargaining and labor unions are two sides of the same face. If the individual needs strength in his dealing with his employer, he can get it through collective bargaining.

"But to be sure that bargaining will successfully hold, he must take part in building and keeping a stable and effective union of the workers."

State Dept. Aide Hits Moves To Scuttle Reciprocal Trade

NEW CURBS on foreign trade are being pushed by special interests trying to scuttle the Reciprocal Trade Agreements program, Assistant Sec. of State Thruston B. Morton declared recently in New Orleans.

Morton appealed at a trade conference for popular support for the Eisenhower Administration's request that Congress extend the law intact for another year pending a detailed study already started. The present act expires June 12.

Pres. Eisenhower reiterated his conviction that the U. S. must lead in boosting international trade as the "indispensable basis . . . of our survival."

"Such commerce, unhampered by needless and excessive barriers," he wrote the League of Women Voters, "alone can enable the free world to use its manpower, resources and productive facilities with maximum effectiveness."

Morton lashed particularly at the bill introduced by Rep. Simpson (R. Pa.), a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, which has the backing of GOP high tariff advocates in both branches of Congress.

The bill would extend the act for a year, but kill the President's authority to use his own judgment on accepting Federal Tariff Commission recommendations.

"Adoption of such a bill," Morton said, "would create consternation among countries of the world, and lend credence to the Communist theme that the U. S. wants to sell but does not want to buy."

GM's 'Baby' Is Approved

WHAT'S GOOD for General Motors is what's passed by the Michigan Legislature. That charge was proved when the lawmakers passed a measure to slash employer contributions to the Michigan unemployment insurance fund, while denying increases in benefits needed by jobless workers.

The cut in funds, the Packard Motor Car Co. charged in testimony before a House committee, was tailor-made to benefit industrial giants like General Motors and the Bell system, while forcing other manufacturers, like Packard, to pay more.

Packard officials denounced the cut as "the General Motors bill." Attempts to increase benefits for workers and for dependent children failed with Republican legislators lined up almost solidly in opposition.

The Michigan CIO council has urged Gov. G. Mennen Williams to veto the measure, which could mean an extra $20 per car price boost for manufacturers other than General Motors.

CIO Hits Compulsory Arbitration

"THE CIO is unalterably opposed to compulsory labor arbitration in any form," CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg told the Pennsylvania Governor's Commission on Labor Legislation.

Testifying on behalf of CIO and the Steelworkers, Goldberg discussed the inadequacy of the Pennsylvania Arbitration Act of 1927, now under study by the commission, in the field of voluntary labor arbitration.

He called for a new act to make possible enforcement of voluntary arbitration agreements and awards in labor-management relations as is now provided for arbitration of commercial disputes.

Goldberg underscored CIO's opposition to compulsory arbitration, calling it "the direct antithesis of our democratic heritage."

He called "one of the great achievements of our times" the ability of a large segment of labor and management "to translate the tenets of freedom into concrete action through the process of free and untrammeled collective bargaining."

"Adherence to these democratic institutions," he added, "has redounded to the benefit of the entire public, as well as labor and management, by virtue of the human betterment, increased morale, efficiency and productivity which have resulted therefrom."

Most parties to labor-management arbitration agreements, Goldberg said, "will live up to the obligations . . . and accept the award as final and binding." But a small minority will not, he added, "and if they are permitted to escape their obligations, it will eventually undermine faith and confidence in the entire institution as a disputes settlement medium."

Reuther Hails Israel Birthday, Warns Of New Aggression

SOLUTION of the impasse in Korea "may blind all of us to the possibility of other Koreas in other critical areas of the world," CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther said last week in extending greetings to the Republic of Israel on its fifth anniversary.

"The Korean War should have taught us a lesson about the struggle going on in the world today," he said.

"It should have taught us that aggression threatens anywhere and everywhere. It taught us that democracy's commitment to prevent aggression is a world-wide commitment. It taught us that whenever and wherever a boundary is crossed, no boundary is inviolate."

Americans must be made to realize the importance of Israel, Reuther asserted, because it is as important to prevent the Middle East "from going up in smoke" as it is to strengthen the free nations of Western Europe.

"The Middle East is a critical area," he said, "and Israel is important because it stands there in the Middle East trouble zone —an isolated outpost of democracy surrounded by lands where colonial people are exploited and strive for independence.

"We must protect this young and growing democracy from pressures from every quarter. We must support Israel directly and we must plan for an ambitious program of regional development that will help to lift all the peoples of the Near East to higher levels of living."

United Nations

The ICFTU asked the Economic & Social Council of the United Nations to move quickly to head off worldwide unemployment; economic disruption and financial dislocation that might result from a cut in the rate of rearmament.

Action on an international scale, to supplement the efforts of individual countries, was called for. One phase of the ICFTU program calls for a shift of the resources now being used for arms to production of goods needed for the development of retarded areas.

U.S. Commies Nailed As Russ 'Puppets'

THE COMMUNIST Party in the U.S. was ordered to register with the Attorney-General as "a subsidiary and puppet of the Soviet Union" in a long-awaited ruling last week by the Subversive Activities Control Board.

The order to register is based on the board's finding that the party is a "Communist-action organization." If it refuses to enroll each official and member, they must do so individually.

Among other things, the board found the party's roles in unions, youth and minority groups, and foreign affairs, "are substantially formulated, carried out and performed pursuant to directives of the Soviet Union."

Later the Justice Dept. asked that 12 organizations be ordered to register as Communist fronts. Among them were the International Workers Order, Inc., the Civil Rights Congress, the Joint Anti-Fascist Refugee Committee, the Jefferson School of Social Science and the American Slav Congress.

THE McCARRAN ACT, under which the board was set up, also requires the party to submit annual financial statements to the Attorney General; forbids members to seek government employment, to apply for or use passports, or to work in defense plants; and to identify all materials sent through the mails, and any radio or television programs it might sponsor. The Communists said they would appeal to the courts.

The findings were signed by outgoing Chairman Peter Campbell Brown and Board Members Kathryn McHale and Watson B. Miller. Board Member David J. Coddaire filed a separate report agreeing with the findings.

Senate Nears Test Vote In Battle On Oil Give-Away

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE SENATE continued day-and-night debate on the submerged oil lands give-away last week, with liberal opponents of the Dixiegop oil bill getting growing support from the voters back home.

GOP Majority Leader Taft (R. O.) made a series of frantic moves aimed at silencing senators who are fighting the give-away, but lost every preliminary round.

He set several deadlines for a motion to table the Anderson Bill, technically the measure under consideration, but moved each one farther ahead. Finally he gave up all together and said he wouldn't make the motion until early this week.

THE BILL sponsored by Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) would confirm the title of the federal government to the offshore oil lands, give the adjoining states a proper share, recognize the legality of existing leases, and confirm state control of lands under inland lakes, rivers, etc. The amendment of Sen. Hill (D. Ala.) to use federal income from the royalties for education is part of the Anderson Bill.

Anderson's bill is a substitute for the Administration-backed measure to give the states title to the submerged lands adjoining their shores — and to give California, Texas and Louisiana untold billions in oil. It was introduced by Sen. Holland (D. Fla.).

The anti-give-away Senators and their long speeches against the oil grab had Taft frantic. His charges of filibustering, parroted by some other tory Republicans and Southern Democrats, brought not only ridicule but the revelation that the liberals' fight for the public interest was paying off in increased popular support.

SEN. HUMPHREY, who tangled several times with the GOP leader, said he was getting "barrels of mail and telegrams" in support of his stand.

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.) reported he was "astounded" by the mail and telegrams he had received in the previous "two or three days." They were running 40 or 50 to one against the oil steal, he said.

Sen. Jackson (D. Wash.), in his first Senate speech, declared the oil give-away had gone as far as it had "because our people have not yet been alerted to what is at stake."

"But they are beginning to learn," he added. "They are beginning to see that this bill is only the opening wedge for a piecemeal raid on the public domains."

Lehman also labeled Taft's filibuster charge unfair. Then he turned the knife by recalling that the GOP policy leader had refused to go along, at the start of the session, or a move to tighten the Senate cloture rule.

"I suggest, then, that . . . he should not now complain," he added tartly.

HUMPHREY took the same position in firing one of his barbs in Taft's direction. He challenged the latter to "either quit calling honest debate a 'filibuster' or come up with new rules for Senate procedure that would once and for all assure majority rule."

Webster Had A Word For It

A lot of charges about filibusters were exchanged between friends and foes of the coastal oil give-away in the Senate debate last week.

Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) topped them all by reminding the lawmakers of Webster Dictionary's definition of a filibusterer:

"A freebooter . . . one who goes about plundering . . . a pillager, a pirate. An irregular military adventurer, especially one in quest of plunder . . . Originally applied to buccaneers infesting the Spanish-American Coast."

Then Fulbright jibed: "Is it a coincidence that Florida, Louisiana and Texas (states pushing the give-away) were once Spanish?" And he added: "The originators of this bill are the ones who seek to plunder and pirate the public domain."

CWA Backs Jersey Strike

THE CIO Communications Workers last week replied with a resounding "no" to efforts of New Jersey Bell to get 11,000 members to act as strikebreakers against an independent union.

CWA, which represents operators, has been respecting the picket lines of the Telephone Workers Union of New Jersey. TWUNJ, representing some 6700 plant maintenance workers, has been on strike since Mar. 26.

John L. Crull, CWA vice president, who is in charge of negotiating for more than 300,000 CWA members, replied to Bell's demand for strike-breaking:

"Even if the other terms in the company's offer were acceptable—which they are not—their insistence on a no-strike clause will effectively stymie a settlement."

'Brownout' On Power Projects In West Hit

DRASTIC CUTS in the Eisenhower Administration's reclamation budget will mean an "administrative brownout" on power developments in the Pacific Northwest, Sen. Magnuson (D. Wash.) charged last week.

His comment came as, first, Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay and then the House Appropriations Committee whacked deeply into funds for the Reclamation Bureau.

McKay ordered a 23.3% reduction, knocking $53.8 million off the Truman Administration proposal of $231 million for power and reclamation projects.

THE HOUSE appropriation group chopped another $44 million off McKay's estimate, bringing the reclamation total down to $133 million. As the bill went to the floor, funds for all "new starts" on power lines were eliminated.

The cuts came in action on an Interior Dept. appropriation bill, cut overall from $607 million to $405 million.

Meantime, a widespread fight was under way to halt construction of the controversial Tuttle Creek Dam in the Blue River Valley of Kansas.

Farmers whose homes and lands would be inundated were joined by the CIO and conservation groups in pushing a bill introduced by Rep. Miller (D. Kan.) to block the construction.

Miller was elected last fall after a campaign based on his opposition to the dam. His Republican opponent, ex-Rep. Albert M. Cole, supported the stand of Kansas City banking and financial interests. Cole recently was named head of the Housing and Home Loan Agency.

LAST WEEK Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, asked all CIO councils and regional directors to get behind the Miller Bill.

"Jointly with the farmers in the Blue River Valley," Smith wrote, "we favor flood prevention by up-stream stabilization methods, with a multitude of detention basins and check dams, as against the single-purpose big-dam approach."

'Know Your CIO' Program Begun By Oregon Locals

A "KNOW YOUR CIO" program is being conducted by CIO affiliates in Oregon.

These activities center on monthly meetings, three of which have been held in Portland. Committees arrange for the discussion of current issues. A program committee has been set up to arrange for inter-local visitations.

The program was initiated by Chester C. Dusten, State CIO regional director. Speakers at the latest session were Sec.-Treas. Carl Winn of the CIO Woodworkers; Adolph Germer, National CIO representative; Harry Whiteside, Oakland, Calif., sub-regional director of the CIO Auto Workers; and Hugh Matthews, Seattle, Wash., sub-district director of the CIO Steelworkers.

Speed-Up Drive Sends UAW Out

A speed-up plan caused approximately 4800 CIO Auto Workers to strike last week at the Warner Gear Div. of the Borg-Warner Corp. at Muncie, Ind.

Local 287, UAW, said the firm's retiming of piece work resulted in the speed-up. Prolonged efforts of federal mediators to settle the dispute failed.

N. Y. CIO In Emergency Rally Plans 'Vigorous' Election Drive

By BERNARD RASKIN

THE NEW YORK State CIO last week summed up the record of Congress and of its State Legislature and decided to begin immediately "to prepare our organizations for vigorous and effective political action leading to the state and congressional elections of 1954."

CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther was principal speaker at the state council's emergency conference in New York City in which 250 CIO leaders and representatives of community organizations participated.

Reuther outlined a three-point program to guide CIO "forward in the path of Philip Murray and Allan S. Haywood." His points:

- "Find a way to recapture the crusading spirit of the early CIO." He said that millions of unorganized workers "need the benefits of unions and we can draw on the strength that these members will give our organizations."
- "Unionize these workers as well as organize them." The CIO president declared "we still have too many people who believe that their responsibility ends when they pay their dues. We must tell these people where we're going and how we get there. We can be no more effective than the level of understanding of our members."
- "Broaden our relations with other community groups that share our ideals and objectives."

The CIO president warned that "the free world must remain vigilant until the sincerity of Soviet leaders has been proven." He assailed the nation's financial and industrial leaders for their fear of peace as evidenced by the downturn in the stock market which followed the "first glimmering prospect of peace in Korea."

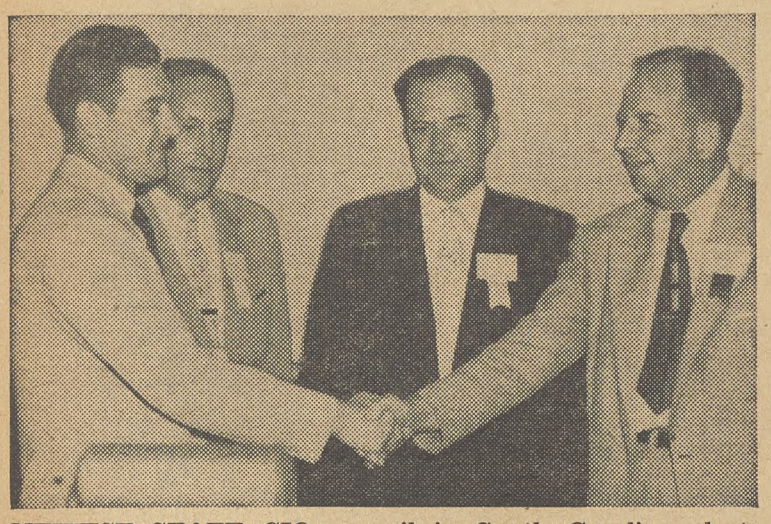
THE MEETING decided to call a state-wide legislative conference in Albany when the Legislature meets in special session, probably within the next two months.

The legislative conference would press for reconsideration of the "oppressive fiscal program imposed on the people of New York City and the rent increase program imposed on the people of all cities of the state." The New York City fiscal program calls for higher transit fare and a possible payroll tax.

State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander charged that "our lawmakers have demonstrated brazen, cynical service to special interests and disregard for the people of the state and nation in recent months."

SEN. LEHMAN (D. N.Y.), in a message to the meeting, said that "in Albany and Washington . . . the pretenses of liberalism seem to have been discarded on almost all fronts in the course of an unseemly assault on most of the programs and values which have been built up over the last thirty years."

The political action resolution unanimously adopted by the conference called on all affiliates to "rally maximum strength behind the true liberals in Congress and in our State Legislature and local governing bodies to encourage their fight against reaction, corruption and the raids of vested interests."



NEWEST STATE CIO council in South Carolina elects first officers. State Dir. Lloyd Vaughan (right) congratulates Pres. Ralph Knox as Vice Pres. M. J. Lencek (left center) and Sec.-Treas. Claude Gwin look on.

Put Organizing First—

CIO In South Carolina Forms State Council

By PAUL HARDING

CIO'S 42nd STATE industrial union council came into being last week end in South Carolina, when some 150 delegates met at Charleston, adopted a constitution and elected their first officers.

First president of the council is Ralph Knox of the CIO Textile Workers, an employe of the Rock Hill Printing and Finishing Co., Rock Hill. First vice president is M. J. Lencek, port agent for the CIO Maritime Union in Charleston, and secretary-treasurer is Claude Gwin of Columbia, state director for the CIO Communications Workers.

The delegates adopted for their first convention the theme "Organizing the Unorganized" from the keynote speech of CIO State Dir. Lloyd P. Vaughan. And enthusiasm of the state CIO membership was reflected in the fact that the 150 delegates were augmented by almost a like number of guests. State CIO membership numbers approximately 20,000.

One of the feature speakers, Acting National Dir. Lorne Nelles of the CIO Organizing Committee, Atlanta, told the convention "there is room in America for only two 'isms'—Americanism and unionism" and termed unionism "the nation's greatest bulwark against communism."

THE CONVENTION'S organizing resolution brought long discussion from the floor, and Nelles' call for intensified organizing effort evoked prolonged applause.

Oral L. Garrison, Washington, representing CIO Executive Vice Pres. John V. Riffe, discussed organizing plans which he said are now in the making on the national level.

Other speakers included Ray Block, vice president, CIO Electrical Workers; Ben Segal, associate director of education, CIO; Ray Hackney, assistant to the president, CWA; Franz E. Daniel, CIO director in North Carolina, and Ernest B. Pugh, Virginia CIO director, who installed council officers.

Daniel and a committee of other CIO leaders in his state are now planning formation of a state CIO council in North Carolina some time this summer.

Steel Unionist Is Mayor Of Duluth

A CIO Steelworker is the new mayor of Duluth, Minn.

Installed last week for a four-year term, he's George Johnson, president of USA-CIO Local 3391.

Johnson, 36, is married and has two daughters. He's also served as financial secretary and grievance committee chairman of his local.

5 Unionists Win City Offices In Rockford Election

FOUR CIO members have been elected to municipal offices in recent elections in Rockford, Ill., while Milton Lundstrom, of the AFL printers, has been elected Rockford's mayor.

William E. White, president of the Rockford Local of the CIO Newspaper Guild, was elected city clerk over the incumbent who held office for 32 years.

The three CIO aldermen are Samuel A. Guzzardo, staff representative of the State CIO Community Services committee; Gene Vestal, chief steward of CIO Auto Workers Local 39, and John Valerious, member of UAW Local 449.

All union members ran on the "People's Coalition" ticket, strongly backed by organized labor.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

While some prices have gone up since our last monthly report on price trends and buying opportunities, some others have gone down, and these include some of the larger and costlier items.

Since the end of price controls some of the smaller appliances have risen in price, notably Revere and Faber products.

Best Buys

Beef is still the outstanding meat buy this month. Lamb, too, is the most reasonable its been in five years.

Buy the larger cuts to get more for your money, like a shoulder, rather than the costlier chops. You can then have the shoulder cut into chops and stew meat.

Other good buys in the markets this month include frozen fish fillets, especially cod; cheddar cheese; citrus fruits and juices; fresh tomatoes, lettuce and cabbage.

But there have been no boosts so far on the larger appliances. In fact, one manufacturer, Thor, is offering a quiet reduction on its automatic washing machine which the dealers are not allowed to advertise.

With most of the nationally-advertised fully-automatic washers carrying a $300 list price, the Thor is currently listed at $250. With the discount many retailers now give on large appliances, of as much as 25% in some of the larger cities, the price of the Thor comes down to $200 or less. That's the lowest cost available for any well-made automatic.

THE BIG BUYING opportunities in May are the semi-annual white sales of sheets, cases and towels, and the Spring sales of refrigerators occurring late in May and in June. Prices of sheets in current sales are the lowest in several years.

You can also often find reduced prices on television sets in the Spring as retailers and jobbers clear current models to make way for new models (not necessarily with any important changes) in the Fall.

In clothing, the really sharp price cuts will come in the July clearances, including the valuable semi-annual shoe sales.

CLOTHING PRICES in general will remain at about the same level except for some boosts on men's wear slated for Fall. One leading manufacturer has raised prices of fancy-pattern shirts for next Fall, but prices of staple white and solid-color shirts remain steady.

The recent reduction in price tags on Chrysler cars is the result of high output in the auto industry. Production of cars since mid-February has been at an annual rate of about 6.5 million units, close to 50% above the rate last year when output was held down by curbs on materials.

Even now in the Spring, traditionally the season of big car demand, dealers in some models are offering large trade-in allowances as an unofficial price cut, and prices of used cars are failing to rise in accordance with the usual Spring trend.

IWA Arbitration Proposal Turned Down By Industry

A CHALLENGE to arbitrate a dispute over wage increases demanded by the CIO Woodworkers for 45,000 members in five Northwest States was summarily rejected last week by the employers' negotiating committee.

"This means the employers realize they haven't a case," observed A. F. Hartung, IWA-CIO president and chairman of the negotiating committee.

WHEN THE industry turned down the arbitration offer, Hartung promptly called a meeting of district leaders from Washington, Oregon, Montana, Idaho, and Northern California to determine the union's next move. Meantime, an intensive radio and speaking campaign got under way to inform the members of the situation.

The IWA-CIO is seeking a pay boost of 12.5c an hour, plus three weeks vacation after 10 years, and clarifications of the seniority and holiday clauses.

Negotiations started in another section of the industry last week when the union's largest district, in British Columbia, began meetings with Forest Industrial Relations, Inc., representing some 160 employers of 30,000 IWA-CIO members.

Bargaining sessions continued on behalf of 5000 members employed in the Midwest.

FEPC Killed In Michigan

THE REPUBLICAN Policy Committee of the Michigan Legislature reneged on one of its party's campaign promises and slapped one of its most respected members in the face by killing a bipartisan Fair Employment Practices Commission bill that had no opposition.

The GOP party decision was announced even before the House State Affairs Committee held its open hearing, at which there was widespread support of and no opposition to the bill.

The Republicans, who control the Legislature, also killed many other bills in which organized labor was interested. Among them were measures outlawing injunctions in labor disputes, setting a State minimum wage, and raising unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

CIO IS IN THE SOUTH to stay and to grow. That determination was expressed last week end when 150 delegates of CIO local unions in South Carolina met in Charleston to organize a new State CIO Council.

"Organizing the unorganized" was the keynote of the convention, reported Oral L. Garrison, who represented this department at the Charleston meeting.

Good wishes to the new South Carolina CIO Council in helping to carry out that task and the other important jobs of CIO councils.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at Pratt Whitney Aircraft Co., North Haven, Conn., 2685 eligible workers favored the CIO Auto Workers by the following vote: UAW-CIO 1633, IAM 783, void 33, challenged 4.

★

REG. DIR. W. A. COPELAND reports the following representation election victories: The Davis Co., Memphis, Tenn., CIO Furntiure Workers 46, no union 12, the campaign being directed by UFW Rep. Doyle Dorsey with assistance from CIO Rep. Henry White. McGehee Beer Distributing Co., CIO Brewery Workers 15, no union 2. Brewery Rep. Charles Hewgley and Local Pres. Robert Howell handled the latter situation.

CIO Rep. David Sternback reports two representation election victories in Puerto Rico: Caribe China Corp., CIO Packinghouse Workers 336, no union 17, with Staff Members Ramos Osorio and Ramom Serrano in charge. Univis Optical Corp., UPWA-CIO 193, no union 67, with Staff members Kulian Baez and Jose Caraballo directing the drive.

Act. Natl. Dir. Lorne Nelles, CIO Organizing Committee, reports a representation election victory at the Mengel Co., Inc., Elizabeth City, N. C., where the workers favored the CIO Woodworkers by a vote of 158 to 58 for an independent union.

★

REG. DIR. LEE TUCKER reports a representation election victory at the American Body and Trailer Co., North Little Rock, Ark., where the tally was UAW-CIO 5, no union 1. At the American Radio & Television, Inc., North Little Rock, the CIO Furniture Workers were recognized by the company without an election. Approximately 95 people are in the unit.

Intl. Vice Pres. Claude Ballard reports the following CIO Woodworkers representation election victories: Harper Logging Co., Bonner, Mont., eligible 49, IWA-CIO 27, AFL 4, no union 15, with IWA Reps. Delbert Gunvaldson and I. E. Anderson instrumental in securing this victory; logging operation of the Medford Corp., Butte Falls, Ore., IWA-CIO 75, AFL 38, challenged 2, void 1.

IUE Sperry Pact For 12,000 Puts 18c Escalator Gain In Base Pay

ESCALATOR clause gains totaling 18c an hour were written into a new contract, along with additional pay boosts, just in time to head off a strike of 12,000 members of IUE-CIO Local 450 at the plant of the Sperry Gyroscope Co., Lake Success, N. Y.

The cost-of-living increase was notched up during the term of a three-year contract which expired Apr. 13.

The new agreement, which runs for two years, also provides for productivity boosts of 4c an hour now and another 4c on Apr. 14, 1953; sets up an inequity fund averaging three-tenths of a cent an hour, and gives substantial salary increases to white collar workers.

The old escalator clause was junked and another written into the new pact. Inclusion of the full wage gain into the base pay was believed to have set a precedent.

In addition to the wage increases, the union won two new half-holidays, raising the total to 10 full holidays, with triple time for work done on holidays falling on Saturday and 2.5 times regular pay for holidays worked during the regular work week, plus a 15% night bonus on all holidays.

Each employe and pensioner won a $1000 life insurance policy as a result of the IUE-CIO negotiations, and the medical and surgical benefits program was considerably improved.

The settlement was reached after 24 hours of almost continuous negotiation following a strike vote in which about 8000 workers cast ballots—only three against a walkout.

URW Sets Canadian Wage Goals

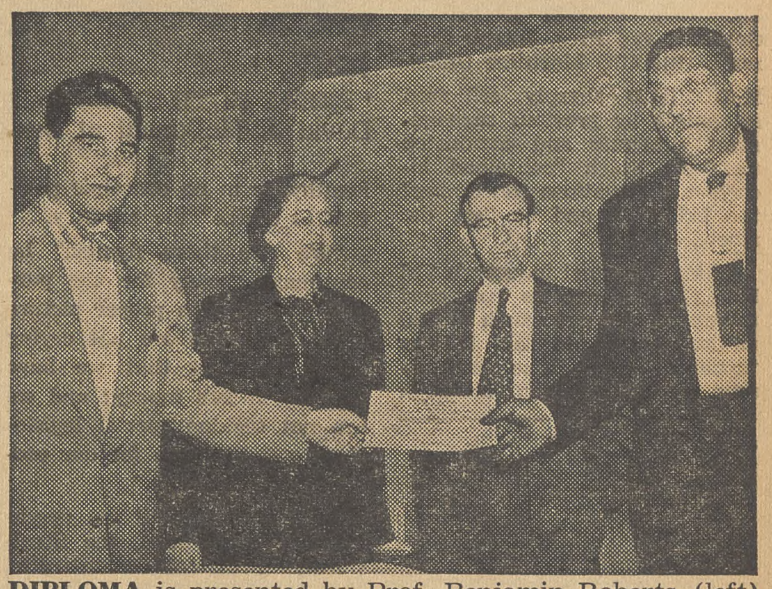
A 10-POINT set of demands, topped by a proposal for a 20c an hour general wage increase, will be served on the Canadian rubber industry this year by the CIO Rubber Workers, the Canadian section of the union's international policy committee determined at a meeting in Toronto.

In addition, the URW-CIO, which is affiliated with the Canadian Congress of Labor in Canada, agreed to launch a campaign to wipe out or sharply reduce wage differentials between the Canadian and U. S. sections of the industry.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the URW said Canadian workers receive an average of 40 to 50c an hour less than their counterparts in this country—even though their employers, in most cases, are the same.

DELEGATES to the Toronto meeting represented about 15,000 workers in 27 URW Canadian locals. Their over-all program closely followed policies formulated by the union's top policy committee at its meeting in Cleveland last month.

The Canadian program calls for adjustment of area and plant inequities, extension of collateral benefits, a study of the guaranteed annual wage, contract provisions for wage reopenings, and extension and improvement of pension and insurance plans.



DIPLOMA is presented by Prof. Benjamin Roberts (left) to Pres. Louis Colon of CIO Steelworkers Local 4355, New York, at closing exercises of trade union school conducted by USA-CIO Dist. 4 and Cornell Univ. Extension Industrial Relations office. Ike Writes Reuther On Jobs to make the Council of Economic Advisers a "genuinely useful agency." Shortly after his inauguration, the three-man Council and its professional staff were fired by the President after Congress cut down its funds.

Recently he has appointed Prof. Arthur Burns of Columbia as head of the Council, but has not yet filled the other two Council posts required by the Employment Act of 1946, which established the Council as a major advisory group to the chief executive.

UAW PRES. REUTHER, in his letter which forwarded the Eisenhower message to the union organization, added these comments:

"At the first possible sign that 'peace might break out in Korea,' the profit-hungry men on Wall Street found the future less promising, and the stock market took a serious nose-drive." The men of little faith and little vision in Congress reacted at once to the Communist peace-feeler with irresponsible and reckless proposals that would undermine our national security and create widespread dislocation and mass unemployment.

"The possibility of peace should not confront us with the threat of depression and unemployment.

"The prospects of peace should be a sign of rejoicing, not only because it would mean the end of the tragic toll of war, in terms of human values—but also because peace would afford America and the entire world an opportunity to divert the tremendous economic resources, the hundreds of billions of dollars now being spent for these implementations of war and destruction, to the production of the good things of life which will meet the unfilled needs of peace everywhere.

"WE IN THE UAW-CIO have taken advantage of every opportunity to point out the dangers we face in this period of crisis.

"We have tried to alert our nation and its people to the need for immediate and effective planning, to meet the complex problems of peace and to prepare reserves to take advantage of the tremendous opportunities that peace will offer the American people should it come."

Reuther's letter of Apr. 16 to the President was in compliance with a UAW convention resolution which urged the President to call a full employment conference of the government and other major economic groups.

IN HIS LETTER to Eisenhower Reuther had pointed out that "depression is wholly unnecessary. It can be avoided, but not by leaving the outcome to chance . . . At moments in history such as this, bold plans, quick decisions and actions turn dangers into opportunities and open the way to great advances.

"This is not a time to relax, to be either over-confident or panicky with fear of so-called over-production. It is a time to dedicate our efforts to production and cooperation among all free peoples for peace."

Food Strikers Get Backing

SOME 350 CIO members on the Eastern Shore of Delaware last week were striking for a $1 hourly wage, a guaranteed 32-hour week and dues check-off.

They are employes at three plants of the H. and H. Poultry Co., a poultry processing concern at Selbyville.

The Delaware CIO Council last week voted continued support of the strike which is now entering its sixth week, and called for affiliates to make contributions.

The CIO Retail, Wholesale Union and the Council have been making weekly cash gifts to the striking Local No. 262, CIO Packing & Food Service Workers. The strikers, all Negroes, and their families are fed by the union at a Selbyville hall, and each member receives $2 daily.

3000 Utility Workers Out In California

CIO SUPPORT is being mobilized for 3000 CIO Utility Workers who have been on a strike almost a month at the Southern California Gas Co.

The firm serves the Los Angeles area and much of Southern California. The UWUA national office and the Greater Los Angeles CIO Council have endorsed the strike and have appealed to affiliates to support it.

THE WORKERS have been out since Apr. 9, after management said "no" to three union proposals for averting the walkout. The offers were to submit the dispute to arbitration, or to a governor's fact-finding board, or to let the membership vote on the union shop issue.

Pres. Joe Anderson of UWUA Local 132, one of the striking locals, attributed management's adamant attitude to the encouragement of the Merchants & Manufacturers Association and other open shop organizations. UWUA is seeking a 10% wage increase, improved vacations and better working conditions. The firm offered to boost pay 5%.

Canada Unions Grow

Union membership in Canada is more than 1.1 million, and has trippled since World War II.

IUE Seeks Extension Of GE Contract

AN EFFORT to agree now on modification of the present national agreement and extend it without further reopening for another year will be made by the CIO Electrical Workers and the General Electric Co., IUE-CIO Pres. James B. Carey announced last week.

The contract expires Sept. 15.

(The company's refusal to grant wage increases has nothing to do with its financial position. On Apr. 20, GE reported the largest first-quarter earnings in its history.

(These stood at $45.8 million, or $1.59 a share, compared to $29 million, or $1.01 a share, in the first quarter of 1952. The net increased 58%, compared with an increase of but 39% in sales during the period.)

The new negotiations were approved by the union's General Electric Conference Board at a meeting in New York.

AT THE SAME session, the board rejected GE's offer of a 1.5% wage increase, made under the reopening, as "pitiful." Actually, the board maintained, it would amount to only a quarter-cent an hour because of two holidays the company wants dropped this year.

The conference group likewise voted down a strike motion and cancelled a seven-point program in connection with a walkout.

'Treat Both Sides Fairly,' McDonald Urges

By AL ZACK

CIO STEELWORKERS Pres. David J. McDonald last week urged Congress to write a labor-management law "that will treat both sides equitably."

McDonald testified in an extraordinary early morning session of the House Labor Committee as the committee entered the last stretch of hearings on revision of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Other top CIO leaders who testified before the House or Senate Labor Committees were CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg and Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union.

McDONALD sharply criticized references by previous management witnesses and committee members which "contained incorrect observations concerning" the USA-CIO and he "set the record straight."

Citing the steel industry's $16 billion net worth as compared to the union's net worth of $10 million, McDonald said it was "apparent from these comparisons that this union, although healthy, is in no economic position to coerce" the industry.

"TREAT BOTH SIDES" fairly, says CIO Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald at Senate Labor Committee hearing.

"We cite these figures," he continued, "solely for the purpose of placing a proper picture before you. We are not crying about the fact that we have that much less money; and we are not seeking special legislation to compensate for our economic disadvantage."

Reviewing the pattern operations of basic steel, the Steelworkers president demonstrated that "long before the advent of the union, employers themselves had voluntarily established a pattern of uniform wage movements . . . which they felt best met the facts of life in their industry. This pattern was inherited by the union; not initiated by it."

Drawing upon his personal experience as secretary-treasurer of the Steelworkers until his recent election as successor to the late Philip Murray, McDonald described the mountain of paper work required of unions by Taft-Hartley. Employers, he noted, "do not have to file any of the information to entitle them to the benefits of the Act."

AT THE REQUEST of Committee Chairman McConnell (R. Pa.), McDonald agreed to have the union's technicians and lawyers submit proposed forms which eliminate the "avalanche of paper work."

Discussing strikes and Taft-Hartley's injunction procedure, USA-CIO president said: "We do not lightly engage in strikes. We are aware of the consequences to all concerned—to our nation, to our members and their families, and to the employers. A cessation of operation affects our members more intimately and more deeply than it does either the employer or the stockholders."

In three major strikes in basic steel since the USA-CIO was organized, he recalled, the union had postponed its strikes at the request of the government and had accepted governmental proposals even when they "denied what we considered reasonable requests for improvements in working conditions."

EARLIER Goldberg had warned the House committee that giving states the right to enforce laws against strikes and picketing would mean a return to "the law of the jungle" in labor relations.

"You cannot have a national labor relations law made up of 48 different sets of rules and procedures," he observed. "You might as well repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and return the whole problem of dealing with union organization and collective bargaining to the states."

Goldberg, who is also USA-CIO counsel, warned that passage of the Lucas Bill (designed to break national unions) would "justly subject" members of Congress "to the charge of writing anti-union legislation."

Carey told the senators "democracy is far more prevalent in labor organizations than in large corporations."

Testifying in opposition to the Goldwater Bill, which provides machinery which could be used to break militant, anti-Communist unions under the pretense of hunting subversives, the IUE-CIO president charged it was a pernicious plan to abolish American freedom.

"It is a monstrous hypocrisy," Carey charged, "for the members of giant corporations to demand that the government legislate democracy for unions." He pointed to the complete lack of democracy in corporation decisions and added:

"WHAT CRIES of outrage would be heard from management if it were proposed that Congress should require a secret ballot among the stockholders before management could refuse union demands when such refusal would mean a strike."

Also in the Senate hearing, Curran charged Taft-Hartley had "proven to be disruptive to labor relations in the maritime industry." The history in that industry under T-H, he said, was "an illuminating example of the unrealistic approach of the act to the problems of labor-management relations."

Hitting out at the Act's attempt "to destroy the union hiring hall," Curran called the union hiring hall "the only tested means of protecting seamen against employment practices which in the past were notorious."

The CIO Newspaper Guild testimony was presented by Counsel Irving Leuchter. Briefs opposing Taft-Hartley also were filed with the Senate committee on behalf of the Steelworkers, Clothing Workers and Shipbuilding Workers.

Commerce Chief Backtracks In Dispute On Astin Firing

SEC. OF COMMERCE Sinclair Weeks backtracked last week in his controversy with the nation's scientists. In a series of practically simultaneous moves, he:

1 Withdrew his ouster of Dr. Allen V. Astin as head of the Bureau of Standards—the agency which checks goods for the Federal Trade Commission—and agreed to keep him on the job until late summer or fall.

2 Backed down to widespread demands that the dispute over the battery additive, AD-X2, be referred to the National Academy of Science for testing.

3 Announced he will pick Astin's successor not from the ranks of political job-hunters, who would carry out his "let the buyer beware" policy, but from a panel of scientists to be drawn up by the bureau's Visiting Committee, the body that recommended Astin.

4 Said he didn't mean to cast any reflection on Astin's "professional competency or integrity of the bureau itself."

Weeks fired Astin because the bureau determined that AD-X2, which is supposed to prolong the life of batteries, doesn't. He acted at the urging of Assistant Sec. Craig Sheaffer, Chicago fountain pen manufacturer who is spearheading the drive of the National Tax Council for the millionaires' amendment to limit federal taxing power to 25% of income.

The bureau's finding on AD-X2 was not borne out by tests at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. MIT, however, made no finding that the additive does what is claimed for it.

—Herblock in The Washington Post

"Try It Again, Men, And Be Sure You Get This Answer."

This provided fuel for Weeks' claim that the quality of new products should be determined in the marketplace rather than the laboratory, unless they are foods or drugs for human consumption. This amounted to a "let the buyer beware" policy.

The new GOP Administration cooked up another hot potato when Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay kicked Albert M. Day out of his job as director of the Fish & Wildlife Service.

Boulware Just Yawns—

Union-Busting By GE Hit In UAW Jet Strike

By FRANK WALLICK

THE GENERAL Electric Co.'s buccaneering union-busting is meeting its match from CIO Auto Workers in the sixth week of a strike at the "jet center of America," Evendale, O., on the outskirts of Cincinnati.

The union is seeking "jet wages for jet jobs," plus stronger seniority, arbitration and automatic wage progression clauses. The workers at the giant jet engine plant want wage parity with their union brothers who work under UAW-CIO agreements in the Studebaker and Packard jet engine plants.

An offer to arbitrate the whole dispute before a board appointed by Pres. Eisenhower has been turned down by GE.

UAW-CIO Vice Pres. John W. Livingston told a union rally at Evendale last week that a short time ago Assistant Sec. of Defense John C. Hannah wrote Dir. David Cole, of the U. S. Mediation & Conciliation Service, that the country "urgently needed" jet engines from the GE plant at Evendale.

BUT THE company apparently high-pressured top U.S. officials into setting back production timetables, giving the company a chance to try to break the walkout.

However, an elaborate campaign of newspaper advertisements and telephone calls by foremen has failed to lure more than a handful of strikebreakers into the plant, which normally employs 6000 workers.

The union has countered with a television panel program, "Issues In Dispute," and gives a daily radio report on what takes place in the dispute.

A rock-ribbed Republican judge slapped an injunction on picketing, but only succeeded in making the strikers mad.

Lemuel R. Boulware, GE's vice president in charge of labor relations, made one blunder that the union turned into a source of embarrassment for the company.

In Washington, Boulware told a Cincinnati Enquirer reporter that "GE is only yawning at the Evendale strike," and that the firm "has nobody in Cincinnati with authority to settle" it.

Boulware's remark boomeranged when the union ran a newspaper ad saying that "Mr. Boulware yawns in Cincinnati's face." It went on to describe how GE has failed to live up to contract standards in the aircraft industry.

You're Never Too Old To Picket

A dozen old timers—too old to work but not too old to picket—joined members of the CIO Auto Workers on the picket line at General Electric jet plant at Evendale, near Cincinnati.

They were members of the ACWA Senior Members Club of Cincinnati, made up of retired members of the CIO Clothing Workers. They were headed by George Barnhart, club president. (LPA)

CIO Hits Smith's T-H Proposal

FREE SPEECH BANNED in Cleveland, as jurist rules pickets in 35 states can not advertise Richman Clothes are non-union made. Decision means picketing like above must stop, after two-year union label campaign. The action is government by injunction. (Story, Page 2.)

Free Speech Case—

Cleveland Judge Tosses The Book At ACWA

By AL ZACK

THE CIO CLOTHING Workers have been denied their constitutional right of free speech under an injunction handed down recently by a Cleveland, O., judge.

In a ruling which has nation-wide effect, County Judge Connell has barred Amalgamated members from peacefully picketing 70 stores in 35 states of the Richman Brothers Co., manufacturers of non-union men's clothing.

Connell's temporary injunction, which under Ohio law can not be appealed, denies to the ACWA the right to picket even in states where this action has been held to be legal.

RICHMAN Brothers, which manufacturers non-union clothing in its Cleveland plant, sells its product through company-owned retail stores in 70 cities.

For the last two years, ACWA members have picketed these stores carrying banners which say: "Richman Brothers' clothes are not union-made. Buy union-made clothes" and "Richman Brothers' clothes do not have a union label. Buy clothes which have a union label."

Connell admitted the language was true and legally harmless. But he issued a sweeping injunction which bars the union, its officers, members and agents from continuing to exercise their constitutional right of free speech.

In issuing the injunction, Connell relied on an Ohio legal opinion which holds that the exercise of free speech which "unlawfully injures another in his property rights" may be prohibited.

CONNELL held that this was "our law and our public policy" and used the power of his court, and his ability to fine and imprison Amalgamated officers for contempt of court, to deny continued picketing in states where its legality had not been challenged.

In his lengthy opinion, Connell claimed the company had been damaged because customers refused to purchase Richman clothes after observing the signs. He also found union members refused to enter the stores to make repairs or to deliver items.

Thus, he said, Richman's property rights had been damaged "without any legal justification."

The ACWA had pointed to its right of free speech and said its sole reason for picketing had been to inform the public that Richman clothes were not union-made and to advertise the desirability of union-label-products.

The union filed affidavits showing it had instructed its pickets not to interfere with customers, mechanics hired to make repairs, or truck drivers. Connell held, however, that because union men refused to work for a non-union firm, the Amalgamated was responsible for damaging Richman's property rights.

In a bitter attack on the union, Connell charged its real purpose had been to force the employer to force his workers to join the union. For an employer to do that would be an unfair labor practice under the Taft-Hartley Act, but the court took no notice of this or of the fact that the federal law regulates what picketing is legal and what is illegal.

INSTEAD, Connell issued a temporary injunction which has the following effects:

1. It interprets an Ohio law to cover actions in other states where no similar law exists.

2. It can't be appealed to a higher court until a permanent injunction has been issued only after a trial which legal red tape can stall for months.

3. It must be obeyed, under threat of fine or imprisonment, until a permanent injunction has been issued and then appealed to a higher court. Even if Connell's action were later held unconstitutional, failure to obey his order now would result in a fine or jail sentence.

4. One county judge in Ohio has made law for 35 states, even overruling the legislatures of some states.

5. The ACWA's right to advertise the fact that Richman makes non-union clothing, a basic freedom under the constitutional provision of free speech, is completely denied.

AMALGAMATED'S lawyers are expected to take all possible steps to bring the matter before higher courts for review.

Meantime, the union continues its separate campaign to organize Richman workers at the Cleveland plant.

It recently distributed a new leaflet at the plant calling attention to the new wage increase for ACWA members, won through peaceful negotiations with the industry.

The leaflet also calls attention to improved holiday and vacation pay and hospitalization insurance and contrasts these new gains to conditions in Richman's and other non-union shops.

Smith T-H Proposals Violate Ike's 'Justice' Vow, CIO Says

THE CIO last week charged proposals by chairman of the Senate Labor Committee for revision of Taft-Hartley do not "meet the standards of justice and fairness repeatedly promised by Pres. Eisenhower."

Also, said CIO Gen. Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, the bill introduced by Sen. Smith (R. N.J.) would open the door to compulsory arbitration, which CIO strongly opposes.

Smith's bill, introduced with a speech asking for reactions "pro and con," was also hit by the CIO Communications Workers.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said Smith's proposals would "create a hodge-podge and a return to the jungle."

Chief among them was exemption of public utilities from T-H coverage under certain conditions.

"The practical effect of your proposal would be to revalidate the compulsory arbitration statutes enacted in several states purporting to deal with public utility disputes," Goldberg wrote Smith.

The Supreme Court has held such statutes invalid. Besides reinstating these laws, Smith's bill would invite other states to adopt similar legislation.

GOLDBERG quoted at length a statement by Sen. Taft (R. O.), co-author of T-H, when it was under debate in 1947. Taft then opposed such a measure as the opening wedge to compulsory arbitration.

"We believe with Sen. Taft," Goldberg said, "that such legislation (compulsory arbitration) is the beginning of regimentation by government of not only wages, but also of prices and, therefore, of our entire economic system."

Beirne said the CWA "cannot understand the logic" of the Smith measure. It would create industrial strife, he observed and open the door to a rash of state anti-labor laws.

CWA, Beirne said, "has recorded itself before Sen. Smith's committee for a fair federal labor-management law, punitive in intent neither to labor nor to management."

"WE WANT a law that will guarantee our right to organize and to bargain with minimum restrictions," he said. "Only such a law can provide proper protection to utilities workers and to all other American workers. Utility workers deserve the protection of a fair federal law as do all other American workers."

Other Smith proposals and CIO reaction follow:

1. Exclusion of employers having less than 10 employes. "We see no reason why any employer should be licensed and encouraged to commit unfair labor practices simply because he has only a few employes."

2. Exclusion of construction workers. "Pres. Walter P. Reuther has expressed our organization's objection on principle to special exemptions from the act's coverage. Furthermore, it is not clear to us what the attitude of the AFL is with respect to this proposal." Construction workers are primarily in AFL unions.

3. Exclusion of employers doing a dollar volume of business less than certain minimums. After listing several differences between the bill and NLRB administrative practice, Goldberg said:

"OTHER businesses over which the board takes jurisdiction without regard to dollar volume are those directly affecting the national defense. I am sure that you would not mean to exclude these establishments from the national act, and thereby risk the industrial strife and lack of stability which might ensue."

In conclusion, Goldberg said: "It is our considered judgement, that on balance your proposals would eliminate the protections carried over from the Wagner Act in Taft-Hartley for considerable numbers of workers, and, on the other hand, would do nothing to strengthen those protections where they sorely need strengthening."

Ike Is Mum

The Senate Labor Committee last week concluded six weeks of hearings on proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act without once having heard from an Administration spokesman.

Senate Republican Leader Taft said the committee may decide to reopen the hearings for testimony from Sec. of Labor Martin P. Durkin, but with a sly grin added that "I doubt he could contribute to the gaiety of nations."

CIO Urges Senators To Vote Housing Funds

THE NATIONAL CIO Housing Committee last week told the Senate Appropriations Committee that the House action eliminating public low-cost housing and crippling the slum clearance program "should be entirely rejected."

"Even mere continuation of the existing programs in these fields with an inadequate 35,000 unit low-cost housing allocation for the coming year would fall far short of meeting the nation's housing needs," the committee said.

"We of CIO urge that you provide adequate funds to continue the present housing program. We urge you to make possible public low-cost housing and maintenance of present machinery for expanding the housing supply."

THE SAME request was made in testimony before the Senate Appropriations subcommittee by Federal Housing Administrator Albert M. Cole, who as a former representative in Congress had fought many of the programs he now directs.

He asked Congress to reject the order halting all new public housing and to approve the President's request for 35,000 starts next year.

Cole criticized House riders which he said would "seriously jeopardize" slum clearance and urban redevelopment.

The Senate earlier interrupted debate on the coastal oil bill to approve and send to the White House a bill extending federal rent controls only until July 31, instead of to Sept. 30 as requested by the President. The Senate also passed and sent to the House a measure extending rent control in the District of Columbia to July 31.

Industry Spokesman Hits Curbs On Free Bargaining

CONGRESS was urged last week to keep industrywide bargaining by a spokesman for 850 clothing manufacturers.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee, Morton J. Baum, president of the Colthing Manufacturers of the U.S.A. and vice-president of the Hickey-Freeman Co., Rochester N. Y., said:

"Strong and active competition is the life-blood of our industry—but not at the expense of the workers."

The industry has had harmonious bargaining relations with the CIO Clothing Workers for 20 years, has had industrywide contracts since 1937, and just concluded peaceful negotiations which resulted in wage increases for ACWA members.

Regional or individual bargaining was "highly unsatisfactory both to the union and to the industry," Blum testified.

"We found there was a constant shifting of factories from one locality to another in a desperate race to seek lower wage levels, with the consequent loss of job security for workers and utter chaos at the industry level," he explained.

He labeled "fantastic" cries of labor foes that industrywide bargaining "leads to uniform price increases at the expense of the consumer."

ARA Raising Defense Fund As Talks Near

THE CIO American Radio Association last week announced opening of a drive for a $1 million union defense fund as a "war chest to prepare for anything."

The present two-year agreements with shipowners expire June 15. ARA Pres. W. R. Steinberg said he expected the companies' refusal to give the radio officers control over radio telephones to be a major obstacle to reaching a new contract.

The union saw "a threat to push radio officers off the ships and replace them with radiophones operated by other personnel." ARA pointed out "certain companies have installed this apparatus outside the regular ship radio station to be operated by personnel other than radio officers."

The present contracts provide the radio officer shall be responsible for the operation and maintenance of all radio communications on the vessels.

Steel Union Sets '53 Goals: Pay Boost, Annual Wage

THE CIO Steelworkers opened their campaign for 1953 contract improvements last week.

The USA-CIO Intl. Wage Policy Committee at a meeting in Atlantic City voted to seek a general wage increase, the guaranteed annual wage, better insurance and pension provisions and other improvements.

Twenty-four hours later, the union sent formal notices reopening wage agreements to the basic steel producers.

The bargaining program was adopted by the 170 members of the wage policy group on the recommendation of the international executive board, which had met the day before.

From the major producers, who employ nearly 700,000 USA-CIO members, the union is seeking a general pay boost this year, when only the wage clauses of current contracts are open, and a joint study of the guaranteed annual wage and pension and insurance improvements preliminary to negotiations next year.

FROM other producers and from fabricators, whose full agreements are open, the union plans to seek all three goals, as well as additional aims indicated in individual plants.

The other goals include improvement, where necessary, of clauses governing shift premiums, weekend premium pay, severance pay, holidays, incentives, reporting allowance, vacations, seniority, preferential hiring when plants or departments are discontinued, military service, working conditions, grievance and arbitration machinery, contracting work out, safety and health, and supplemental workmen's compensation.

Also, elimination of remaining wage and salary inequities, including the North-South differential, and the full union shop where not already won, as well as other improvements local experience has shown are needed.

"THE ECONOMIC needs of the members of the United Steelworkers of America, their increasing productivity, the prosperous state of the industry, and the economic situation of the country as a whole all require that the companies give favorable consideration to this proposal," the wage policy group resolution said.

USA-CIO Pres. David J. McDonald told the committee members that the "best interests of the nation, as well as of the Steelworkers, require that this union take immediate action to put more purchasing power in the pockets of American workers."

He stoutly maintained that a higher wage level is necessary to prevent the piling up of a surplus of consumer goods which would be accompanied by mass unemployment and a general depression—regardless of whether the conflict in Korea continues.

Average wages in the industry now are about $2.06 an hour. If the wage issue is not settled with the basic producers by June 30, the union can strike.

Last year, the union won pay boosts averaging 21.5c an hour, including wages, shift differentials, holidays and vacations, for 615,000 members, and 26.5c to 63c for an additional 140,000 members.

CWA Gains New Increases In First Bell Co. Settlements

FIRST victories in nationwide negotiations for new contracts with the Bell System were chalked up last week by the CIO Communications Workers.

The first agreement between the CWA-CIO and an operating company came in Ohio, and boosted the wages of 17,000 operating, plant and clerical employes of the Ohio Bell Telephone Co.

It was followed in a few days by a new contract with the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co. giving pay boosts and other gains to 11,000 traffic workers. This settlement led quickly to a new pact between the company and the Independent Telephone Workers Union which ended a 33-day strike. CWA-CIO members had not joined in the walkout, but had refused to go through the picket line.

THEN a settlement was reached with the Bell Telephone Laboratories, covering 2000 union members in New York City and Murray Hill, N. J.

The Ohio agreement was worth 6.4c an hour in wage and other improvements, according to the CWA-CIO. It yielded a $2 weekly boost to the operators, and increases of $2 to $3 to plant and clerical workers.

In addition, the progression schedule was cut from 6.5 to six years, some job classifications were upgraded, and the grievance procedure was improved.

From New Jersey Bell, the union won a straight $2 a week increase and cut the progression schedule from 6.5 to six years. The compression meant additional hikes of $1 to $2 for about 750 workers.

THE UNION also won a new method for computing overtime, and a new vacation schedule under which about 1300 members will benefit this year. A no-strike clause, vigorously sought by the company, was licked.

Wage increases averaging better than 7c an hour were gained from Bell Laboratories, where the agreement provided for $2 a week for those earning up to $74 weekly, and $3 for those getting from $75 to $111, plus the elimination of several inequities.

Agreement also was reached with the Western Electric Co. giving 2200 employes at Lawrence and Haverhill, Mass., boosts of 8c an hour, and 300 workers at Queensboro, N. Y., 7.5c.

UPWA Begins TV Newscast In Omaha

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers last week began a once-a-week television program in Omaha, Neb.

The weekly 15-minute news commentary, "Here's Allen," features Phil Allen, well-known Midwest commentator. He is the midwest's first labor commentator on television.

The program, which will be telecast each Tuesday night from 10:30 to 10:45, can be seen over Station KMTV in Omaha, Channel 3.

One of the primary aims of the program, Station KMTV said, is to remind the Nebraska-Iowa audience of the age-old interdependence of farmers and workers. The program will also present labor's views on important problems as they develop.

Big Steel Sets Profit Record And Talks Of Price Boosts

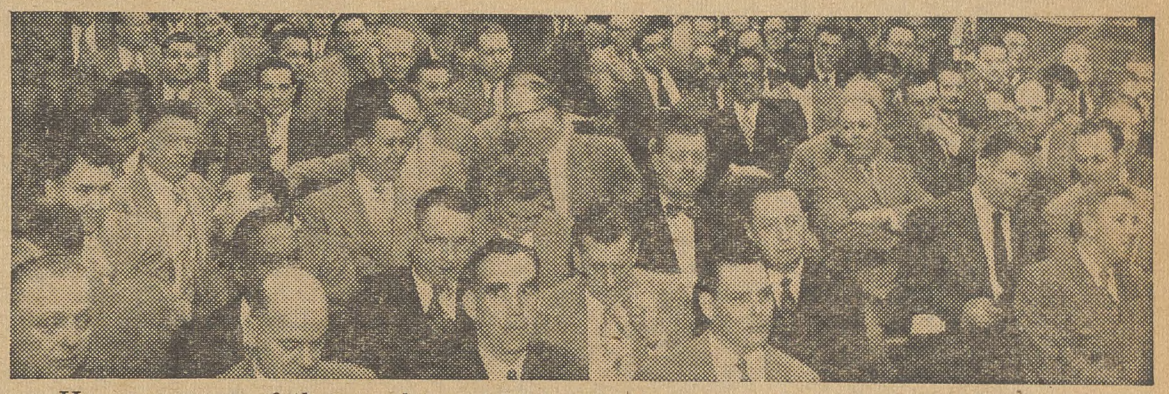
DESPITE new high profits reported last week, the nation's basic steel giants were beginning to boost prices again.

U. S. Steel reported record first quarter profits, with earnings up over the last quarter of 1952 and the first quarter a year ago. In the first three months of 1953, the nation's top steel maker reported profits of $49 million. That was up $1.3 million from the previous quarter and nearly $6 million better than the same period a year ago.

Jones & Laughlin, another of the top steel firms, reported its first quarter sales and profits running considerably ahead of the previous year. Profits were $5.6 million compared to $4.7 million in the same quarter of the previous year.

At the same time both companies admitted they were planning price increases on "extras" and hinted at possible increases on steel base prices.

While U. S. Steel profits amounted to $1.60 a share, the directors declared a 75c dividend. Percentage-wise, the 1953 quarter profit was 5.3% on sales, compared to 5% for the 1952 first quarter.



Here are some of the members of USA-CIO International Wage Policy Committee.

Tuck Champs At Bit To Get On House Labor Group

By MILTON PLUMB

"STATES RIGHTS" Dixiecrats and many Republicans in Congress have made a secret deal that will strengthen their control over the House Labor Committee.

Their aim is to emasculate federal labor laws, and transfer still more control over labor and social legislation to the 48 state legislatures.

To carry out this plan, Dixiecrat leaders, spearheaded by the powerful machine of Sen. Byrd of Virginia, have moved with record speed to secure the appointment of newly-elected Rep. Tuck (D. Va.) to the House Labor Committee.

Tuck, a former Dixiecrat governor of Virginia, was elected to Congress only two weeks ago.

While his nomination has not yet formally been submitted, it is understood that a majority of the Democratic members of the House Ways and Means Committee, who recommended all Democratic committee appointments, have already agreed on his selection.

TUCK is so confident of membership that he is already acting as though his appointment were confirmed. He has called on the committee clerk for information, and has begun reading the hearings on Taft-Hartley so he can step into an active committee role as soon as the House approves.

The importance which the Dixiegops attach to Tuck's committee membership is shown by the unusual effort they have made to make his service possible.

Because there was no vacancy on the Democratic side of the 27-member committee, their first step had to be to create an opening. None of the non-Dixiecrat members was willing to resign, so they persuaded Majority Leader Halleck to introduce a resolution enlarging the committee to 28 members. And the House has approved the resolution.

When word reached some of the ranking Democratic members of the committee last week that Tuck was slated to be named to the new vacancy, they filed a protest with Democratic Ways and Means Committee members.

They pointed out that Tuck's administration as Virginia's governor was responsible for a severe "Right to Work" Law.

Tuck, who was a loyal servant of the Byrd machine, has said that the law is "not anti-union or anti-labor." As governor, however, he ordered the conscription of AFL Electrical Workers into the state guard when they threatened a strike against the Virginia Electric Power Co.

What disturbs liberal members of the Labor Committee even more than Tuck's record, however, is a report that he was persuaded by Dixiecrat leaders to run for Congress recently only on assurances that he would get the House Labor Committee seat.

THEY SEE in this a move by Republicans and Dixiecrats like Reps. Barden (D. S. C.) and Lucas (D. Tex.) to thwart the effort of the committee's chairman, Rep. McConnell (R. N. Y.), to at least give labor a fair hearing.

Chief sponsor of Tuck in the House for the Labor Committee seat has been Rep. Smith (D. Va.), long time author of anti-labor legislation.

Some of Tuck's plans were indicated when he addressed the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, urged the states be given free reign over labor.

The 'Give Away' Vote

The Senate this week will vote on whether to give away the federal government's claim to oil resources under the sea, off the coast of certain states.

It is a give-away, pure and simple. These oil and other resources belong to all the people of America. All the people of America should receive the benefits of their use.

We hope the Senators who favor the off-shore oil bill will remember that when they vote for the give-away. We hope they will remember that other great give-away issues of the past, like Teapot Dome, came back years later to haunt them. We hope they will reconsider before they cast their votes.

And we doff our hats to those Senators who have fought so valiantly to defeat this vicious proposal, who have tried so hard to save the public domain, who have done so much to help the public understand the issue. They deserve the thanks of every citizen.

The Basic Evil

New evidence of the basic evil of the injunction comes from Cleveland—where one county judge has in effect made a new law for 35 states. He has barred the CIO Clothing Workers from peacefully exercising the right of free speech.

The Richman injunction (see Page 2) is a gross example of abuse of judicial power by a judge with an exaggerated sense of his own importance. It is the worst example of government-by-injunction in ACWA history.

By judicial decree, he has denied the union's right to constitutional freedom of speech.

His action demonstrates clearly the wickedness of government-by-injunction.

It demonstrates as well the potential evil of bills like those of Sen. Goldwater and Rep. Lucas, who would give state and county courts, and maybe even a justice of the peace, even more power to interfere with labor relations than they now possess.

The Free Press

The great mass of American newspaper publishers have always risen as a man to defend the constitutional right of a free press.

But last week—in the face of a serious threat to the free press—most publishers seemed either to yawn or to turn the other way lest they see an unpleasant fact staring them in the face.

The unpleasant fact was that James Wechsler, editor of the strongly liberal, strongly anti-Communist New York Post, had been hauled down to Washington by Sen. Joe McCarthy for a closed door hearing.

It's quite clear that Wechsler was questioned about his books and his paper's editorial policy simply because the New York Post is one of the very few major daily papers that has been pro-labor, pro-Fair Deal and loudly anti-McCarthy. McCarthy's objective smells strongly of attempted intimidation—to influence the press through his senatorial powers.

That looks like a "clear and present" danger to the free press. We don't like it, and protest against it.

Ohio Justice?

By Its Deeds—Not Its Words

Excerpts from the statement issued by CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, as chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, touching on recent actions of Congress and the Eisenhower Administration, are printed below.

By EMIL RIEVE

THE CIO COMMITTEE on Economic Policy is concerned by recent trends and actions, in the Administration and Congress, which threaten the stability of economic life and indicate a desire to shift a heavier proportion of the tax load to the lower income brackets.

We are heartened by Pres. Eisenhower's statement in his Apr. 13 letter to CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther that he fully supports the concept of full employment, that he deplores the "stupidity of mass unemployment," and that he intends to employ "every useful measure, private and public . . . to foster economic stability and rising living standards."

There is a clear-cut difference between the forward-looking statement expressed in Pres. Eisenhower's letter and a series of contradictory economic policies which have been developed by Republican members of Congress and Administration officials during the past 100 days.

People Will Judge

In the long run, the people will judge the domestic economic policies of this Administration by its deeds rather than by its words. Changes are necessary to square recent words and deeds.

For instance, Pres. Eisenhower expressed belief in the need for an effective Council of Economic Advisers. The Employment Act of 1946 provides for a three-man Council with its own statutory responsibilities and status. So far, only an economic adviser to the President has been appointed. Until the Council has been genuinely reconstituted and fully staffed, it cannot function.

The decision of the Treasury to float long-term bond issues bearing a higher, 3.25% interest represents a sop to the bankers, but it is a threat to home-owners and home-buyers. Long-range effects will be generally deflationary, but the program is framed . . . to place heavy burdens on the great mass of consumers.

The press has almost universally ignored . . . the blunt and undeniable fact that the decision to raise interest rates is nothing more than a windfall for the banking community. Neither press nor Treasury spokesmen have pointed out that this increase could ultimately cost the consuming public a minimum half-billion dollars a year in additional interest payments.

This deflationary step is taken at a time when practically every government economic official is in agreement that the peak of the "boom" has been reached. There are signs that unless great care is exercised, present high levels of economic activity can quickly change to a recession.

Contradictory

The action on interest rates also appears to be directly contradictory to the recent decision of the Federal Reserve Board to reduce margins on stock trading, presumably to encourage increased activity and to encounter deflationary tendencies.

Taken together, these seemingly contradictory steps demonstrate the influence on government policy which has come from the country's large financial institutions, whose leaders have figured so prominently in the internal affairs of the Republican Party. Both steps will increase the profits of large banks.

Another cause of concern is the expressed belief of many Republican congressmen and high officials of the Treasury that the excess profits tax should be allowed to lapse when the present law expires June 30. Such a "do nothing" policy would cause the federal government a loss of about $2.5 billion in revenue. It would also lead to the conclusion that the Administration's tax policy is one of "spare the rich and soak the poor."

Decisions Important

First priority on tax relief should not go to the top of the economic ladder, but to the millions of families in the lower income groups. Economic equity and fairness can best be served by raising the present personal income tax exemptions from $600 to at least $800 per person, not by swelling the already heavy surpluses of giant corporations.

These first decisions, on taxes and fiscal policy, will be of crucial and lasting importance. The history of the U. S. is strewn with the wreckage of economic and political groups which sought to identify the interests of the nation with the special interests of small, wealthy minorities.

The periods of our nation's greatest economic health and expansion have coincided with policies which seek to provide economic justice for every group in our society.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

YOU MUSTN'T think that nothing is happening in Washington just because Congress is boring people to death.

The President's personal domestic program, three and a half months after inauguration, is still in the limbo of preparation. He is naming commissions and study groups on many issues, to report some time in the future, and holding conferences with state governors.

Old Guard congressmen and practically all of Ike's appointees know exactly what they want and are driving to get it. They mean to check social legislation, limit or kill public power, grab public grazing and forest lands as well as offshore oil. They mean to weaken federal guarantees of collective bargaining, undermine the government's positions as champion of social welfare, and "quit claim" as many functions as possible to the several states.

Along the line they hope to shift the tax burden by putting through some kind of national sales tax that hits wage-earners harder than high income taxes hit millionaires. The Treasury is loaded with pro-sales tax officials.

Sec. of the Interior Douglas McKay baldly told the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, "We're here in an administration representing business and industry." This declaration represents the visible top tenth of the iceberg which, beneath the surface, is invisible—but still there.

Liberals were unable to block the offshore oil bill, first of the "give-aways." The House made deep cuts in Reclamation Bureau appropriations for public power projects. Social security expansion proposals were buried in a deep freeze—postponed for "study."

The American Medical Association got—or thinks it got—a veto over any health insurance plan by its apparent power to control an assistant secretary in the new Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare. Sharpest cuts in the post-Truman budget for the H-E-W Dept. were at the expense of the Public Health Service.

The President seems to think he has plenty of time to let his commissions and study groups work out an Eisenhower domestic program—and even an Eisenhower international trade policy.

Things are moving faster than that.

Old Guardsmen in Congress have received—and pigeonholed with the same contempt they showed for Harry S. Truman's proposals—Ike's requests for revision of the McCarran-Walter immigration law and a special act allowing 240,000 refugees from the Iron Curtain to enter this country in two years.

Liaison between the White House and Congress, in the traditional sense, is almost non-existent.

Committee hearings on major bills—Taft-Hartley revision and taxes for example—no longer begin with testimony from responsible executive officials. The Administration comes in late—or never.

Ike does not have even one politically-wise presidential aide actively pushing on Capitol Hill the few programs he has endorsed.

In American politics, as in nature, a vacuum is impossible. If the White House declines to assert leadership, powerful congressmen and cabinet members will—and do.

The President is always conciliatory and soft-spoken in his public statements on Congress. He recognizes its "coordinate" place in the government and will not criticize its actions—even when Republicans defeat his public housing program and committee inquisitors damage his foreign policy.

The power of Congress is actually so great—to tax, to appropriate, to investigate—that it overmatches any President who does not assert strong leadership through every possible medium, including television and radio reports to arouse public support.

● ● Burning Tree Club, where the President plays golf once or twice a week, is the capital's most exclusive private meeting place for top politicians, public relations men, and lobbyists. So many guests have been invited on days when Ike is expected to play that the club committee has warned members that guests are not "welcome" on weekends.

● ● The widely reported sufferings of Republican public relations experts during the new administration are not a joke. One able GOP publicist and lobbyist, with excellent connections in Congress, lost his accounts when Ike was nominated last summer and is still waiting for a staff job on what he hopes will soon be a new Senate subcommittee.

● ● Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of H-E-W, used to be co-editor of the Houston Post, which warmly praised "housewives" of Marshall, Tex., for defying the law and refusing to pay social security taxes for their household servants. Now Mrs. Hobby is in charge of administering the law. Asked in her first news conference whether she still believed what the Houston Post editorial page had said about the law-defyers, she replied that she was "out of town" when the editorial ran and had not agreed with it. The newspaper, however, didn't bother to retract the editorial after she returned "to town."

● ● Liberal senators abandoned the fight to delay the offshore oil vote because they realized they were losing ground after the first three weeks of extended debate. Even newspapers which opposed the "give-away" bill began to complain about the length of the debate.

'Youth Wants To Know'—

Reuther Slams McCarthyism As 'Ugly, Un-American, Immoral'

"THE POLITICAL phenomenon which we call McCarthyism and McCarranism" was strongly condemned by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther last week as "ugly, un-American and immoral."

Reuther made the charge as he answered questions of Washington teen-agers on the television program "Youth Wants to Know." It was this program that Sen. McCarthy "forgot" to attend two months ago.

During the half-hour program, carried over the National Broadcasting Co.'s combined TV and radio networks, Reuther answered teen-agers' queries on a number of important subjects.

Enlarging on a question about current congressional investigations, Reuther charged McCarthyism "applies a technique for achieving political power which is incompatible with the idealism that American politics has signified throughout the years."

'Wrong In Every Sense'

He said it was "wrong morally, wrong politically, and wrong in every other sense" to "smear a man's character without proper trial." That, he said, was what McCarthyism did.

Reuther charged that McCarthy's attack on Ambassador Charles E. Bohlen's nomination had "seriously undermined the effectiveness of Bohlen as our representative in Moscow."

"I think," Reuther added, "the American people need to speak out boldly and with courage against that sort of political attack."

In response to a question from Moderator Frank Blair, Reuther said the job of routing Communists could be completed "were it not for men like McCarthy and McCarran."

"I think," he told the teen-agers, "we have to be inherently vigilant against the infiltration of Communists or other totalitarian forces in our government and society. I believe the real challenge we have as a free people is to find a way to meet this threat without destroying the very freedom we profess that we are trying to defend."

U. S. Can Avoid Depression

Reuther reiterated his conviction that mass unemployment and depression need not follow the end of the Korean war.

"I believe," he told a Washington teen-ager, "that if we know how to achieve full employment and full production in meeting the needs of war, we ought to be able to find a way to gear our productive resources to the achievement of full employment and full production for fulfilling the needs of people in peacetime."

In answer to a series of questions about tax cuts this year, Reuther charged Republican congressional talk about tax cuts for individuals was "a political smokescreen."

It was designed, the CIO president said, to hide the expiration of the excess profits tax on corporations and in the hope that the taxpayer, "hypnotized with the prospects of tax relief" would forget the tax cuts going to big business.

"It is not only economically unsound but morally wrong to tax people in the low-income groups, while the people in the high income groups are not paying their proportionate share," Reuther told the teen-agers. Taxes on low-income families, he said, "comes out of the milk bottles, food, clothing and medical bills" of people.

Washington Window—

Who Should Own Public Lands?

By Public Affairs Institute

A CURRENT headline story concerns the efforts of Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay to remove Marion Clawson from his civil service post as director of the Interior's Bureau of Land Management.

McKay said that he had released Clawson to replace him with someone of his own choosing. Clawson, bureau director since 1946, has failed in appealing the case. This is regarded by many as not merely a patronage wrangle, but another chapter in the historic competition for land in this country.

The federal government, now and throughout our history, has been the biggest land owner in the U. S. A total of 29 states have been carved out of public lands.

You may recall some of the major purchases from Federal tax funds (the money of all the people), like the Louisiana Purchase in 1803 and the cession from Mexico in 1848.

Today, the United States still owns some 450 million acres—one-fourth of the land area of all the states. Much of it has been set aside for national parks, national forests, Indian lands and the like.

Good Of All The People

About 40% of all public lands—10% of all land area in the U. S.—is managed by the Bureau of Land Management. Many of these lands are leased to private individuals or companies under strict regulations. They may be used for livestock grazing, timber, oil, gas, minerals and other operations. The bureau receives fees and royalties for these leases which in 1952 reached $65 million.

Conservation of all public lands has been a cornerstone of U. S. policy since the days of Pres. Theodore Roosevelt. His Sec. of Agriculture James Wilson set the tone for the policy in an official statement in 1905, saying in part:

" . . . It must clearly be borne in mind that all (federal) land is to be devoted to its most productive use for the permanent good of the whole people, not for the temporary benefit of individuals or companies."

A number of individuals and private businesses in this country have long cast an envious eye on these lands. Some would like to purchase them cheaply. Others would like to lease them with no restrictions attached.

Conservation and wildlife groups would have the government expand its present holdings and operations. They are concerned about the conflicts of private interests—cattlemen, timbermen, irrigationists, sportsmen, for example—and what would happen to the land.

Sen. Hunt (D. Wyo.) has introduced a bill which would cede to the states rights to the minerals underlying the public lands within their boundaries. Opponents of this measure say that many state governments can be easily pressured by private interests and that it will mean a wholesale raid on our vital resources. Other efforts are being made to cede all public lands to the states. Many cattle and timber men are urging this.

For those who are seeking to purchase the lands some states would offer real bonanzas. Nevada, for example, limits by its constitution, the selling price of such lands to $2.50 an acre even though some of the land is worth many times such a price.

Assistant Secretary of Interior Orme Lewis, who has jurisdiction over the Bureau of Land Management, told a Senate committee that he favored private ownership of these lands. Such are the issues at stake in the Interior dispute. They play a major role in the future of this nation and its people.

"The price is very reasonable, madam, when you consider what that much fruit alone would cost you these days."

Altmeyer Interview—

Labor Alerted To Fight For Social Security

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE MAN in America who knows most about it last week sounded a warning that the social security system is in danger.

The man is Arthur J. Altmeyer, recently "reorganized" out of his job as Commissioner of Social Security.

The danger is the proposal of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and some other groups to change around the whole social security system—with the gave likelihood that social security checks would be smaller.

In a special interview with The CIO News last week, Altmeyer sounded a call to labor and to employers to prevent the social security law from becoming nothing more than a glorified relief system.

Altmeyer gave what amounted to a "second look" at social security by the man recognized as the country's leading expert on the subject.

'More Concerned'

"What is crucial for the future," he said, in an interview, "depends on whether both labor and employers continue to support a contributory social security system with benefits related to the wages lost on retirement.

"Labor has always been more concerned than anyone else, including employers, with a contributory system, such as we have now. It has also been more concerned than any other group with maintaining a system that relates the benefits to wages."

Altmeyer is a veteran of social security. When the New Deal program was administered by a Social Security Board, he was its chairman. When the administration was placed in the hands of a single commissioner, he was the logical appointee.

Now, after nearly 20 years of government service, he has been ousted with only a few weeks to go to qualify for full pension rights. He turned down an offer of a job as consultant to the new Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare which would have carried him to his retirement time, on the ground that it was simply "made work."

He recognizes that with the new political setup in Washington, social security is in for attack. But such attacks are nothing new, he recalled.

"The Social Security Act didn't become effective until Jan. 1, 1937, when workers and employers began contributing to it," he said.

Attacked In '36

"But in the 1936 presidential campaign the Republican candidate, Alf Landon, denounced it as 'a cruel hoax and a fraud on the people,' who would never be able to collect on their contributions. Propaganda against the act was even stuffed into pay envelopes.

"Here it is 17 years later. Pensions are still being paid whenever a beneficiary becomes eligible—and some people are still crying 'hoax' and 'fraud.'"

While Altmeyer said he feels reasonably sure that the present basic social security plan is safe, he sees little chance of immediate improvements which he and the CIO agree are necessary.

During the recent election campaign, Pres. Eisenhower promised to strengthen social security and extend coverage of the old age pension and survivors insurance program to protect more people. He listed these improvements in the "must" legislative program he later sent to Congress.

"It looks more and more improbable that any improvements will be enacted this year," Altmeyer observed regretfully. "There is still some hope for extended coverage, because there seems to be so much unanimity on it.

Changes Doubtful

"I hoped, too, that the benefits would be improved, at least by restoration of the annual increment. But if Congress adjourns by July 1 . . ."

The congressional situation is made worse by the fact that the House Ways & Means Committee, in which any bill to alter social security would originate, has stalled off action by directing a subcommittee make a detailed study. Chairman of the subcommittee is Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), who in 1949 wrote:

"The old-age and survivors insurance program is grossly unsound and ineffective . . . The program makes grandiose promises for the future . . . our social security program is totally immoral."

One of the major attacks social security now faces comes from the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which wants to undermine it.

The chamber's program would put social security on a pay-as-you-go basis by using part of the $18 billion trust fund built up over the years and levying each year payroll taxes to replace the amount paid out.

Cuts In Everybody

It would blanket in everybody, regardless of status as a contributor to the fund, and would pay aged needy now receiving assistance a flat minimum of about $25 a month. This would save an estimated $2 billion a year now paid out of general tax receipts—but would save it at the expense of those who contribute.

"The proposal promises too much," said Altmeyer. "It underestimates the costs and the other difficulties—such as, how and on what basis can a minimum payment satisfactory to the people be established.

"Use, for instance, the flat payment of $25 a month for the needy aged. Last December, 86.4% of the old age assistance recipients received more than $25 a month, so only 13.6% of the people receiving it would be taken off the assistance rolls. The states would probably still insist on federal aid to finance further payments.

"The Chamber proposes to finance its plan out of payroll taxes. This is inequitable, and destructive of the contributory principle.

Plan Indefinite

"It lacks a definite, clear-cut, sound plan of financing on a self-sustaining, long-range basis. Calling for a pay-as-you-go plan doesn't necessarily mean long-range financing, as we now have. It means lower payments at first, higher payments later. The Chamber proposes a change from what actuaries say is a self-sustaining plan, but offers nothing to replace it."

What the plan boils down to, he said, is that "those who are covered will be paying for those who are not."

Security Budget Cut $2 Million

The Social Security budget was hacked $2 million when Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, sent what was left of ex-Pres. Truman's original proposals to Congress last week.

For Social Security alone, she asked $1,374,223,000 in new appropriations, compared to $1,376,285,000 sought by the former President. The figures include grants for public assistance, which are fixed by law and thus not subject to annual action by Congress. (See also Page 10.)

FUTURE of social security is pondered by Mrs. Kitty Ellickson, CIO associate director of education, and former Social Security Commissioner Arthur J. Altmeyer. Mrs. Ellickson is a member of the Social Security Advisory Committee to the Dept. of Health, Welfare & Education.

Oveta Takes A Dim View Of Old Age Pension Gains

THE SECRETARY of the new Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare has a new respect for the Constitution, she told her first press conference last week.

The very words help Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby run the department, she explained. Right up in the preamble, she went on, they say the document was ordained and established, among other things, to "provide for the common defense, promote the public welfare . . ."

Since the "common defense" comes first, and the federal government must "provide" for it, defense needs take precedence over the "common welfare," which the government need only "promote," she said.

What it boils down to, some of the reporters figured out for themselves, is that there will be no new social security legislation this year. Providing for the common defense might interfere.

Extending old age and survivors insurance coverage under social security, which Pres. Eisenhower pledged in his campaign speeches and which he has asked Congress to undertake, is a "complex question," Mrs. Hobby said.

'Study' Needed

It will require "considerable study and consultation with all interested groups," she said. She ducked a query as to her stand on the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's pay-as-you-go, flat-rate proposal.

She has appointed an advisory committee for study and consultation purposes that includes Leonard J. Calhoun, a member of the C. of C. Social Legislation Committee and an active proponent of its plan. The C. of C. has additional representation—R. A. Hohaus, vice president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., and A. D. Marshall, manager of the Employes Benefits Dept. of the General Electric Co.

There was no labor representation until the unions made a vigorous complaint. Then Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, of the CIO Education & Research Dept., and Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL were added.

Labor Ignored

Other members are Dr. Eveline M. Burns, of the New York School of Social Work; Robert P. Burroughs, consultant on pension and profit sharing plans; Thomas H. Beacom, vice president of the First National Bank of Chicago; Loula Dunn, director of the American Public Welfare Association; Wallis B. Dunckel, vice president of the Bankers Trust Co. of New York; Hugh F. Hall, American Farm Bureau Federation; Dr. Lloyd C. Halvorson, National Grange.

Meeting with the committee are Marion B. Folsom, undersecretary of the treasury; Rep. Curtis (R. Neb.), chairman of a House Ways & Means Subcommittee on social security, and Karl T. Schlotterbeck, advisor to the subcommittee.

C. of C. Proposals Peril Old Age Pay

THE SOCIAL Security program and the basic principles under which it has successfully operated since 1937 are facing a grave threat from an apparently sound but actually dangerous revision proposed by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

The dream of an untroubled—or at least eased—old age made a reality by the Roosevelt Administration stands a strong chance of being turned into an economic nightmare if the C. of C. proposals become law.

Its stated objectives can be used to build up a good case. Its actual goal is freezing old age pension benefits at their present levels, and perhaps cutting them eventually, and forcing contributors to the Old Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund to pay for pensions for everyone.

The C. of C. has four stated aims: To put social security on a pay-as-you-go basis; to eliminate old age assistance grants; to give pensions to all retired aged, including those who neither contributed to the trust fund or are on relief; and to make coverage on a contributory basis universal.

The CIO has advocated the last objective for years. So have the Democrats. The Republicans have consistently rejected it.

THE CHAMBER'S pay-as-you-go aim would be accomplished by tapping the trust fund to pay pensions to everyone—those who contributed to it, those who haven't, and those getting old age assistance instead of pensions.

The money taken out would be replaced each year by a payroll tax, at a rate to be determined by Congress, large enough to raise the necessary amount. Present growth of the fund would stop.

This would put the fund into politics. Eventually it would mean huge annual repayments. These in turn would demand payroll taxes so high many could not afford them. Congress, under pressure, undoubtedly would lower taxes. The only foreseeable result would be lower pensions.

The plan would give a minimum of $25 a month, or $300 a year, to all the aged, regardless of contributions to the trust fund or need. There is a serious danger that eventually all pensioners, regardless of the amount contributed, would be reduced to this low level.

For those getting old age assistance, and who need help most, the $25 would mean bitter hardship. Average payments now run about $50 a month. They are financed out of general federal revenues, which are levied on the basis of ability to pay.

THE CHAMBER would put the burden on the workers. They would pay for this parody on a pension out of their contributions to the trust fund—and face the almost definite certainty of lower pensions for their own declining years.

And on this basis, the states in all probability would demand additional U. S. funds to raise payments to the aged needy somewhere within striking distance of the subsistence level.

UWUA Hails Organizing And Wage Gains

By FRED ROSS

THE UTILITY Workers have gone a long way since they came into the CIO almost eight years ago. They have almost tripled their membership —from 30,000 to 80,000.

Some 500 delegates to the UWUA-CIO's sixth constitutional convention at Detroit noted the advance and found the progress since the previous convention particularly memorable.

During the 18-month period the union won 10 important representation elections, including one at the Pennsylvania Power Co., where a raid by the AFL Electrical Workers was defeated.

And during the period UWUA won all union shop elections in which it participated.

The report of Pres. Joseph A. Fisher and Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler and other officers pointed out these gains were made in the face of the Taft-Hartley Act. This law, they said, "has done more to retard and hamper the organizational efforts of all unions than have the combined efforts of anti-labor employers in this century."

Leader In Pensions

UWUA also had to contend with state laws banning strikes in the utility industry.

Faced with such obstacles, the union had to resort to nine strikes to win considerable gains in the past 18 months. Wage increases of from 8c to 24c an hour and fringe benefits were won.

"UWUA has pioneered in pensions and wage gains in this industry," union officers reported. "UWUA . . . cannot afford to rest as long as there remains one single unorganized utility worker in the country."

Nor does it intend to rest. It hopes to conclude successfully this year four major organizing campaigns that now are under way.

Safety Action

The drives are directed at organizing the employes of Michigan Consolidated Gas Co., unorganized portions of the Detroit Edison Co., Boston Consolidated Gas Co. and Pennsylvania Power and Light Co., where 5000 workers are involved.

After hearing reports by Vice Pres. William J. Munger and Delegate Lloyd H. Lindemer, Youngtown, O., the delegates also directed their attention to the tragic toll of fatal and disabling accidents in the industry.

Munger said at least 15 were killed and 40 hurt in Ohio last year. Lindemer said six were killed and 25 injured in the Youngtown-Akron area of the Ohio Edison Co.

The convention adopted resolutions calling for adequate safety clauses in contracts and state and federal safety legislation, and told its officers to cooperate with the Ohio UWUA locals in strengthening safety regulations.

Two main convention speakers, Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers and Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, head unions that represent workers in industries closely allied to the field in which UWUA operates.

Labor Unity Moves

Knight declared there is a real desire on the part of the CIO and AFL for labor unity.

"The Oil Workers, Utility Workers and Chemical Workers are going to have difficulties in the event of CIO-AFL merger," he said. "We had better think how we are going to better our services to our members. I believe that it is possible to have unity without sacrificing CIO principles."

Beirne told how utilities work together to influence state legislatures, regulatory commissions and Congress.

"We should put our heads together as utility managements do to protect ourselves against a trend that will take us back 75 years and make utility workers the lowest paid in industry," Beirne said.

A labor unity resolution, adopted with only a score of "no" votes, provides that the union's executive board investgate the possibility and advisability of merging with other CIO or AFL unions, and—if it believes it advisable—report its findings to a special convention.

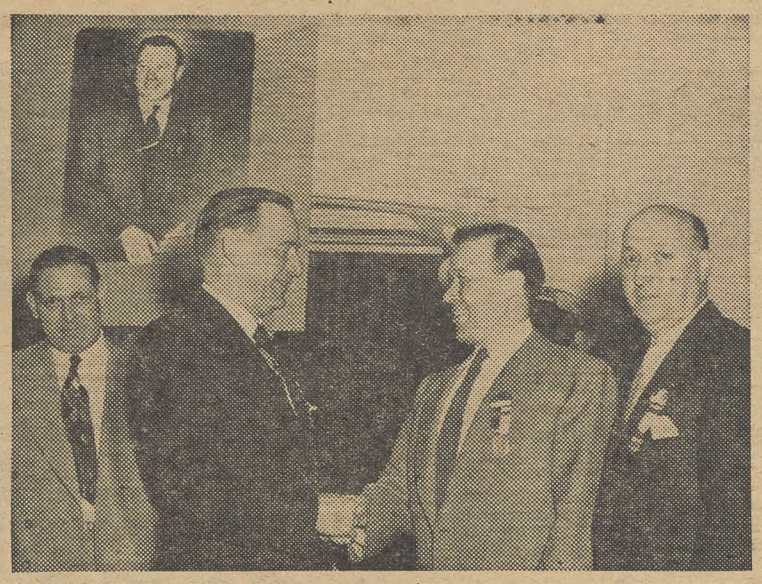
Some of the opponents of the resolution, which had the support of Fisher and Pachler, said the board already has the power to carry on such an investigation and further action was unnecessary. Resolution backers said the purpose of the resolution was to keep the delegates informed and provide for democratic convention procedure.

Dues Change Loses

A proposed constitutional change to set a limit of $2.50 monthly on dues was defeated. This action meant continuance of the present clause which gives the executive committee authority to approve monthly dues over $2.50.

Other constitutional changes increased the salaries of the president, secretary-treasurer and the two vice presidents $25 a week and abolished the post of national adviser, which was created for the late Allan S. Haywood.

The convention reiterated UWUA's stand against public ownership of electric "distribution and transmission systems or steam generating plants," although it is not opposed to the government building hydro-electric dams in regional development projects. It opposes turning over such dams to private interests.



DOUBLE TAKE—Pres. Joseph A. Fisher of CIO Utility Workers (left) greets Pres. Walter P. Reuther at union's convention. Note portrait at left. UWUA Sec.-Treas. William J. Pachler (right) has just pinned a badge on Reuther.

ALSO HONORED at UWUA convention is Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, on whom UWUA Sec.-Treas William J. Pachler pins a distinguished guest's badge. Beirne was one of the principal speakers.

UWUA Wins Strike On West Coast

Despite psychological warfare by professional strikebreakers, some 3000 CIO Utility Workers have won an 18-day strike at the Southern California Gas Co.

During the walkout, scabs drove trucks in and out of main plant gates on aimless errands, but that didn't scare the UWUA members.

The strike settlement provided wage increases of approximately 9c hourly, plus about 3c hourly in other contract gains.

A MAJOR SPEECH at UWUA convention was made by OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight.

Reuther Lambastes GOP For Oil Give-Away, Housing Votes

SHORTCOMINGS of the Eisenhower Administration and the Republican Congress were listed by CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther at the CIO Utility Workers convention.

He vigorously condemned the Republicans for House votes killing off the low-rent public housing program and backing the coastal oil "give-away." He also condemned GOP opposition to increasing the minimum wage from 75c to $1.25 an hour.

"The CIO," Reuther told UWUA delegates meeting in Detroit, "will support Pres. Eisenhower when he is right and oppose him when he is wrong." He recalled that he wrote Eisenhower lauding him for his recent peace proposals.

OTHER highlights of Reuther's convention address included:

- Condemnation of Eisenhower's appointment of Albert M. Cole as head of the Housing & Home Finance Agency, as "like putting a fox in charge of the chicken coop."
- Renewed support of the Hill "oils for the lamps of learning" amendment to the oil lands bill. He pointed out that U. S. schools get less in one year than the cost of one week of World War II.
- Barbed criticism of lawmakers who opposed higher minimum wages: "Every congressman who says a 75c minimum wage is adequate should be required to feed his kids on that until he changes his mind."
- Exposure of the GOP's loudly-heralded tax cut program in Congress.

REUTHER predicted the Republicans will let the excess profits tax expire as scheduled on June 30, but that they won't follow through on a bill to cut individual income taxes. And he warned of the developing drive for a federal sales tax.

The CIO president also called for increasing the individual income tax exemption from $600 to $800.

"Cut the standard of luxury of people who get too much before you cut the standard of living of people who haven't got enough," Reuther declared.

"The free world will judge us by our solution of these problems.

"We have got to find a way to tap the spiritual resources of free people to fill the needs of the people.

"The CIO has the opportunity to furnish the world leadership for this achievement."

Union Shop Gains Told In Report

THE NATIONAL Industrial Conference Board has reported that two-thirds of 602 recent union contracts studied have some type of union security clause.

Nearly three-fourths of the contracts carry the dues checkoff. The full union shop is provided in 207 of the pacts, maintenance of membership in 121, and a modified union shop in most of the others with security clauses.

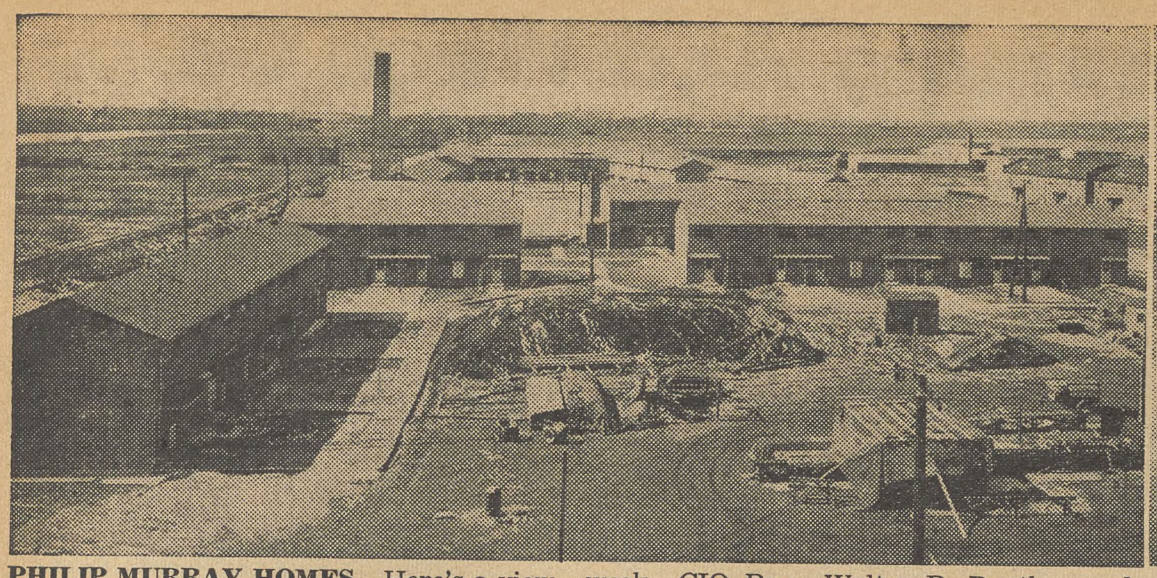
NICB found the rise of the modified union shop most noticeable. This type of agreement, which came into prominence as a result of the CIO Auto Workers 1950 pact with General Motors, appears in one out of nine agreements reviewed.

THE SURVEY found the checkoff occurs most frequently in CIO union contracts, in 197 out of 219.

In contracts with the full union shop, the checkoff is included in just a little more than half, 124 out of 207. Of the 196 agreements with no security clause, 158 or 80.6% have the checkoff. All 33 CIO Steelworkers' pacts studied call for the checkoff.

The following CIO unions have the checkoff in some form in all agreements studied: Chemical Workers, Glass Workers, Shipbuilding Workers, Oil Workers; Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Workers; Textile Workers; Transport Workers and Utility Workers.

Many other CIO unions have checkoff clauses in almost all of the contracts surveyed.



PHILIP MURRAY HOMES—Here's a view of Philip Murray Homes, 500-unit Chicago housing project which will be dedicated this week. CIO Pres. Walter P. Reuther and CIO Steelworkers Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes will be among the speakers.

ONE OF FIRST families in Philip Murray Homes, punch-press operator Anthony Chenault, gets apartment key from Don R. Bonaparte while his family looks on.

Eisenhower Urges Immigration Reform

TWIN PROPOSALS for reform of the nation's immigration laws and admission of 240,000 refugees were presented by Pres. Eisenhower to Congress last week, and immediately ran into criticism from GOP lawmakers.

The President asked Congress to eliminate 10 "injustices" in the McCarran-Walter Act.

This is the immigration law enacted by Congress last year over former Pres. Truman's veto. Its discriminatory provisions were strongly condemned by Eisenhower and Democratic leaders in last fall's political campaign. And CIO has long supported proposals for a fairer immigration law.

EISENHOWER'S recommendations were in two parts:

1. He asked Congress to adopt an emergency immigration law allowing admission of 240,000 European refugees—many of them fleeing from Iron Curtain countries—over the next two years.

Such quotas would be in addition to immigration figures set by the McCarran-Walter Act. And the emergency law—if enacted—would amount to revival of the Displaced Persons Act which expired a year ago.

Chairman Reed of the House Judiciary Committee said extensive hearings would be required before any action would come on this Eisenhower proposal.

2. The President asked the Senate to remedy "injustices" in the McCarran-Walter Act itself, saying they "may operate with unwarranted harshness." He asked early hearings.

Chairman Watkins (R. Utah) of a Senate-House Immigration "Watchdog" Committee said he had no present plans to conduct hearings. And he commented it's "too early to start writing amendments to a law that has only been in operation two or three months."

THE PRESIDENT in his State of the Union message had listed immigration law reform as among his congressional proposals. In his message to the Senate last week, he listed these provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act as objectionable:

Strict security provisions over foreign seamen in U. S. ports, provision for allowing former Nazis or Fascists to enter the U. S., "second class" citizenship for naturalized citizens, strict provisions for deportation of aliens, and sweeping powers for U. S. consuls to bar immigrants.

High-Tariff Advocates Hit Trade Pacts

A PARADE of high-tariff advocates last week appeared before the House Ways and Means Committee as hearings opened on a new tariff bill.

Pres. Eisenhower has asked extension of the reciprocal trade program for one year, pending study of the nation's foreign trade policies.

But the Administration has not introduced a bill extending the trade program, so last week's hearings centered on the proposed bill by Rep. Simpson (R. Pa.).

THE SIMPSON BILL would weaken the President's present power to negotiate reciprocal trade agreements and increase power of the U. S. Tariff Commission to set aside such agreements. It also would continue the program for one year.

The measure was condemned by Undersecretary of State Walter B. Smith at the U. S. Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington. He warned it might result in "a costly upheaval in international commerce."

Testimony at the congressional hearing was led by O. R. Strackbein, chairman of the high-tariff National Labor-Managament Council on Foreign Trade Policy.

STRACKBEIN said he didn't advocate a return to "the log-rolling of the past" which has marked GOP tariff-setting in past Republican Administrations. But he urged Congress to reassert "its authority over foreign trade and duty-making" and "rescue" the Tariff Commission from what he called "the blight of domination by the executive power."

In contrast with the congressional testimony, the Foreign Traders Association in Philadelphia called for extension of reciprocal trade agreements without "crippling" amendments.

Reuther Heads CIO Group As Chicago Dedicates Philip Murray Homes

A PUBLIC housing project named in memory of the late Philip Murray—who envisioned not only decent homes but "carpets on the floor and pictures on the wall" for the great mass of Americans—will be dedicated May 6 in the southeast corner of Chicago.

The trim, brick row-house buildings in the 500-unit Philip Murray Homes adjoin an already established project of 1500 units named for another great American dedicated to justice for all—John P. Altgeld, once mayor of Chicago and governor of Illinois.

THE DEDICATION ceremonies will be simple, but they will be impressive in their sincerity. Walter P. Reuther, Murray's successor as president of the CIO, who also is president of the CIO Auto Workers, will make the dedicatory address.

Brief responses will be given by James G. Thimmes, vice president of the Steelworkers, which Murray also headed, and chairman of the National CIO Housing Committee; Joseph Germano, president of the Illinois CIO Council and USA-CIO regional director; and Pat Greathouse, State Council vice president and UAW-CIO regional director.

The first of the 500 families which will live in the Philip Murray Homes have already moved into those of the 65 buildings which have been completed. The pitched - roofed buildings contain 48 one bedroom units, 324 with two bedrooms and 128 with three bedrooms.

They are grouped around play courts, carrying out the pattern of Altgeld Gardens. Full community facilities are nearby, including stores of all types and churches. A new four-unit grade school and a high school are within easy walking distance, as are a branch of the Chicago Public Library and a city Health Dept. "well baby" clinic.

The Philip Murray Homes is located at 131st st. and St. Lawrence ave., in the booming Calumet industrial area.

The project is part of a program approved by the Chicago City Council in August, 1950. Construction began a year ago, with the total cost set at $4,878,500. It is the 20th low-cost housing development to be opened in Chicago in spite of a bitter and continuing fight that saw the CIO and others interested in the plight of the homeless ranged together in opposition to private interests.

Ohio Labor In All-Out Fight To Improve Compensation Act

FOR THE FIRST time in 30 years, Ohio workers face an all-out legislative battle over improvements in workmen's compensation.

During that period, labor and management have negotiated an "agreed" bill, which both supported in the Legislature and which traditionally passed unanimously.

This year, Ohio CIO Sec.-Treas. Jacob Clayman reports, negotiations have collapsed over "utterly ridiculous proposals" of management. Industry demanded workers bargain away two important points in the present law.

It wanted to deny them right to appeal to the courts and also deny compensation to workers with a permanent partial disability, unless they suffered a loss in wages. Industry would pay no compensation for injuries which permanently crippled a worker, unless the injury meant he would receive a lower wage.

CIO, AFL and Mine Workers, introducing their own bill in the Legislature, planned a major fight, Clayman said. The labor bill, calling for drastic increases in benefits, would correct many present inequities and would adequately provide for Ohio's injured workers.

Clayman noted Ohio employers now enjoy the lowest premium rate in the U. S., while the average injured worker receives only 40% of his normal wage. There are more than 300,000 workmen's compensation cases filed annually in Ohio.

MEANTIME, the Ohio CIO was engaged in another major legislative fight, this one over unemployment compensation.

It was supporting a measure, introduced by pro-labor legislators from both Democratic and Republican ranks, which would increase benefits, eliminate many disqualifications and generally liberalize the law.

Industry Councils Called Aid To Bargaining By John Brophy

THE INDUSTRY council plan, one of the main long-range objectives of the CIO, is in no sense a substitute for collective bargaining, says John Brophy.

The treasurer of the National CIO Community Services Committee, addressed the Catholic Committee of the South at its recent convention in Richmond, Va.

"On the contrary," the veteran CIO leader added, "it is intended to help build it up."

Brophy appeared on an industry council panel session with Rev. George Higgins, assistant director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, and John Quincy Adams, president of the Manhattan Refrigerating Co.

He told the convention that national economic planning, such as the industry council program envisions, is not new in this country.

"The corporations have been doing their own planning at our expense for a long time," he said. "We need to put these decisions on a democratic basis by proper legislation providing for participation by government and the economic organizations.

"PLANNING must be done in the interest of sound human and social objectives, not merely profit. Only in this way can our economy be humanized."

Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers stressed the importance of union organization to the South in another panel discussion. Participating with him were Father Higgins and Joseph B. Keenan, of the AFL. All of them outlined some of the difficulties unions have encountered in the South, and agreed that the section would benefit if more workers had the protection of unions.

FARMERS' STAKE in public power is discussed at Agricultural Life and Labor Conference by Clay Cochran, of the Electric Consumers Information Committee (center), with re-elected officers, Chairman Shirley E. Greene and Exec. Sec. Elizabeth B. Herring.

Lieutenant-Governor Says—

'Not Welcome' Sign Hoisted For Runaway Plants In Alabama

By JULES WEINBERG

A "NOT WELCOME" sign should be hung out for runaway industries which come to Alabama seeking cheap labor.

That's what Lieut.-Gov. James Allen told cheering delegates at the Alabama CIO Council's 14th constitutional convention last week. Some 500 delegates attended the convention, held at the CIO Steelworkers hall in Birmingham.

"Our labor here in Alabama is not cheap," Allen said. "It is good hardworking Alabama citizens, and they are able to give an honest day's work for an honest day's pay. And we expect them to get an honest day's pay for their work."

The Alabama lieutenant-governor then mentioned the drive for new Southern industries—a drive in which many local business groups stress open shop activities as a come-on for Northern business firms.

"I think," said Allen, "we need industries that are willing to come into Alabama and help shoulder our burdens, our responsibilities, and be good citizens of Alabama. I think they should be willing to pay the prevailing union scale in Alabama and not come looking for cheap labor."

Those who want cheap labor, Allen added, should go elsewhere.

Like many other states—North and South—Alabama's Legislature shortly will have a new series of anti-union bills introduced. Council officers and convention speakers emphasized the need for political action to maintain present standards and to move forward.

The Alabama CIO re-elected Pres. Cecil Robertson and Sec.-Treas. Gene Wells. And Wells, who also serves as legislative representative, pledged a watchful campaign at Montgomery when the Legislature meets.

'Plow Labor Under'—

'Monopoly Agriculture' Hit At Farm Life Meet

THE PLIGHT of millions of American farm families living in abject poverty while their work helps make this country a land of unequalled abundance was the concern of the third annual conference of the National Council on Agricultural Life & Labor in Washington.

About 100 experts, drawn from government agencies and the more than 30 farm, labor, consumer, religious and social welfare organizations belonging to the Council, took part.

Singled out as the most pressing needs were:

1. A solution to the problems of millions of migrant workers, who are paid substandard wages and denied minimum standards of health, security and education for their children.

2. Steps to raise the general living standard on family farms, which, all agreed, are the backbone of U. S. agriculture.

3. Organized efforts by the farmers themselves to check the current drive in Congress to wipe out federal programs of rural electrification, conservation, flood control and irrigation.

One of the highlights of the two-day meeting was a luncheon discussion presided over by Paul Sifton, legislative representative for the CIO Auto Workers, on the subject of the nation's stake in an adequate and stable farm income.

SPEAKER after speaker emphasized that present government farm policies are inadequate to check the trend toward monopoly agriculture with large corporation farms.

"Eighty-five per cent of the nation's commercially marketed food is now being produced on 17% of the nation's farms," Wayne Darrow, editor of the Washington Farmletter, declared.

Gus F. Geissler, former president of the Commodity Credit Corp., pointed out that this means that the bulk of our food is being produced on the large corporation-type farm "that is ruthless and can plow under labor."

He added that family-type farms, demanding higher labor standards because the workers are members of the operator's family, have proven to be more efficient than the large-scale operations.

DARROW pointed out that the price of cattle has dropped one-third, "but retail meat prices haven't fallen anything like that amount."

Sifton called upon the government to adopt "a farm policy for the greatest number of people and a rising standard of living rather than one for the fewest people." Family farmers today, he said, are "like people on a melting ice floe—trying to keep their heads above water."

Katherine P. Ellickson, associate research director of CIO and a member of the Labor Dept.'s labor advisory committee on migrant labor, expressed organized labor's dissatisfaction with the present program of importation of foreign contract labor. She criticized the procedures followed by the department in determining whether foreign workers are needed as "favoring the big growers" at the expense of U. S. farm workers.

Strong New Security Plan Put In Effect

TOUGH NEW security tests for all government employes—who will be denied the right to appeal outside their agency—were ordered last week by Pres. Eisenhower.

In an executive order abolishing the old loyalty program instituted by Pres. Truman in 1947, Eisenhower made all government agencies subject to the extreme security check. The order previously had been in effect only at a few "sensitive" agencies.

The new order calls for a recheck of all employes investigated under the old program—at a cost of billions of dollars. Employes ruled loyal under the former standards may be fired as security risks under the new tests.

UNDER THE old program a worker could not be fired unless there was a "reasonable doubt" of his loyalty to the United States. Henceforth, a worker can be removed from his job or transferred to a non-sensitive post if he fails to come up to security qualifications.

The most drastic revision is the abolishment of the Civil Service Commission's Loyalty Review Board, to which persons suspected of disloyalty have previously been able to appeal against unjust accusations.

GOP 'Economy' Drive Perils Jobs Of Shipyard Workers

THE EISENHOWER Administration has cut from the budget $118 millions for new merchant ship construction, imperiling the jobs of thousands of CIO and AFL shipbuilding workers.

Slashing the item from former Pres. Truman's budget brought protests from congressmen, including members of Pres. Eisenhower's own party, and from the ship construction and ship operating industries.

Sen. Saltonstall (R. Mass.) said elimination of funds for construction of four passenger ships and a new type tanker was "shocking" news for shipbuilding states, such as the Senator's state. He told a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee hearing that the cut leaves American yards with only 18 months of work and a bleak outlook.

AN EISENHOWER aide, A. W. Gatov, maritime administrator, denied that the cut "deviated from a national policy of keeping a strong maritime service." He also called for going slow on reconditioning and redesigning 1400 Liberty ships in the mothball fleet.

"It would seem that the die is cast as far as the Eisenhower Administration's policy on ship construction and the maritime economy concerned," said a congressman from another shipbuilding state, Rep. Shelley (D. Calif.).

In The Legislatures—

2 More States Reject 'Right To Work' Bill

ORGANIZED LABOR is keeping up its high batting average against "right to work" bills pushed by chambers of commerce and other business groups in the state legislatures.

Such measures — designed to legalize the open shop and outlaw all forms of union security—have just been killed in committees of the Missouri and Minnesota Legislatures, according to Labor Press Associated.

THE CIO Political Action Committee reported that "right to work" bills have been introduced in 34 states since the Republican election victory last fall. So far they haven't been adopted in any one of them.

In contrast, CIO-PAC recalled, some 32 states passed "little Taft-Hartley laws" in 1947 after the mid-term GOP congressional victory.

Another nationwide drive for the "millionaires' amendment"—income tax relief for the big boys—is slowing down. Resolutions supporting the plan have been turned down in both the California and Vermont Legislatures.

Here are other legislative developments, as reported by state CIO councils and LPA:

New Jersey: State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman pressed a drive for an effective standby state rent control law. With the federal law now temporarily extended, he warned that more than a million tenants in the state face "unwarranted increases or evictions" if rent ceilings lapse.

New Jersey CIO also condemned proposal of the State Employment Security Council for a "moratorium" on changes in the state's unemployment insurance laws.

Minnesota: The State CIO Council's executive board condemned a pending sales tax proposal, which would cut business personal property taxes by $35 million. It called it "a bare-faced maneuver to cut the tax bill of business and industrial enterprises by adding to the tax burden of those who must cash their pay checks for day to day living expenses."

Illinois: State CIO Pres. Joseph Germano announced that the Council will test in the courts any "loyalty oath" bills enacted by the State Legislature.

"We feel this type of legislation is legally and morally wrong," Germano said, "and we shall continue to oppose it in any form."

Oregon: A bill prohibiting discrimination in public facilities, including hotels, restaurants and amusement places, was approved overwhelmingly by both houses. At the same time, the Legislature put a state curb on future public housing construction, by requiring a local referendum on all projects.

California: A three-day legislative conference of local union delegates was staged by the State CIO Council in Sacramento to last week.

Cruising Down The River—

Ever since last September, CIO Woodworkers had been negotiating for a wage increase at the C. M. Christianson Lumber Co. at Phelps, Wis.

Members of IWA Local 12-142 hadn't had a wage boost since 1951, and other firms in the area had just granted boosts of from 10 to 12c an hour.

As the strike deadline neared, the boss went yachting. So when the deadline came, the IWA local went out. And Christianson, according to latest report, was still cruising in Caribbean waters and off Florida. (LPA)

Glass Workers Re-elect Officers

The four top officers of the CIO Glass Workers were re-elected in a referendum vote held on Apr. 14, unofficial returns indicated last week.

Pres. Burl Phares and Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken were renamed without opposition. First Vice Pres. Leland Beard was chosen over James Witchell, Local 14, Ford City, Pa., while Second Vice Pres. Ralph Reiser won another term over Enoch Rust, Local 1, Charleston, W. Va.

Business Gains As House Unit Gives FTC Biggest Fund Cut

THE HOUSE Appropriations Committee has given its "answer" to the exclusive story in The CIO News which revealed that Chairman Taber (R. N.Y.) is using a staff of businessmen to help cut appropriations for agencies regulating firms those businessmen represent.

The committee:

1 Imposed the heaviest budget slash given any regulatory agency on the Federal Trade Commission, one of whose commissioners had expressed concern that The CIO News named FTC specifically as a prospective victim.

2 Threatened that it may "send an investigator down to look over the books of the Federal Trade Commission."

The transcript of the hearings on FTC appropriations, just released, shows that The CIO News article of Feb. 13 was read to the committee by Commissioner Stephen J. Spingarn.

The story revealed that representatives of two of the oil cartel firms—now being sued by the government to recover $77 million as the result of FTC action—sat in a closed committee meeting on the bill providing funds for that agency. Spingarn questioned the propriety of such a procedure.

Rep. Phillips (R. Calif.), chairman of the subcommittee, did not show up to hear Spingarn. The CIO News was informed Phillips was present at the huddle in which agents of Standard Oil of California and the California-Texas Co. participated.

ALTHOUGH Phillips later denied that the hearings were conducted in secret, Acting Chairman Cotton (R. N.H.) told Spingarn that he knew nothing of the meeting.

When Phillips reported the bill cutting FTC funds to Congress, however, he referred to Spingarn's testimony, misrepresented him as saying that "accountants from industry" had been "placed in the Federal Trade Commission," and then denied this misstatement of what had taken place. He did not refer to the fact that oil company representatives sat in at an Appropriations Committee meeting on the bill.

Phillips concluded his remarks with a threat to further "investigate" FTC — something the oil lobby has been demanding for some time.

Although the FTC today has a smaller staff than it had in 1918, it is now called upon to regulate more than four million business establishments whereas 35 years ago the number was only two million.

FORMER Pres. Truman asked $5.5 million for the FTC, and even this amount was termed inadequate by the commission. The committee, however, cut the amount to $4.2 million.

The effect of this cut will be to "repeal by inaction" many of the anti-trust laws FTC is called on to administer. The commission already has a large backlog of cases under the Anti-Merger Act of 1950, which it is unable to process.

Following Phillips' remarks, Spingarn released the text of correspondence with Cotton about the incident, including a copy of Drew Pearson's radio broadcast of Feb. 22 repeating The CIO News disclosures.

Cotton declared that he had looked into the matter and found that "no 'secret hearings' have been held regarding the Federal Trade Commission or so far as I can ascertain, any other agency of the government."

THE CIO News did not say that secret "hearings" were held but did say that the work of the businessmen was being conducted in secrecy. Besides Cotton, who told Spingarn he did not know of the secret huddle on the independent offices bill, none of the several Democratic members of the committee had heard of it before The CIO News disclosure.

Last week, The CIO News again checked with one of the ranking minority members of the committee. He had asked Robert E. Lee, the committee's chief investigator under whom the businessmen are working, to inform him who the people were who had been placed on the committee staff.

That request was made more than 10 weeks ago. The lawmaker is still waiting for what Reps. Phillips and Cotton say is "non-secret" information.

GOP 'Economy' Ax Hits New Dept. Of Health

THE REPUBLICAN "economy" ax was swung at still more agencies last week, and it bit so deeply that even a Dixiecrat lawmaker warned that the cuts threaten "the very existence of this country."

The new slashes, following the pattern set in the first appropriations bill, struck chiefly at government undertakings aimed at preventing monopoly and promoting the social welfare.

Most ironic were deep cuts for the new Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, which the GOP recently had created out of the Federal Security Agency.

Sec. Oveta Culp Hobby submitted a revised budget of $1.7 billion to run the 67 agencies in her department next year. That is $39,590,000 below funds for the current year and $62,784,000 below the amount asked by the Truman Administration.

HEAVIEST SLASHES were made in the Public Health Service, which had been put firmly under AMA control in the reorganization plan as the "price" of support of the doctors' lobby for the new department. Cuts here totalled over $51 million, including $15 million slices off both grants for hospital construction and research facilities.

Other agencies given the ax were the Office of Education (from $94,425,000 to $85,976,000), the Food and Drug Administration (from $5,663,000 to $5,648,000), the Children's Bureau (from $33,185,000 to $32,150,000) and Social Security Administration (from $1,376,275,000 to $1,374,223,000).

The reduction of nearly $8.5 million in funds for the Office of Education brought the immediate resignation of Earl J. McGrath, U. S. education commissioner, who called the cuts "indefensible." In a letter to the President, he declared:

"It does not seem to me wise public policy to reduce the quality of education of American children as has been done at a saving of such small sums while we continue as a nation to spend billions for other purposes."

The cuts for education included reductions of more than $4.6 million for vocational education, $3.5 million for payments to school districts, and $324,000 for salaries and expenses.

Sen. George (D. Ga.), a leading "economy" advocate, protested that vocational and technical education involves "the very existence of this country as well as its high living standards" and said that the cuts were "unsound, unsafe and overly drastic."

School Group Backs McGrath

The National Education Association, representing more than 950,000 teachers, expressed "shock" last week at the resignation of Earl McGrath as U. S. Commissioner of Education in protest against Administration cuts in funds for education.

"The NEA," said its executive secretary, William G. Carr, "is in full agreement with Dr. McGrath's stand against weakening the federal government's proper responsibilities for education.

"We congratulate Dr. McGrath for the position he has taken."

Food Chemicals Curb Proposed By Rep. Miller

THE SHOE would be on the other foot—and most people's stomachs in better order—if Congress approves a bill introduced last week by Rep. Miller (R. Neb.).

A physician and a member last year of the special House committee which investigated the purity of food, Miller wants to make it necessary for producers and processors using chemicals as preservatives to prove that their additives are harmless. At present, they can add chemicals to food, and the Food and Drug Administration has to prove that they are harmful before it can order their product off the market.

His bill would prohibit the use of any chemical in food processing until there is conclusive evidence it is harmless. The committee reported that more than one-third of the 704 different chemicals now being used in food aren't definitely known to be safe.

"There is always a certain unscrupulous group who would cut corners so they could put their product on the market at a cut rate," Miller said.

How to Buy

By Sidney Margolius

For Labor Press Associated

FOOD PLANS, including the purchase of a freezer, have become very popular this year. They are not a wise investment for many families—especially city dwellers. Moreover, some food plans, if not actually shady, are certainly not to the advantage of the buyer.

Firm Nailed For Ad Claims

The Federal Trade Commission has ordered a big Washington appliance firm to take it easy on its ad claims for a "wholesale food plan."

FTC ordered Phillips, Inc., to stop claiming foods can be bought at wholesale prices and that the plan is for any other purpose than to promote sale of home freezers. The firm's officers agreed to end the misleading advertising.

Chief exaggeration is that a food freezer plan enables you to buy at wholesale prices. Even if a food plan is operated honestly and does give you a discount for quantity purchases, the cost of buying and operating a freezer may well cancel all such savings and even add to your food bills.

Owning a freezer admittedly is often an economy for families who grow some of their own food, or live in rural areas where they may be able to buy food cheaply for freezing. A freezer does offer certain conveniences, like bulk buying and fewer shopping trips. But for most families living in large towns, a large-enough refrigerator, perhaps with a full width freezer compartment, would be sufficient at much less expense.

COSTS OF OWNING a freezer are surprisingly high. They include amortization of the freezer itself, repairs, electric power, and packaging (which becomes quite expensive).

If you used only 360 pounds of frozen foods out of your freezer a year, your cost per pound might be about 28c besides the cost of the food itself, estimates Dr. Earl C. McCracken, U. S. Agriculture Dept. physicist. Even if you used 900 pounds out of the same box (by more frequent use and replacement of its contents) your additional cost would be 13c a pound.

Thus, much if not all of the potential saving of buying in bulk is wiped out by the costs of owning and operating the freezer, although for a larger family there may exist some possibilities for saving by buying meat at least during its "cheap" season for later use.

The gimmick used by the food plan salesman (some of whom have been found to make as much as $1000 a week) is to tell you that "food for a week" will cost you only, say, "$20 a week for a family of four." But this only includes meat and frozen produce. It doesn't include the milk, cheese, eggs, cooking and table fats, bread, dry groceries, etc., that make up more than half of your food bill.

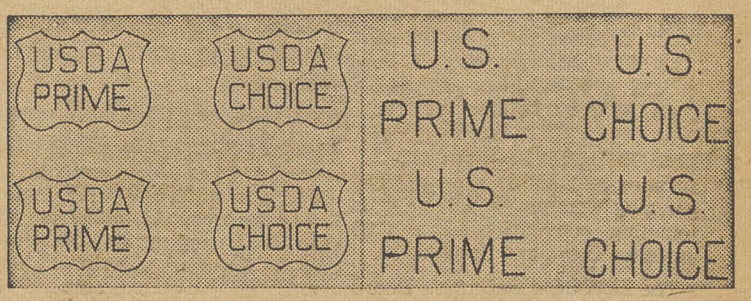
Buying a freezer on a "food plan" is especially dubious because you must also pay installment charges for buying the freezer on time, and in some "plans" you also pay an installment charge on the food. The worst feature of some "food plans" is that you pay $600 for a freezer you could buy for as little as $400 in any of the reliable private brands, or from retailers.

ESPECIALLY AVOID ANY PLAN which makes a flat weekly price for the payment on the freezer and the cost of the food, and whose salesmen refuse to state how much the freezer itself costs. Not only may a high charge for the freezer itself be concealed in such weekly payment, but the savings on the food are dubious.

Many regular markets which do not require that you join a weekly "plan" offer similar prices on meat bought in bulk (like a whole lamb, cut up for the freezer), or a 10% discount on frozen vegetables and juices bought in dozen lots. Even the cut-rate specials the supermarkets run on frozen foods are close to the "bulk" prices for frozen foods, even in reliable food plans. For example, the 19c frozen vegetables sold by many stores are often cheaper than the food plans.

Too, there are seasons when you don't want to use frozen produce, when fresh produce is reasonable or fresh fish is in season and very cheap. You also want to be able to buy canned goods, which are generally cheaper than frozen foods at any season.

If you do feel a plan has advantages, then compare the plans offered by the larger retailers of appliances (Sears, Macy's stores, other department stores and independent retailers) with those of the specialty food plans. And check your local Better Business Bureau to see if a particular plan is reliable; in one large city, only some 20 out of over 200 "plans" being promoted at one period had no record of complaints against them.



WATCH FOR THIS—A new U. S. meat grade sign (left) has been adopted by Agriculture Dept. to replace stamp on right as sign that meat has passed an adequate federal quality inspection test.

Organizationally Speaking

By John V. Riffe

The National CIO Organization Dept. last week reported the following CIO representation election victories:

REG. DIR. ROBERT DAVIDSON reports that in a representation election at the K. D. Lamp Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, the CIO Auto Workers were victorious by a vote of 141 to 57 for the UE. Intl. Rep. Joe White directed the campaign.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that the CIO Communications Workers won a run-off election at the Western Electric Co., Duluth, Minn., by a vote of 197 to 190 for the IBEW-AFL. Intl. Rep. Ed Sobak directed the drive.

State Dir. Ernest B. Pugh reports that the CIO Textile Workers won an important representation election at the U. S. Rubber Co., Scottsville, Va., by a vote of 132 to 66. Assistant State Dir. Murphy George, assisted by CIO Rep. D. W. Starnes, was in charge of this campaign.

★

ACTING DIR. LORNE H. NELLES, CIO Organizing Committee, reports that the employes of the Swift & Co. branch at Wilmington, N. C., favored the CIO Packinghouse Workers by the following vote: eligible 35, UPWA-CIO 33, no union 1. UPWA Rep. Edmund Dumas and CIO Rep. Ray Schnell handled this situation.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election among office workers of the Hinde & Dauch Co., Gloucester, N. J., they favored the CIO by a vote of 18 to 7 for no union. CIO Field Rep. Ben Stahl conducted this campaign.

Organization Dir. Ralph Reiser of the CIO Glass Workers reports an important representation election victory at the Eljer Pottery, Ford City, Pa., where the workers favored the Glass Workers by a vote of 276 to 155 for AFL. Organizer Charles Wakefield was in charge of the drive.

★

REG. DIR. LEE F. TUSKER reports that Palace Homes, Inc., Newport, Ark., a trailer manufacturing firm, recognized the CIO Auto Workers as bargaining agent for its employes without an election. UAW Rep. Jack Crump and UAW Area Dir. John Vinson directed this situation.

Reg. Dir. A. R. Kinstley reports that the CIO Clothing Workers won representation elections at the Ely Walker Co., St. Joseph, Mo., ACWA-CIO 52, AFL 45, no union 0; and the Rice Stix Co., Slater, Mo., ACWA-CIO 91, AFL 3, no union 43. The organizational work among both groups was under the direction of assistant Organization Dir. Jim Youngdahl.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that the CIO Steelworkers won a representation election at the Sinker Davis Co., Indianapolis, Ind., by a vote of 22 to 8 for no union. Intl. Rep. Harold Rassmussen was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Del Garst reports a CIO Shoe Workers victory at the Deb Shoe Co., St. Clair, Mo.

'Old' BLS Index Joins In Rise

THE OLD SERIES cost of living index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics is going up along with the new. The reading for Mar. 15, announced last week, was 188.8, an increase of .2 from Feb. 15. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index also jumped up again—for the third consecutive week. The Apr. 28 figure was $6.42, equal to the 1953 high registered on Mar. 17, and up 4c from the previous week.

Here are the cumulative figures for the BLS Index:

Period	Index		Period	Old Index	New Index

IAWOC Sets Convention

THE THREE-YEAR-old CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee will hold its founding convention as a CIO union at Cleveland June 10-12.

The IAWOC's Executive Board decided unanimously at a meeting in Philadelphia to become an autonomous union affiliated with the CIO.

A financial report submitted at the Philadelphia meeting indicated the committee is capable of financing its own operations. IAWOC Chairman Richard T. Leonard assured the board members that CIO would continue its past practice of close cooperation and assistance whenever necessary.

Rieve Urges U. S. Act On Wage Order

CIO TEXTILE Workers last week urged Sec. of Labor Durkin "to tolerate no further delay" in ordering a new $1.20 minimum wage in woolen plants making government goods.

In a letter to Durkin, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve urged issuance of an immediate order under the Walsh-Healey act, saying it "will certainly tend to stabilize competetive conditions in this industry."

The order was originally issued by former Sec. Tobin but was delayed when Durkin agreed to a request of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers for a hearing.

AT THE HEARING, Rieve charged, only one industry witness testified and he introduced no new evidence. The industry witness, Vice Pres. E. Wilkinson, merely reiterated the testimony he has presented at the original 1952 hearings.

"Indeed," said Rieve, Wilkinson's position "is the same he has taken for the past 15 years."

Rieve charged the hearings were a mere delaying tactic on the part of the industry, interested only in "building a record" to be used as a basis for court action to fight the order. Industry officials, he continued, had shown no desire to be helpful and "demonstrated no constructive purpose."

RIEVE PREDICTED as "a practical certainity" that "any and every order issued by the Secretary of Labor under the Walsh-Healey Act will be contested in court."

In urging immediate action, Rieve warned Durkin that "any further delay will only serve to create greater and even dangerous demoralization of labor conditions in our industry."

Shoe Workers' Leader Dies

Isidore Rosenberg, a New York City leader of the CIO Shoe Workers, died last week after a lengthy illness. He was 55.

Since 1937 Rosenberg had been manager of the USWA's New York Joint Council, representing 11,000 workers in eight locals. He also was USWA international representative.

McCarthy Finances Report Reprinted

Copies of the detailed report on Sen. McCarthy's financial operations can now be obtained from the Americans for Democratic Action.

The important report of last year's Senate subcommittee, which probed McCarthy's deals and raised a number of questions which the Justice Dept. has not as yet answered, is now unavailable from the usual government sources.

The ADA has reprinted the report, without deletion or editorial comment, and is selling it at $2 a copy. Copies can be obtained from the Americans for Democratic Action, 1341 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

ICFTU Hails Ike's Peace Plan, Warns Of Russ 'New Look'

A WARNING against hasty acceptance of the "new look" in Russian diplomacy was sounded last week by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In a statement by Gen. Sec. J. H. Oldenbroek, the organization also lauded Pres. Eisenhower's initiative in offering world communism "a choice between a costly but futile arms race and honest cooperation in the only war worth waging, that is, against poverty and want."

"The free labor movement, which has had plenty of experience with sudden changes in Communist Party tactics, is not inclined to accept the new look in Soviet foreign policy at face value without practical demonstrations of good faith," said Oldenbroek.

"SPECULATION on the influence of new personalities on Kremlin policy is futile. The important thing is that Soviet leaders now show by their deeds rather than words that they are sincere in their recent peaceful protestations.

"The first such deed which the whole free world is awaiting is the conclusion of an honest armistice in Korea, which could have been achieved long ago if not for Communist obstruction.

"Release of thousands of trade unionists in prisons behind the Iron Curtain for devotion to the ideals of freedom would be a step that might incline the ICFTU to take Soviet utterances more seriously."

Oldenbroek maintained "we would only be fooling ourselves" if we believe that lasting world peace can ever be secure with half the world still subject to dictatorship.

He pledged the support of free labor unions for a "real" international attack on poverty, especially in the world's undeveloped areas.

Something New Under The Sun—

The Communists in Czechoslovakia have come up with a wonderful "new" cure for a major health hazard which is increasingly common among workers—exhaustion from overwork.

It's called "sleep therapy," according to the Prague newspaper Aufau und Frieden. The Red medical geniuses simply put the sufferer to bed for a few days or even weeks, after which he "awakes refreshed and ready to work again."

CIO Editors Elect Kranz

Harry Kranz, publicity director of the New Jersey CIO Council, is the new chairman of the CIO Press and Publicity Conference.

He was elected at the conference's semi-annual meeting in Washington, at which John V. Riffe, recent elected CIO executive vice president, spoke.

Other new conference officers are Ray Davidson, CIO Oil Workers publicity director, vice chairman; and Henry C. Fleisher, CIO publicity director and editor of The CIO News, reelected as secretary-treasurer. Al Herrington, of the CIO Communications Workers and outging chairman, joined the executive committee.

Reuther, Carey Send Greetings On May Day

FRATERNAL greetings of the CIO were sent to workers throughout the world on May Day by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey.

In messages distributed to 10,000 publications on all five continents by the U. S. Information Service, they renewed the CIO's pledge of cooperation in the international struggle for peace and economic and social justice based on freedom and respect for the dignity of man. Their words went both to free workers and those behind the Iron Curtain.

Reuther in addition pledged support to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the United Nations, the fight against colonialism, rearmament and the struggle in Korea.

CIO In Drive For Ike Veto Of Offshore Oil Grab Bill

THE CIO last week urged Pres. Eisenhower to veto the offshore oil giveaway bill when it comes from Congress. It opened a campaign to get him to turn down the measure.

The campaign was undertaken by the National CIO Political Action Committee. In a letter to state and local PAC units throughout the country, CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll wrote:

"There is no doubt that this issue will be a major one in the next year's congressional campaign and any efforts that are made now will be valuable in that respect."

The CIO-PAC has an opportunity to perform "a great public service" by making the facts clear to the people, he added, as well as a responsibility to act in the national interest.

"If we can get the facts of this proposed steal of the nation's offshore oil and gas resources—together with the implications it contains with respect to our timber, mineral, water-power and other wealth—to a sufficient number of people in the amount of time we have available we can prevent it," he said.

Greasing the Skids

Meanwhile, convinced that they had accomplished their objective of "alerting" the public, the liberal Senators who had talked against the measure for more than four weeks agreed to limit debate and vote May 5.

"The people may not understand all the technical provisions of the bill but they are beginning to suspect something is wrong," Sen. Anderson (D. N.M.) declared.

ANDERSON has been a key strategist in the battle against the bill giving to three states national oil and gas resources estimated to be worth up to $300 billion. He pledged that opponents would undertake to act on amendments "expeditiously."

Foes of "the biggest giveaway in history" then agreed to limit debate on each amendment to four hours, with the added stipulation that at 2 p.m. on May 5 all remaining amendments and the bill itself would be voted on.

High point of the "educational campaign" was a 22-hour-and-26 minute speech—longest in Senate history—by Sen. Morse (Ind. Ore.). Pointing out that it is an "abnormal situation" when up to $300 billion rightfully belonging to the whole nation is "given away," he said "extraordinary procedures" were needed to remedy it.

Morse kept emphasizing that the transfer of the submerged lands to state control would deprive the nation's schools of sorely needed revenues for educational purposes.

That apparently had no effect on the "give-away" Senators. A few days later 56 of them, in a key test vote, voted to table the Anderson-Hill substitute bill. Thirty-three Senators supported the measure, which would have continued federal control over offshore oil lands and earmarked revenues for schools in all 48 states.

THE VOTE, in general, followed party lines with 38 Republicans and 18 Democrats joined against the Anderson-Hill Bill and 25 Democrats, seven Republicans and one Independent supporting it. All but two of the Democrats opposed were from the South.

The Senate then rejected, 26 to 58, an amendment by Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.) which would have limited state claims to three miles offshore and given the federal government control over the rest of the continental shelf.

Under the bill backed by the Republican Administration, Texas and Florida boundaries would be set 10.5 miles out. Sen. Monroney (D. Okla.) predicted that if an exception is made in the seaward limits of these states, other states will ask Congress for the same consideration.

SEN. HUMPHREY (D. Minn.) bitterly assailed a parliamentary move by Majority Leader Taft which prevented a separate vote on the "oil for education" amendment sponsored by Sen. Hill (D. Ala.).

He said that Taft's stand, which required the vote to be on the combined Anderson-Hill substitute, buried the Hill proposal "in the same coffin." Some Senators who favored use of the offshore oil revenues for education were opposed to Anderson measure, he pointed out.

A dozen additional amendments were slated for consideration before the final vote.

CIO Hits Business Power Over Atomic Development

CIO LAST WEEK publicly protested the Eisenhower Administration's proposal to give big corporations a hand in development of atomic energy.

In voicing its opposition, the CIO went on record as against "any weakening of government ownership, operation and control in the atomic energy field."

CIO's protest was filed with Chairman Gordon Dean of the Atomic Energy Commission by Chairman O. A. Knight of the CIO's Committee on Regional Development and Conservation. Knight, a CIO vice president, is president of the Oil Workers.

Knight noted that when atomic energy was first made available "the government, the scientists and the general public saw that its importance and its dangers were such that public ownership of mines, minerals and facilities would be essential."

"INDEED," Knight added, "we based our international program for the control of atomic energy on that very theory. We urged on the Soviet Union and others through the United Nations that a program of public ownership, which would make inspection feasible, should be adopted everywhere."

This position, Knight said, has had CIO support in the past and "we continue to support those policies."

He charged that control of atomic energy "by the big monopolies may well mean frustration and limitation of peacetime development" of atomic energy.

Knight said development of this resource under private auspices would require "immense government subsidies, direct or indirect," adding the responsibilities entailed in development of atomic energy "cannot be entrusted to the big companies; the responsibility belongs to the government."

Power Funds Slashed By House Vote

CRIPPLING slashes in funds for public power, public lands and other natural resource development were voted by the House last week in passing the $406 million appropriations for the Interior Dept.

Democratic House Leader Rayburn called the move "the entering wedge to killing public power in the United States."

The measure was $201 million below Truman Administration budget estimates and represented a cut of more than $136 million from funds for the current year. It was nearly $80 million less than Pres. Eisenhower requested.

A SOLID Republican majority defeated, 212 to 167, a motion by Rayburn to send the bill back to committee. It also beat back every effort of public power advocates to restore more than $40 million the House Appropriations Committee had cut from money for transmission lines and other power facilities.

Rep. Kirwin (D. O.) said the question involved was "whether we are going to deny 150,000 farm families the right to have electricity on their farms."

The only partial restoration of funds voted was $1,217,104 for continued operation of a plant for experimental extraction of gasoline from coal shale at Rifle, Colo. Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.) charged that the committee's slash looked like a "pay off." (See also Page 10.)

Here's Senate Test Vote On Oil Lands

Here is the key Senate roll call on Apr. 27, 1953, by which the Senate rejected federal control over coastal oil lands.

The vote came on motion of Sen. Taft (R. O.) to table the Anderson Bill for federal control as modified by the Hill Amendment for "oil for the lamps of learning."

The vote to table was 56 to 33. In this chart, W means a wrong vote to table, R a right vote against tabling, X paired wrong, Z paired right, A absent. The vote:

CIO Protests To Eisenhower On Firings

CIO LAST week told Pres. Eisenhower that it is "deeply disturbed" over the recent peremptory dismissals and changes in officials of several government bureaus and urged him to "intervene personally."

"We consider that these changes have been made for political purposes and under the pressure of selfish interests and that they injure the public welfare," CIO Vice Pres. O. A. Knight wrote Eisenhower. Knight, who also is president of the CIO Oil Workers, is chairman of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

KNIGHT referred specifically to the dismissal of Marion Clawson as director of the Bureau of Land Management, the attempted discharge of Allen V. Astin from a similar post in the National Bureau of Standards, and the removal of Albert M. Day as head of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"If it turns out that men like Clawson, Astin and Day are to be eliminated from their public responsibilities because selfish special interests want them out of the way, or for political purposes, great harm will be done to the public interest and your administration will be seriously discredited," Knight wrote.
